A Short Account of the Author's Life.

MR Thomas Boston, the youngeſt of ſeven children, born 1676, of creditable religious parents in the town of Dunſe, where they had ſome heritage; licenſed to preach 1697; ordained miniſter at Simprin[*] 1699; married 1700 to Catharine Brown, of good extract, in the Pariſh of Culroſs; a gentlewoman of ſingular wiſdom, and many rare endowments, (by whom he had a good many children, of whom two ſons[†] and two daughters ſurvive them;) tranſported to Ettrick[‡] 1707; died 1732, near five years before his ſpouſe[§], in the 56th year of his age.

He was of a ſtature above the middle ſize; of a venerable, amiable aſpect, with his own hair originally black; of a ſtrong and fruitful genius; of a lively imagination, (ſuch as affords what is called ready Wit, which, inſtead of cultivating, he laid under a ſevere reſtraint;) of tender affections; a clear and ſolid judgment; his temper candid, modeſt, cautious, benevolent, obliging, and courteous; had a natural averſion to any thing rude or uncivil, in words or behaviour, and a delicate feeling in caſe of meeting with ought of that ſort: could be heavy and ſevere in his words when there was juſt occaſion, or he judged the ſame neceſſary.

He was early called by divine grace; all along afterwards exerciſed unto godlineſs; walked indeed with God in all his ways; daily acknowledging him; frequent in ſolemn extraordinary applications to Heaven, (namely upon every new emergent of duty, difficulty, or trial;) followed with evident, comfortable, and confirming teſtimonies of divine acceptance and audience; a diligent, judicious obſerver, recorder, and improver of the diſpenſations of divine providence, in connection with the word, his own frame and walk; and conſequently of great experience in religion. He was accurately and extenſively regardful of the divine law, in all manner of life and converſation, (even in things that eſcape the notice of the moſt part of Chriſtians;) of a tender conſcience, carefully watching againſt and avoiding the appearance of evil; compaſſionate and ſympathiſing with the diſtreſſed; charitable to the needy, (to the degree of religiouſly ſetting apart the tenth of his worldly ſubſtance yearly for their ſupply;) a dutiful huſband, an indulgent father; a ſincere, a faithful, and an affectionate friend: to which he had a particular caſt in his temper, which proved a rich bleſſing to them who were favoured with his friendſhip.

He was a conſiderable ſcholar in all the parts of theological learning, and excelled in ſome of them. What he was for a Humaniſt, (even towards the latter end of his days,) his tranſlation of his own work, on the Hebrew accentuation, into good Roman Latin, will abundantly teſtify. He was well ſeen in the Greek; and for the ſkill he attained in the Hebrew, he will, we are ſatisfied, in ages to come, be admired, and had in honour by the learned world; eſpecially when it is underſtood under what diſadvantages, in what obſcurity and ſecluſion from learned aſſiſtances, the work was compoſed; and when it is conſidered, how far notwithſtanding he has outſtripped all that went before him in that ſtudy, namely, of the Hebrew accentuation. He underſtood the French; and, for the ſake of comparing tranſlations, could read the Dutch Bible. There were few pieces of learning that he had not ſome good taſte of; but all his knowledge behoved to be otherwiſe diſcovered than by his profeſſing of it. He was a hard ſtudent, of indefatigable application; ſo that, whatever he was once heartily engaged in, he knew not to quit, till, by help from heaven, and inceſſant labour, he got through it. Had a great knowledge and underſtanding of human nature, of the moſt proper methods of addreſſing it, and the moſt likely handles for catching hold of it. He had an admirable talent at drawing a paper, which made a ſtateſman[*], a very able judge, ſay, [when Mr Boſton was clerk of the ſynod of Merſe and Teviotdale,] that he was the beſt clerk he had ever known in any court, civil or eccleſiaſtical. An admirer of other mens parts and gifts, liberally giving them their due praiſe, even though in ſome things they differed from him; far from cenſorious, aſſuming, or detracting.

As a miniſter he had on his ſpirit a deep and high ſenſe of divine things; was mighty in the ſcriptures, in his acquaintance with the letter, with the ſpirit and ſenſe of them, in happily applying and accommodating them for explaining and illuſtrating the ſubject. His knowledge and inſight into the myſtery of Chriſt was great, though a humbling ſenſe of his want of it was like to have quite ſunk and laid him by, after he began to preach. He had a peculiar talent of going deep into the myſteries of the goſpel, and at the ſame time making them plain, making intelligible their connection with and influence upon goſpel holineſs: notable inſtances of which may be ſeen in his moſt valuable treatiſe of the Covenant, and in his ſermons of Chriſt in the form of a ſervant. His invention was rich, but judiciouſly bounded; his thoughts were always juſt, and often new; his expreſſions proper and pure; his illuſtrations and ſimilies often ſurpriſing; his method natural and clear; his delivery grave and graceful, with an air of earneſtneſs, meekneſs, aſſurance, and authority, tempered together. No wonder his miniſtrations in holy things were all of them dear and precious to the ſaints. He was fixed and eſtabliſhed upon ſolid and rational grounds in the reformation principles, in oppoſition to Popery, Prelacy, ſuperſtition, and perſecution. Was pleaſant and lively in converſation, but always with a decorum to his character: quite free of that ſourneſs of temper, or aſcetical rigidity, that generally poſſeſſes men of a retired life. He fed and watched with diligence, the flock over which the Holy Ghoſt made him overſeer, and, notwithſtanding his eager purſuit of that ſtudy which was his delight, he abated nothing of his preparation for the Sabbath, nor of his work abroad in the pariſh; nor did he ſo much as uſe the ſhort-hand, whereof he was maſter, but always wrote out his ſermons fair, and generally as full as he preached them: far from ſerving the Lord with that which coſt him nothing. It was his delight to ſpend and be ſpent in the ſervice of the goſpel. Was a faithful, and at the ſame time, a prudent reprover of ſin. Was endued with a rich meaſure of Chriſtian wiſdom and prudence, without craft or guile, whereby he was exceedingly ſerviceable in judicatories, and excellently fitted for counſel in intricate caſes. Zeal and knowledge were in him united to a pitch rarely to be met with. Had a joint concern for purity and peace in the church: no man more zealous for the former, and, at the ſame time, more ſtudious of the latter, having obſerved and felt ſo much of the miſchief of diviſion and ſeparation. Was exceeding ſcrupulous of any thing new or unprecedented, until he was thoroughly ſatisfied of its neceſſity and grounds. It was his ſettled mind, that ſolidly and ſtrongly to eſtabliſh the truth, was in many caſes the beſt, the ſhorteſt, and the moſt effectual way to confute error, without irritating and inflaming the paſſions of men to their own and to the truth's prejudice: therefore, in his explication and vindication of the Proteſtant doctrine in a paroxiſm quarrelled and condemned in a certain book, he anſwered all and every body, but took notice expreſsly of nobody. He obeyed the voice, " But thou, O man of God, flee theſe " things," being, in an uncommon degree, dead to the world: Finding, ſays he, in the account of his life, the buſineſs of it enſnaring to my mind, I had neither heart nor hand for it. On all which accounts he was much reſpected and regarded by, not only his brethren that differed from him, but generally by all ſorts of men. To conclude, he was a ſcribe ſingularly inſtructed unto the kingdom. Happy in finding out acceptable words.—A workman that needed not be aſhamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. A burning and ſhining light. " The righteous ſhall be had in everlaſting re" membrance."

[*] The ſmalleſt charge of a country pariſh perhaps in Scotland, not being quite ninety examinable perſons in his time. [†] One ſucceeds his father in name, office, and charge. [‡] One of the remoteſt and wildeſt places in the ſouth of Scotland. [§] Among her other uncommon excellencies, ſhe was eminent for her exemplary bearing of affliction, under which ſhe was bowed down, well nigh as long as that daughter of Abraham mentioned in Luke xiii. 11.

[*] Mr Baillie of Jerviſwood.

Though a ſkilful hand might in fewer words have drawn his character to much better purpoſe, there is no partiality by overdoing in what is ſaid, if intimate friendſhip for many years, and the account of his own life, done by himſelf, are allowed for competent evidences: but the hearing him preach one ſermon would have ſaid ſomething that cannot be ſaid now.

His removal in the juncture wherein he was taken away, ſome are ſatisfied, had, on ſeveral accounts, more of divine anger in it, with reſpect to this church, than is commonly apprehended.

It might have been more edifying, had there been room for it here, to have heard of him in his own words, from the general account of his life, by him addreſſed to his children: out of which ſhall, with their leave, ſubjoin only a few touches towards the cloſe of it, as follows:

" Thus alſo I was much addicted to peace, " and averſe from controverſy; though once " engaged therein, I was ſet to go through " with it. I had no great difficulty to retain a " honour and charity for my brethren differing " from me both in opinion and practice; but " then I was in no great hazard neither of be" ing ſwayed by them to depart from what I " judged truth or duty. Withal, it was eaſy " to me to yield to them in things wherein I " found not myſelf in conſcience bound up. " Whatever precipitant ſteps I have made in the " courſe of my life, which I deſire to be hum" bled for, raſhneſs in conduct was not my " weak ſide. But ſince the Lord, by his grace, " brought me to conſider things, it was much " my exerciſe to diſcern ſin and duty in parti" cular caſes, being afraid to venture on things, " untill I ſhould ſee myſelf called thereto: but " when the matter was cleared to me, I gene" rally ſtuck faſt by it, being as much afraid to " deſert the way which I took to be pointed out " to me. I never had the art of making rich, " nor could I ever heartily apply myſelf to the " managing of ſecular affairs. Even the ſecu" lar way of managing the diſcipline of the " church was ſo unacceptable to me, that I had " no heart to dip in the public church-ma" nagement. What appearances I made at any " time in theſe matters, were not readily in that " way." He concludes.

" And thus I have given ſome account of the " days of my vanity. Upon the whole, I bleſs " my God in Jeſus Chriſt, that ever he made me " a Chriſtian, and took an early dealing with " my ſoul: that ever he made me a miniſter of " the goſpel, and gave me ſome inſight into the " doctrine of his grace; and that ever he gave " me the bleſſed Bible, and brought me ac" quainted with the originals, and eſpecially " with the Hebrew text. The world hath all a" long been a ſtep dame to me, and whereſoever " I would have attempted to neſtle in it, there " was a thorn of uneaſineſs laid for me. Man is " born crying, lives complaining, and dies diſ" appointed from that quarter. All is vanity " and vexation of ſpirit. I have waited for thy " ſalvation, O Lord."

PREFACE.

IT is a maxim among wiſe men, That the knowledge of perſons is of as great uſe in the conduct of human life, as the knowledge of things: and it is moſt certain, that he who knows the various tempers, humours, and diſpoſitions of men, who can find out their turn of thought, and penetrate into the ſecret ſprings and principles of their actings, will not be at a loſs to find out proper means for compaſſing his aims, will eaſily preſerve himſelf from ſnares, and either evite or overcome difficulties. But the knowledge of human nature, morally conſidered, or, in other words, of the temper and diſpoſition of the ſoul in its moral powers, is of much greater value; as it is of uſe in the concerns of an unchangeable life and world. He who is poſſeſſed of ſo valuable a branch of knowledge, is thereby capacitated to judge aright of himſelf, to underſtand true Chriſtianity, and to conceive juſtly of perfect happineſs and conſummate miſery.

The depravity of human nature is ſo plainly taught, yea, inculcated in ſacred ſcripture, and is ſo obvious to every thinking man's obſervation, who ſearches his own breaſt, and reflects duly on his own temper and actings, that it is ſurpriſingly ſtrange and wonderful, how it comes to paſs that this important truth is ſo little underſtood, yea, ſo much diſbelieved, by men who bear the name of Goſpel-miniſters. Are there not perſons to be found in a neighbouring nation, in the character of preachers, appearing daily in pulpits, who are ſo unacquainted with their Bibles and themſelves, that they ridicule the doctrine of original ſin as unintelligible jargon? If they are perſons of a moral life and converſation, they ſeem to imagine, they cannot become better than they are; if they are immoral, they ſeem to indulge a conceit, that they can become virtuous, yea religious, when they pleaſe. Theſe are the men who talk of the dignity of human nature, of greatneſs of mind, nobleneſs of ſoul, and generoſity of ſpirit: as if they intended to perſuade themſelves and others that pride is a good principle; and do not know that pride and ſelfiſhneſs are the bane of mankind, and productive of all the wickedneſs, and much of the miſery to be found in this and in the other world; and is indeed that wherein the depravity of human nature properly conſiſts.

Upright Adam's nature faintly adumbrated the divine, in a moderated ſelf-eſteem, an adequate ſelf-love, and delightful reflection on his own borrowed excellency, regulated by a juſt eſteem of, and ſupreme love to his adored Creator: whence a peaceful ſerenity of mind, a loving, compaſſionate, and benevolent diſpoſition of ſoul, a depth of thought, and brightneſs of imagination, delightfully employed in the rapturous contemplation of his beloved Maker's infinite perfections; thus bearing the divine image, and reſembling God that made him. But no ſooner did he diſobey the divine prohibitory command, than the ſcales were caſt; his moderated ſelf-eſteem degenerated into pride, his adequate ſelf love ſhrunk into mere ſelfiſhneſs, and his delightful reflections on his own excellency varied into the tickling pleaſures of vanity and conceit: he loſt view of the author of his being, and thenceforth, inſtead of delighting in him, firſt dreaded and then deſpiſed him.

The modeſt, and therefore hitherto anonymous author of the following diſcourſes, Mr Thomas Boſton, having handled this ſubject, in preaching to his own obſcure parochial congregation at Etterick, in the ſheriffdom of Selkirk, had a particular view to their benefit, in printing and publiſhing them; and therefore the ſtile and method is plain and ſimple, and the firſt edition printed on coarſe paper; but the ſubject is ſo comprehenſive and important, ſo well managed, and the book has been ſo well received, that it now appears in the world, more embelliſhed, as well as better corrected than formerly.

Let it ſuffice to recommend it to thoſe who have a right taſte of genuine Chriſtianity, that all the author's notions flow ſo directly from the ſacred fountain, that it is to be doubted if he has had much recourſe to any other helps than his Bible and his God for aſſiſtance. Mean time, I am aware of an exception from thoſe who rank themſelves among the polite part of mankind, as that there is the ſame harſh peculiarity of dialect in it, which is commonly to be found in books of practical divinity. But I beg leave to obſerve, That the dialect they except againſt, is borrowed from ſacred ſcripture: and like as it has pleaſed God, by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe; ſo alſo to countenance what they are diſpleaſed with, by the operations of his Spirit on the minds of true Chriſtians, as their common experience witneſſeth. However, I heartily wiſh, the exception were altogether removed, by ſome perſons digeſting, into a methodical treatiſe, the views of human nature in its primitive perfection, in its depraved condition, and in its retrieved ſtate, who is maſter of modern ſtile, and thoroughly underſtands the ſubjects diſcourſed in this book, that by becoming all things to all men, ſome, viz. of all ranks and kinds of men, may be gained.

I am not to declaim at large in favours of religion; this were to write a book by way of preface. Many able pens have been employed in recommending it to the world, by ſtrong arguments drawn from its uſefulneſs to ſociety, its ſuitableneſs to the dignity of the rational nature, and the advantages ariſing to men from it in this and the other world. But, after all, may not one be allowed to doubt if religion be rightly underſtood by all its patrons? may not the beauties and excellencies of a precious gem be elegantly deſcribed by a naturaliſt, or jeweler, who never ſaw the particular one he talked of, and knows little of its nature, leſs of the conſtruction of its parts, and nothing of its proper uſe? Are there not men of bright parts, who reaſon finely in the defence of religion, and yet are ſo much ſtrangers to it, that they brand the perſons who are ſo happy as to be poſſeſſed of it, with the hard name of ſpiritualiſts, reckoning them a kind of Enthuſiaſts, unworthy of their regard? The truth is, Chriſtianity is a myſtery; mere reaſon does not comprehend it. There is a ſpiritual diſcerning neceſſary to its being rightly underſtood; whence it comes to paſs, that men of great learning and abilities, though they read the ſcriptures with attention, and comment learnedly upon them; yet do not, yea, cannot enter into the vein of thought peculiar to the inſpired penmen, becauſe they ſhare not of the ſame ſpirit: wherefore it is, that the apoſtle Paul aſſerts, that the natural, that is unregenerate man, doth not know the things of God, neither indeed can be capable of knowing them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned.

From what has been ſaid, it is eaſy to conclude, That no pedantic apology, on the part of the author, for appearing in print, or fawning compliments to the courteous reader, on the part of the prefacer, are to be expected. The truth is, both the one and the other are rather little arts, vailing pedantry and conceit, than evidences of modeſty and good ſenſe. It is of more uſe, to recommend the peruſal of the book to perſons of all ranks and degrees, from a few ſuitable topics; and then to ſhow wherein this edition differs from the firſt.

That all mankind, however differenced by their rank and ſtation in the world, have an equal concern in what is revealed concerning another and future world, will be readily owned; and it muſt be as readily granted, that, however allowable it may be for men of learning and parts to pleaſe themſelves with fineneſs of language, juſtneſs of thought, and exact connection, in writings upon other ſubjects; yet they ought not to indulge themſelves in the ſame taſte in diſcourſes on divine things, leſt they expoſe themſelves to the juſt cenſure of acting with the ſame indiſcretion, as a perſon in danger of famiſhing by hunger would be guilty of, if he perverſely rejected plain wholeſome food, when offered to him, for no other reaſon than the the want of palatable ſauce, or order and ſplendour in ſerving it up.

The ſacred book, we call the Bible, has a peculiar ſublimity in it, vailed with unuſual dialect and ſeeming inconnection; but it is not therefore to be rejected by men who bear the name of Chriſtians, as uncouth or unintelligible: true wiſdom dictates quite another thing; it counſels us, by frequent reading, to acquaint ourſelves well with it, become accuſtomed to its peculiar phraſes, and ſearch into its ſublimities; upon this ground, that the matters contained in it are of the utmoſt conſequence to us, and, when rightly underſtood, yield a refined delight, much ſuperior to what is to be found in reading the beſt written books on the moſt entertaining ſubjects. What pleads for the parent, is a plea for the progeny; practical diſcourſes upon divine ſubjects are the genuine offſpring of the ſacred text, and ought therefore to be read carefully and with attention, by perſons of all ranks and degrees; though they are indeed calculated for, and peculiarly adapted to ſuch as move in low ſpheres of life.

Let it, however, be a prevailing argument with perſons of all denominations carefully to read books of practical divinity, that many of them are not written on the ſame motives and principles as other books are; the authors have often a peculiar divine call to publiſh them, and well-founded hope of their being uſeful to advance Chriſtianity in the world. In conſequence whereof it is, that great numbers have reaped benefit by reading them, eſpecially in childhood and youth; many have been converted by them; and it may be queſtioned, if ever there was a true Chriſtian, ſince the art of printing made theſe books common, who has not, in ſome ſtage of life, reaped conſiderable advantage from them. This book recommends itſelf in a particular manner, by its being a ſhort ſubſtantial ſyſtem of practical divinity; inſomuch, that it may with truth be aſſerted, that a perſon, who is thoroughly acquainted with all that is here taught, may, without danger to his eternal intereſt, remain ignorant of other things, which pertain to the ſcience called Divinity. It is therefore earneſtly recommended to the ſerious and frequent peruſal of all, but eſpecially of ſuch as are in that ſtage of life called Youth, and are ſo ſtationed in the world, as not to be frequently opportuned to hear ſermons, and read commentaries on the ſacred text.

It is doubtleſs incumbent on maſters of families to make ſome proviſion of ſpiritual, as well as bodily food, for their children and ſervants. This is effectually done by putting practical books in their hands: and therefore this book is humbly and earneſtly recommended as a family-book, which all the members of it are not only allowed, but deſired to peruſe.

As to the difference betwixt this and the former edition which gives it preference, it lies chiefly in the author's not only having reviſed the ſtile, but the thought in many places, and corrected both, ſo as to ſet ſeveral important truths in a clearer light and make the ſtile of the book now uniform, which formerly was not ſo, becauſe of the explications of peculiar words and phraſes in uſe among the practical divines, eſpecially of the church of Scotland, which were interſperſed throughout the former edition, and introduced by another hand, for the ſake of ſuch perſons as are not accuſtomed to them. It remains that the prefacer not only ſubjoin his name, (which was concealed in the firſt edition) as a teſtimony that he eſteems the author and values the book, but that he may thereby recommend it in a particular manner to the peruſal of perſons of his own acquaintance. If in his aſſiſting towards its being publiſhed, and in prefacing both editions, he has not run unſent, he has what will bear him up under all cenſures: the charitable will think no evil, and others will do as they pleaſe.

STATE I.

NAMELY,

The STATE of INNOCENCE or PRIMITIVE INTEGRITY, in which MAN was created.

Eccl. vii. 29. Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have ſought out many inventions.

THERE are four things very neceſſary to be known by all that would ſee heaven: Firſt, What man was in the ſtate of innocence, as God made him. Secondly, What he is in the ſtate of corrupt nature, as he hath unmade himſelf. Thirdly, What he muſt be in the ſtate of grace, as created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, if ever he be made a partaker of the inheritance of the ſaints in light. And laſtly, What he ſhall be in his eternal ſtate, as made by the Judge of all, either perfectly happy, or completely miſerable, and that for ever. Theſe are weighty points, that touch the vitals of practical godlineſs; from which moſt men, and even many profeſſors, in theſe dregs of time, are quite eſtranged. I deſign therefore, under the divine conduct, to open up theſe things, and apply them.

I begin with the firſt of them, namely, the ſtate of innocence: that beholding man poliſhed after the ſimilitude of a palace, the ruins may the more affect us; we may the more prize that matchleſs perſon, whom the Father has appointed the repairer of the breach; and that we may with fixed reſolves, betake ourſelves to that way which leadeth to the city that hath unmoveable foundations. In the text we have three things;

1. The ſtate of innocence wherein man was created. God hath made man upright. By man here we are to underſtand our firſt parents; the archetypal pair, the root of mankind, the compendized world, and the fountain from whence all generations have ſtreamed; as may appear by comparing Gen. v. verſ. 1. and 2.----In the day that God created man, in the likeneſs of God made he him. Male and female created he them, and bleſſed them, (as the root of mankind,) and called their name Adam. The original word is the ſame in our text. In this ſenſe, man was made right, (agreeable to the nature of God, whoſe work is perfect), without any imperfection, corruption, or principle of corruption, in his body or ſoul. He was made upright, that is, ſtraight with the will and law of God, without any irregularity in his ſoul. By the ſet it got in its creation, it directly pointed towards God, as his chief end; which ſtraight inclination was repreſented, as in an emblem, by the erect figure of his body, a figure that no other living creature partakes of. What David was in a goſpel-ſenſe, that was he in a legal ſenſe; one according to God's own heart, altogether righteous, pure, and holy. God made him thus: he did not firſt make him, and then make him righteous; but in the very making of him, he made him righteous. Original righteouſneſs was concreated with him; ſo that in the ſame moment he was a man, he was a righteous man, morally good; with the ſame breath that God breathed in him a living ſoul, he breathed in him a righteous ſoul.

2. Here is man's fallen ſtate: But they have ſought out many inventions. They fell off from their reſt in God, and fell upon ſeeking inventions of their own, to mend their caſe; and they quite marred it. Their ruin was from their own proper motion: they would not abide as God had made them; but they ſought out inventions to deform and undo themſelves.

3. Obſerve here the certainty and importance of theſe things; Lo, this only have I found, &c. Believe them, they are the reſult of a narrow ſearch, and a ſerious enquiry, performed by the wiſeſt of men. In the two preceding verſes Solomon repreſents himſelf as in queſt of goodneſs in the world; but the iſſue of it was, he could find no ſatisfying iſſue of his ſearch after it; though it was not for want of pains, for he counted one by one to find out the account. Behold, this have I found (ſaith the preacher) to wit, That (as the ſame word is read in our text) yet my ſoul ſeeketh, but I find not. He could make no ſatisfying diſcovery of it, which might ſtay his enquiry. He found good men very rare, one as it were among a thouſand; good women more rare, not one good among his thouſand wives and concubines, 1 Kings xi. 3. but could not ſatisfy the grand query, Where ſhall wiſdom be found? No, it could not: (and if the experience of others, in this point, run counter to Solomon's, as it is no reflection on his diſcerning, it can as little decide the queſtion, which will remain undetermined till the laſt day). But, amidſt all this uncertainty there is one point found out and fixed: This have I found. Ye may depend upon it as a moſt certain truth, and be fully ſatisfied in it: Lo this; fix your eyes upon it, as a matter worthy of moſt deep and ſerious regard; to wit, that man's nature is now depraved: but that depravation was not from God, for he made man upright; but from themſeves, they have ſought out many inventions.

Doctrine, God made man altogether righteous.

THIS is that ſtate of innocence, in which God ſet man down in the world. It is deſcribed in the holy ſcriptures with a running pen, in compariſon of the following ſtates; for it was of no continuance, but paſſed as a flying ſhadow, by man's abuſing the freedom of his own will. I ſhall, Firſt, Enquire into the righteouſneſs of this ſtate in which man was created.

Secondly, Lay before you ſome of the happy concomitants and conſequents thereof.

Laſtly, Apply the whole.

Of MAN's original righteouſneſs.

FIRST, As to the righteouſneſs of this ſtate, conſider, That as uncreated righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of God, is the ſupreme rule; ſo all created righteouſneſs, whether of men or angels, hath reſpect to a law as its rule, and is a conformity thereunto. A creature can no more be morally independent on God in its actions and powers, than it can be naturally independent on him. A creature, as a creature, muſt acknowledge the Creator's will as its ſupreme law; for as it cannot be without him, ſo it muſt not be but for him, and according to his will; yet no law obliges, until it be revealed. And hence it follows, that there was a law, which man, as a rational creature, was ſubjected to in his creation; and that this law was revealed to him. God made man upright, ſays the text. This preſuppoſeth a law to which he was conformed in his creation; as when any thing is made regular, or according to rule, of neceſſity the rule itſelf is preſuppoſed. Whence we may gather, that this law of righteouſneſs, obſerved in all points by the ſecond Adam, is oppoſed by the carnal mind, ſome notions of which remain yet among the Pagans, who, having not the law, are a law unto themſelves, Rom. ii. 14. In a word, this law is the very ſame which was afterwards ſummed up in the ten commandments, and promulgate on mount Sinai, to the Iſraelites, called by us the moral law; and man's righteouſneſs conſiſted in conformity to this law or rule. More particularly, there is a twofold conformity required of man; a conformity of the powers of his ſoul to the law, which you may call habitual righteouſneſs; and a conformity of all his actions to it, which is actual righteouſneſs. Now, God made man habitually righteous: man was to make himſelf actually righteous; the former was the ſtock God put into his hand; the latter, the improvement he ſhould have made of it. The ſum of what I have ſaid is, that the righteouſneſs wherein man was created, was the conformity of all the faculties and powers of his ſoul to the moral law. This is what we call original righteouſneſs, which man was originally endued with. We may take it up in theſe three things:

Firſt, Man's underſtanding was a lamp of light. He had perfect knowledge of the law, and of his duty accordingly: he was made after God's image, and conſequently could not want knowledge, which is a part thereof, Col. iii. 10. The new man is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him. And indeed this was neceſſary to fit him for univerſal obedience, ſeeing no obedience can be according to the law, unleſs it proceed from a ſenſe of the commandment of God requiring it. It is true, Adam had not the law written upon tables of ſtone; but it was written upon his mind, the knowledge thereof being concreated with him. God impreſſed it upon his ſoul, and made him a law to himſelf, as the remains of it among the Heathens do teſtify, Rom. ii. 14. 15. And ſeeing man was made to be the mouth of the creation, to glorify God in his works, we have ground to believe he had naturally an exquiſite knowledge of the works of God. We have a proof of this in his giving names to the beaſts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and theſe ſuch as expreſs their nature. Whatſoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof, Gen. ii 19. And the dominion which God gave him over the creatures, ſoberly to uſe and diſpoſe of them according to his will, (ſtill in ſubordination to the will of God), ſeems to require no leſs than a knowledge of their natures. And, beſides all this, his perfect knowledge of the law, proves his knowledge in the management of civil affairs, which, in reſpect of the law of God, a good man will guide with diſcretion, Pſal. cxii. 5.

Secondly, His will lay ſtraight with the will of God, Eph. iv. 24. There was no corruption in his will, no bent nor inclination to evil; for that is ſin, properly and truly ſo called: hence the apoſtle ſays, Rom. vii. 7. I had not known ſin, but by the law; for I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet. An inclination to evil is really a fountain of ſin, and therefore inconſiſtent with that rectitude and uprightneſs which the text expreſsly ſays he was endued with at his creation. The will of man then was directed and naturally inclined to God and goodneſs, though mutably. It was diſpoſed, by its original make, to follow the Creator's will, as the ſhadow does the body; and was not left in an equal balance to good and evil: for at that rate he had not been upright, nor habitually conform to the law; which in no moment can allow the creature not to be inclined towards God as his chief end, more than it can allow man to be a god to himſelf. The law was impreſſed upon Adam's ſoul: now this, according to the new covenant, by which the image of God is repaired, conſiſts in two things; 1. Putting the law into the mind, denoting the knowledge of it; 2. Writing it in the heart, denoting inclinations in the will, anſwerable to the commands of the law, Heb. viii. 10. So that, as the will, when we conſider it as renewed by grace, is by that grace natively inclined to the ſame holineſs, in all its parts which the law requires; ſo was the will of man (when we conſider him as God made him at firſt) endued with natural inclinations to every thing commanded by the law. For if the regenerate are partakers of the divine nature, as undoubtedly they are, for ſo ſays the ſcripture, 2 Pet. i. 4.; and if this divine nature can import no leſs than inclinations of the heart to holineſs, then ſurely Adam's will could not want this inclination; for in him the image of God was perfect. It is true, it is ſaid, Rom. ii. 14. 15. That the Gentiles ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts; but this denotes only their knowledge of that law, ſuch as it is; but the apoſtle to the Hebrews, in the text cited, takes the word heart in another ſenſe, diſtinguiſhing it plainly from the mind. And it muſt be granted, that, when God promiſeth in the new covenant, to write his law in the hearts of his people, it imports quite another thing than what Heathens have; for though they have notions of it in their minds, yet their hearts go another way; their will has got a ſet and a bias quite contrary to that law; and therefore the expreſſion, ſuitable to the preſent purpoſe, muſt needs import, beſides theſe notions of the mind, inclinations of the will going along therewith; which inclinations, though mixed with corruption in the regenerate, were pure and unmixed in upright Adam. In a word, as Adam knew his Maſter's pleaſure in the matter of duty, ſo his will ſtood inclined to what he knew.

Thirdly, His affections were orderly, pure, and holy; which is a neceſſary part of that uprightneſs wherein man was created. The apoſtle has a petition, 2 Theſſ. iii. 5. The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God; that is, The Lord ſtraighten your hearts, or make them ly ſtraight to the love of God: and our text tell us, man was thus made ſtraight. The new man was created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, Eph. iv. 24. Now this holineſs, as it is diſtinguiſhed from righteouſneſs, may import the purity and orderlineſs of the affections. And thus the apoſtle, 1 Tim. ii. 8. will have men to pray, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting: becauſe, as troubled water is unfit to receive the image of the ſun, ſo the heart filled with impure and diſorderly affections is not fit for divine communications. Man's ſenſitive appetite was indeed naturally carried out towards objects grateful to the ſenſes. For ſeeing man was made up of body and ſoul, and God made this man to glorify and enjoy him, and for this end to uſe his good creatures in ſubordination to himſelf; it is plain that man was naturally inclined both to ſpiritual and ſenſible good; yea to ſpiritual good, the chief good, as his ultimate end. And therefore his ſenſitive motions and inclinations were ſubordinate to his reaſon and will, which lay ſtraight with the will of God, and were not in the leaſt contrary to the ſame. Otherwiſe he ſhould have been made up of contradictions; his ſoul being naturally inclined to God, as the chief end, in the ſuperior part thereof; and the ſame ſoul inclined to the creature, as the chief end, in the inferior part thereof, as they call it: which is impoſſible; for man, at the ſame inſtant, cannot have two chief ends. Man's affections then, in his primitive ſtate, were pure from all defilement, free from all diſorder and diſtemper, becauſe in all their motions they were duly ſubjected to his clear reaſon, and his holy will. He had alſo an executive power anſwerable to his will; a power to do the good which he knew ſhould be done, and which he inclined to do, even to fulfil the whole law of God. If it had not been ſo, God would not have required of him perfect obedience; for to ſay that the Lord gathereth where he hath not ſtrawed, is but the blaſphemy of a wicked heart againſt a good and bountiful God, Matth. xxv. 24, 25. From what has been ſaid it may be gathered, That the original righteouſneſs explained was univerſal and natural, yet mutable.

Firſt, It was univerſal; both with reſpect to the ſubject of it, the whole man; and the object of it, the whole law. Univerſal, I ſay, with reſpect to the ſubject of it; for this righteouſneſs was diffuſed through the whole man: it was a bleſſed leaven, that leavened the whole lump.

There was not one wrong pin in the tabernacle of human nature, when God ſet it up, however ſhattered it is now. Man was then holy in ſoul, body, and ſpirit; while the ſoul remained untainted, its lodging was kept clean and undefiled; the members of the body were conſecrated veſſels, and inſtruments of righteouſneſs. A combat betwixt fleſh and ſpirit, reaſon and appetite, nay the leaſt inclination to ſin, or luſt of the fleſh in the inferior part of the ſoul, was utterly inconſiſtent with this uprightneſs in which man was created; and has been invented to vail the corruption of man's nature, and to obſcure the grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt: it looks very like the language of fallen Adam, laying his own ſin at his Maker's door, Gen. iii. 12. The woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree, and I did eat. But as this righteouſneſs was univerſal in reſpect of the ſubject, becauſe it ſpread through the whole man; ſo alſo it was univerſal in reſpect of the object, the holy law. There was nothing in the law but what was agreeable to his reaſon and will, as God made him; though ſin hath now ſet him at odds with it; his ſoul was ſhapen out in length and breadth to the commandment, though exceeding broad; ſo that his original righteouſneſs was not only perfect in parts, but in degrees.

Secondly, As it was univerſal, ſo it was natural to him, and not ſupernatural, in that ſtate. Not that it was eſſential to man, as man; for then he could not have loſt it, without the loſs of his very being: but it was connatural to him, he was created with it; and it was neceſſary to the perfection of man, as he came out of the hand of God; neceſſary to conſtitute him in a ſtate of integrity. Yet, Thirdly, It was mutable; it was a righteouſneſs that might be loſt, as is manifeſted by the doleful event. His will was not abſolutely indifferent to good or evil; God ſet it towards good only; yet he did not ſo fix and confirm its inclinations, that it could not alter. No, it was moveable to evil, and that only by man himſelf, God having given him a ſufficient power to ſtand in this integrity, if he had pleaſed. Let no man quarrel God's work in this: for if Adam had been unchangeably righteous, he behoved to have been ſo, either by nature, or by free gift: by nature he could not be ſo, for that is proper to God, and incommunicable to any creature; if by free gift, then no wrong was done him, in with-holding of what he could not crave. Confirmation in a righteous ſtate, is a reward of grace, given upon continuing righteous through the ſtate of trial; and would have been given to Adam, if he had ſtood out the time appointed for probation by the Creator; and accordingly is given to the ſaints, upon the account of the merits of Chriſt, who was obedient even to the death. And herein believers have the advantage of Adam, that they can never totally nor finally fall away from grace.

Thus was man made originally righteous, being created in God's own image, Gen. i. 27. which conſiſts in the poſitive qualities of knowledge, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, Col. iii. 10. Eph. iv. 24. All that God made was very good, according to their ſeveral natures, Gen. i. 31. and ſo was man morally good, being made after the image of him who is good and upright, Pſal. xxv. 8. Without this he could not have anſwered the great end of his creation, which was, to know, love, and ſerve his God, according to his will: nay, he could not be created otherwiſe; for he behoved either to be conform to the law in his powers, principles and inclinations, or not: if he was, then he was righteous; and, if not, he was a ſinner; which is abſurd and horrible to imagine.

Of MAN's original happineſs.

SECONDLY, I ſhall lay before yon ſome of thoſe things which did accompany or flow from the righteouſneſs of man's primitive ſtate. Happineſs is the reſult of holineſs; and as this was an holy, ſo it was an happy ſtate.

Firſt, Man was then a very glorious creature. We have reaſon to ſuppoſe, that as Moſes' face ſhone when he came down from the mount; ſo man had a very lightſome and pleaſant countenance, and beautiful body, while as yet there was no darkneſs of ſin in him at all. But ſeeing God himſelf is glorious in holineſs, (Exod. xv. 11.) ſurely that ſpiritual comelineſs the Lord put upon man at his creation, made him a very glorious creature. O how did light ſhine in his holy converſation, to the glory of the Creator! while every action was but the darting forth of a ray and beam of that glorious unmixed light which God had ſet up in his ſoul, while that lamp of love, lighted from heaven, continued burning in his heart, as in the holy place; and the law of the Lord, put in his inwards parts by the finger of God, was kept by him there as in the moſt holy. There was no impurity to be ſeen without; no ſquint look in the eyes, after any unclean thing; the tongue ſpoke nothing but the language of heaven; and, in a word, the King's SON was all glorious within, and his clothing of wrought gold.

Secondly, He was the favourite of Heaven. He ſhone brightly in the image of God, who cannot but love his own image, where-ever it appears. While he was alone in the world, he was not alone, for God was with him. His communion and fellowſhip was with his Creator, and that immediately; for as yet there was nothing to turn away the face of God from the work of his own hands, ſeeing ſin had not as yet entered, which alone could make the breach.

By the favour of God, he was advanced to be confederate with Heaven in the firſt covenant, called, the covenant of works. God reduced the law, which he gave in his creation, in the form of a covenant, whereof perfect obedience was the condition, life was the thing promiſed, and death the penalty. As for the condition one great branch of the natural law was, that man believe whatſoever God ſhall reveal, and do whatſoever he ſhall command: accordingly God, making this covenant with man, extended his duty to the not eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil; and the law thus extended was the rule of man's covenant-obedience. How eaſy were theſe terms to him who had the natural law written on his heart; and that inclining him to obey this poſitive law revealed to him, it ſeems, by an audible voice, (Gen. ii. 17.) the matter whereof was ſo very eaſy? And, indeed, it was highly reaſonable that the rule and matter of his covenant-obedience ſhould be thus extended, that which was added being a thing in itſelf indifferent, where his obedience was to turn upon the preciſe point of the will of God, the plaineſt evidence of true obedience; and it being in an external thing, wherein his obedience or diſobedience would be moſt clear and conſpicuous.

Now, upon this condition, God promiſed him life, the continuance of natural life, in the union of ſoul and body, and of ſpiritual life, in the favour of his Creator: he promiſed him alſo eternal life in heaven, to have been entered into when he ſhould have paſſed the time of his trial upon earth, and the Lord ſhould ſee meet to tranſport him into the upper paradiſe. This promiſe of life was included in the threatening of death, mentioned Gen. ii. 17.: for while God ſays, In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die: It is in effect, If thou do not eat it, thou ſhalt ſurely live. And this was ſacramentally confirmed by another tree in the garden, called therefore, the tree of life, which he was debarred from when he had ſinned; Gen. iii. 22, 23. Leſt he put forth his hand, and take alſo of the tree of life, and eat and live for ever; therefore the Lord God ſent him forth from the garden of Eden. Yet it is not to be thought that man's life and death did hang only on this matter of the forbidden fruit, but on the whole law; for ſo ſays the apoſtle, Gal. iii. 10. It is written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. That of the forbidden fruit was a revealed part of Adam's religion; and ſo behoved expreſsly to be laid before him: but as to the natural law, he naturally knew death to be the reward of diſobedience; for the very Heathens were not ignorant of this, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death, Rom. i. 32. And moreover, the promiſe included in the threatning, ſecured Adam's life, according to the covenant, as long as he obeyed the natural law, with the addition of that poſitive command; ſo that he needed nothing to be expreſſed to him in the covenant, but what concerned the eating of the forbidden fruit. That eternal life in heaven was promiſed in the covenant is plain from this, that the threatning was of eternal death in hell; to which when man had made himſelf liable, Chriſt was promiſed by his death to purchaſe eternal life. And Chriſt himſelf expounds the promiſe of the covenant of works, of eternal life, while he propoſeth the condition of that covenant to a proud young man, who, though he had not Adam's ſtock, yet would needs enter into life in the way of working, as Adam was to have done under this covenant, Matth. xix. 17. If thou wilt enter into life, (viz. eternal life, by doing, ver. 16.) keep the commandments.

The penalty was death, Gen. ii. 17. In the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely die. The death threatened was ſuch as the life promiſed was; and that moſt juſtly, to wit, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal death. The event is a commentary on this; for that very day he did eat thereof, he was a dead man in law; but the execution was ſtopped, becauſe of his poſterity, then in his loins, and another covenant was prepared; however, that day his body got its death's-wound, and became mortal. Death alſo ſeized his ſoul; he loſt his original righteouſneſs, and the favour of God: witneſs the grips and throws of conſcience which made him hide himſelf from God. And he became liable to eternal death, which would have actually followed of courſe, if a Mediator had not been provided, who found him bound with the cords of death, as a malefactor ready to be led to execution. Thus you have a ſhort deſcription of the covenant into which the Lord brought man in the ſtate of innocence.

And ſeemeth it a ſmall thing unto you, that earth was thus confederate with heaven? This could have been done to none but him whom the King of heaven delighted to honour. It was an act of grace, worthy of the gracious God, whoſe favourite he was; for there was grace and free favour in the firſt covenant; tho' the exceeding riches of grace, as the apoſtle calls it, Eph. ii. 7. was reſerved for the ſecond. It was certainly an act of grace, favour, and admirable condeſcenſion in God, to enter into a covenant, and ſuch a covenant, with his own creature. Man was not at his own but at God's diſpoſal; nor had he any thing to work with, but what he had received from God. There was no proportion betwixt the work and the promiſed reward. Before that covenant, man was bound to perfect obedience, in virtue of his natural dependence on God; and death was naturally the wages of ſin, which the juſtice of God could and would have required, though there never had been any covenant betwixt God and man: but God was free; man could never have required eternal life as the reward of his work, if there had not been ſuch a covenant. God was free to have diſpoſed of his creature as he ſaw meet; and if he had ſtood in his integrity as long as the world ſtood, and there had been no covenant promiſing eternal life to him upon his obedience, God might have withdrawn his ſupporting hand at laſt, and ſo made him creep back into the womb of nothing, whence almighty power had drawn him out. And what wrong could there have been in this, while God would take back what he freely gave? But now the covenant being made, God becomes debtor to his own faithfulneſs: if man will work, he may crave the reward on the ground of the covenant. Well might the angels then, upon his being raiſed to this dignity, have given him this ſalutation, Hail! thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee.

Thirdly, God made him lord of the world, prince of the inferior creatures, univerſal lord and emperor of the whole earth. His Creator gave him dominion over the fiſh of the ſea, and over the fowl of the air, over all the earth, yea, and every living thing that moveth on the earth: he put all things under his feet, Pſal. viii. 6, 7, 8. He gave him a power, ſoberly to uſe and diſpoſe of the creatures in the earth, ſea, and air. Thus man was God's depute-governor in the lower world; and this his dominion was an image of God's ſovereignty. This was common to the man and the woman: but the man had one thing peculiar to him, to wit, that he had dominion over the woman alſo, 1 Cor. xi. 7. Behold how the creatures came to him, to own their ſubjection, and to do him homage as their lord; and quietly ſtood before him, till he put names on them as his own, Gen. ii. 19. Man's face ſtruck an awe upon them; the ſtouteſt creatures ſtood aſtoniſhed, tamely and quietly adoring him as their lord and ruler. Thus was man crowned with glory and honour, Pſal. viii. 5. The Lord dealt moſt liberally and bountifully with him, put all things under his feet: only he kept one thing, one tree of the garden out of his hands, even the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

But you may ſay, And did he grudge him this? I anſwer, Nay; but when he had made him thus holy and happy, he graciouſly gave him this reſtriction, which was in its own nature a prop and ſtay to keep him from falling. And this I ſay upon theſe three grounds: (1.) As it was moſt proper for the honour of God, who had made man lord of the lower world, to aſſert his ſovereign dominion over all, by ſome particular viſible ſign; ſo it was moſt proper for mans ſafety. Man being ſet down in a beautiful paradiſe, it was an act of infinite wiſdom, and of grace too, to keep from him one ſingle tree, as a viſible teſtimony that he muſt hold all of his Creator, as his great landlord, that ſo, while he ſaw himſelf lord of the creatures he might not forget that he was ſtill God's ſubject. (2.) This was a memorial of his mutable ſtate given to him from heaven, to be laid up by him for his greater caution. For man was created with a free will to good, which the tree of life was an evidence of: but his will was alſo free to evil, and the forbidden tree was to him a memorial thereof. It was, in a manner, a continual watch-word to him againſt evil, a beacon ſet up before him, to bid him beware of daſhing himſelf to pieces on the rock of ſin. (3.) God made man upright, directed towards God as the chief end. He ſet him, like Moſes, on the top of the hill, holding up his hands to heaven: and as Aaron and Hur ſtayed up Moſes's hands, (Exod. xvii. 10, 11, 12.), ſo God gave man an erect figure of body and forbid him the eating of this tree, to keep him in this poſture of uprightneſs wherein he was created. God made the beaſts looking down towards the earth, to ſhew that their ſatisfaction might be brought from thence; and accordingly it does afford them what is commenſurable to their appetite: but the erect figure of man's body, which looketh upward, ſhewed him that his happineſs lay above him, in God; and that he was to expect it from heaven, and not from earth. Now this fair tree, of which he was forbidden to eat, taught him the ſame leſſon; that his happineſs lay not in enjoyment of the creatures, for there was a want even in paradiſe: ſo that the forbidden tree was, in effect, the hand of all the creatures, pointing man away from themſelves to God for happineſs. It was a ſign of emptineſs hung before the door of the creation, with that inſcription, This is not your reſt.

Fourthly, As he had a perfect tranquillity within his own breaſt, ſo he had a perfect calm without. His heart had nothing to reproach him with; conſcience then had nothing to do, but to direct, approve, and feaſt him: and without there was nothing to annoy him. The happy pair lived in perfect amity; and though their knowledge was vaſt, true, and clear, they knew no ſhame. Though they were naked, there were no bluſhes in their faces; for ſin, the ſeed of ſhame was not yet ſown, Gen. ii. 25. And their beautiful bodies were not capable of injuries from the air: ſo that they had no need of clothes, which are originally the badges of our ſhame. They were liable to no diſeaſes nor pains: and, though they were not to live idle, yet toil, wearineſs, and ſweat of the brows, were not known in this ſtate.

Fifthly, Man had a life of pure delight, and undreggy pleaſure in this ſtate. Rivers of pure pleaſures run through it. The earth, with the product thereof, was now in its glory; nothing had yet come in, to mar the beauty of the creatures. God ſet him down, not in a common place of the earth; but in Eden, a place eminent for pleaſantneſs, as the name of it imports; nay not only in Eden, but in the garden of Eden; the moſt pleaſant ſpot of that pleaſant place; a garden planted by God himſelf, to be the manſion-houſe of this his favourite. As, when God made the other living creatures, he ſaid Let the water bring forth the moving creature, Gen. i. 20. and Let the earth bring forth the living creature, verſe 24. but when man was to be made, he ſaid, Let us make man, verſe 26. ſo, when the reſt of the earth was to be furniſhed with herbs and trees, God ſaid, Let the earth bring forth graſs,——and the fruit tree, &c. Gen. i. 11. But of paradiſe it is ſaid, God planted it, chap. ii. 8. which cannot but denote a ſingular excellency in that garden beyond all other parts of the then beautiful earth. There he wanted neither for neceſſity nor delight; for there was every tree that is pleaſant to the ſight, and good for food, verſe 9. He knew not theſe delights which luxury invented for the gratifying of luſts; but his delights were ſuch as came out of the hand of God; without paſſing through ſinful hands, which readily leave marks of impurity on what they touch. So his delights were pure, his pleaſures refined. And yet may I ſhow you a more excellent way: wiſdom had entered into his heart; ſurely then knowledge was pleaſant unto his ſoul. What delight do ſome find in their diſcoveries of the works of nature, by the ſcraps of knowledge they have gathered! but how much more exquiſite pleaſure had Adam, while his piercing eyes read the book of God's works; which God laid before him, to the end he might glorify him in the ſame; and therefore had ſurely fitted him for the work! But, above all, his knowledge of God, and that as his God, and the communion he had with him, could not but afford him the moſt refined and exquiſite pleaſure in the innermoſt receſſes of his heart. Great is that delight which the ſaints find in theſe views of the glory of God, that their ſouls are ſometimes let into, while they are compaſſed about with many infirmities: but much more may well be allowed to ſinleſs Adam: no doubt he reliſhed theſe pleaſures at another rate.

Laſtly, He was immortal. He would never have died if he had not ſinned; it was in caſe of ſin that death was threatened, Gen. ii. 17. which ſhews it to be the conſequent of ſin, and not of the ſinleſs human nature. The perfect conſtitution of his body, which came out of God's hand very good, and the righteouſneſs and holineſs of his ſoul, removed all inward cauſes of death; nothing being prepared for the grave's devouring mouth, but the vile body, Phil. iii. 21. and thoſe who have ſinned, Job. xxiv. 19. And God's ſpecial care of his innocent creature, ſecured him againſt outward violence. The apoſtle's teſtimony is expreſs, Rom. v. 12. By one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin. Behold the door by which death came in! Satan wrought with his lies till he got it opened, and ſo death entered; and therefore is he ſaid to have been a murderer from the beginning, John. viii. 44.

Thus have I ſhown you the holineſs and happineſs of man in this ſtate. If any ſhall ſay, What is all this to us, who never taſted of that holy and happy ſtate? They muſt know, it nearly concerns us, in ſo far as Adam was the root of all mankind, our common head and repreſentative; who received from God our inheritance and ſtock, to keep it for himſelf, and his children, and to convey it to them. The Lord put all mankind's ſtock (as it were) in one ſhip; and, as we ourſelves would have done, he made our common father the pilot. He put a bleſſing in the root, to have been, if rightly managed, diffuſed into all the branches. According to our text, making Adam upright, he made man upright; and all mankind had that uprightneſs in him; for, if the root be holy, ſo are the branches; but more of this afterwards. Had Adam ſtood, none would have quarrelled the repreſentation.

The doctrine of the ſtate of innocence applied.

USE I. For information. This ſhews us, (1.) That not God, but man himſelf, was the cauſe of his ruin. God made him upright; his Creator ſet him up, but he threw himſelf down. Was the Lord's directing and inclining him to good, the reaſon of his woful choice? or did Heaven deal ſo ſparingly with him, that his preſſing wants ſent him to hell to ſeek ſupply? Nay, man was, and is, the cauſe of his own ruin. (2.) God may moſt juſtly require of men perfect obedience to his law, and condemn them for their not obeying it perfectly, though now they have no ability to keep it. In ſo doing he gathers but where he has ſtrawed. He gave man ability to keep the whole law; man has loſt it by his own fault: but his ſin could never take away that right which God hath to exact perfect obedience of his creature, and to puniſh in caſe of his diſobedience. (3.) Behold here the infinite obligation we lie under to Jeſus Chriſt the ſecond Adam, who, with his own precious blood, has bought our eſcheat, and freely makes offer of it again to us, Hoſ. xiii. 9. and that with the advantage of everlaſting ſecurity, that it can never be altogether loſt any more, John. x. 28. 29. Free grace will fix thoſe, whom free will ſhook down into a gulf of miſery.

USE II. This reacheth a reproof to three ſorts of perſons: (1.) To theſe who hate religion in the power of it, where-ever it appears; and can take pleaſure in nothing, but in the world and their luſts. Surely thoſe men are far from righteouſneſs: they are haters of God, Rom. i. 30. for they are haters of his image. Upright Adam in paradiſe would have been a great eye-ſore to all ſuch perſons; as he was to the ſerpent, whoſe ſeed they prove themſelves to be, by their malignity. (2.) It reproves thoſe who put religion to ſhame, and thoſe who are aſhamed of religion, before a graceleſs world. There is a generation who make ſo bold with the God that made them, and can in a moment cruſh them, that they ridicule piety, and make a mock of ſeriouſneſs. Againſt whom do ye ſport yourſelves? againſt whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Iſ. lvii. 4. Is it not againſt God himſelf, whoſe image, in ſome meaſure repaired on ſome of his creatures, makes them fools in your eyes? But be ye not mockers, leſt your bands be made ſtrong, Iſ. xxviii. 22. Holineſs was the glory God put on man, when he made him: but now the ſons of men turn that glory into ſhame, becauſe they themſelves glory in their ſhame. There are others that ſecretly approve of religion, and in religious company will profeſs it, who, at other times, to be neighbour-like, are aſhamed to own it: ſo weak are they, that they are blown over with the wind of the wicked's mouth. A broad laughter, an impious jeſt, a ſilly gibe out of a profane mouth, is to many an unanſwerable argument againſt religion and ſeriouſneſs: for, in the cauſe of religion, they are as ſilly doves without heart. O that ſuch would conſider that weighty word, Mark viii. 38. Whoſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation; of him alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels. (3.) It reproves the proud ſelf-conceited profeſſor, who admires himſelf in a garment he hath patched together of rags. There are many, who, when once they have gathered ſome ſcraps of knowledge of religion, and have attained to ſome reformation of life, do ſwell big with conceit of themſelves: a ſad ſign that the effects of the fall lie ſo heavy upon them, that they have not as yet come to themſelves, Luke. xv. 17. They have eyes behind, to ſee their attainments; but no eyes within, no eyes before, to ſee their wants, which would ſurely humble them: for true knowledge makes men to ſee, both what once they were, and what they are at preſent; and ſo is humbling, and will not ſuffer them to be content with any meaſure of grace attained; but puts them on to preſs forward, forgetting the things that are behind, Phil. iii. 13. 14. But thoſe men are ſuch a ſpectacle of commiſeration, as one would be that had ſet his palace on fire, and were glorying in a cottage he had built for himſelf out of the rubbiſh, though ſo very weak, that it could not ſtand againſt a ſtorm.

USE. III. Of lamentation. Here was a ſtately building; man carved like a fair palace, but now lying in aſhes: let us ſtand and look on the ruins, and drop a tear. This is a lamentation, and ſhall be for a lamentation. Could we chuſe but to weep, if we ſaw our country ruined, and turned by the enemy into a wilderneſs? if we ſaw our houſes on fire, and our houſholds periſhing in the flames? But all this comes far ſhort of the diſmal ſight, man fallen as a ſtar from heaven. Ah! may we not now ſay, O that we were as in months paſt, when there was no ſtain in our nature, no cloud on our minds, no pollution in our hearts! Had we never been in better caſe, the matter had been leſs: but they that were brought up in ſcarlet, do now embrace dunghills! Where is our primitive glory now? Once no darkneſs in the mind, no rebellion in the will, no diſorder in the affections. But ah! how is the faithful city become an harlot? Righteouſneſs lodged in it; but now murderers Our ſilver is become droſs, our wine mixt with water. That heart which was once the temple of God, is now turned into a den of thieves. Let our name be Ichabod, for the glory is departed. Happy waſt thou, O man, who was like unto thee? No pain nor ſickneſs could affect thee, no death could approach thee, no ſigh was heard from thee, till theſe bitter fruits were plucked off the forbidden tree. Heaven ſhone upon thee, and earth ſmiled: thou waſt the companion of angels, and the envy of devils. But how low is he now laid, who was created for dominion, and made lord of the world! The crown has fallen from our head: wo unto us that we have ſinned. The creatures that waited to do him ſervice, are now, ſince the fall, ſet in battle-array againſt him, and the leaſt of them, having commiſſion, proves too hard for him. Waters overflow the old world; fire conſumes Sodom; the ſtars in their courſes fight againſt Siſera; frogs, flies, lice, &c. turn executioners to Pharaoh and his Egyptians; worms eat up Herod: yea, man needs a league with the beaſts, yea, with the very ſtones of the field, Job v. 23; having reaſon to fear, that every one that findeth him will ſlay him. Alas! how are we fallen! how are we plunged into a gulf of miſery! The ſun has gone down on us, death has come in at our windows; our enemies have put out our two eyes, and ſport themſelves with our miſeries. Let us then ly down in our ſhame, and let our confuſion cover us. Neverthelеſs there is hope in Iſrael concerning this thing. Come then, O ſinner, look to Jeſus Chriſt the ſecond Adam: quit the firſt Adam and his covenant; come over to the Mediator and Surety of the new and better covenant; and let your hearts ſay, Be thou our ruler, and let this breach be under thy hand: and let your eye trickle down, and ceaſe not, without any intermiſſion, till the Lord look down and behold from heaven," Lam. iii. 49.

STATE II.

NAMELY,

The State of Nature, or of Entire Depravation.

HEAD I.

The Sinfulness of Man's Natural State.

Genesis vi. 5.

And God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.

WE have ſeen what man was, as God made him; a lovely and happy creature: let us view him now as he hath unmade himſelf; and we ſhall ſee him a ſinful and miſerable creature. This is the ſad ſtate we were brought into by the fall; a ſtate as black and doleful, as the former was glorious; and this we commonly call the ſtate of nature, or man's natural ſtate, according to that of the apoſtle, Eph. ii. 3. And were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. And herein two things are to be conſidered; 1ſt, The ſinfulneſs; 2dly, The miſery of this eſtate, in which all the unregenerate do live. I begin with the ſinfulneſs of man's natural ſtate, whereof the text gives us a full, tho' ſhort account. And God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great, &c.

The ſcope and deſign of theſe words is, to clear God's juſtice, in bringing the flood on the old world. There are two particular cauſes of it taken notice of in the preceding verſes. (1.) Mixt marriages, verſ. 2. The ſons of God, the poſterity of Seth and Enos, profeſſors of the true religion, married with the daughters of men, the profane curſed race of Cain. They did not carry the matter before the Lord, that he might chuſe for them, Pſal. xlviii. 14: but, without any reſpect to the will of God, they choſe, not according to the rules of their faith, but of their fancy; they ſaw that they were fair: and their marriage with them occaſioned their divorce from God. This was one of the cauſes of the deluge which ſwept away the old world. Would to God all profeſſors in our day could plead not guilty: but though that ſin brought on the deluge, yet the deluge hath not ſwept away that ſin; which, as of old, ſo in our day, may juſtly be looked upon as one cauſe of the decay of religion. It was an ordinary thing among the Pagans, to change their gods, as they changed their condition into a married lot; and many ſad inſtances the Chriſtian world affords of the ſame; as if people were of Pharaoh's opinion, That religion is only for thoſe who have no other care upon their heads, Exod. v. 17. (2.) Great oppreſſion, verſ. 4. There were giants in the earth in thoſe days: men of great ſtature, great ſtrength, and monſtrous wickedneſs, filling the earth with violence, ver. 11. But neither their ſtrength, nor treaſures of wickedneſs, could profit them in the day of wrath. Yet the gain of oppreſſion ſtill carries many over the terror of this dreadful example. Thus much for the connection, and what particular crimes that generation was guilty of. But every perſon that was ſwept away with the flood could not be guilty of theſe things; and ſhall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Therefore, in my text, there is a general indictment drawn up againſt them all, The wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, &c. And this is well inſtructed, for God ſaw it. Two things are laid to their charge here:

Firſt, Corruption of life, wickedneſs, great wickedneſs. I underſtand this of the wickedneſs of their lives; for it is plainly diſtinguiſhed from the wickedneſs of their hearts. The ſins of their outward converſation were great in the nature of them, and greatly aggravated by their attending circumſtances: and this not only among thoſe of the race of curſed Cain, but thoſe of holy Seth; the wickedneſs of man was great. And then it is added, in the earth; (1.) To vindicate God's ſeverity, in that he not only cut off ſinners, but defaced the beauty of the earth; and ſwept off the brute creatures from it, by the deluge; that as men had ſet the marks of their impiety, God might ſet the marks of his indignation, on the earth. (2.) To ſhew the heinouſneſs of their ſin, in making the earth, which God had ſo adorned for the uſe of man, a ſink of ſin, and a ſtage whereon to act their wickedneſs, in defiance of Heaven. God ſaw this corruption of life; he not only knew it, and took notice of it, but he made them to know, that he did take notice of it, and that he had not forſaken the earth, though they had forſaken heaven.

Secondly, Corruption of nature; Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. All their wicked practices are here traced to the fountain and ſpring-head: a corrupt heart was the ſource of all. The ſoul, which was made upright in all its faculties, is now wholly diſordered. The heart, that was made according to God's own heart, is now the reverſe of it, a forge of evil imaginations, a ſink of inordinate affections, and a ſtorehouſe of all impiety, Mark vii. 21. 22. Behold the heart of the natural man, as it is opened in our text. The mind is defiled; the thoughts of the heart are evil; the will and affections are defiled; the imagination of the thoughts of the heart, (i. e. whatſoever the heart frameth within itſelf by thinking, ſuch as judgment, choice, purpoſes, devices, deſires, every inward motion), or rather, the frame of the thoughts of the heart, (namely, the frame, make, or mould of theſe, 1 Chron; xxix. 18.), is evil. Yea, and every imagination, every frame of his thoughts, is ſo. The heart is ever framing ſomething; but never one right thing: the frame of thoughts in the heart of man, is exceeding various; yet are they never caſt into a right frame. But is there not, at leaſt a mixture of good in them? No, they are only evil; there is nothing in them truly good and acceptable before God: nor can any thing be ſo that comes out of that forge; where not the Spirit of God, but the prince of the power of the air, worketh, Eph. ii. 2. Whatever changes may be found in them, are only from evil to evil; for the imagination of the heart, or frame of thoughts in natural men, is evil continually, or every day. From the firſt day to the laſt day, in this ſtate, they are in midnight darkneſs; there is not a glimmering of the light of holineſs in them; not one holy thought can ever be produced by the unholy heart. O what a vile heart is this! O what a corrupt nature is this! The tree that always brings forth fruit, but never good fruit, whatever ſoil it be ſet in, whatever pains be taken on it, muſt naturally be an evil tree: and what can that heart be, whereof every imagination, every ſet of thoughts, is only evil, and that continually? Surely that corruption is ingrained in our hearts, interwoven with our very natures, has ſunk into the marrow of our ſouls, and will never be cured but by a miracle of grace. Now ſuch is man's heart, ſuch is his nature, till regenerating grace change it. God that ſearcheth the heart ſaw man's heart was ſo, he took ſpecial notice of it; and the faithful and true witneſs cannot miſtake our caſe; though we are moſt apt to miſtake ourſelves in this point, and generally do overlook it.

Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, ſaying, What is that to us? Let that generation of whom the text ſpeaks ſee to that. For the Lord has left the caſe of that generation on record, to be a looking-glaſs to all after generations, wherein they may ſee their own corruption of heart, and what their lives would be too, if he reſtrained them not: for as in water face anſwereth to face, ſo the heart of man to man, Prov. xxvii. 19. Adam's fall has framed all mens hearts alike in this matter. Hence the apoſtle, Rom. iii. 10----18. proves the corruption of the nature, hearts and lives of all men, from what the Pſalmiſt ſays of the wicked in his day, Pſal. xiv. 1. 2. 3, Pſal. v. 9. Pſal. cxl. 3. Pſal. x. 7. Pſal. xxxvi. 1. and from what Jeremiah ſaith of the wicked in his day Jer. ix. 3. and from what Iſaiah ſays of thoſe that lived in his time, Iſ. lvii. 7. 8. and concludes with that, chap. iii. 19. Now we know, that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them that are under the law; that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Had the hiſtory of the deluge been tranſmitted unto us, without the reaſon thereof in the text, we might thence have gathered the corruption and total depravation of man's nature: for what other quarrel could a holy and juſt God have with the infants that were deſtroyed by the flood, ſeeing they had no actual ſin? If we ſaw a wiſe man, who having made a curious piece of work and heartily approved of it when he gave it out of his hand, as fit for the uſe it was deſigned for, riſe up in wrath and break it all in pieces, when he looked on it afterwards; would we not thence conclude the frame of it had been quite marred, ſince it went out of his hand, and that it does not ſerve for that uſe it was at firſt deſigned for? How much more, when we ſee the holy and wiſe God deſtroying the work of his own hands, once ſolemnly pronounced by him very good, may we conclude that the original frame thereof is utterly marred, that it cannot be mended, but it muſt needs be new-made or loſt altogether? Gen. vi. 6. 7. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart: and the Lord ſaid I will deſtroy man, or blot him out; as a man doth a ſentence out of a book, that cannot be corrected by cutting off ſome letters, ſyllables, or words, and interlining others here and there; but muſt needs be wholly new-framed. But did the deluge carry off this corruption of man's nature? did it mend the matter? No, it did not. God in his holy providence, that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the new world may become guilty before God, as well as the old, permits that corruption of nature to break out in Noah, the father of the new world, after the deluge was over. Behold him, as another Adam, ſinning in the fruit of a tree: Gen. ix. 20. 21. He planted a vineyard, and he drank of the wine, and was drunken, and he was uncovered within his tent. More than that, God gives the ſame reaſon againſt a new deluge, which he gives in our text for bringing that on the old world; I will not, ſaith he, again curſe the ground any more for man's ſake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth, Gen. viii. 21. Whereby it is intimated, that there is no mending of the matter by this means; and that if he would always take the ſame courſe with men that he had done, he would be always ſending deluges on the earth, ſeeing the corruption of man's nature remains ſtill. But though the flood could not carry off the coruption of nature, yet it pointed at the way how it is to be done; to wit, that men muſt be born of water and of the Spirit, raiſed from ſpiritual death in ſin, by the grace of Jeſus Chriſt, who came by water and blood: out of which a new world of ſaints ariſe in regeneration, even as the new world of ſinners out of the waters, where they had long lain buried (as it were) in the ark. This we learn from 1 Pet. iii. 20. 21. where the apoſtle, ſpeaking of Noah's ark, ſaith, Wherein few, that is, eight ſouls, were ſaved by water. The like figure whereunto, even baptiſm, doth alſo now ſave us. Now the waters of the deluge being a like figure to baptiſm, it plainly follows, that they ſignified (as baptiſm doth) the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghoſt.

To conclude then, theſe waters, though now dried up, may ſerve us ſtill for a looking-glaſs, in which we may ſee the total corruption of our nature, and the neceſſity of regeneration.

From the text, thus explained, ariſeth this weighty point of Doctrine, which he that runs may read in it, viz. Man's nature is now wholly corrupted. Now is there a ſad alteration, a wonderful overturn, in the nature of man: where, at firſt, there was nothing evil; now there is nothing good. In proſecuting of this doctrine, I ſhall, Firſt, Confirm it.

Secondly, Repreſent this corruption of nature in its ſeveral parts.

Thirdly, Shew you how man's nature comes to be thus corrupted.

Laſtly, Make application.

That man's nature is corrupted.

FIRST, I am to confirm the doctrine of the corruption of nature; to hold the glaſs to your eyes, wherein you may ſee your ſinful nature; which, though God takes particular notice of it, many do quite overlook. And here we ſhall conſult, 1. God's word. 2. Mens experience and obſervation.

I. For ſcripture-proof, let us conſider,

Firſt, How the ſcriptures take particular notice of fallen Adam's communicating his image to his poſterity, Gen. v. 3. Adam begat a ſon in his own likeneſs, after his image; and called his name Seth. Compare with this verſe 1. of that chapter, In the day that God created man, in the likeneſs of God made he him. Behold here, how the image after which man was made, and the image after which he is begotten, are oppoſed. Man was made in the likeneſs of God; that is, a holy and righteous God made a holy and righteous creature: but fallen Adam begat a ſon, not in the likeneſs of God, but in his own likeneſs; that is, corrupt ſinful Adam begat a corrupt ſinful ſon. For as the image of God bore righteouſneſs and immortality in it, as was cleared before; ſo this image of fallen Adam bore corruption and death in it, 1 Cor. xv. 49. 50. compare verſ. 22. Moſes, in that firſt chapter of Geneſis, being to give us the firſt bill of mortality that ever was in the world, uſhers it in with this, that dying Adam begat mortals. Having ſinned, he became mortal, according to the threatening; and ſo he begat a ſon, in his own likeneſs, ſinful, and therefore mortal. Thus ſin and death paſſed on all. Doubtleſs he begat both Cain and Abel in his own likeneſs, as well as Seth. But it is not recorded of Abel; becauſe he left no iſſue behind him, and his falling the firſt ſacrifice to death in the world was a ſufficient document of it: nor of Cain, to whom it might have been thought peculiar, becauſe of his monſtrous wickedneſs; and beſides all his poſterity was drowned in the flood: but it is recorded of Seth, becauſe he was the father of the holy ſeed; and from him all mankind ſince the flood have deſcended, and fallen Adam's own likeneſs with them.

Secondly, It appears from that ſcripture text, Job. xiv. 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one. Our firſt parents were unclean, how then can we be clean? how could our immediate parents be clean? or how ſhall our children be ſo? The uncleanneſs here aimed at, is a ſinful uncleanneſs; for it is ſuch as makes man's days full of trouble: and it is natural, being derived from unclean parents; Man is born of a woman, ver. 1. And how can he be clean that is born of a woman." Job. xxv. 4. An omnipotent God, whoſe power is not here challenged, could bring a clean thing out of an unclean, and did ſo in the caſe of the man Chriſt; but no other can. Every perſon that is born according to the courſe of nature, is born unclean. If the root be corrupt, ſo muſt the branches be. Neither is the matter mended, though the parents be ſanctified ones: for they are but holy in part, and that by grace, not by nature; and they beget their children as men, not as holy men. Wherefore, as the circumciſed parent begets an uncircumciſed child, and after the pureſt grain is ſown, we reap corn with the chaff; ſo the holieſt parents beget unholy children, and cannot communicate their grace to them, as they do their nature; which many godly parents find true, in their ſad experience.

Thirdly, Conſider the confeſſion of the Pſalmiſt David, Pſal. li. 5. Behold, I was ſhapen in iniquity, and in ſin did my mother conceive me. Here he aſcends from his actual ſin, to the fountain of it, namely, corrupt nature. He was a man according to God's own heart; but from the beginning it was not ſo with him. He was begotten in lawful marriage; but when the lump was ſhapen in the womb, it was a ſinful lump. Hence the corruption of nature is called the old man; being as old as ourſelves, older than grace, even in thoſe that are ſanctified from the womb.

Fourthly, Hear our Lord's determination of the point, John. iii. 6. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh. Behold the univerſal corruption of mankind, all are fleſh. Not that all are frail, though that is a ſad truth too: yea, and our natural frailty is an evidence of our natural corruption; but that is not the ſenſe of this text: but here is the meaning of it, all are corrupt and ſinful, and that naturally: hence our Lord argues here, that becauſe they are fleſh, therefore they muſt be born again, or elſe they cannot enter into the kingdom of God, ver. 3. 5. And as the corruption of our nature evidenceth the abſolute neceſſity of regeneration, ſo the abſolute neceſſity of regeneration plainly proves the corruption of our nature; for why ſhould a man need a ſecond birth, if his nature were not quite marred in the firſt birth? Infants muſt be born again, for that is an except (John. iii. 3.) which admits of no exception. And therefore they were circumciſed under the Old Teſtament; as having the body of the ſins of the fleſh (which is conveyed to them by natural generation) to put off, Col. ii. 11. And now, by the appointment of Jeſus Chriſt, they are to be baptized; which ſays they are unclean, and that there is no ſalvation for them, but by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, Tit. iii. 5.

Fifthly, Man certainly is ſunk very low now, in compariſon of what he once was. God made him but a little lower than the angels: but now we find him likened to the beaſts that periſh. He hearkened to a brute, and is now become like one of them. Like Nebuchadnezzar, his portion (in his natural ſtate) is with the beaſts, minding only earthly things, Philip. iii. 19. Nay, brutes, in ſome ſort, have the advantage of the natural man, who is ſunk a degree below them. He is more witleſs, in what concerns him moſt, than the ſtork, or the turtle, or the crane, or the ſwallow, in what is for their intereſt. Jer. viii. 7. He is more ſtupid than the ox or aſs, Iſ. i. 3. I find him ſent to ſchool to learn of the ant or emmet, which having no guide, or leader to go before her; no overſeer or officer, to compel or ſtir her up to work; no ruler, but may do as ſhe liſts, being under the dominion of none; yet provideth her meat in the ſummer and harveſt, Prov. vi. 6. 7. 8. while the natural man hath all theſe, and yet expoſeth himſelf to eternal ſtarving. Nay, more than all this, the ſcripture holds out the natural man, not only as wanting the good qualities of thoſe creatures; but as a compound of the evil qualities of the worſt of the creatures; in which do concentre the fierceneſs of the lion, the craft of the fox, the unteachableneſs of the wild aſs, the filthineſs of the dog and ſwine, the poiſon of the aſp, and ſuch like. Truth itſelf calls them ſerpents, a generation of vipers; yea, more, even children of the devil, Matth. xxiii. 33. John viii. 44. Surely then man's nature is miſerably corrupted.

Laſtly, We are by nature the children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3. We are worthy of, and liable to the wrath of God; and this by nature: and therefore, doubtleſs, we are by nature ſinful creatures. We are condemned before we have done good or evil; under the curſe, ere we know what it is. But will a lion roar in the foreſt while he hath no prey? Amos iii. 4. that is, will a holy and juſt God roar in his wrath againſt man, if he be not, by his ſin, made a prey for wrath? No, he will not, he cannot. Let us conclude then, that, according to the word of God, man's nature is a corrupt nature.

II. If we conſult experience, and obſerve the caſe of the world, in theſe things that are obvious to any perſon, that will not ſhut his eyes againſt clear light; we ſhall quickly perceive ſuch fruits as diſcover this root of bitterneſs. I ſhall propoſe a few things, that may ſerve to convince us in this point, Firſt, Who ſees not a flood of miſeries overflowing the world? and whither can a man go where he ſhall not dip his foot, if he go not over head and ears in it? Every one at home and abroad, in city and country, in palaces and cottages, is groaning under ſome one thing or other, ungrateful to him. Some are oppreſſed with poverty, ſome chaſtened with ſickneſs and pain, ſome are lamenting their loſſes, none wants a croſs of one ſort or another. No man's condition is ſo ſoft, but there is ſome thorn of uneaſineſs in it. And at length death, the wages of ſin, comes after theſe its harbingers, and ſweeps all away. Now, what but ſin has opened the ſluice? There is not a complaint nor ſigh heard in the world, nor a tear that falls from our eye, but it is an evidence that man is fallen as a ſtar from heaven; for God diſtributeth ſorrows in his anger, Job. xxi. 17. This is a plain proof of the corruption of nature: foraſmuch as thoſe that have not yet actually ſinned, have their ſhare of theſe ſorrows; yea, and draw their firſt breath in the world weeping, as if they knew this world, at firſt ſight, to be a Bochim, the place of weepers. There are graves of the ſmalleſt, as well as of the largeſt ſize, in the church-yard; and there are never wanting ſome in the world, who, like Rachel, are weeping for their children, becauſe they are not, Matth. ii. 18.

Secondly, Obſerve how early this corruption of nature begins to appear in young ones. Solomon obſerves, that even a child is known by his doings, Prov. xx. 11. It may ſoon be diſcerned, what way the bias of the heart lies. Do not the children of fallen Adam, before they can go alone, follow their father's footſteps? What a vaſt deal of little pride, ambition, curioſity, vanity, wilfulneſs, and averſeneſs to good, appears in them? And when they creep out of infancy, there is a neceſſity of uſing the rod of correction to drive away the fooliſhneſs that is bound in their heart, Prov. xxii. 15. Which ſhews, that if grace prevail not, the child will be as Iſhmael, a wild-aſs-man, as the word is, Gen. xvi. 12.

Thirdly, Take a view of the manifold groſs outbreakings of ſin in the world. The wickedneſs of man is yet great in the earth. Behold the bitter fruits of the corruption of our nature, Hoſ. iv. 2. By ſwearing, and lying, and killing, and ſtealing, and committing adultery, they break out (like the breaking forth of waters) and blood toucheth blood. The world is filled with filthineſs, and all manner of lewdneſs, wickedneſs and profanity. Whence is this deluge of ſin on the earth, but from the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, the heart of man, out of which proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, &c. Mark vii. 21. 22. Ye will, it may be, thank God with a whole heart, that ye are not like theſe other men: and indeed ye have better reaſon for it, than, I fear, ye are aware of: for, as in water face anſwereth to face, ſo the heart of man to man, Prov. xxvii. 19. As looking into clear water, ye ſee your own face, ſo looking into your heart, ye may ſee other mens there; and looking into other mens, in them ye may ſee your own. So that the moſt vile and profane wretches that are in the world, ſhould ſerve you for a looking-glaſs, in which you ought to diſcern the corruption of your own nature: and if you do ſo, ye would, with a heart truly touched, thank God, and not yourſelves, indeed, that ye are not as other men, in your lives; ſeeing the corruption of nature is the ſame in you, as in them.

Fourthly, Caſt your eye upon theſe terrible convulſions the world is thrown into by the luſts of men. Lions make not a prey of lions, nor wolves of wolves: but men are turned wolves to one another, biting and devouring one another. Upon how ſlight occaſions will men ſheath their ſwords in one anothers bowels? The world is a wilderneſs, where the cleareſt fire men can carry about with them, will not fright away the wild beaſts that inhabit it, (and that becauſe they are men, and not brutes) but one way or other they will be wounded. Since Cain ſhed the blood of Abel, the earth has been turned into a ſlaughter-houſe; and the chace has been continued, ſince Nimrod began his hunting; on the earth, as in the ſea, the greater ſtill devouring the leſſer. When we ſee the world in ſuch ferment, every one ſtabbing another with words or ſwords, we may conclude there is an evil ſpirit among them. Theſe violent heats among Adam's ſons, ſpeak the whole body to be diſtempered, the whole head to be ſick, and the whole heart faint. They ſurely proceed from an inward cauſe, James vi. 1. luſts that war in our members.

Fifthly, Conſider the neceſſity of human laws, fenced with terrors and ſeveritics; to which we may apply what the apoſtle ſays, 1 Tim. i. 9. That the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly and for ſinners, &c. Man was made for ſociety; and God himſelf ſaid of the firſt man, when he had created him, that it was not meet that he ſhould be alone; yet the caſe is ſuch now, that in ſociety, he muſt be hedged in with thorns. And that from hence we may the better ſee the corruption of man's nature, conſider. (1.) Every man naturally loves to be at full liberty himſelf; to have his own will for his law; and if he would follow his natural inclinations, would vote himſelf out of the reach of all laws, divine and human. And hence ſome (the power of whoſe hands has been anſwerable to their natural inclination) have indeed made themſelves abſolute and above laws; agreeable to man's monſtrous deſign at firſt, to be as gods, Gen. iii. 5. Yet, (2.) There is no man that would willingly adventure to live in a lawleſs ſociety: and therefore even pirates and robbers have laws among themſelves, tho' the whole ſociety caſts off all reſpect to law and right. Thus men diſcover themſelves to be conſcious of the corruption of nature; not daring to truſt one another, but upon ſecurity. (3.) How dangerous ſoever it is to break through the hedge, yet the violence of luſt makes many adventure daily to run the riſk. They will not only ſacrifice their credit and conſcience, which laſt is lightly eſteemed in the world; but for the pleaſure of a few moments immediately ſucceeded with terror from within, they will lay themſelves open to a violent death by the laws of the land wherein they live. (4.) The laws are often made to yield to mens luſts, ſometimes whole ſocieties run into ſuch extravagancies, that, like a company of priſoners, they break off their fetters and put their guard to flight; and the voice of laws cannot be heard for the noiſe of arms. And ſeldom is there a time wherein there are not ſome perſons ſo great and daring, that the laws dare not look their impetuous luſts in the face; which made David ſay, in the caſe of Joab, who had murdered Abner, Theſe men, the ſons of Zeruiah, be too hard for me, 2 Sam. iii. 39. Luſts ſometimes grow too ſtrong for laws, ſo that the law is ſlacked, as the pulſe of a dying man, Hab. i. 3. 4. (5.) Conſider what neceſſity often appears of amending old laws and making new ones; which have their riſe from new crimes, that man's nature is very fruitful of. There would be no need of mending the hedge, if men were not, like unruly beaſts, ſtill breaking it down. It is aſtoniſhing to ſee, what figure the Iſraelites, who were ſeparated unto God from among all the nations in the earth, do make in their hiſtory: what horrible confuſions were among them, when there was no king in Iſrael, as you may ſee in xviii. xix. xx. xxi. chapters of Judges: how hard it was to reform them, when they had the beſt of magiſtrates; and how quickly they turned aſide again, when they got wicked rulers. I cannot but think, that one grand deſign of that ſacred hiſtory, was to diſcover the corruption of man's nature, the abſolute need of the Meſſiah, and his grace; and that we ought, in the reading of it, to improve it to that end. How cutting is that word the Lord has to Samuel, concerning Saul, 1 Sam. i. 17. The ſame ſhall reign over (or as the word is, ſhall reſtrain) my people. O the corruption of man's nature! the awe and dread of the God of heaven reſtrains them not; but they muſt have gods on earth to do it to put them to ſhame, Judges xviii. 7.

Sixthly, Conſider the remains of that natural corruption in the ſaints. Though grace has entered, yet corruption is not quite expelled; though they have got the new creature, yet much of the old corrupt nature remains; and theſe ſtruggle together within them, as the twins in Rebekah's womb, Gal. v. 17. They find it preſent with them at all times, and in all places, even in the moſt retired corners. If a man have an ill neighbour, he may remove; if he have an ill ſervant, he may put him away at the term; and if a bad yoke-fellow, he may ſometimes leave the houſe, and be free of moleſtation that way. But ſhould the ſaint go into a wilderneſs, or ſet up his tent in ſome remote rock in the ſea, where never foot of man, beaſt nor fowl had touched, there will it be with him. Should he be with Paul caught up to the third heavens, it ſhall come back with him, 2 Cor. xii. 7. It follows him, as the ſhadow does the body: it makes a blot in the faireſt line he can draw. It is like the fig-tree in the wall; which how nearly ſoever it was cut, yet ſtill grew, till the wall was thrown down; for the roots of it are fixed in the heart, while the ſaint is in the world, as with bands of iron and braſs. It is eſpecially active when he would do good, Rom. vii. 31. then the fowls come down upon the carcaſes. Hence often, in holy duties, the ſpirit even of a ſaint (as it were) evaporates; and he is left ere he is aware, like Michael, with an image in the bed, inſtead of a huſband. I need not ſtand to prove the remains of the corruption of nature in the [illegible], to themſelves; for they groan under it; and to prov[illegible] them, were to hold out a candle to let men ſee the [illegible]: and as for the wicked, they are ready to account molehills in the ſaints as big as mountains, if not to reckon them all hypocrites. But conſider theſe few things on this head. (1.) If it be thus in the green tree, how muſt it be in the dry? The ſaints are not born ſaints but made ſo by the power of regenerating grace. Have they got a new nature, and yet ſo much of the old remains with them? How great muſt that corruption be in others, where it is altogether unmixed with grace! (2.) The ſaints groan under the remains of it, as a heavy burden. Hear the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 24. O wretched man that I am! who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? What though the carnal man lives at eaſe and quiet, and the corruption of nature is not his burden: is he therefore free from it? No, no; only he is dead, and feels not the ſinking weight. Many a groan is heard from a ſick-bed, but never one from a grave. In the ſaint, as in the ſick man, there is a mighty ſtruggle; life and death ſtriving for the maſtery: but in the natural man, as in the dead corpſe, there is no noiſe; becauſe death bears full ſway. (3.) The godly man reſiſts the old corrupt nature; he ſtrives to mortify it, yet it remains; he endeavours to ſtarve it, and by that means to weaken it, yet it is active; how muſt it ſpread then, and ſtrengthen itſelf in that ſoul, where it is not ſtarved, but fed? And this is the caſe of all the unregenerate, who make proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof. If the garden of the diligent afford him new work daily, in cutting off and rooting up; ſurely that of the ſluggard muſt needs be all grown over with thorns.

Laſtly, I ſhall add but one obſerve more; and that is, that in every man, naturally, the image of fallen Adam does appear. Some children, by their ſtatures and lineaments of their face, do, as it were, father themſelves; and thus we do reſemble our firſt parents. Every one of us bears the image and impreſs of their fall upon him: and to evince the truth of this, I do appeal to the conſciences of all, in theſe following particulars.

1ſt, Is not ſinful curioſity natural to us? and is not this a print of Adam's image? Gen. iii. 6. Is not man naturally much more deſirous to know new things, than to practiſe old known truths? How like to old Adam do we look in this, itching after novelties, and diſreliſhing old ſolid doctrines? We ſeek after knowledge rather than holineſs, and ſtudy moſt to know theſe things which are leaſt edifying. Our wild and roving fancies need a bridle to curb them, while good ſolid affections muſt be quickened and ſpurred up.

2dly, If the Lord, by his holy law, and wiſe providence, do put a reſtraint upon us, to keep us back from any thing, doth not that reſtraint whet the edge of our natural inclinations, and make us ſo much the keener in our deſires? And in this do we not betray it plainly, that we are Adam's children? Gen. iii. 2. 3. 6. I think this cannot be denied; for daily obſervation evinceth, that it is a natural principle that ſtolen waters are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant, Prov. ix. 17. The very Heathens were convinced, that man was poſſeſſed with this ſpirit of contradiction, though they knew not the ſpring of it. How often do men give themſelves the looſe in theſe things, in which, if God had left them at liberty, they would have bound up themſelves! but corrupt nature takes a pleaſure in the very jumping over the hedge. And is it not a repeating of our father's folly, that men will rather climb for forbidden fruit, than gather what is ſhaken off the tree of good providence to them, when they have God's expreſs allowance for it?

3dly, Which of all the children of Adam is not naturally diſpoſed to hear the inſtruction that cauſeth to err? And was not this the rock our firſt parents ſplit upon? Gen. iii. 4. 6. How apt is weak man, ever ſince that time, to parley with temptations! God ſpeaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not, Job. xxxiii. 14. but readily doth he liſten to Satan. Men might often come fair off, if they would diſmiſs temptations with abhorrence, when firſt they appear; if they would nip them in the bud, they would ſoon die away: but, alas! when we ſee the train laid for us, and the fire put to it, yet we ſtand till it run along, and we be blown up with its force.

4thly, Do not the eyes in our head often blind the eyes of the mind? And was not this the very caſe of our firſt parents? Gen iii. 6. Man is never more blind than when he is looking on the objects that are moſt pleaſing to ſenſe. Since the eyes of our firſt parents were opened to the forbidden fruit, mens eyes have been the gates of deſtruction to their ſouls; at which impure imaginations and ſinful deſires have entered the heart, to the wounding of the ſoul, waſting of the conſcience, and bringing diſmal effects ſometimes on whole ſocieties, as in Achan's caſe, Joſh. vii. 21. Holy Job was aware of this danger, from theſe two little rowling bodies, which a very ſmall ſplinter of wood will make uſeleſs; ſo as (with that king who durſt not, with his ten thouſand, meet him that came with twenty thouſand againſt him, Luke xiv. 31. 32.) he ſendeth and deſireth conditions of peace, Job. xxxi. 1. I have made a covenant with mine eyes, &c.

5thly, Is it not natural to us to care for the body, even at the expence of the ſoul? This was one ingredient in the ſin of our firſt parents, Gen. iii. 6. O how happy might we be, if we were but at half the pains about our ſouls, that we beſtow upon our bodies! If that queſtion, What muſt I do to be ſaved? (Acts xvi. 30.) did run but near as oft through our minds as theſe other queſtions do, What ſhall we eat? What ſhall we drink? Wherewithal ſhall we be clothed? (Matth. vi. 31.) many a now hopeleſs caſe would turn very hopeful. But the truth is, moſt men live as if they were nothing but a lump of fleſh: or as if their ſouls ſerved for no other uſe, but, like ſalt, to keep their body from corrupting. They are fleſh, John iii. 6. they mind the things of the fleſh, Rom. viii. 5. and they live after the fleſh, verſ. 13. If the conſent of the fleſh be got to an action, the conſent of the conſcience is rarely waited for: yea, the body is often ſerved, when the conſcience has entered a diſſent againſt it.

6thly, Is not every one by nature diſcontent with his preſent lot in the world, or with ſome one thing or other in it? This alſo was Adam's caſe, Gen. iii. 5. 6. Some one thing is always miſſing; ſo that man is a creature given to changes. And if any doubt of this, let them look over all their enjoyments; and, after a review of them, liſten to their own hearts, and they will hear a ſecret murmuring for want of ſomething; though perhaps, if they conſidered the matter aright, they would ſee that it is better for them to want, than to have that ſomething. Since the hearts of our firſt parents flew out at their eyes, on the forbidden fruit, and a night of darkneſs was thereby brought on the world; their poſterity have a natural diſeaſe, which Solomon calls, The wandering of the deſire, (or, as the word is, The walking of the ſoul), Eccl. vi. 9. This is a ſort of diabolical trance, wherein the ſoul traverſeth the world; feeds itſelf with a thouſand airy nothings; ſnatcheth at this and the other created excellency, in imagination and deſire; goes here, and there, and every where, except where it ſhould go. And the ſoul is never cured of this diſeaſe, till overcoming grace bring it back, to take up its everlaſting reſt in God through Chriſt: but till this be, if man were ſet again in paradiſe, the garden of the Lord, all the pleaſures there would not keep him from looking, yea, and leaping over the hedge a ſecond time.

7thly, Are we not far more eaſily impreſſed and influenced by evil counſels and examples, than by thoſe that are good? You ſee this was the ruin of Adam, Gen. iii. 6. Evil example, to this day, is one of Satan's maſter-devices to ruin men. And though we have, by nature, more of the fox than of the lamb; yet that ill property ſome obſerve in this creature, viz. that if one lamb ſkip into a water, the reſt that are near will ſuddenly follow, may be obſerved alſo in the diſpoſition of the children of men; to whom it is very natural to embrace an evil way, becauſe they ſee others upon it before them. Ill example has frequently the force of a violent ſtream, to carry us over plain duty; but eſpecially if the example be given by thoſe we bear a great affection to: our affection, in that caſe, blinds our judgment; and what we would abhor in others, is complied with, to humour them. And nothing is more plain, than that generally men chuſe rather to do what the moſt do, than what the beſt do.

8thly, Who of all Adam's ſons needs be taught the art of ſewing fig-leaves together, to cover their nakedneſs? Gen. iii. 7. When we have ruined ourſelves, and made ourſelves naked to our ſhame, we naturally ſeek to help ourſelves by ourſelves: and many poor ſhifts are fallen upon, as ſilly and inſignificant as Adam's fig-leaves. What pains are men at, to cover their ſin from their own conſciences, and to draw all the fair colours upon it that they can? And when once convictions are faſtened upon them, ſo that they cannot but ſee themſelves naked; it is as natural for them to attempt to ſpin a cover to it out of their own bowels, as for fiſhes to ſwim in the waters, or birds to fly in the air. Therefore the firſt queſtion of the convinced is, What ſhall we do? Acts. ii. 27. How ſhall we qualify ourſelves? what ſhall we perform? Not minding that the new creature is God's own workmanſhip, (or deed, Eph. ii. 10.), more than Adam thought of being clothed with the ſkins of ſacrifices, Gen. iii. 21.

9thly, Do not Adam's children naturally follow his footſteps, in hiding themſelves from the preſence of the Lord? Gen. iii. 8. We are every whit as blind in this matter as he was, who thought to hide himſelf from the preſence of God among the ſhady trees of the garden. We are very apt to promiſe ourſelves more ſecurity in a ſecret ſin, than in one that is openly committed. The eye of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, ſaying, No eye ſhall ſee me, Job xxiv. 15. And men will freely do that in ſecret, which they would be aſhamed to do in the preſence of a child; as if darkneſs could hide from an all-ſeeing God. Are we not naturally careleſs of communion with God; ay, and averſe to it? Never was there any communion betwixt God and Adam's children, where the Lord himſelf had not the firſt word. If he would let them alone, they would never enquire after him. Iſ. lvii. 17. I hid me. Did he ſeek after a hiding God? Very far from it, He went on in the way of his heart.

10thly, How loth are men to confeſs ſin, to take guilt and ſhame to themſelves? And was it not thus in the caſe before us? Gen. iii. 10. Adam confeſſeth his nakedneſs, which he could not get denied; but not one word he ſays of his ſin: here was the reaſon of it, he would fain have hid it if he could. It is as natural for us to hide ſin, as to commit it. Many ſad inſtances thereof we have in this world; but a far clearer proof of it we ſhall get at the day of judgment, the day in which God will judge the ſecrets of men, Rom. ii. 16. Many a foul mouth will then be ſeen, which is now wiped, and ſaith, I have done no wickedneſs, Prov. xxx. 20.

Laſtly, Is it not natural for us to extenuate our ſin, and transfer the guilt upon others? And when God examined our guilty firſt parents, did not Adam lay the blame on the woman? and did not the woman lay the blame on the ſerpent? Gen. iii. 12. 13. Now Adam's children need not be taught this helliſh policy; for before they can well ſpeak (if they cannot get the fact denied) they will cunningly liſp out ſomething to leſſen their fault, and lay the blame upon another. Nay, ſo natural is this to men, that, in the greateſt of ſins, they will lay the fault upon God himſelf; they will blaſpheme his holy providence under the miſtaken name of misfortune or ill-luck, and thereby lay the blame of their ſin at Heaven's door. And was not this one of Adam's tricks after his fall? Gen. iii. 12. And the man ſaid, The woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree, and I did eat. Obſerve the order of this ſpeech. He makes his apology in the firſt place; and then comes his confeſſion: his apology is long; but his confeſſion very ſhort; it is all comprehended in a word, and I did eat. How pointed and diſtinct is his apology, as if he was afraid his meaning ſhould have been miſtaken? The woman, ſays he, or that woman, as if he would have pointed the Judge to his own work, of which we read, Gen. ii. 22. There was but one woman then in the world; ſo that one would think he needed not have been ſo nice and exact in pointing at her: yet ſhe is as carefully marked out in his defence, as if there had been ten thouſand. The woman whom thou gaveſt me: here he ſpeaks, as if he had been ruined with God's gift. And to make the gift look the blacker, it is added to all this, thou gaveſt to be with me; as my conſtant companion, to ſtand by me as a helper. This looks as if Adam would have fathered an ill deſign upon the Lord, in giving him this gift. And, after all, there is a new demonſtrative here, before the ſentence is complete: he ſays not, The woman gave me, but the woman ſhe gave me, emphatically; as if he had ſaid, She, even ſhe gave me of the tree. This much for his apology. But his confeſſion is quickly over, in one word, (as he ſpoke it), and I did eat. And there is nothing here to point to himſelf, and as little to ſhew what he had eaten. How natural is this black art to Adam's poſterity? he that runs may read it. So univerſally does Solomon's obſerve hold true, Prov. xix. 3. The fooliſhneſs of man perverteth his way; and his heart fretteth againſt the Lord. Let us then call fallen Adam, father; let us not deny the relation, ſeeing we bear his image.

And now, to ſhut up this point, ſufficiently confirmed by concurring evidence from the Lord's word, our own experience and obſervation; let us be perſuaded to believe the doctrine of the corruption of our nature: and to look to the ſecond Adam, the bleſſed Jeſus, for the application of his precious blood, to remove the guilt of this ſin; and for the efficacy of his holy Spirit, to make us new creatures; knowing that except we be born again, we cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

Of the corruption of the underſtanding.

SECONDLY, I proceed to enquire into the corruption of nature in the ſeveral parts thereof. But who can comprehend it? who can take the exact dimenſions of it, in its breadth, length, height, and depth? The heart is deceitful above all things and deſperately wicked; who can know it? Jer. xvii. 9. However, we may quickly perceive as much of it as may be matter of deepeſt humiliation, and may diſcover to us the abſolute neceſſity of regeneration. Man in his natural ſtate is altogether corrupt. Both ſoul and body are polluted, as the apoſtle proves at large, Rom. iii. 10. to 18. As for the ſoul, this natural corruption has ſpread itſelf through all the faculties thereof; and is to be found in the underſtanding, the will, the affections, the conſcience, and the memory.

I. The underſtanding, that leading faculty, is deſpoiled of its primitive glory, and covered over with confuſion. We have fallen into the hands of our grand adverſary, as Samſon into the hands of the Philiſtines, and are deprived of our two eyes. There is none that underſtandeth, Rom. iii. 11. Mind and conſcience are defiled, Tit. i. 15. The natural man's apprehenſion of divine things is corrupt, Pſal. l. 21. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thyſelf. His judgment is corrupt, and cannot be otherwiſe, ſeeing his eye is evil: and therefore the ſcripture, to ſhew that men did all wrong, ſays, Every one did that which was right in his own eyes, Judges xvii. 6. and xxi. 25. And his imaginations, or reaſonings, muſt be caſt down, by the power of the word, being of a piece with his judgment, 2 Cor. x. 5. But, to point out this corruption of the mind or underſtanding more particularly, let theſe things be conſidered.

Firſt, There is a natural weakneſs in the minds of men [illegible] reſpect to ſpiritual things. The apoſtle determines concerning every one that is not endued with the graces of the Spirit, That he is blind, and cannot ſee afar off, 2 Pet. i. 9. Hence the Spirit of God in the ſcripture clothes as it were divine truths with earthly figures, even as parents teach their children, uſing ſimilitudes, Hoſ. xii. 10. Which, though it doth not cure, yet doth evidence this natural weakneſs in the minds of men. But we want not plain proofs of it from experience. As, (1.) How hard a taſk is it to teach many people the common principles of our holy religion, and to make truths ſo plain as they may underſtand them? Here there muſt be precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line, Iſ. xxviii. 9. Try the ſame perſons in other things, they ſhall be found wiſer in their generation than the children of light. They underſtand their work and buſineſs in the world as well as their neighbours; though they be very ſtupid and unteachable, in the matters of God. Tell them how they may advance their worldly wealth, or how they may gratify their luſts, and they will quickly underſtand theſe things; though it is very hard to make them know how their ſouls may be ſaved, or how their hearts may find reſt in Jeſus Chriſt. (2.) Conſider theſe who have many advantages above the common gang of mankind; who have had the benefit of good education and inſtruction; yea, and are bleſſed with the light of grace in that meaſure wherein it is diſtributed to the ſaints on earth; yet how ſmall a portion have they of the knowledge of divine things! what ignorance and confuſion do ſtill remain in their minds; how often are they mired even in the matter of practical truths and ſpeak as a child in theſe things! It is a pitiful weakneſs that we cannot perceive the things which God has revealed to us; and it muſt needs be a ſinful weakneſs, ſince the law of God requires us to know and believe them. (3.) What dangerous miſtakes are to be found amongſt men, in their concerns of greateſt weight! what woful deluſions prevail over them! do not we often ſee thoſe, who, otherwiſe, are the wiſeſt of men, the moſt notorious fools with reſpect to their ſouls intereſt? Math. xi. 25. Thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent. Many that are eagle-eyed in the trifles of time, are like owls and bats in the light of life. Nay, truly, the life of every natural man is but one continued dream and deluſion, out of which he never awakes, till either, by a new light darted from heaven into his ſoul, he come to himſelf, Luke xv. 17. or in hell he lift up his eyes, chap. xvi. 23. And therefore, in ſcripture-account, be he never ſo wiſe, he is a fool and a ſimple one.

Secondly, Man's underſtanding is naturally overwhelmed with groſs darkneſs in ſpiritual things. Man, at the inſtigation of the devil, attempting to break out a new light in his mind, (Gen. iii. 5.) inſtead of that, broke up the doors of the bottomleſs pit; ſo as, by the ſmoke thereof, he was buried in darkneſs. When God at firſt had made man, his mind was a lamp of light; but now when he comes to make him over again, in regeneration, he finds it darkneſs, Eph. v. 8. Ye were ſometimes darkneſs. Sin has cloſed the windows of the ſoul, darkneſs is over all that region: it is the land of darkneſs and ſhadow of death, where the light is as darkneſs. The prince of darkneſs reigns there, and nothing but the works of darkneſs are framed there. We are born ſpiritually blind, and cannot be reſtored without a miracle of grace. This is thy caſe, whoſoever thou art, that art not born again. And that you may be convinced in this matter, take theſe following evidences of it.

Evidence 1. The darkneſs that was upon the face of the world, before, and at that time when Chriſt came, ariſing as the Sun of righteouſneſs upon the earth. When Adam by his ſin had loſt that primitive light wherewith he was endued in his creation, it pleaſed God to make a gracious revelation of his mind and will to him, touching the way of ſalvation, Gen. iii. 15. This was handed down by him, and other godly fathers, before the flood: yet the natural darkneſs of the mind of man prevailed ſo far againſt that revelation, as to carry off all ſenſe of true religion from the old world, except what remained in Noah's family, which was preſerved in the ark. After the flood, as men multiplied on the earth, the natural darkneſs of mind prevails again, and the light decays, till it died out among the generality of mankind, and is preſerved only among the poſterity of Shem. And even with them it was well near its ſetting, when God called Abraham from ſerving other gods, Joſh. xxiv. 15. God gives Abraham a more clear and full revelation, and he communicates the ſame to his family, Gen. xviii. 19. yet the natural darkneſs wears it out at length, ſave that it was preſerved among the poſterity of Jacob. They being carried down into Egypt, that darkneſs prevailed ſo, as to leave them a little ſenſe of true religion; and a new revelation behoved to be made them in the wilderneſs. And many a cloud of darkneſs got above that, now and then, during the time from Moſes to Chriſt. When Chriſt came, the world was divided into Jews and Gentiles. The Jews, and the true light with them, were within an incloſure, Pſal. cxlvii. 19. 20. Betwixt them and the Gentile world, there was a partition-wall of God's making, namely, the ceremonial law: and upon that there was reared up another of man's own making, namely, a rooted enmity betwixt the parties, Eph. ii. 14. 15. If we look abroad without the incloſure, (and except thoſe proſelytes of the Gentiles, who, by means of ſome rays of light breaking forth unto them from within the incloſure, having renounced idolatry; worſhipped the true God, but did not conform to the Moſaical rites) we ſee nothing but dark places of the earth, full of the habitations of cruelty, Pſal. lxxiv. 20. Groſs darkneſs covered the face of the Gentile world, and the way of ſalvation was utterly unknown among them. They were drowned in ſuperſtition and idolatry, and had multiplied their idols to ſuch a vaſt number, that above thirty thouſand are reckoned to have been worſhipped by thoſe of Europe alone. Whatever wiſdom was among their philoſophers, the world by that wiſdom knew not God, 1 Cor. i. 21. and all their reſearches in religion were but groping in the dark, Acts xvii. 27. If we look within the incloſure, and except a few that were groaning and waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael, we will ſee a groſs darkneſs on the face of that generation. Though to them were committed the oracles of God; yet they were moſt corrupt in their doctrine. Their traditions were multiplied; but the knowledge of theſe things, wherein the life of religion lies, was loſt: maſters of Iſrael knew not the nature and neceſſity of regeneration, John iii. 10. Their religion was to build on their birth-privilege, as children of Abraham, Matth. iii. 9. to glory in their circumciſion, and other external ordinances, Philip iii. 2. 3. and to reſt in the law, (Rom. ii. 17.) after they had, by their falſe gloſſes, cut it ſo ſhort, as they might go well near to the fulfilling of it, Matth. v.

Thus was darkneſs over the face of the world, when Chriſt the true light came into it; and ſo is darkneſs over every ſoul, till he as the day-ſtar ariſe in the heart. The former is an evidence of the latter. What, but the natural darkneſs of mens minds, could ſtill thus wear out the light of external revelation, in a matter upon which eternal happineſs did depend? Men did not forget the way of preſerving their lives: but how quickly did they loſe the knowledge of the way of ſalvation of their ſouls, which are of infinite more weight and worth! When patriarchs and prophets teaching was ineffectual, men behoved to be taught of God himſelf, who alone can open the eyes of the underſtanding. But, that it might appear, that the corruption of man's mind lay deeper than to be cured by mere external revelation; there were but very few converted by Chriſt's preaching who ſpoke as never man ſpoke, John xii. 37. 38. The great cure on the generation remained to be performed, by the Spirit accompanying the preaching of the apoſtles; who, according to the promiſe, (John xiv. 12.) were to do greater works. And if we look to the miracles wrought by our bleſſed Lord, we will find, that, by applying the remedy to the ſoul, for the cure of bodily diſtempers, (as in the caſe of the man ſick of the palſy, Matth. ix. 2.) he plainly diſcovered, that it was his main errand into the world to cure the diſeaſes of the ſoul. I find a miracle wrought upon one that was born blind, performed in ſuch a way, as ſeems to have been deſigned to let the world ſee in it, as in a glaſs, their caſe and cure, John ix. 6. He made clay, and anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay. What could more fitly repreſent the blindneſs of mens minds, than eyes cloſed up with earth? Iſ. vi. 1. ſhut their eyes: ſhut them up by anointing, or caſting them with mortar, as the word will bear. And chap. xliv. 18. He hath ſhut their eyes: and the word properly ſignifies, he hath plaiſtered their eyes; as the houſe, in which the leproſy had been was to be plaiſtered, Levit. xiv. 42. Thus the Lord's word diſcovers the deſign of that ſtrange work; and by it ſhews us, that the eyes of our underſtanding are naturally ſhut. Then the blind man muſt go and waſh off this clay in the pool of Siloam: no other water will ſerve this purpoſe. If that pool had not repreſented him, whom the Father ſent into the world to open the blind eyes, (Iſ. xliii. 7.) I think the Evangeliſt had not given us the interpretation of the name, which he ſays ſignifies ſent, John ix. 7. And ſo we may conclude, that the natural darkneſs of our minds is ſuch, as there is no cure for, but from the blood and Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe eye-ſalve only can make us ſee, Rev. iii. 18.

Evid. 2. Every natural man's heart and life is a maſs of darkneſs, diſorder, and confuſion; how refined ſoever he appear in the ſight of men. For we ourſelves alſo, ſaith the apoſtle Paul, were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, Tit. iii. 3. and yet, at that time which this text looks to, he was blameleſs, touching the righteouſneſs which is in the law, Philip. iii. 6. This is a plain evidence that the eye is evil, the whole body being full of darkneſs, Matth. vi. 23. The unrenewed part of mankind is rambling through the world, like ſo many blind men; who will neither take a guide, nor can guide themſelves; and therefore are falling over this and the other precipice, into deſtruction. Some are running after their covetouſneſs, till they be pierced through with many ſorrows; ſome ſticking in the mire of ſenſuality; others daſhing themſelves on the rock of pride and ſelf-conceit; every one ſtumbling on ſome one ſtone of ſtumbling or other: all of them are running themſelves upon the ſword-point of juſtice, while they eagerly follow whither their unmortified paſſions and affections lead them: and while ſome are lying along in the way, others are coming up and falling headlong over them. And therefore, Wo unto the (blind) world becauſe of offences, Matth. xviii. 7. Errors in judgment ſwarm in the world; becauſe it is night, wherein all the beaſts of the foreſt do creep forth. All the unregenerate are utterly miſtaken in the point of true happineſs: for though Chriſtianity hath fixed that matter in the point of principle, yet nothing leſs than overcoming grace can fix it in the practical judgment. All men agree in the deſire to be happy; but amongſt unrenewed men, touching the way to happineſs, there are almoſt as many opinions as there are men; they being turned every one to his own way, Iſ. liii. 6. They are like the blind Sodomites about Lot's houſe, all were ſeeking to find the door; ſome grop one part of the wall for it, ſome another; but none of them could certainly ſay, he had found it; and ſo the natural man may ſtumble on any good, but the chief good. Look into thine own unregenerate heart, and there thou wilt ſee all turned upſide down; heaven lying under, and the earth a-top. Look into thy life, there thou mayeſt ſee, how thou art playing the madman, ſnatching at ſhadows, and neglecting the ſubſtance: eagerly flying after that which is not, and ſlighting that which is, and will be for ever.

Evid. 3. The natural man is always as a workman left without light; either trifling or doing miſchief. Try to catch thy heart at any time thou wilt, and thou ſhalt find it either weaving the ſpider's web, or hatching cockatrice eggs, (Iſ. lix. 5.) roving through the world, or digging into the pit; filled with vanity, or elſe with vileneſs; buſy doing nothing, or what is worſe than nothing. A ſad ſign of a dark mind.

Evid. 4. The natural man is void of the ſaving knowledge of ſpiritual things. He knows not what a God he has to do with; he is unacquainted with Chriſt; and knows not what ſin is. The greateſt graceleſs wits are blind as moles in theſe things. Ay, but ſome ſuch can ſpeak of them to good purpoſe: and ſo might theſe Iſraelites, of the temptations, ſigns, and miracles, their eyes had ſeen, (Deut. xxix. 3.) to whom nevertheleſs, the Lord had not given an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear unto that day, verſ. 4. Many a man that bears the name of a Chriſtian, may make Pharaoh's confeſſion of faith, Exod. v. 2. I know not the Lord, neither will they let go what he commands them to part with. God is with them, as a prince in diſguiſe among his ſubjects, who meets with no better treatment from them, than if they were his fellows, Pſal. l. 21. Do they know Chriſt, or ſee his glory, and any beauty in him, for which he is to be deſired? If they did, they would not ſlight him as they do: a view of his glory would ſo darken all created excellency, that they would take him for and inſtead of all, and gladly cloſe with him, as he offereth himſelf in the goſpel, John iv. 10. Pſal. ix. 10. Matth. xiii. 44. 45. 46. Do they know what ſin is, who hug the ſerpent in their boſom, hold faſt deceit, and refuſe to let it go? I own indeed they may have a natural knowledge of thoſe things, as the unbelieving Jews had of Chriſt, whom they ſaw and converſed with: but there was a ſpiritual glory in him, perceived by the believers only, John i. 14. and in reſpect of that glory, the (unbelieving) world knew him not, ver. 10. But the ſpiritual knowledge of them they cannot have: it is above the reach of the carnal mind, 1 Cor. ii. 14. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs unto him, neither can he know them, for they are ſpiritually diſcerned. He may indeed diſcourſe of them; but no other way than one can talk of honey or vinegar, who never taſted the ſweetneſs of the one, nor the ſourneſs of the other. He has ſome notions of ſpiritual truths, but ſees not the things themſelves that are wrapt up in the words of truth, 1 Tim. i. 7. Underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm. In a word, natural men fear, ſeek, confeſs, they know not what. Thus you may ſee man's underſtanding naturally is overwhelmed with groſs darkneſs in ſpiritual things.

Thirdly, There is in the mind of man a natural bias to evil, whereby it comes to paſs, that whatever difficulties its finds while occupied about things truly good, it acts with a great deal of eaſe in evil; as being in that caſe in its own element, Jer. iv. 22. The carnal mind drives heavily in the thoughts of good; but furiouſly in the thoughts of evil. While holineſs is before it, fetters are upon it: but when once it has got over the hedge, it is as a bird got out of the cage, and becomes a free-thinker indeed. Let us reflect a little on the apprehenſion and imagination of the carnal mind: and we ſhall find inconteſtible evidence of this woful bias to evil.

Evidence 1. As when a man, by a violent ſtroke on the head, loſeth his ſight, there ariſeth to him a kind of of falſe light, whereby he perceives a thouſand airy nothings: ſo man being ſtruck blind to all that is truly good, and for his eternal intereſt, has a light of another ſort brought into his mind; his eyes are opened, knowing evil: and ſo are the words of the tempter verified, Gen. iii. 5. The words of the prophet are plain, They are wiſe to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge, Jer. iv. 22. The mind of man has a natural dexterity to deviſe miſchief: none are ſo ſimple, as to want ſkill to contrive ways to gratify their luſts, and ruin their ſouls; though the power of every one's hand cannot reach to put their devices [illegible] execution. None needs to be taught this black art; but as weeds grow up of their own accord in the neglected ground, ſo doth this wiſdom (which is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh, James iii. 15.) grow up in the minds of men, by virtue of the corruption of their nature. Why ſhould we be ſurpriſed with the product of corrupt wits; their cunning devices to affront Heaven, to oppoſe and run down truth and holineſs, and to gratify their own and other mens luſts? They row with the ſtream; no wonder they make great progreſs: their ſtock is within them, and increaſeth by uſing of it: and the works of darkneſs are contrived with the greater advantage, that the mind is wholly deſtitute of ſpiritual light; which, if it were in them, in any meaſure, would ſo far mar the work, 1 John iii. 9. Whoſoever is born of God doth not commit ſin; he does it not as by art, for his ſeed remaineth in him. But, on the other hand, it is as a ſport to a fool to do miſchief: but a man of underſtanding hath wiſdom, Prov. x. 23. To do witty wickedneſs nicely, (as the words import), is as a ſport or a play to a fool; it comes off with him eaſily, and why, but becauſe he is a fool, and hath not wiſdom; which would mar the contrivances of darkneſs? The more natural a thing is, it is done the more eaſily.

Evid. 2. Let the corrupt mind have but the advantage of one's being employed in, or preſent at, ſome piece of ſervice to God; that ſo the device, if not in itſelf ſinful, yet may become ſinful, by its unſeaſonableneſs; it ſhall quickly fall on ſome device or expedient, by its ſtarting aſide; which deliberation, in ſeaſon, could not produce. Thus Saul, who wiſt not what to do before the prieſt began to conſult God, is quickly determined when once the prieſt's hand was in: his own heart then gave him an anſwer, and would not allow him to wait an anſwer from the Lord, 1 Sam. xiv. 18. 19. Such a deviliſh dexterity hath the carnal mind, in deviſing what may moſt effectually divert men from their duty to God.

Evid. 3. Doth not the carnal mind naturally ſtrive to graſp ſpiritual things in imagination; as if the ſoul were quite immerſed in fleſh and blood, and would turn every thing into its own ſhape? Let men, who are uſed to the forming of the moſt abſtracted notions, look into their own ſouls, and they ſhall find this bias in their minds; whereof the idolatry, which did of old, and ſtill doth, ſo much prevail in the world, is an inconteſtible evidence: for it plainly diſcovers, that men naturally would have a viſible deity, and ſee what they worſhip: and therefore they changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image, &c. Rom. i. 23. The reformation of theſe nations (bleſſed be the Lord for it!) hath baniſhed idolatry and images too, out of our churches: but heart-reformation only can break down mental idolatry, and baniſh the more ſubtle and refined image-worſhip, and repreſentations of the Diety, out of the minds of men. The world, in the times of its darkneſs, was never more prone to the former, than the unſanctified mind is to the latter. And hence are horrible, monſtrous, and miſhapen thoughts of God, Chriſt, the glory above, and all ſpiritual things.

Evid. 4. What a difficult taſk is it to detain the carnal mind before the Lord! how averſe is it to the entertaining of good thoughts, and dwelling in the meditation of ſpiritual things! If one be driven, at any time, to think of the great concerns of his ſoul, it is no harder work to hold in an unruly hungry beaſt, than to hedge in the carnal mind, that it get not away to the vanities of the world again. When God is ſpeaking to men by his word, or they are ſpeaking to him in prayer, doth not the mind often leave them before the Lord, like ſo many idols, that have eyes, but ſee not, and ears, but hear not? The carcaſe is laid down before God, but the world gets away the heart: though the eyes be cloſed, the man ſees a thouſand vanities: the mind, in the mean time, is like a bird got looſe out of the cage, ſkipping from buſh to buſh; ſo that, in effect, the man never comes to himſelf, till he be gone from the preſence of the Lord. Say not, it is impoſſible to get the mind fixed. It is hard indeed, but not impoſſible: grace from the Lord can do it, Pſal. cviii. 1. agreeable objects will do it. A pleaſant ſpeculation will arreſt the minds of the inquiſitive: the worldly man's mind is in little hazard of wandering, when he is contriving of buſineſs, caſting up his accounts, or telling his money: if he anſwer you not at firſt, he tells you, he did not hear you, he was buſy; his mind was fixed. Were we admitted into the preſence of a king, to petition for our lives, we would be in no hazard of gazing through the chamber of preſence. But here lies the caſe; the carnal mind, employed about any ſpiritual good, is out of its element, and therefore cannot fix.

Evid. 5. But however hard it is to keep the mind on good thoughts, it ſticks as glue to what is evil and corrupt like itſelf, 2 Pet. ii. 14. Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot ceaſe from ſin. Their eyes cannot ceaſe from ſin, (ſo the words are conſtructed), that is, their hearts and minds, venting by the eyes what is within, are like a furious beaſt, which cannot be held in when once it has got out its head. Let the corrupt imagination once be let looſe on its proper object, it will be found hard work to call it back again, though both reaſon and will be for its retreat. For then it is in its own element; and to draw it off from its impurities, is as the drawing of a fiſh out of the water, or the renting of a limb from a man. It runs like fire ſet to a train of powder, that reſteth not till it can get no further.

Evid. 6. Conſider how the carnal imagination ſupplies the want of real objects to the corrupt heart; that it may make ſinners happy, at leaſt, in the imaginary enjoyment of their luſts. Thus the corrupt heart feeds itſelf with imagination-ſins; the unclean perſon is filled with ſpeculative impurities, having eyes full of adultery; the covetous man fills his heart with the world, though he cannot get his hands full of it; the malicious perſon, with delight, acts his revenge within his own breaſt; the envious, within his own narrow ſoul, beholds with ſatisfaction his neighbour laid low enough; and every luſt finds the corrupt imagination a friend to it in time of need. And this it doth, not only when people are awake, but ſometimes even when they are aſleep; whereby it comes to paſs, that theſe ſins are acted in dreams, which their hearts were carried out after while they were awake. I know, ſome do queſtion the ſinfulneſs of theſe things; but can it be thought, they are conſiſtent with that holy nature and frame of ſpirit which was in innocent Adam, and in Jeſus Chriſt, and ſhould be in every man? It is the corruption of nature, then, that makes filthy dreamers condemned, Jude 8. Solomon had experience of the exerciſe of grace in ſleep: in a dream he prayed, in a dream he made the beſt choice; both were accepted of God, 1 Kings iii. 5.---15. And if a man may, in his ſleep, do what is good and acceptable to God, why may he not alſo, when aſleep, do that which is evil and diſpleaſing to God? The ſame Solomon would have men aware of this; and preſcribes the beſt remedy againſt it, namely the law upon the heart, Prov. vi. 20. 21. When thou ſleepeſt (ſays he, ver. 22.) it ſhall keep thee, to wit, from ſinning in thy ſleep; that is, from ſinful dreams: for one's being kept from ſin (not his being kept from affliction) is the immediate proper effect of the law of God impreſſed upon the heart, Pſal. cxix. 11. And thus the whole verſe is to be underſtood, as appears from ver. 23. For the commandment is a lamp, and the law is light, and reproofs of inſtruction are the way of life. Now, the law is a lamp and light, as it guides in the way of duty; and inſtructing reproofs from the law are the way of life, as they keep from ſin: neither do they guide into the way of peace, but as they lead into the way of duty; nor do they keep a man out of trouble, but as they keep him from ſin. And remarkable is the particular in which Solomon inſtanceth, namely, the ſin of uncleanneſs, to keep thee from the evil woman, &c. ver. 24. which is to be joined with ver. 22. incloſing the 23d in a parentheſis, as ſome verſions have it. Theſe things may ſuffice to convince us of the natural bias of the mind to evil.

Fourthly, There is in the carnal mind, an oppoſition to ſpiritual truths, and an averſion to the receiving of them. It is as little a friend to divine truths, as it is to holineſs. The truths of natural religion, which do, as it were, force their entry into the minds of natural men, they hold priſoners in unrighteouſneſs, Rom. i. 18. And as for the truths of revealed religion, there is an evil heart of unbelief in them, which oppoſeth their entry; and there is an armed force neceſſary to captivate the mind to the belief of them, 2 Cor. x. 4. 5. God has made a revelation of his mind and will to ſinners, touching the way of ſalvation; he has given us the doctrine of his holy word: but do natural men believe it indeed? No, they do not; for he that believeth not on the Son of God, believeth not God, as is plain from 1 John v. 10. They believe not the promiſes of the word: they look on them, in effect, only as fair words; for thoſe that receive them are thereby made partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 14. The promiſes are as ſilver cords let down from heaven, to draw ſinners unto God, and to waft them over into the promiſed land; but they caſt them from them. They believe not the threatnings of the word. For, as men travelling in deſerts carry fire about with them, to fright away wild beaſts; ſo God has made his law a fiery law, Deut. xxxiii. 2. hedging it about with threats of wrath; but men naturally are more brutiſh than beaſts themſelves; and will needs touch the fiery ſmoaking mountain, though they ſhould be thruſt through with a dart. I doubt not but moſt, if not all of you, who are yet in the black ſtate of nature, will here plead, Not guilty; but remember, the carnal Jews in Chriſt's time were as confident as you are, that they believed Moſes, John ix. 28, 29. But he confutes their confidence, roundly telling them, John v. 46. Had ye believed Moſes, ye would have believed me. Did ye believe the truths of God, ye durſt not reject, as ye do, him who is truth itſelf. The very difficulty you find in aſſenting to this truth, bewrays that unbelief I am charging you with. Has it not proceeded ſo far with ſome at this day, that it has ſteeled their foreheads, with the impudence and impiety, openly to reject all revealed religion? Surely it is out of the abundance of the heart their mouth ſpeaketh. But though ye ſet not your mouths againſt the heavens, as they do, the ſame bitter root of unbelief is in all men by nature, and reigns in you, and will reign, till overcoming grace captivate your minds to the belief of the truth. To convince you in this point, conſider theſe three things:

Evidence 1. How few are there who have been bleſſed with an inward illumination, by the ſpecial operation of the Spirit of Chriſt, letting them into a view of divine truths in their ſpiritual and heavenly luſtre? How have you learned the truths of religion, which ye pretend to believe? Ye have them merely by the benefit of external revelation, and of your education; ſo that you are Chriſtians, juſt becauſe you were not born and bred in a Pagan, but in a Chriſtian country. Ye are ſtrangers to the inward work of the holy Spirit, bearing witneſs by and with the word in your hearts; and ſo you cannot have the aſſurance of faith, with reſpect to that outward divine revelation made in the word, 1 Cor. ii. 10. 11. 12. and therefore ye are ſtill unbelievers. It is written in the prophets, And they ſhall be all taught of God.---Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me, ſays our Lord, John vi. 45. Now ye have not come to Chriſt, therefore ye have not been taught of God: ye have not been ſo taught, and therefore ye have not come; ye believe not. Behold the revelation, from which the faith even of the fundamental principles in religion doth ſpring, Matth. xvi. 16. 17. Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God.----Bleſſed art thou, Simon Barjona: for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. If ever the Spirit of the Lord take a dealing with thee, to work in thee that faith which is of the operation of God, it may be as much time may be ſpent in the razing the old foundation, as will make thee find a neceſſity of the working of his mighty power, to enable thee to believe the very foundation-principles, which now thou thinkeſt thou makeſt no doubt of, Eph. i. 19.

Evid. 2. How many profeſſors have made ſhipwreck of their faith (ſuch as it was) in the time of temptation and trial! See how they fall, like ſtars from heaven, when Antichriſt prevails! 2 Theſſ. ii 11. 12. God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lie: that they all might be damned, who believed not the truth. They fall into damning deluſions; becauſe they never really believed the truth, though they themſelves, and others too, thought they did believe it. That houſe is built on the ſand, and that faith is but ill founded, that cannot bear out, but is quite overthrown, when the ſtorm comes.

Evid. 3. Conſider the utter inconſiſtency of moſt mens lives with the principles of religion which they profeſs: ye may as ſoon bring eaſt and weſt together, as their principles and practice. Men believe that fire will burn them; and therefore they will not throw themſelves into it: but the truth is, moſt men live as if they thought the goſpel a mere fable, and the wrath of God revealed in his word againſt their unrighteouſneſs and ungodlineſs, a mere ſcarecrow. If ye believe the doctrines of the word, how is it that ye are ſo unconcerned about the ſtate of your ſouls before the Lord? how is it that ye are ſo little concerned with that weighty point, whether ye be born again or not? Many live as they were born, and are like to die as they live, and yet live in peace. Do ſuch believe the ſinfulneſs and miſery of a natural ſtate? do they believe they are the children of wrath? Do they believe there is no ſalvation without regeneration, and no regeneration but what makes one a new creature? If you believe the promiſes of the word, why do you not embrace them, and labour to enter into the promiſed reſt? What ſluggard would not dig for a hid treaſure, if he really believed he might ſo obtain it? Men will work and ſweat for a maintenance, becauſe they believe that by ſo doing they will get it; yet they will be at no tolerable pains for the eternal weight of glory; why, but becauſe they do not believe the word of promiſe? Heb. iv. 1. 2. If ye believe the threatnings, how is it that ye live in your ſins, live out of Chriſt, and yet hope for mercy? Do ſuch believe God to be the holy and juſt One, who will by no means clear the guilty? No, no, none believe, none (or next to none) believe what a juſt God the Lord is, and how ſeverely he puniſheth.

Fifthly, There is in the mind of man a natural proneſs to lies and falſehood, which makes for the ſafety of luſts. They go aſtray, as ſoon as they be born, ſpeaking lies, Pſal. lviii. 3. We have this, with the reſt of the corruption of our nature, from our firſt parents. God revealed the truth to them; but through the ſolicitation of the tempter, they firſt doubted of it; then diſbelieved it, and embraced a lie inſtead of it. And, for an unconteſtible evidence hereof, we may ſee that firſt article of the devil's creed, Ye ſhall not ſurely die, Gen. iii. 4.; which was obtruded by him on our firſt parents, and by them received, naturally embraced by their poſterity, and held faſt, till a light from heaven oblige them to quit it. It ſpreads itſelf through the lives of natural men; who, till their conſciences be awakened, walk after their own luſts, ſtill retaining the principle, That they ſhall not ſurely die: and this is often improved to that perfection, that the man can ſay, over the belly of the denounced curſe, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs to thirſt, Deut. xix. 19. Whatever advantage the truths of God have over error, by means of education, or otherwiſe; error has always, with the natural man, this advantage againſt truth, namely, that there is ſomething within him which ſays, O that it were true: ſo that the mind lies fair for aſſenting to it. And here is the reaſon of it. The true doctrine is, the doctrine that is according to godlineſs, 1 Tim. vi. 3.; and the truth which is after godlineſs, Tit. i. 1. Error is the doctrine which is according to ungodlineſs, for there is never an error in the mind, nor an untruth vented in the world, (in matters of religion), but what has an affinity with one corruption of the heart or other; according to that of the apoſtle, 2 Theſſ. ii. 12. They believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. So that truth and error, being otherwiſe attended with equal advantages for their reception, error, by this means, has moſt ready acceſs into the mind of men in their natural ſtate. Wherefore, it is nothing ſtrange that men reject the ſimplicity of goſpel truths and inſtitutions, and greedily embrace error and external pomp in religion; ſeeing they are ſo agreeable to the luſts of the heart, and the vanity of the mind of the natural man. And from hence alſo it is, that ſo many embrace atheiſtical principles: for none do it but in compliance with their irregular paſſions; none but thoſe, whoſe advantage it would be, that there were no God.

Laſtly, Man naturally is high-minded: for when the goſpel comes in power to him, it is employed in caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, 2 Cor. x. 5. Lowlineſs of mind is not a flower that grows in the field of nature; but is planted by the finger of God in a renewed heart, and learned of the lowly Jeſus. It is natural to man to think highly of himſelf, and what is his own: for the ſtroke he has got by his fall in Adam, has produced a falſe light, whereby molehills about him appear like mountains; and a thouſand airy beauties preſent themſelves to his deluded fancy. Vain man would be wiſe, (ſo he accounts himſelf, and ſo he would be accounted of by others), though man be born like a wild aſs's colt, Job xi. 12. His way is right, becauſe it is his own: for every way of a man is right in his own eyes, Prov. xxi. 2. His ſtate is good, becauſe he knows none better; he is alive without the law, Rom. vii. 9. and therefore his hope is ſtrong, and his confidence firm. It is another tower of Babel, reared up againſt Heaven; and ſhall not fall, while the power of darkneſs can hold it up. The word batters it, yet it ſtands; one while, breaches are made in it, but they are quickly repaired; at another time, it is all made to ſhake, but ſtill it is kept up; till either God himſelf by his Spirit raiſe an heart-quake within the man, which tumbles it down, and leaves not one ſtone upon another, (2 Cor. 4. 5.), or death batter it down, and raze the foundations of it, Luke xvi. 23. And as the natural man thinks highly of himſelf, ſo he thinks meanly of God, whatever he pretends, Pſal. l. 21. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thyſelf. The doctrine of the goſpel, and the myſtery of Chriſt, are fooliſhneſs to him; and in his practice he treats them as ſuch, 1 Cor. i. 18. and ii. 14. He brings the word and the works of God, in the government of the world, before the bar of his carnal reaſon; and there they are preſumptuouſly cenſured and condemned, Hoſ. xiv. 9. Sometimes the ordinary reſtraint of providence is taken off, and Satan is permitted to ſtir up the carnal mind: and, in that caſe, it is like an ant's neſt, uncovered and diſturbed: doubts, denials, and helliſh reaſonings crowd in it, and cannot be laid by all the arguments brought againſt them, till a power from on high captivate the mind, and ſtill the mutiny of the corrupt principles.

This much of the corruption of the underſtanding; which, although the half be not told, may diſcover to you the abſolute neceſſity of regenerating grace. Call the underſtanding now, Ichabod; for the glory is departed from it. Conſider this, ye that are yet in the ſtate of nature, and grone ye out your caſe before the Lord, that the Sun of righteouſneſs may ariſe upon you, before you be ſhut up in everlaſting darkneſs. What avails your worldly wiſdom? what do your attainments in religion avail, while your underſtanding lies yet wrapt up in its natural darkneſs and confuſion, utterly void of the light of life? Whatever be the natural man's gifts or attainments, we muſt, as in the caſe of the leper, (Lev. xiii. 24.), pronounce him utterly unclean, his plague is in his head. But that is not all; it is in his heart too; his will is corrupted, as I ſhall ſhew anon.

Of the corruption of the will.

II. The will, that commanding faculty, which ſometimes was faithful, and ruled with God, is now turned traitor, and rules with and for the devil. God planted it in man wholly a right ſeed; but now it is turned into the degenerate plant of a ſtrange vine. It was originally placed in a due ſubordination to the will of God, as was ſhown before; but now it is gone wholly aſide. However ſome do magnify the power of free-will, a view of the ſpirituality of the law, to which acts of moral diſcipline do in no wiſe anſwer, and a deep inſight into the corruption of nature, given by the inward operation of the Spirit, convincing of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment, would make men find an abſolute need of the power of free grace, to remove the bands of wickedneſs from off their free-will. To open up this plague of the heart, I offer theſe following things to be conſidered.

Firſt, There is, in the unrenewed will, an utter inability for what is truly good and acceptable in the ſight of God. The natural man's will is in Satan's fetters; hemmed in within the circle of evil, and cannot move beyond it, more than a dead man can raiſe himſelf out of his grave, Eph. ii. 1. We deny him not a power to chuſe, purſue, and act, what on the matter is good: but though he can will what is good and right, he can will nothing aright and well, John xv. 5. Without me, i. e. ſeparate from me, as a branch from the ſtock, (as both the word and context do carry it), ye can do nothing: to wit, nothing truly and ſpiritually good. His very choice and deſire of ſpiritual things, is carnal and ſelfiſh, John vi. 26. Ye ſeek me becauſe ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled. He not only comes not to Chriſt, but he cannot come, John vi. 44. And what can one do acceptable to God, who believeth not on him whom the Father hath ſent? To evidence this inability for good in the unregenerate, conſider theſe two things:

Evidence 1. How often does the light ſo ſhine before mens eyes, that they cannot but ſee the good they ſhould chuſe, and the evil they ſhould refuſe; and yet their hearts have no more power to comply with that light; than if they were arreſted by ſome inviſible hand? They ſee what is right, yet they follow, and cannot but follow what is wrong. Their conſciences tell them the right way, and approve of it too; yet cannot their will be brought up to it; their corruption ſo chains them, that they cannot embrace it; ſo they ſigh, and go backward; over the belly of their light. And if it be not thus, how is it that the word and way of holineſs meet with ſuch entertainment in the world? how is it that clear arguments and reaſon on the ſide of piety and a holy life, which bear in themſelves even on the carnal mind, do not bring men over to that ſide? Although the being of a heaven and a hell were but a may-be, it were ſufficient to determine the will to the choice of holineſs, were it capable to be determined thereto by mere reaſon: but men knowing the judgment of God, (that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death,) not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them, Rom. i. 32. And how is it that thoſe who magnify the power of free-will do not confirm their opinion before the world, by an ocular demonſtration, in a practice as far above others in holineſs, as the opinion of their natural ability is above that of others? or is it maintained only for the protection of luſts, which men may hold faſt as long as they pleaſe; and when they have no more uſe for them, can throw them off in a moment, and leap out of Delilah's lap, into Abraham's boſom? Whatever uſe ſome make of that principle, it does of itſelf, and in its own nature, caſt a broad ſhadow for a ſhelter to wickedneſs of heart and life. And it may be obſerved, that the generality of the hearers of the goſpel, of all denominations, are plagued with it: for it is a root of bitterneſs, natural to all men; from whence doth ſpring ſo much fearleſſneſs about the ſoul's eternal ſtate, ſo many delays and off-puts in that weighty matter, whereby much work is laid up for a death-bed by ſome; while others are ruined by a legal walk, and unacquaintedneſs with the life of faith, and the making uſe of Chriſt for ſanctification; all flowing from the perſuaſion of ſufficient natural abilities. So agreeable is it to corrupt nature.

Evid. 2. Let thoſe, who, by the power of the ſpirit of bondage, have had the law laid out before them in its ſpirituality, for their conviction, ſpeak and tell, if they found themſelves able to incline their hearts towards it, in that caſe; nay if the more that light ſhone into their ſouls, they did not find their hearts more and more unable to comply with it. There are ſome, who have been brought into the place of the breaking forth, who are yet in the devil's camp, that from their experience can tell, light let into the mind cannot give life to the will, to enable it to comply therewith; and could give their teſtimony here, if they would. But take Paul's teſtimony concerning it, who, in his unconverted ſtate, was far from believing his utter inability for good; but learned it by experience, Rom. vii. 8. 9. 10. 11. 13. I own, the natural man may have a kind of love to the law: but here lies the ſtreſs of the matter, he looks on the holy law in a carnal dreſs; and ſo, while he hugs a creature of his own fancy, he thinks he has the law, but in very deed he is without the law; for as yet he ſees it not in its ſpirituality; if he did, he would find it the very reverſe of his own nature; and what his will could not fall in with, till changed by the power of grace.

Secondly, There is in the unrenewed will an averſeneſs to good. Sin is the natural man's element; he is as loth to part with it, as the fiſhes are to come out of the water into dry land. He not only cannot come to Chriſt, but he will not come, John v. 40. He is polluted, and hates to be waſhen, Jer. xiii. 27. Wilt thou not be made clean? when ſhall it once be? He is ſick; but utterly averſe to the remedy: he loves his diſeaſe ſo, that he lothes the phyſician. He is a captive, a priſoner, and a ſlave; but he loves his conqueror, his jailor and maſter; he is fond of his fetters, priſon, and drudgery, and has no liking to his liberty. For evidence of this averſeneſs to good, in the will of man, I ſhall inſtance in ſome particulars.

Evidence 1. The untowardneſs of children. Do we not ſee them naturally lovers of ſinful liberty? How unwilling are they to be hedged in? how averſe to reſtraint? The world can bear witneſs, that they are as bullocks unaccuſtomed to the yoke: and more, that it is far eaſier to bring young bullocks tamely to bear the yoke, than to bring young children under diſcipline, and make them tamely ſubmit to the reſtraint of ſinful liberty. Every body may ſee in this, as in a glaſs, that man is naturally wild and wilful, according to Zophar's obſerve, (Job. xi. 12.); that man is born like a wild aſs's colt. What can be ſaid more? He is like a colt, the colt of an aſs, the colt of a wild aſs. Compare Jer. ii. 24. A wild aſs uſed to the wilderneſs; that ſnuffeth up the wind at her pleaſure; in her occaſion who can turn her away?

Evid. 2. What pain and difficulty do men often find in bringing their hearts to religious duties? and what a taſk is it to the carnal heart to abide at them? It is a pain to it, to leave the world but a little to converſe with God. It is not eaſy to borrow time from the many things, to beſtow upon the one thing needful. Men often go to God in duties, with their faces towards the world; and when their bodies are on the mount of ordinances, their hearts will be found at the foot of the hill, going after their covetouſneſs, Ezek. xxxiii. 31. They are ſoon wearied of well-doing; for holy duties are not agreeable to their corrupt nature. Take notice of them at their worldly buſineſs, ſet them down with their carnal company, or let them be ſucking the breaſts of a luſt; time ſeems to them to fly, and drive furiouſly, ſo that it is gone ere they are aware. But how heavily does it drive, while a prayer, a ſermon, or a Sabbath laſtes? The Lord's day is the longeſt day of all the week with many; and therefore they muſt ſleep longer that morning, and go ſooner to bed that night, than ordinarily they do; that the day may be made of a tolerable length; for their hearts ſay within them, When will the Sabbath be gone? Amos viii. 5. The hours of worſhip are the the longeſt hours of that day: hence, when duty is over, they are like men eaſed of a burden; and when ſermon is ended, many have neither the grace nor good manners to ſtay till the bleſſing be pronounced, but, like the beaſts, their head is away as ſoon as one puts hand to looſe them; why, but becauſe, while they are at ordinances, they are, as Doeg, detained before the Lord? 1 Sam. xxii. 7.

Evid. 3. Conſider how the will of the natural man doth rebel againſt the light, Job xxiv. 13. Light ſometimes entereth in, becauſe he is not able to hold it out: but he loveth darkneſs rather than light. Sometimes, by the force of truth, the outer door of the underſtanding is broken up; but the inner door of the will remains faſt bolted. Then luſts riſe againſt light: corruption and conſcience encounter, and fight as in the field of battle, till corruption getting the upper hand, conſcience is forced to give the back; convictions are murdered, and truth is made and held priſoner, ſo that it can create no more diſturbance. While the word is preached or read, or the rod of God is upon the natural man, ſometimes convictions are darted in on him, and his ſpirit is wounded, in greater or leſſer meaſure: but theſe convictions not being able to make him fall, he runs away with the arrows ſticking in his conſcience; and at length one way or other, gets them out, and licks himſelf whole again. Thus, while the light ſhines, men, naturally averſe to it, wilfully ſhut their eyes, till God is provoked to blind them judicially, and they become proof againſt the word and providences too; ſo they may go where they will, they can ſit at eaſe: there is never a word from heaven to them, that goeth deeper than into their ears, Hoſ. iv. 17. Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone.

Evid. 4. Let us obſerve the reſiſtance made by elect ſouls, when the Spirit of the Lord is at work, to bring them from the power of Satan unto God. Zion's King gets no ſubjects but by ſtroke of ſword, in the day of his power, Pſal. cx. 2. 3. None come to him, but ſuch as are drawn by a divine hand, John vi. 44. When the Lord comes to the ſoul, he finds the ſtrong man keeping the houſe, and a deep peace and ſecurity there, while the ſoul is faſt aſleep in the devil's arms. But the prey muſt be taken from the mighty, and the captive delivered. Therefore the Lord awakens the ſinner, opens his eyes, and ſtrikes him with terror, while the clouds are black above his head, and the ſword of vengeance is held to his breaſt. Now he is at no ſmall pains to put a fair face on a black heart; to ſhake off his fears, to make head againſt them, and to divert himſelf from thinking on the unpleaſant and ungrateful ſubject of his ſoul's caſe. If he cannot ſo rid himſelf from them, carnal reaſon is called in to help, and urgeth, that there is no ground for ſo great fear; all may be well enough yet; and if it be ill with him, it will be ill with many. When the ſinner is beat from this, and ſees no advantage in going to hell with company, he reſolves to leave his ſins, but cannot think of breaking off ſo ſoon; there is time enough, and he will do it afterwards. Conſcience ſays, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts: but he cries, To morrow, Lord, to-morrow, Lord; and juſt now, Lord, till that now is never like to come. And thus many times he comes from his prayers and confeſſions, with nothing but a breaſt full of ſharper convictions; for the heart doth not always caſt up the ſweet morſel, as ſoon as confeſſion is made with the mouth, Judges x. 10.---16. And when conſcience obligeth him to part with ſome luſts, others are kept as right eyes and right hands; and there are rueful looks after thoſe that are put away; as it was with the Iſraelites, who with bitter hearts did remember the fiſh they did eat in Egypt freely, Num. iii. 5. Nay, when he is ſo preſſed, that he muſt needs ſay before the Lord, that he is content to part with all his idols; the heart will be giving the tongue the lie. In a word, the ſoul, in this caſe, will ſhift from one thing to another; like a fiſh with the hook in his jaws, till it can do no more, and power come to make it ſuccumb, as the wild aſs in her month, Jer. ii. 24.

Thirdly, There is in the will of man a natural proneneſs to evil, a woful bent towards ſin. Men naturally are bent to backſliding from God, Hoſ. ii. 7. They hang (as the word is) towards backſliding; even as a hanging wall, whoſe breaking cometh ſuddenly at an inſtant. Set holineſs and life upon the one ſide, ſin and death upon the other; leave the unrenewed will to itſelf, it will chuſe ſin, and reject holineſs. This is no more to be doubted, than that water, poured on the ſide of a hill, will run downward, and not upward, or that a flame will aſcend, and not deſcend.

Evid. 1. Is not the way of evil the firſt way the children of men do go? do not their inclinations plainly appear on the wrong ſide, while yet they have no cunning to hide them? In the firſt opening of our eyes in the world, we look a-ſquint, hell-ward, not heaven-ward. As ſoon as it appears we are reaſonable creatures, it appears we are ſinful creatures, Pſal. lviii. 3. The wicked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray, as ſoon as they be born, Prov. xxii. 15. Fooliſhneſs is bound in the heart of a child: but the rod of correction ſhall drive it far from him. Folly is bound in the heart, it is woven into our very nature. The knot will not looſe; it muſt be broke aſunder by ſtrokes. Words will not do it, the rod muſt be taken to drive it away: and if it be not driven far away, the heart and it will meet and knit again. Not that the rod of itſelf will do this: the ſad experience of many parents teſtifies the contrary; and Solomon himſelf tells you, Prov. xxvii. 22. Though thou ſhouldſt bray a fool in a mortar, among wheat, with a peſtil, yet will not his fooliſhneſs depart from him; it is ſo bound in his heart. But the rod is an ordinance of God, appointed for that end; which, like the word, is made effectual, by the Spirit's accompanying his own ordinance. And this, by the way, ſhews that parents, in adminiſtering correction to their children, have need, firſt of all, to correct their own irregular paſſions, and look upon it as a matter of awful ſolemnity, ſetting about it with much dependence on the Lord, and following it with prayer for the bleſſing, if they would have it effectual.

Evid. 2. How eaſily are men led aſide to ſin! The children, who are not perſuaded to good, are otherwiſe ſimple ones, eaſily wrought upon: thoſe whom the word cannot draw to holineſs, are led by Satan at his pleaſure. Profane Eſau, that cunning man, (Gen. xxv. 27.), was as eaſily cheated of the bleſſing, as if he had been a fool or an idiot. The more natural a thing is, it is the more eaſy: ſo Chriſt's yoke is eaſy to the ſaints, in ſo far as they are partakers of the divine nature: and ſin is eaſy to the unrenewed man; but to learn to do good, as difficult as for the Ethiopian to change his ſkin; becauſe the will naturally hangs towards evil, but is averſe to good. A child can cauſe a round thing to run, while he cannot move a ſquare thing of the ſame weight; for the roundneſs makes it fit for motion, ſo that it goes with a touch. Even ſo, when men find the heart eaſily carried towards ſin, while it is as a dead weight in the way of holineſs; we muſt bring the reaſon of this from the natural ſet and diſpoſition of the heart, whereby it is prone and bent to evil. Were man's will, naturally, put in equal balance to good and evil, the one might be embraced with as little difficulty as the other; but experience teſtifies it is not ſo. In the ſacred hiſtory of the Iſraelites, eſpecially in the book of Judges, how often do we find them forſaking JEHOVAH, the mighty God, and doting upon the idols of the nations about them? But did ever one of theſe nations grow fond of Iſrael's God, and forſake their own idols? No, no; though man is naturally given to changes, it is but from evil to evil, not from evil to good, Jer. ii. 10. 11. Hath a nation changed their gods, which yet are no gods? but my people have changed their glory, for that which doth not profit. Surely the will of man ſtands not in equal balance, but has a caſt to the wrong ſide.

Evid. 3. Conſider how men go on ſtill in the way of ſin, till they meet with a ſtop, and that from another hand than their own; Iſ. lvii. 17. I hid me, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart. If God withdraw his reſtraining hand, and lay the reins on the ſinner's neck, he is in no doubt what way to chooſe: for (obſerve it) the way of ſin is the way of his heart; his heart naturally lies that way; it hath a natural propenſity to ſin. As long as God ſuffereth them, they walk in their own way, Acts xiv. 16. The natural man is ſo fixed in his woful choice, that there needs no more to ſhew he is off from God's way, but to tell him he is upon his own.

Evid. 4. Whatever good impreſſions are made upon him, they do not laſte. Though his heart be firm as a ſtone, yea, harder than the nether milſtone, in point of receiving of them; it is otherwiſe unſtable as water, and cannot keep them. It works againſt the receiving of them; and, when they are made, it works them off, and returns to its natural bias; Hoſ. vi. 4. Your goodneſs is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. The morning cloud promiſeth a hearty ſhower; but, when the ſun ariſeth it evaniſheth; the ſun beats upon the early dew, and it evaporates; ſo the huſbandman's expectation is diſappointed. Such is the goodneſs of the natural man Some ſharp affliction, or piercing convic tion, obligeth him, in ſome ſort, to turn from his evil courſe; but his will not being renewed, religion is ſtill againſt the grain with him, and therefore this goes off again, Pſal. lxxviii. 34. 36. 37. Though a ſtone thrown up into the air, may abide there a little while; yet its natural heavineſs will bring it down to the earth again; and ſo do unrenewed men return to the wallowing in the mire; becauſe although they were waſhed, yet their ſwiniſh nature was not changed. It is hard to cauſe wet wood take fire, hard to make it keep fire; but it is harder than either of theſe, to make the unrenewed will retain attained goodneſs; which is a plain evidence of the natural bent of the will to evil.

Evid. laſt. Do the ſaints ſerve the Lord now, as they were wont to ſerve ſin in their unconverted ſtate? Very far from it. Rom. vi. 20. When ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs. Sin got all and admitted no partner: but now, when they are the ſervants of Chriſt, are they free from ſin? Nay, there are ſtill with them ſome deeds of the old man, ſhewing that he is but dying in them. And hence their hearts often miſgive them, and ſlip aſide unto evil, when they would do good, Rom. vii. 21. They need to watch, and keep their hearts with all diligence; and their ſad experience teacheth them, That he that truſteth in his own heart is a fool, Prov. xxviii. 26. If it be thus in the green tree, how muſt it be in the dry?

Fourthly, There is a natural contrariety, direct oppoſition and enmity, in the will of man to God himſelf, and his holy will, Rom. viii. 7. The carnal mind is enmity againſt God; for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. The will was once God's deputy in the ſoul, ſet to command there for him; but now it is ſet up againſt him. If you would have the picture of it, in its natural ſtate, the very reverſe of the will of God repreſents it. If the fruit hanging before one's eyes, be but forbidden, that is ſufficient to draw the heart after it. Let me inſtance in the ſin of profane ſwearing and curſing, to which ſome are ſo abandoned, that they take a pride in them; belching out horrid oaths and curſes, as if hell opened with the opening of their mouths; or larding their ſpeeches with minced oaths, as faith, haith, fai'd ye hai'd ye, and ſuch like; and all this without any manner of provocation, though even that would not excuſe them. Pray, tell me, (1.) What profit is there here? A thief gets ſomething in his hand for his pains; a drunkard gets a belly-full; but what do ye get? Others ſerve the devil for pay; but ye are volunteers, that expect no reward but your work itſelf, in affronting of Heaven. And if you repent not, you will get your reward in full tale: when you go to hell, your work will follow you. The drunkard ſhall not have a drop of water to cool his tongue there; nor will the covetous man's wealth follow him into the other world: but ye ſhall drive on your old trade there; and an eternity will be long enough to give you your heart's fill of it. (2.) What pleaſure is there here, but what flows from your trampling upon the holy law? Which of your ſenſes doth ſwearing or curſing gratify? If it gratify your ears, it can only be by the noiſe it makes againſt the heavens. Though you had a mind to give up yourſelves to all manner of profanity and ſenſuality, there is ſo little pleaſure can be ſtrained out of theſe ſins, that we muſt needs conclude, your love to them, in this caſe, is a love to them for themſelves; a deviliſh unhired love, without any proſpect of profit or pleaſure from them otherwiſe. If any ſhall ſay, theſe are monſters of men. Be it ſo; yet, alas! the world is fruitful of ſuch monſters; they are to be found almoſt every-where. And allow me to ſay, they muſt be admitted as the mouth of the whole unregenerate world againſt Heaven, Rom. iii. 14. Whoſe mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs. verſ. 19. Now we know, that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.

I have a charge againſt every unregenerate man and woman, young or old, to be verified by the teſtimonies of the ſcriptures of truth, and the teſtimony of their own conſciences; namely, that whether they be profeſſors or profane, whatever they be, ſeeing they are not born again they are heart-enemies to God; to the Son of God; to the Spirit of God; and to the law of God. Hear this, ye careleſs ſouls, that live at eaſe in your natural ſtate.

1ſt, Ye are enemies to God in your mind, Col. i. 21. Ye are not as yet reconciled to him; the natural enmity is not as yet ſlain, though perhaps it lies hid, and ye do not perceive it. (1.) Ye are enemies to the very being of God, Pſal. xiv. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God. The proud man would that none were above himſelf; the rebel, that there were no king: and the unrenewed man, who is a maſs of pride and rebellion, that there were no God. He ſaith it in his heart, he wiſheth it were ſo, though he be aſhamed and afraid to ſpeak it out. And that all natural men are ſuch fools, appears from the apoſtle's quoting a part of this pſalm, That every mouth may be ſtopped, Rom. iii. 10. 11. 12. 19. I own indeed, that while the natural man looks on God as the Creator and Preſerver of the world, becauſe he loves his own ſelf, therefore his heart riſeth not againſt the being of his Benefactor: but this enmity will quickly appear when he looks on God as the Rector and Judge of the world, binding him, under the pain of the curſe, to exact holineſs, and girding him with the cords of death, becauſe of ſin. Liſten in this caſe to the voice of thy heart, and thou wilt find it to be No God. (2.) Ye are enemies to the nature of God, Job xxi. 14. They ſay unto God, Depart from us, for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways. Men ſet up to themſelves an idol of their own fancy, inſtead of God; and then fall down and worſhip it. They love him no other way, than Jacob loved Leah, while he took her for Rachel. Every natural man is an enemy to God, as he is revealed in his word. An infinitely holy, juſt, powerful, and true Being, is not the God whom he loves, but the God whom he lothes. In effect, men naturally are haters of God, Rom. i. 30. and if they could, they certainly would make him another than what he is. For, conſider it is a certain truth, That whatſoever is in God, is God; and therefore his attributes or perfections are not any thing really diſtinct from himſelf. If God's attributes be not God himſelf, he is a compound being, and ſo not the firſt Being, (which to ſay is blaſphemous); for the parts compounding are before the compound itſelf; but he is Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt.

Now, upon this, I would, for your conviction, propoſe to your conſciences a few queries. (1.) How ſtand your hearts affected to the infinite purity and holineſs of God? Conſcience will give an anſwer to this, which the tongue will not ſpeak out. If ye be not partakers of his holineſs, ye cannot be reconciled to it. The Pagans finding they could not be like God in holineſs, made their gods like themſelves in filthineſs; and thereby diſcovered what ſort of a god the natural man would have. God is holy; can an unholy creature love his unſpotted holineſs? Nay it is the righteous only that can give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs, Pſal. xcvii. 12. God is light; can creatures of darkneſs rejoice therein? Nay, every one that doth evil hateth the light, John iii. 20. For what communion hath light with darkneſs? 2 Cor. vi. 14. (2.) How ſtand your hearts affected to the juſtice of God? There is not a man, who is wedded to his luſts, as all the unregenerate are, but would be content, with the blood of his body, to blot that letter out of the name of God. Can the malefactor love his condemning judge? or an unjuſtified ſinner, a juſt God? No; he cannot, Luke vii. 47. To whom little is forgiven, the ſame loveth little. Hence ſeeing men cannot get the doctrine of his juſtice blotted out of the Bible, yet it is ſuch an eye-ſore to them, that they ſtrive to blot it out of their minds: and they ruin themſelves by preſuming on his mercy, while they are not careful to get a righteouſneſs, wherein they may ſtand before his juſtice; but ſay in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil, Zeph. i. 12. (3.) How ſtand ye affected to the omniſcience and omnipreſence of God? Men naturally would rather have a blind idol, than an all-ſeeing God; and therefore do what they can, as Adam did, to hide themſelves from the preſence of the Lord. They no more love the all-ſeeing, every where preſent God, than the thief loves to have the judge witneſs to his evil deeds. If it could be carried by votes, God would be voted out of the world, and cloſed up in heaven; for the language of the carnal heart is, The Lord ſeeth us not: The Lord hath forſaken the earth, Ezek. viii. 12. (4.) How ſtand ye affected to the truth and veracity of God? There are but few in the world that can heartily ſubſcribe to that ſentence of the apoſtle, Rom iii. 4. Let God be true, but every man a liar. Nay truly, there are many, who, in effect, do hope that God will not be true to his word. There are thouſands who hear the goſpel, that hope to be ſaved, and think all ſafe with them for eternity, who never had any experience of the new-birth, nor do at all concern themſelves in that queſtion, Whether they are born again, or not? a queſtion that is like to wear out from among us at this day. Our Lord's words are plain and peremptory, Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God. What are ſuch hopes then, but real hopes that God (with profoundeſt reverence be it ſpoken) will recal his word, and that Chriſt will prove a falſe prophet? What elſe means the ſinner, who when he heareth the words of the curſe, bleſſeth himſelf in his heart ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart? Deut. xxix. 19. Laſtly, How ſtand ye affected to the power of God? None but new creatures will love him for it, on a fair view thereof; though others may ſlaviſhly fear him upon the account of it. There is not a natural man, but would contribute to the utmoſt of his power to the building of another tower of Babel, to hem it in. On theſe grounds I declare every unrenewed man an enemy to God.

2dly, Ye are enemies to the Son of God. That enmity to Chriſt is in your hearts, which would have made you join the huſbandmen who killed the heir, and caſt him out of the vineyard; if ye had been beſet with their temptations, and no more reſtrained than they were. Am I a dog, (you will ſay), to have ſo treated my ſweet Saviour? So did Hazael in another caſe; but when he had the temptation, he was a dog to do it. Many call Chriſt their ſweet Saviour, whoſe conſciences can bear witneſs, they never ſucked as much ſweetneſs from him, as from their ſweet luſts, which are ten times ſweeter to them than their Saviour. He is no other way ſweet to them than as they abuſe his death and ſufferings, for the peaceable enjoyment of their luſts; that they may live as they liſt in the world; and when they die, may be kept out of hell. Alas! it is but a miſtaken Chriſt that is ſweet to you, whoſe ſouls lothe that Chriſt, who is the brightneſs of the Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon. It is with you as it was with the carnal Jews, who delighted in him, while they miſtook his errand into the world, fancying that he would be a temporal deliverer to them, Mal. iii. 1. But when he was come, and ſat as a refiner and purifier of ſilver, verſ. 2, 3. and caſt them as reprobate ſilver, who thought to have had no ſmall honour in the kingdom of the Meſſiah; his doctrine galled their conſciences, and they reſted not till they had embrued their hands in his blood. To open your eyes in this point, which ye are ſo loth to believe, I will lay before you the enmity of your hearts againſt Chriſt in all his offices.

1. Every unregenerate man is an enemy to Chriſt in his prophetical office. He is appointed of the Father the great Prophet and Teacher; but not upon the world's call, who, in their natural ſtate, would have unanimouſly voted againſt him; and therefore when he came, he was condemned as a ſeducer and blaſphemer. For evidence of this enmity, I ſhall inſtance in two things.

Evidence 1. Conſider the entertainment he meets with, when he comes to teach ſouls inwardly by his Spirit. Men do what they can to ſtop their ears, like the deaf adder, that they may not hear his voice. They always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt: they deſire not the knowledge of his ways; and therefore bid him depart from them. The old calumny is often raiſed upon him on that occaſion, John x. 20. He is mad, why hear ye him? Soul-exerciſe, raiſed by the ſpirit of bondage, is accounted, by many, nothing elſe but diſtraction, and melancholy fits; men thus blaſpheming the Lord's work, becauſe they themſelves are beſide themſelves, and cannot judge of thoſe matters.

Evid. 2. Conſider the entertainment he meets with, when he comes to teach men outwardly by his word.

(1.) His written word, the Bible, is ſlighted. Chriſt hath left it to us, as the book of our inſtructions, to ſhow us what way we muſt ſteer our courſe, if we would come to Immanuel's land. It is a lamp to light us through a dark world, to eternal light. And he hath left it upon us, to ſearch it with that diligence wherewith men dig into mines for ſilver or gold, John v. 39. But, ah! how is this ſacred treaſure profaned by many! They ridicule that holy word, by which they muſt be judged at the laſt day; and will rather loſe their ſouls than their jeſt, dreſſing up the conceits of their wanton wits in ſcripture-phraſes: in which they act as mad a part, as one who would dig into a mine, to procure metal to melt and pour down his own and his neighbour's throat. Many exhauſt their ſpirits in reading romances, and their minds purſue them, as the flame doth the dry ſtubble; while they have no heart for, nor reliſh of, the holy word; and therefore ſeldom take a Bible in their hands. What is agreeable to the vanity of their minds, is pleaſant and taking; but what recommends holineſs to their unholy hearts, makes their ſpirits dull and flat. What pleaſure will they find in reading of a profane ballad, or ſtory-book, to whom the the Bible is taſteleſs, as the white of an egg; Many lay by their Bibles with their Sabbath-days clothes; and whatever uſe they have for their clothes, they have none for their Bibles, till the return of the Sabbath. Alas! the duſt or finery about your Bibles is a witneſs now, and will, at the laſt day, be a witneſs of the enmity of your hearts againſt Chriſt, as a Prophet. Beſides all this, among theſe who ordinarily read the ſcriptures, how few are there that read it as the word of the Lord to their ſouls, and keep up communion with him in it! They do not make his ſtatutes their counſellors, nor doth their particular caſe ſend them to their Bibles. They are ſtrangers to the ſolid comfort of the ſcriptures. And if at any time they be dejected, it is ſomething elſe than the word that revives them: as Achab was cured of his ſullen fit, by the ſecuring of Naboth's vineyard for him.

(2.) Chriſt's word preached is deſpiſed. The entertainment moſt of the world, to whom it has come, have always given it, is that which is mentioned, Matth. xxii. 5. They made light of it; and for its ſake, they are deſpiſed whom he has employed to preach it; whatever other face men put upon their contempt of the miniſtry, John xv. 20. 21. The ſervant is not greater than the lord: if they have perſecuted me, they will alſo perſecute you; if they have kept my ſaying, they will keep yours alſo. But all theſe things will they do unto you for my name's ſake. That Levi was the ſon of the hated, ſeems not to have been without a myſtery, which the world in all ages hath unriddled. But though the earthen veſſels, wherein God has put the treaſure, be turned, with many, into veſſels wherein there is no pleaſure, yet why is the treaſure itſelf ſlighted? But ſlighted it is, and that with a witneſs this day. Lord, who hath believed our report? To whom ſhall we ſpeak? Men can, without remorſe, make to themſelves ſilent Sabbaths, one after another. And, alas! when they come to ordinances, for the moſt part, it is but to appear (or as the word is, to be ſeen) before the Lord; and to tread his courts, namely, as a company of beaſts would do, if they were driven into them, Iſ. i. 12.; ſo little reverence and awe of God appears on their ſpirits. Many ſtand like brazen walls before the word, in whoſe corrupt converſation the preaching of the word makes no breach. Nay, not a few are growing worſe and worſe, under precept upon precept; and the reſult of all is, They go and fall backward, and be broken, and ſnared, and taken, Iſ. xxviii. 13. What tears of blood are ſufficient to lament that (the goſpel) the grace of God is thus received in vain! We are but the voice of one crying; the ſpeaker is in heaven; and ſpeaks to you from heaven by men: why do ye refuſe him that ſpeaketh? Heb. xii. 25. God has made our Maſter Heir of all things, and we are ſent to court a ſpouſe for him. There is none ſo worthy as he; none more unworthy than they to whom this match is propoſed: but the prince of darkneſs is preferred before the PRINCE OF PEACE. A diſmal darkneſs overclouded the world by Adam's fall, more terrible than if the ſun, moon and ſtars had been for ever wrapt up in blackneſs of darkneſs; and there we ſhould have eternally lain, had not this grace of the goſpel, as a ſhining ſun, appeared to diſpel it, Tit. ii. 11. But yet we fly like night-owls from it; and, like the wild beaſts, lay ourſelves down in our dens: when the ſun ariſeth, we are ſtruck blind with the light thereof; and, as creatures of darkneſs, love darkneſs rather than light. Such is the enmity of the hearts of men againſt Chriſt, in his prophetical office.

2. The natural man is an enemy to Chriſt in his prieſtly office. He is appointed of the Father a Prieſt for ever; that, by his alone ſacrifice and interceſſion, ſinners may have peace with, and acceſs to God: but Chriſt crucified is a ſtumbling block, and fooliſhneſs, to the unrenewed part of mankind, to whom he is preached, 1 Cor. i. 23. They are not for him, as the new and living way; nor is he, by the voice of the world, an High Prieſt over the houſe of God. Corrupt nature goes quite another way to work.

Evidence 1. None of Adam's children naturally incline to receive the bleſſing in borrowed robes; but would always, according to the ſpider's motto, owe all to themſelves: and ſo climb up to heaven on a thread ſpun out of their own bowels. For they deſire to be under the law, Gal. iv. 21. and go about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, Rom. x. 3. Man naturally looks on God as a great Maſter; and himſelf as his ſervant, that muſt work and win heaven as his wages. Hence, when conſcience is awakened, he thinks that, to the end he may be ſaved, he muſt anſwer the demands of the law, ſerve God as well as he can, and pray for mercy wherein he comes ſhort. And thus many come to duties, that never come out of them to Jeſus Chriſt.

Evid. 2. As men, naturally, think highly of their duties, that ſeem to them to be well done; ſo they look for acceptance with God, according as their work is done, not according to the ſhare they have in the blood of Chriſt. Wherefore have we faſted, ſay they, and thou ſeeſt not? They will value themſelves on their performances and attainments; yea, their very opinions in religion, (Phil. iii. 4. 5. 6. 7.), taking to themſelves what they rob from Chriſt the great High Prieſt.

Evid. 3. The natural man, going to God, in duties, will always be found, either to go without a Mediator, or with more than the one only Mediator Jeſus Chriſt. Nature is blind, and therefore venturous; it ſets men a-going immediately to God without Chriſt; to ruſh into his preſence, and put their petitions in his hand, without being introduced by the Secretary of heaven, or putting their requeſts into his hand. So fixed is this diſpoſition in the unrenewed heart, that when many hearers of the goſpel are converſed with upon the point of their hopes of ſalvation, the name of Chriſt will ſcarcely be heard from their mouths. Aſk them, how they think to obtain the pardon of ſin? they will tell you, they beg and look for mercy, becauſe God is a merciful God; and that is all they have to confide in. Others look for mercy for Chriſt's ſake; but how do they know that Chriſt will take their plea in hand? Why, as the Papiſts have their mediators with the Mediator, ſo have they. They know he cannot but do it; for they pray, confeſs, mourn, and have great deſires, and the like; and ſo have ſomething of their own to commend them unto him: they were never made poor in ſpirit, and brought empty-handed to Chriſt, to lay the ſtreſs of all on his atoning blood.

3. The natural man is an enemy to Chriſt in his kingly office. The Father has appointed the Mediator, King in Zion, Pſal. ii. 6. And all to whom the goſpel comes are commanded, on their higheſt peril, to kiſs the Son, and ſubmit themſelves unto him, ver. 12. But the natural voice of mankind is, Away with him; as you may ſee, ver. 2. 3. They will not have him to reign over them, Luke xix. 14.

Evidence 1. The workings of corrupt nature, to wreſt the government out of his hands. No ſooner was he born, but being born a King, Herod perſecuted him, Matth. ii. And when he was crucified, they ſet up over his head his accuſation written, This is Jeſus, the King of the Jews, Matth. xxvii. 37. Though his kingdom be a ſpiritual kingdom, and not of this world, yet they cannot allow him a kingdom within a kingdom, which acknowledgeth no other head or ſupreme, but the Royal Mediator. They make bold with his royal prerogatives, changing his laws, inſtitutions, and ordinances; modelling his worſhip according to the devices of their own hearts, introducing new offices and officers into his kingdom, not to be found in the book of the manner of his kingdom: diſpoſing of the external government thereof, as may beſt ſuit their carnal deſigns. Such is the enmity of the hearts of men againſt Zion's King.

Evid. 2. How unwilling are men, naturally, to ſubmit unto, and be hedged in by the laws and diſcipline of his kingdom! As a king, he is a law-giver, (Iſ. xxxiii. 22.), and has appointed an external government, diſcipline and cenſures, to controul the unruly, and to keep his profeſſed ſubjects in order, to be exerciſed by officers of his own appointment, Matth. xviii. 17. 18. 1 Cor. xii. 28. 1 Tim. v. 17. Heb. xiii. 17. But theſe are the great eye-ſores of the carnal world, who love ſinful liberty, and therefore cry out, Let us break their bands aſunder, and caſt away their cords from us, Pſal. ii. 3. Hence this work is found to be, in a ſpecial manner, a ſtriving againſt the ſtream of corrupt nature, which, for the moſt part, puts ſuch a face on the church, as if there were no king in Iſrael, every one doing that which is right in his own eyes.

Evid. 3. However natural men may be brought to feign ſubmiſſion to the King of ſaints, yet luſts always retain the throne and dominion in their hearts, and they are ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, Tit. iii. 3. None, but theſe in whom Chriſt is formed, do really put the crown on his head, and receive the kingdom of Chriſt within them. His crown is the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his eſpouſals. Who are they, whom the power of grace has not ſubdued, that will allow him to ſet up, and to put down, in their ſouls, as he will? Nay, as for others, any lord ſhall ſooner get the rule over them, than the Lord of glory: they kindly entertain his enemies, and will never abſolutely reſign themſelves to his government, till conquered in a day of power. Thus ye ſee, that the natural man is an enemy to Jeſus Chriſt in all his offices.

But O how hard is it to convince men in this point! They are very loth to take with it. And, in a ſpecial manner, the enmity of the heart againſt Chriſt in his prieſtly office ſeems to be hid from the view of moſt of the hearers of the goſpel. Yet there appears to be a peculiar malignity in corrupt nature againſt that office of his. It may be obſerved, that the Socinians, theſe enemies of our bleſſed Lord, allow him to be properly a Prophet and a King, but deny him to be properly a Prieſt. And this is agreeable enough to the corruption of our nature; for under the covenant of works, the Lord was known as a Prophet or Teacher, and alſo as a King or Ruler; but not at all as a Prieſt: ſo man knows nothing of the myſtery of Chriſt, as the way to the Father, till it be revealed to him: and when it is revealed, the will riſeth up againſt it; for corrupt nature lies croſs to the myſtery of Chriſt, and the great contrivance of ſalvation, through a crucified Saviour, revealed in the goſpel. For clearing of which weighty truth, let theſe four things be conſidered.

Firſt, The ſoul's falling in with the grand device of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and ſetting the matters of ſalvation on that footing before the Lord, is declared by the ſcriptures of truth to be an undoubted mark of a real ſaint, who is happy here, and ſhall be happy hereafter. Matth. xi. 6. And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me. 1 Cor. i. 23. 24. But we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and unto the Greeks, fooliſhneſs; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God. Philip. iii. 3. For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in the ſpirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh. Now, how could this be, if nature could comply with that grand device?

Secondly, Corrupt nature is the very reverſe of the goſpel-contrivance. In the goſpel, God propoſeth Jeſus Chriſt as the great means of re-uniting man to himſelf, he has named him as the Mediator, one in whom he is well pleaſed, and will have none but him, Matth. xvii. 5.; but nature will have none of him, Pſal. lxxxi. 11. God appointed the place of meeting for the reconciliation, namely, the fleſh of Chriſt; accordingly, God was in Chriſt, (2 Cor. v. 19.) as the tabernacle of meeting, to make up the peace with ſinners: but natural men, though they ſhould die for ever, will not come thither, John v. 40. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life. In the way of the goſpel, the ſinner muſt ſtand before the Lord in an imputed righteouſneſs: but corrupt nature is for an inherent righteouſneſs; and therefore, ſo far as natural men follow after righteouſneſs, they follow after the law of righteouſneſs, Rom. ix. 31. 32. and not after the Lord our righteouſneſs. Nature is always for building up itſelf, and to have ſome ground for boaſting: but the great deſign of the goſpel is to exalt grace, to depreſs nature, and exclude boaſting, Rom. iii. 27. The ſum of our natural religion is, to do good from and for ourſelves, John v. 44.; the ſum of the goſpel religion is, to deny ourſelves, and to do good from and for Chriſt Philip. i. 21.

Thirdly, Every thing in nature is againſt believing in Jeſus Chriſt. What beauty can the blind mind diſcern in a crucified Saviour, for which he is to be deſired? How can the will, naturally impotent, yea and averſe to good, make choice of him? Well may the ſoul then ſay to him in the day of the ſpiritual ſiege, as the Jebuſites ſaid to David in another caſe, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou ſhalt not come in hither, 2 Sam. v. 6. The way of nature is to go into one's ſelf for all; according to the fundamental maxim of unſanctified morality, That a man ſhould truſt in himſelf; which, according to the doctrine of faith, is mere fooliſhneſs; for ſo it is determined, Prov. xviii. 26. He that truſteth in his own heart is a fool. Now faith is the ſoul's going out of itſelf for all: and this, nature, on the other hand, determines to be fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. i. 18. 23. Wherefore there is need of the working of mighty power, to cauſe ſinners to believe, Eph. i. 19. Iſ. liii. 1. We ſee the promiſes of welcome to ſinners, in the goſpel-covenant, are ample, large and free, clogged with no conditions, Iſ. lv. 1. Rev. xxii. 17. If they cannot believe his bare word, he has given them his oath upon it, Ezek. xxxiii. 11.; and, for their greater aſſurance, he has appended ſeals to his ſworn covenant, namely, the holy ſacraments: ſo that no more could be demanded of the moſt faithleſs perſon in the world, to make us believe him, than the Lord hath condeſcended to give us, to make us believe himſelf. This plainly ſpeaks nature to be againſt believing, and theſe who flee to Chriſt for a refuge, to have need of ſtrong conſolation, (Heb. vi. 18.) to balance their ſtrong doubts, and propenſity to unbelief. Farther, alſo it may be obſerved, how, in the word ſent to a ſecure, graceleſs generation, their objections are anſwered aforehand; and words of grace are heaped one upon another, as ye may read, Iſ. lv. 7. 8. 9. Joel. ii. 13. Why? Becauſe the Lord knows, that when theſe ſecure ſinners are thoroughly awakened, doubts, fears, and carnal reaſonings againſt believing, will be going within their breaſts, as thick as duſt in a houſe, raiſed by ſweeping a dry floor.

Laſtly, Corrupt nature is bent towards the way of the law, or covenant of works; and every natural man, as far as he ſets himſelf to ſeek after ſalvation, is engaged in that way; and will not quit it, till beat from it by a divine power. Now the way of ſalvation by works, and that of free grace in Jeſus Chriſt, are inconſiſtent, Rom. xi. 6. And if by grace, then it is no more of works; otherwiſe grace is no more grace; But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwiſe work is no more work. Gal. iii. 12. And the law is not of FAITH; but the man that DOTH them ſhall live in them. Wherefore, if the will of man naturally incline to the way of ſalvation by the law, it lies croſs to the goſpel-contrivance. And that ſuch is the natural bent of our hearts, will appear, if theſe following things be conſidered.

1. The law was Adam's covenant; and he knew no other, as he was the head and repreſentative of all mankind, that were brought into it with him, and left under it by him, though without ſtrength to perform the condition thereof. Hence this covenant is ingrained in our nature; and though we have loſt our father's ſtrength, yet we ſtill incline to the way he was ſet upon, as our head and repreſentative, in that covenant; that is by doing, to live. This is our natural religion, and the principle which men naturally take for granted, Matth. xix. 16. What good thing ſhall I do, that I may have eternal life?

2. Conſider the oppoſition that has always been made in the world, againſt the doctrine of free grace in Jeſus Chriſt, by men ſetting up for the way of works; thereby diſcovering the natural tendency of the heart. It is manifeſt, that the great deſign of the goſpel-contrivance is to exalt the free grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. vi. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace. See Eph. i. 6. and chap. ii. 7. 9. All goſpel-truths centre in Chriſt: ſo that to learn the truth, is to learn Chriſt, Eph. iv. 20. and to be truly taught it, is to be taught as the truth is in Jeſus, verſe 21. All diſpenſations of grace and favour from heaven, whether to nations or particular perſons, have ſtill had ſomething about them proclaiming a freedom of grace; as in the very firſt ſeparation made by the divine favour, Cain the elder brother is rejected, and Abel the younger accepted. This ſhines through the whole hiſtory of the Bible: but as true it is, this has been the point principally oppoſed by corrupt nature. One may well ſay, that, of all errors in religion, ſince Chriſt, the ſeed of the woman, was preached, this of works, in oppoſition to free grace in him, was the firſt that lived; and, it is likely, will be the laſt that dies. There have been vaſt numbers of errors, which ſprung up, one after another; whereof, at length, the world became aſhamed and weary, ſo that they died out: but this has continued, from Cain, the firſt author of this hereſy, unto this day; and never wanted ſome that clave to it, even in the times of greateſt light. I do not, without ground, call Cain the author of it; who, when Abel brought a ſacrifice of atonement, a bloody offering of the firſtlings of his flock, (like the publican ſmiting on his breaſt, and ſaying, God be merciful to me a ſinner) advanced with his thank-offering of the fruit of the ground, (Gen. iv. 3. 4.) like the proud Phariſee, with his, God I thank thee. For what was the cauſe of Cain's wrath, and of his murdering of Abel? was it not that he was not accepted of God for his work? Gen iv. 4. 5. And wherefore ſlew he him? Becauſe his own works were evil, and his brothers righteous, (1 John iii. 12.) that is, done in faith, and accepted, when his were done without faith, and therefore rejected, as the apoſtle teacheth, Heb. xi. 4. And ſo he wrote his indignation againſt juſtification and acceptance with God through faith, in oppoſition to works, in the blood of his brother, to convey it down to poſterity. And, ſince that time, the unbloody ſacrifice has often ſwimmed in the blood of thoſe that rejected it. The promiſe made to Abraham, of the ſeed in which all nations ſhould be bleſſed, was ſo overclouded among his poſterity in Egypt, that the generality of them ſaw no need of that way of obtaining the bleſſing, till God himſelf confuted their error by a fiery law from mount Sinai, which was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, till the ſeed ſhould come, Gal. iii. 19. I need not inſiſt to tell you how Moſes and the prophets had ſtill much ado, to lead the people off the conceit of their own righteouſneſs. The 9th chapter of Deuteronomy is entirely ſpent on that purpoſe. They were very groſs in that point in our Saviour's time: in the time of the apoſtles, when the doctrine of free grace was moſt clearly preached, that error lifted up its head in face of cleareſt light; witneſs the epiſtles to the Romans and Galatians. And ſince that time it has not been wanting; Popery being the common ſink of former hereſies, and this the heart and life of that deluſion. And, finally, it may be obſerved, that always as the church declined from her purity otherwiſe, the doctrine of free grace was obſcured proportionably.

3. Such is the natural propenſity of man's heart to the way of the law in oppoſition to Chriſt; that, as the tainted veſſel turns the taſte of the pureſt liquor put into it, ſo the natural man turns the very goſpel into law; and transforms the covenant of grace into a covenant of works. The ceremonial law was to the Jews a real goſpel; which held blood, death, and tranſlation of guilt before their eyes continually, as the only way of ſalvation: yet their very table (i. e. their altar, with the ſeveral ordinances pertaining thereto, Mal. i. 12.) was a ſnare unto them, Rom. ii. 9. while they uſed it to make up the defects in their obedience to the moral law; and clave to it ſo, as to reject him, whom the altar and ſacrifices pointed them to, as the ſubſtance of all; even as Hagar, whoſe it was only to ſerve, was, by their father, brought into her miſtreſs's bed; not without a myſtery in the purpoſe of God. For theſe are the two covenants. Gal. iv. 24. Thus is the doctrine of the goſpel corrupted by Papiſts, and other enemies to the doctrine of free grace. And indeed, however natural mens heads may be ſet right in this point; as ſurely as they are out of Chriſt, their faith, repentance, and obedience, (ſuch as they are) are placed by them in the room of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; and ſo truſted to, as if by theſe they fulfilled a new law.

4. Great is the difficulty in Adam's ſons their parting with the law as a covenant of works. None part with it in that reſpect, but theſe whom the power of the Spirit of grace ſeparates from it. The law is our firſt huſband, and gets every one's virgin love. When Chriſt comes to the ſoul, he finds it married to the law: ſo as it neither can nor will be married to another, till it be obliged to part with the firſt huſband, as the apoſtle teacheth, Rom. vii. 1, 2, 3, 4. Now, that ye may ſee what ſort of a parting this is, conſider,

(1.) It is a death, Rom. vii. 4. Gal. ii. 19. Intreaties will not prevail with the ſoul here; it ſaith to the firſt huſband, as Ruth to Naomi, The Lord do ſo to me, and more alſo, if ought but death part thee and me. And here ſinners are true to their word; they die to the law, ere they be married to Chriſt. Death is hard to every body: but what difficulty, do ye imagine, muſt a loving wife, on her death-bed, find in parting with her huſband, the huſband of her youth, and with the dear children ſhe has brought forth to him? The law is that huſband; all the duties performed by the natural man are theſe children. What a ſtruggle, as for life, will be in the heart, ere they be got parted? I may have occaſion to touch upon this afterwards: in the mean time, take the apoſtle's ſhort, but pithy deſcription of it, Rom. x. 3. For they being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted themſelves to the righteouſneſs of God. They go about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, like an eager diſputant in ſchools, ſeeking to eſtabliſh the point in queſtion; or, like a tormentor, extorting a confeſſion from one upon the rack. They go about to eſtabliſh it, to make it ſtand: their righteouſneſs is like a houſe built upon the ſand; it cannot ſtand, but they will have it to ſtand: it falls, they ſet it up again; but ſtill it tumbles down on them; yet they ceaſe not to go about to make it ſtand. But wherefore all this pains about a tottering righteouſneſs? Becauſe, ſuch as it is, it is their own. What ails them at Chriſt's righteouſneſs? Why, that would make them free grace's debtors for all; and that is what the proud heart by no means can ſubmit to. Here lies the ſtreſs of the matter, Pſal. x. 4. The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not ſeek, (to read it without the ſupplement); that is, in other terms, He cannot dig, and to beg he is aſhamed. Such is the ſtruggle ere the ſoul die to the law. But what ſpeaks yet more of this woful diſpoſition of the heart, nature oft-times gets the maſtery of the diſeaſe; inſomuch that the ſoul, which was like to have died to the law, while convictions were ſharp and piercing, fatally recovers of the happy and promiſing ſickneſs; and (what is very natural), cleaves more cloſely than ever to the law, even as a wife brought back from the gates of death, would cleave to her huſband. This is the iſſue of the exerciſes of many about their ſouls caſe: they are indeed brought to follow duties more cloſely; but they are as far from Chriſt as ever, if not farther.

(2.) It is a violent death, Rom vii. 4. Ye are become dead to the law, being killed, ſlain, or put to death, as the word bears. The law itſelf has a great hand in this; the huſband gives the wound, Gal. ii. 19. I through the law am dead to the law. The ſoul that dies this death, is like a loving wife matched with a rigorous huſband: ſhe does what ſhe can to pleaſe him, yet he is never pleaſed; but toſſeth, haraſſeth, and beats her, till ſhe breaks her heart, and death ſets her free: as will afterwards more fully appear. Thus it is made evident, that mens hearts are naturally bent to the way of the law, and ly croſs to the goſpel-contrivance: and the ſecond article of the charge, againſt you that are unregenerate, is verified, namely, that ye are enemies to the Son of God.

(3.) Ye are enemies to the Spirit of God. He is the Spirit of holineſs: the natural man is unholy, and loves to be ſo, and therefore reſiſts the Holy Ghoſt, Acts vii. 51. The work of the Spirit is to convince the world of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment, John xvii. 8. But O, how do men ſtrive to ward off theſe convictions, as ever they would ward off a blow, threatening the loſs of a right eye, or a right hand! If the Spirit of the Lord dart them in, ſo as they cannot evite them; the heart ſays, in effect, as Ahab to Elijah, whom he both hated and feared, Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy! And indeed they treat him as an enemy, doing their utmoſt to ſtifle convictions, and to murder theſe harbingers that come to prepare the Lord's way into the ſoul. Some fill their hands with buſineſs, to put their convictions out of their heads, as Cain, who fell a building of a city: Some put them off with delays and fair promiſes, as Felix did: ſome will ſport them away in company, and ſome ſleep them away. The holy Spirit is the Spirit of ſanctification; whoſe work it is to ſubdue luſts, and burn up corruption: how then can the natural man, whoſe luſts are to him as his limbs, yea, as his life, fail of being an enemy to him?

Laſtly, Ye are enemies to the law of God. Though the natural man deſires to be under the law, as a covenant of works, chuſing that way of ſalvation, in oppoſition to the myſtery of Chriſt; yet as it is a rule of life, requiring univerſal holineſs, and diſcharging all manner of impurity, he is an enemy to it; is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, Rom. viii. 7. (1.) There is no unrenewed man, who is not wedded to ſome one luſt or other, which his heart can by no means part with. Now that he cannot bring up his inclinations to the holy law, he would fain have the law brought down to his inclinations: a plain evidence of the enmity of the heart againſt it. And therefore, to delight in the law of God after the inward man, is propoſed in the word as a mark of a gracious ſoul, Rom. vii. 22. Pſal. i. 2. It is from this natural enmity of the heart againſt the law, that all the Phariſaical gloſſes upon it have ariſen; whereby the commandment, which is in itſelf exceeding broad, has been made very narrow, to the intent it might be the more agreeable to the natural diſpoſition of the heart.

(2.) The law laid home to the natural conſcience, in its ſpirituality, irritates corruption. The nearer it comes, nature riſeth the more againſt it. In that caſe it is as oil to the fire, which, inſtead of quenching it, makes it flame the more: When the commandment came, ſin revived, ſays the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 9. What reaſon can be aſſigned for this, but the natural enmity of the heart againſt the holy law? Unmortified corruption, the more it is oppoſed, the more it rageth. Let us conclude then that the unregenerate are heart-enemies to God, his Son, his Spirit, and his law; that there is a natural contrariety, oppoſition, and enmity in the will of man to God himſelf and his holy will.

Fifthly, There is in the will of man contumacy againſt the Lord. Man's will is naturally wilful in an evil courſe; he will have his will, though it ſhould ruin him: it is with him, as with the leviathan, (Job xli. 29) Darts are counted as ſtubble: he laugheth at the ſhaking of a ſpear. The Lord calls to him by his word, ſays to him, (as Paul to the jailor, when he was about to kill himſelf), Do thyſelf no harm: ſinners, why will ye die? Ezek. xviii. 31. But they will not hearken, Every one turneth to his courſe, as the horſe ruſheth into the battle, Jer. viii. 6. We have a promiſe of life, in form of a command, Prov. iv. 4. Keep my commandments and live, it ſpeaks impenitent ſinners to be ſelf-deſtroyers, wilful ſelf-murderers. They tranſgreſs the command of living; as if one's ſervant ſhould wilfully ſtarve himſelf to death, or greedily drink a cup of poiſon, which his maſter commands him to forbear: even ſo do they; they will not live, they will die, Prov. viii. 36. All they that hate me, love death. O what a heart is this! It is a ſtony heart, (Ezek. xxxvi. 26.) hard and inflexible, as a ſtone: mercies melt it not, judgments break it not; yet it will break ere it bow. It is an inſenſible heart: though there be upon the ſinner a weight of ſin, which makes the earth to ſtagger; although there is a weight of wrath on him, which makes the devils to tremble; yet he goes lightly under the burden; he feels not the weight more than a ſtone, till the Spirit of the Lord quicken him ſo far as to feel it.

Laſtly, The unrenewed will is wholly perverſe, in reference to man's chief and higheſt end. The natural man's chief end is not his God, but his ſelf. Man is a mere relative, dependent, borrowed being: he has no being nor goodneſs originally from himſelf; but all he hath is from God, as the firſt cauſe and ſpring of all perfection, natural or moral: dependence is woven into his very nature; ſo that if God ſhould totally withdraw from him, he would dwindle into a mere nothing. Seeing then whatever man is, he is of him; ſurely in whatever he is, he ſhould be to him; as the waters which came from the ſea, do of courſe return thither again. And thus man was created, directly looking to God, as his chief end: but falling into ſin, he fell off from God, and turned into himſelf; and, like a traitor uſurping the throne, he gathers in the rents of the crown to himſelf. Now, this infers a total apoſtaſy, and univerſal corruption in man; for where the chief and laſt end is changed, there can be no goodneſs there. This is the caſe of all men in their natural ſtate, Pſal. xiv. 2. 3. The Lord looked down----to ſee if there were any that did ſeek God. They are all gone aſide, to wit, from God; they ſeek not God but themſelves. And though many fair ſhreds of morality are to be found amongſt them, yet there is none that doth good, no not one; for though ſome of them run well, they are ſtill off the way; they never aim at the right mark. They are lovers of their own ſelves, (2 Tim. iii. 2.) more than God, verſ. 4. Wherefore Jeſus Chriſt, having come into the world to bring men back to God again, came to bring them out of themſelves, in the firſt place, Matth. xvi. 24. The godly groan under the remains of this woful diſpoſition of the heart; they acknowledge it, and ſet themſelves againſt it, in its ſubtile and dangerous inſinuations. The unregenerate, though moſt inſenſible of it, are under the power thereof; and whitherſoever they turn themſelves, they cannot move without the circle of ſelf: they ſeek themſelves, they act for themſelves: their natural, civil, and religious actions, from whatever ſprings they come, do all run into, and meet in the dead ſea of ſelf.

Moſt men are ſo far from making God their chief end, in their natural and civil actions; that in theſe matters, God is not in all their thoughts. Their eating and drinking, and ſuch like natural actions, are for themſelves; their own pleaſure or neceſſity, without any higher end, Zech. vii. 6. Did ye not eat for yourſelves? They have no eye to the glory of God in theſe things, as they ought to have, 1 Cor. x. 31. They do not eat and drink to keep up their bodies for the Lord's ſervice; they do them not, becauſe God has ſaid, Thou ſhalt not kill; neither do theſe drops of ſweetneſs God has put into the creature, raiſe up their ſouls towards that ocean of delights that is in the Creator; though they are indeed a ſign hung out at heaven's door, to tell men of the fulneſs of goodneſs that is in God himſelf, Acts xiv. 17. But it is ſelf, and not God, that is ſought in them, by natural men. And what are the unrenewed man's civil actions, ſuch as buying, ſelling, working, &c. but fruit to himſelf? Hoſ. x. 1. So marrying, and giving in marriage, are reckoned amongſt the ſins of the old world, (Matth. xxiv. 38.): for they had no eye to God therein, to pleaſe him; but all they had in view, was to pleaſe themſelves, Gen. vi. 3. Finally, ſelf is natural mens higheſt end, in their religious actions. They perform duties for a name, (Matth. vi. 1. 2.), or ſome other worldly intereſt, John vi. 26. Or if they be more refined, it is their peace, and at moſt their ſalvation from hell and wrath, or their own eternal happineſs, that is their chief and higheſt end, Matth. xix. 16.---22. Their eyes are held, that they ſee not the glory of God. They ſeek God indeed, but not for himſelf, but for themſelves. They ſeek him not at all, but for their own welfare: ſo their whole life is woven into one web of practical blaſphemy; making God the means, and ſelf their end, yea, their chief end.

And thus have I given you ſome rude draughts of man's will, in his natural ſtate, drawn by ſcripture and mens own experience. Call it no more Naomi, but Marah; for bitter it is, and a root of bitterneſs. Call it no more free-will, but ſlaviſh luſt; free to evil, but free from good, till regenerating grace looſe the bands of wickedneſs. Now ſince all muſt be wrong, and nothing can be right, where the underſtanding and will are ſo corrupt; I ſhall briefly diſpatch what remains, as following of courſe, on the corruption of theſe prime faculties of the ſoul.

The corruption of the affections, the conſcience, and the memory. The body partaker of this corruption.

III. The affections are corrupted. The unrenewed man's affections are wholly diſordered and diſtempered: they are as the unruly horſe, that either will not receive, or violently runs away with the rider. So man's heart naturally is a mother of abominations, Mark. vii. 21.

22. For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetouſneſs, &c. The natural man's affections are wretchedly miſplaced; he is a ſpiritual monſter. His heart is there, where his feet ſhould be, fixed on the earth; his heels are lifted up againſt heaven, which his heart ſhould be ſet on, Acts ix. 5. His face is towards hell, his back towards heaven; and therefore God calls him to turn. He loves what he ſhould hate, and hates what he ſhould love; joys in what he ought to mourn for, and mourns for what he ſhould rejoice in; glorieth in his ſhame, and is aſhamed of his glory; abhors what he ſhould deſire, and deſires what he ſhould abhor, Prov. ii. 13, 14, 15. They hit the point indeed, (as Caiaphas did in another caſe,) who cried out on the apoſtles, as men that turned the world upſide down, Acts xvii. 6.; for that is the work the goſpel has to do in the world, where ſin has put all things ſo out of order, that heaven lies under, and earth a-top. If the unrenewed man's affections be ſet on lawful objects, then they are either exceſſive or defective. Lawful enjoyments of the world have ſometimes too little, but moſtly too much of them; either they get not their due; or, if they do, it is meaſure preſſed down, and running over. Spiritual things have always too little of them. In a word, they are always in, or over; never right, only evil.

Now here is a threefold cord againſt heaven and holineſs, not eaſily broken; a blind mind, a perverſe will, and diſorderly, diſtempered affections. The mind, ſwelled with ſelf-conceit, ſays, The man ſhould not ſtoop, the will, oppoſite to the will of God, ſays, He will not; and the corrupt affections, riſing againſt the Lord, in defence of the corrupt will, ſay, He ſhall not. Thus the poor creature ſtands out againſt God and goodneſs; till a day of power come, in which he is made a new creature.

IV. The conſcience is corrupted and defiled, Tit. i. 15. It is an evil eye, that fills one's converſation with much darkneſs and confuſion, being naturally unable to do its office: till the Lord, by letting in a new light to the ſoul, awaken the conſcience, it remains ſleepy and unactive. Conſcience can never do its work, but according to the light it hath to work by. Wherefore, ſeeing the natural man cannot ſpiritually diſcern ſpiritual things, (1 Cor. ii. 14.) the conſcience naturally is quite uſeleſs in that point; being caſt in ſuch a deep ſleep, that nothing but a ſaving illumination from the Lord can ſet it on work in that matter. The light of the natural conſcience in good and evil, ſin and duty, is very defective: therefore, though it may check for groſſer ſins, yet as to the more ſubtile workings of ſin, it cannot check for them, becauſe it diſcerns them not. Thus conſcience will fly in the face of many, if at any time they be drunk, ſwear, neglect prayer, or be guilty of any groſs ſin; who otherwiſe have a profound peace, though they live in the ſin of unbelief, are ſtrangers to ſpiritual worſhip, and the life of faith. And natural light being but faint and languiſhing in many things which it doth reach, conſcience in that caſe ſhoots like a ſtitch in one's ſide, which quickly goes off: its incitements to duty, and checks for and ſtruggles againſt ſin, are very remiſs, which the natural man eaſily gets over. But becauſe there is a falſe light in the dark mind, the natural conſcience following the ſame, will call evil good, and good evil, Iſ. v. 20. And ſo it is often found like a blind and furious horſe, which doth violently run down himſelf, his rider, and all that doth come in his way, John xvi. 2. Whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doth God ſervice. When the natural conſcience is awakened by the Spirit of conviction, it will indeed rage and roar, and put the whole man in a dreadful conſternation; awfully ſummon all the powers of the ſoul to help in a ſtrait; make the ſtiff heart to tremble, and the knees to bow; ſet the eyes a-weeping, the tongue a-confeſſing; and oblige the man to caſt out the goods into the ſea, which it apprehends are like to ſink the ſhip of the ſoul, though the heart ſtill goes after them. But yet it is an evil conſcience, which natively leads to deſpair, and will do it effectually, as in Judas's caſe; unleſs either luſts prevail over it, to lull it aſleep, as in the caſe of Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. or the blood of Chriſt prevail over it, ſprinkling and purging it from dead works, as in the caſe of all true converts, Heb. ix. 14. and x. 22.

Laſtly, Even the memory bears evident marks of this corruption. What is good and worthy to be minded, as it makes but ſlender impreſſion, ſo that impreſſion eaſily wears off; the memory, as a leaking veſſel, lets it ſlip, Heb. ii. 1. As a ſieve that is full, when in the water, lets all go when it is taken out; ſo is the memory, with reſpect to ſpiritual things. But how does it retain what ought to be forgotten? naughty things ſo bear in themſelves upon it, that though men would fain have them out of mind, yet they ſtick there like glue. However forgetful men be in other things, it is hard to forget an injury. So the memory often furniſhes new fuel to old luſts; makes men in old age react the ſins of their youth, while it preſents them again to the mind with delight, which thereupon licks up the former vomit. And thus it is like the riddle, that lets through the pure grain, and keeps the refuſe. Thus far of the corruption of the ſoul.

The body itſelf alſo is partaker of this corruption and defilement, ſo far as it is capable thereof. Wherefore the ſcripture calls it ſinful fleſh, Rom. viii. 3. We may take this up in two things. (1.) The natural temper, or rather diſtemper of the bodies of Adam's children, as it is an effect of original ſin, leads the ſoul into ſnares, yea, is itſelf a ſnare to the ſoul. The body is a furious beaſt, of ſuch metal, that if it be not beat down, kept under, and brought into ſubjection, it will caſt the ſoul into much ſin and miſery, 1 Cor. ix. 27. There is a vileneſs in the body, (Philip. iii. 21.), which, as to the ſaints, will never be removed, until it be melted down in a grave, and caſt into a new mold, at the reſurrection, to come forth a ſpiritual body; and will never be carried off from the bodies of thoſe who are not partakers of the reſurrection to life. (2.) It ſerves the ſoul in many ſins. Its members are inſtruments or weapons of unrighteouſneſs, whereby men fight againſt God, Rom. vi. 13. The eyes and ears are open doors, by which impure motions and ſinful deſires enter the ſoul: the tongue is a world of iniquity, James iii. 6. an unruly evil, full of deadly poiſon, ver. 1. by it the impure heart vents a great deal of its filthineſs. The throat is an open ſepulchre, Rom. iii. 13. The feet run the devil's errands, ver. 15. The belly is made a god, Phil. iii. 19. not only by drunkards and riotous livers, but by every natural man, Zech. vii. 6. So the body naturally is an agent for the devil, and a magazine of armour againſt the Lord.

To conclude, man by nature is wholly corrupted: From the ſole of the foot even unto the head, there is no ſoundneſs in him. And, as in a dunghill, every part contributes to the corruption of the whole; ſo the natural man, while in that ſtate, grows ſtill worſe and worſe: the ſoul is made worſe by the body, and the body by the ſoul; and every faculty of the ſoul ſerves to corrupt another more and more. Thus much for the ſecond general head.

How man's nature was corrupted.

THIRDLY, I ſhall ſhew how man's nature comes to be thus corrupted. The Heathens perceived that man's nature was corrupted; but how ſin had entered, they could not tell. But the ſcripture is very plain in that point, Rom. v. 12. By one man ſin entered into the world, ver. 19. By one man's diſobedience, many were made ſinners. Adam's ſin corrupted man's nature, and leavened the whole lump of mankind. We putrified in Adam, as our root. The root was poiſoned, and ſo the branches were envenomed: the vine turned the vine of Sodom, and ſo the grapes became grapes of gall. Adam, by his ſin, became not only guilty, but corrupt; and ſo tranſmits guilt and corruption to his poſterity, Gen. v. 3. Job. xiv. 4. By his ſin he ſtript himſelf of his original righteouſneſs, and corrupted himſelf. We were in him repreſentatively, being repreſented by him as our moral head, in the covenant of works: we were in him ſeminally, as our natural head; hence we fell in him, and by his diſobedience were made ſinners; as Levi, in the loins of Abraham, paid tithes, Heb. vii. 9 10. His firſt ſin is imputed to us; therefore juſtly are we left under the want of his original righteouſneſs, which being given to him as a common perſon, he caſt off by his ſin: and this is neceſſarily followed, in him and us, by the corruption of the whole nature; righteouſneſs and corruption being two contraries, one of which muſt needs always be in man, as a ſubject capable thereof. And Adam our common father being corrupt, we are ſo too; for who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?

Although it is ſufficient to evince the righteouſneſs of this diſpenſation, that it was from the Lord, who doth all things well; yet, to ſilence the murmurings of proud nature, let theſe few things farther be conſidered. (1.) In the covenant wherein Adam repreſented us, eternal happineſs was promiſed to him and his poſterity, upon condition of his, that is, Adam's perfect obedience, as the repreſentative for all mankind: whereas, if there had been no covenant, they could not have pleaded eternal life upon their moſt perfect obedience, but might have been, after all, reduced to nothing; notwithſtanding, by natural juſtice, they would have been liable to God's eternal wrath, in caſe of ſin. Who in that caſe would not have conſented to that repreſentation? (2.) Adam had a power to ſtand given him, being made upright. He was as capable to ſtand for himſelf, and all his poſterity, as any after him could be for themſelves. This trial of mankind in their head, would ſoon have been over, and the crown won to them all, had he ſtood: whereas, had his poſterity been independent on him, and every one left to act for himſelf, the trial would have been continually a-carrying on, as men came into the world. (3.) He had natural affection the ſtrongeſt to engage him, being our common father. (4.) His own ſtock was in the ſhip, his all lay at ſtake, as well as ours. He had no ſeparate intereſt from ours; but if he forgot ours, he behoved to have forgot his own. (5.) If he had ſtood, we ſhould have had the light of his mind, the righteouſneſs of his will, and holineſs of his affections, with entire purity tranſmitted unto us; we could not have fallen; the crown of glory, by his obedience, would have been for ever ſecured to him and his. This is evident from the nature of a federal repreſentation: and no reaſon can be given why, ſeeing we are loſt by Adam's ſin, we ſhould not have been ſaved by his obedience. On the other hand, it is reaſonable, that he falling, we ſhould with him bear the loſs. Laſtly, Such as quarrel this diſpenſation, muſt renounce their part in Chriſt; for we are no otherwiſe made ſinners by Adam, than we are made righteous by Chriſt, from whom we have both imputed and inherent righteouſneſs. We no more made choice of the ſecond Adam for our head and repreſentative in the ſecond covenant, than we did of the firſt Adam in the firſt covenant.

Let none wonder that ſuch an horrible change could be brought on, by one ſin of our firſt parents; for thereby they turned away from God, as their chief end, which neceſſarily infers an univerſal depravation. Their ſin was a complication of evils, a total apoſtaſy from God, a violation of the whole law: by it they broke all the ten commands at once. (1.) They choſe new gods. They made their belly their god, by their ſenſuality; ſelf their god, by their ambition; yea, and the devil their god, by believing him, and diſbelieving their Maker. (2.) Though they received, yet they obſerved not that ordinance of God, about the forbidden fruit. They contemned that ordinance ſo plainly enjoined them, and would needs carve out to themſelves, how to ſerve the Lord. (3.) They took the name of the Lord their God in vain; deſpiſing his attributes, his juſtice, truth, power, &c. They groſsly profaned that ſacramental tree; abuſed his word, by not giving credit to it; abuſed that creature of his, which they ſhould not have touched; and violently miſconſtrued his providence, as if God, by forbidding them that tree, had been ſtanding in the way of their happineſs; and therefore he ſuffered them not to eſcape his righteous judgment. (4.) They remembered not the Sabbath to keep it holy, but put themſelves out of a condition to ſerve God aright on his own day: neither kept they that ſtate of holy reſt wherein God had put them. (5.) They caſt off their relative duties: Eve forgets herſelf, and acts without advice of her huſband, to the ruin of both; Adam, inſtead of admoniſhing her to repent, yields to the temptation, and confirms her in her wickedneſs. They forgot all duty to their poſterity. They honoured not their Father in heaven; and therefore their days were not long in the land which the Lord their God gave them. (6.) They ruined themſelves, and all their poſterity. (7.) Gave up themſelves to luxury and ſenſuality. (8.) Took away what was not their own, againſt the expreſs will of the great Owner. (9.) They bore falſe witneſs, and lied againſt the Lord, before angels, devils, and one another; in effect giving out, that they were hardly dealt by, and that Heaven grudged their happineſs. (10.) They were diſcontent with their lot, and coveted an evil covetouſneſs to their houſe; which ruined both them and theirs. Thus was the image of God on man defaced all at once.

The doctrine of the corruption of nature applied.

USE I. For information. Is man's nature wholly corrupted? Then,

1. No wonder the grave open its devouring mouth for us, as ſoon as the womb hath caſt us forth; and that the cradle be turned into a coffin, to receive the corrupt lump: for we are all, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, dead-born; yea, and filthy, (Pſal. xiv. 3.) noiſome, rank, and ſtinking as a corrupt thing, as the word imports. Let us not complain of the miſeries we are expoſed to at our entrance, nor of the continuance of them while we are in the world. Here is the venom that has poiſoned all the ſprings of earthly enjoyments we have to drink of. It is the corruption of man's nature, that brings forth all the miſeries of human life in churches, ſtates, families, in mens ſouls and bodies.

2. Behold here, as in a glaſs, the ſpring of all the wickedneſs, profanity, and formality in the world; the ſource of all the diſorders in thy own heart and life. Every thing acts like itſelf, agreeable to its own nature; and ſo corrupt man acts corruptly. You need not wonder at the ſinfulneſs of your own heart and life, nor at the ſinfulneſs and perverſeneſs of others; if a man be crooked, he cannot but halt; and if the clock be ſet wrong, how can it point the hour right?

3. See here, why ſin is ſo pleaſant, and religion ſuch a burden to carnal ſpirits: ſin is natural, holineſs not ſo. Oxen cannot feed in the ſea, nor fiſhes in the fruitful fields. A ſwine brought into a palace would get away again, to wallow in the mire; and corrupt nature tends ever to impurity.

4. Learn from this the nature and neceſſity of regeneration. Firſt, This diſcovers the nature of regeneration, in theſe two things: (1.) It is not a partial, but a total change, though imperfect in this life. Thy whole nature is corrupted, and therefore the cure muſt go through every part. Regeneration makes not only a new head for knowledge, but a new heart, and new affections for holineſs. All things become new, 2 Cor. v. 17. If one having received many wounds, ſhould be cured of them all, ſave one only; he might bleed to death, by that one, as well as a thouſand: ſo if the change go not through the whole man, it is naught. (2.) It is not a change made by human induſtry, but by the mighty power of the Spirit of God. A man muſt be born of the Spirit, John iii. 5. Accidental diſeaſes may be cured by men: but theſe which are natural, not without a miracle, John ix. 32. The change brought upon men by good education, or forced upon them by a natural conſcience, though it may paſs among men for a ſaving change, it is not ſo; for our nature is corrupt, and none but the God of nature can change it. Though a gardener, ingrafting a pear-branch into an apple-tree, may make the apple-tree bear pears; yet the art of man cannot change the nature of the apple-tree: ſo one may pin a new life to his old heart; but he can never change the heart. Secondly, This alſo ſhews the neceſſity of regeneration. It is abſolutely neceſſary in order to ſalvation, John iii. 3. Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God. No unclean thing can enter the new Jeruſalem: but thou art wholly unclean, while in thy natural ſtate. If every member of thy body were disjointed, each joint behoved to be looſed, ere the members could be ſet right again. This is the caſe of thy ſoul, as thou haſt heard: and therefore thou muſt be born again; elſe thou ſhalt never ſee heaven, unleſs it be afar off, as the rich man in hell did. Deceive not thyſelf: no mercy of God, no blood Chriſt will bring thee to heaven in thy unregenerate ſtate: for God will never open a fountain of mercy to waſh away his own holineſs and truth; nor did Chriſt ſhed his precious blood, to blot out the truths of God, or to overturn God's meaſures about the ſalvation of ſinners. Heaven! what would ye do there, that are not born again? ye that are no ways fitted for Chriſt the head? That would be a ſtrange ſight! a holy head, and members wholly corrupt! a head full of treaſures of grace, members wherein nothing but treaſures of wickedneſs! a head obedient to the death, and heels kicking againſt heaven! Ye are no ways adapted to the ſociety above, more than beaſts for converſe with men. Thou art a hater of true holineſs; and at the firſt ſight of a ſaint there, wouldſt cry out, Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy! Nay, the unrenewed man, if it were poſſible he could go to heaven in that ſtate, he would no otherwiſe go to it, than now he comes to the duties of holineſs, that is, leaving his heart behind him.

USE II. For lamentation. Well may we lament thy caſe, O natural man, for it is the ſaddeſt caſe one can be in out of hell. It is time to lament for thee; for thou art dead already, dead while thou liveſt; thou carrieſt about with thee a dead ſoul in a living body: and becauſe thou art dead, thou canſt not lament thy own caſe. Thou art lothſome in the ſight of God; for thou art altogether corrupt: thou haſt no good in thee. Thy ſoul is a maſs of darkneſs, rebellion, and vileneſs, before the Lord. Thou thinkeſt perhaps, that thou haſt a good heart to God, good inclinations, and good deſires: but God knows there is nothing good in thee, but every imagination of thine heart is only evil. Thou canſt do no good; thou canſt do nothing but ſin. For, Firſt, Thou art the ſervant of ſin, Rom. vi. 17. and therefore free from righteouſneſs, ver. 20. Whatever righteouſneſs be, (poor ſoul!), thou art free of it; thou doſt not, thou canſt not meddle with it. Thou art under the dominion of ſin, a dominion where righteouſneſs can have no place. Thou art a child and ſervant of the devil, though thou be neither wizard nor witch; ſeeing thou art yet in the ſtate of nature, John viii. 44. Ye are of your father the devil. And, to prevent any miſtake, conſider, that ſin and Satan have two ſorts of ſervants: (1.) There are ſome employed as it were in coarſer work: thoſe bear the devil's mark in their foreheads, having no form of godlineſs; but are profane, groſsly ignorant, mere moraliſts, not ſo much as performing the external duties of religion, but living to the view of the world, as ſons of earth, only minding earthly things, Phil. iii. 19. (2.) There are ſome employed in a more refined ſort of ſervice to ſin, who carry the devil's mark in their right hand, which they can and do hide from the view of the world. Theſe are cloſe hypocrites, who ſacrifice as much to the corrupt mind, as the other to the fleſh, Eph. ii. 3. Theſe are ruined by a more undiſcernible trade of ſin: pride, unbelief, ſelf-ſeeking, and the like, ſwarm in, and prey upon their corrupted, wholly corrupted ſouls. Both are ſervants of the ſame houſe; the latter as far as the former from righteouſneſs.

Secondly, How is it poſſible thou ſhouldſt be able to do any good, thou whoſe nature is wholly corrupt? Can fruit grow where there is no root? or can there be an effect without a cauſe? Can the fig-tree bear olive-berries? either a vine, figs? If thy nature be wholly corrupt, as indeed it is, all thou doſt is certainly ſo too; for no effect can exceed the virtue of its cauſe. Can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit? Matth. vii. 18.

Ah! what a miſerable ſpectacle is he that can do nothing but ſin? Thou art the man, whoſoever thou art, that art yet in thy natural ſtate. Hear, O ſinner, what is thy caſe.

Firſt, Innumerable ſins compaſs thee about: mountains of guilt are lying upon thee; floods of impurities overwhelm thee; living luſts of all ſorts roll up and down in the dead ſea of thy ſoul, where no good can breathe, becauſe of the corruption there. Thy lips are unclean; the opening of thy mouth is as the opening of an unripe grave full of ſtench and rottenneſs, Rom. iii. 13. Their throat is an open ſepulchre. Thy natural actions are ſin; for when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, did not ye eat for yourſelves, and drink for yourſelves? Zech. vii. 6. Thy civil actions are ſin, Prov. xxi. 4. The plowing of the wicked is ſin. Thy religious actions are ſin, Prov. xv. 8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. The thoughts and imaginations of thy heart are only evil. A deed may be ſoon done, a word ſoon ſpoken, a thought ſwiftly paſſeth through the heart; but each of theſe is an item in thy accounts. O ſad reckoning! as many thoughts, words, actions, as many ſins. The longer thou liveſt, thy accounts ſwell the more. Should a tear be dropt for every ſin, thine head behoved to be waters, and thine eyes a fountain of tears: for nothing but ſin comes from thee. Thy heart frames nothing but evil imaginations: there is nothing in thy life but what is framed by thine heart; and therefore there is nothing in thy heart or life, but evil.

Secondly, All thy religion, if thou haſt any, is loſt labour, as to acceptance with God, or any ſaving effect to thyſelf. Art thou yet in thy natural ſtate? Truly then thy duties are ſins, as was juſt now hinted. Would not the beſt wine be lothſome, in a veſſel wherein there is no pleaſure? So is the religion of an unregenerate man. Under the law, the garment which the fleſh of the ſacrifice was carried in, though it touched other things, did not make them holy: but he that was unclean touching any thing, whether common or ſacred, made it unclean. Even ſo thy duties cannot make thy corrupt ſoul holy, though they in themſelves be good; but thy corrupt heart defiles them, and makes them unclean, Hag. ii. 12. 13. 14. Thou was wont to divide thy works into two ſorts; ſome good, ſome evil; but thou muſt count again, and put them all under one head; for God writes on them all, Only evil. This is lamentable: it will be no wonder to ſee thoſe beg in harveſt, who fold their hands, and ſleep in ſeed-time: but to be labouring with others in the ſpring, and yet have nothing to reap when the harveſt comes, is a very ſad caſe; and will be the caſe of all profeſſors living and dying in their natural ſtate.

Laſtly, Thou canſt not help thyſelf. What canſt thou do, to take away thy ſin, who art wholly corrupt? Nothing, truly, but ſin. If a natural man begin to relent, drop a tear for his ſin, and reform, preſently the corrupt heart apprehends, at leaſt, a merit of congruity: he has done much himſelf, (he thinks), and God cannot but do more for him on that account. In the mean time he does nothing but ſin : ſo that the congruous merit is, that the leper be put out of the camp, the dead ſoul buried out of ſight, and the corrupt lump caſt into the pit. How canſt thou think to recover thyſelf by any thing thou canſt do? Will mud and filth waſh out filthineſs ? and wilt thou purge out ſin by ſinning ? Job took a potſherd to ſcrape himſelf, becauſe his hands were as full of boils as his body. This is the caſe of thy corrupt ſoul ; not to be recovered but by Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe ſtrength was dried up like a potſherd, Pſal. xxii. 15. Thou art poor indeed, extremely miſerable and poor, Rev. iii. 17. Thou haſt no ſhelter, but a refuge of lies ; no garment for thy ſoul, but filthy rags ; nothing to nouriſh it, but huſks that cannot ſatisfy. More than that, thou haſt got ſuch a bruiſe in the loins of Adam, which is not as yet cured, that thou art without ſtrength, Rom. v. 6. unable to do, or work for thyſelf ; nay, more than all this, thou canſt not ſo much as ſeek aright, but lieſt helpleſs, as an infant expoſed in the open field, Ezek. xvi. 5.

Uſe III. I exhort you to believe this ſad truth. Alas! it is evident, it is very little believed in the world. Few are concerned to get their corrupt converſation changed; but fewer, by far, to get their nature changed. Moſt men know not what they are, nor what ſpirits they are of ; they are as the eye, which, ſeeing many things, never ſees itſelf. But until ye know, every one the plague of his own heart, there is no hope of your recovery. Why will ye not believe it ? Ye have plain ſcripture teſtimony for it ; but you are loth to entertain ſuch an ill opinion of yourſelves. Alas ! that is the nature of your diſeaſe, Rev. iii. 17. Thou---knoweſt not that thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked. Lord, open their eyes to ſee it, before they die of it, and in hell lift up their eyes, and ſee what they will not ſee now.

I ſhall ſhut up this weighty point, of the corruption of man's nature, with a few words to another doctrine from the text.

Doctrine, God takes ſpecial notice of our natural corruption, or the ſin of our nature. This he teſtifies two ways : 1. By his word, as in the text, God ſaw---that every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually. See Pſal. xiv. 2. 3. 2. By his works God writes his particular notice of it, and diſpleaſure with it, as in many of his works, ſo eſpecially in theſe two.

(1.) In the death of the infant-children of men. Many miſeries they have been expoſed to ; they were drowned in the deluge, conſumed in Sodom by fire and brimſtone ; they have been ſlain with the ſword, daſhed againſt the ſtones, and are ſtill dying ordinary deaths. What is the true cauſe of this ? on what ground doth a holy God thus purſue them ? Is it the ſin of their parents ? That may be the occaſion of the Lord's raiſing the proceſs againſt them ; but it muſt be their own ſin that is the ground of the ſentence paſſing on them : for the ſoul that ſinneth, it ſhall die, ſaith God, Ezek. xviii. 4. Is it their own actual ſin ? They have none. But as men do with toads and ſerpents, which they kill at firſt ſight, before they have done any hurt, becauſe of their venemous nature ; ſo it is in this caſe.

(2.) In the birth of the elect children of God. When the Lord is about to change their nature, he makes the ſin of their nature lie heavy on their ſpirits. When he minds to let out the corruption, the lance gets full depth in their ſouls, reaching to the root of ſin, Rom. vii. 7. 8. 9. The fleſh, or corruption of nature, is pierced, being crucified, as well as the affections and luſts, Gal. v. 24.

Uſe. Let us then have a ſpecial eye upon the corruption and ſin of our nature. God ſees it : O that we ſaw it too and that ſin were ever before us ! What avails it to notice other ſins, while this mother-ſin is not noticed ? Turn your eyes inward to the ſin of your nature. It is to be feared, many have this work to begin yet ; that they have ſhut the door, while the grand thief is yet in the houſe undiſcovered. This is a weighty point ; and in handling of it,

I. I ſhall, for conviction, point at ſome evidences of mens overlooking the ſin of their nature, which yet the Lord takes particular notice of. (1.) Mens looking on themſelves with ſuch confidence, as if they were in no hazard of groſs ſins. Many would take it very ill to get ſuch a caution, as Chriſt gave his apoſtles, Luke xxi. 34. Take heed of ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs. If any ſhould ſuppoſe them to break out in groſs abominations, they would be ready to ſay, Am I a dog ? It would raiſe the pride of their hearts, but not their fear and trembling, becauſe they know not the corruption of their nature. (2) Untenderneſs towards thoſe that fall. Many, in that caſe, caſt off all bowels of Chriſtian compaſſion ; for they do not conſider themſelves, leſt they alſo be tempted, Gal. vi. 1. Mens paſſions are often higheſt againſt the faults of others, when ſin ſleeps ſoundly in their own breaſts. Even good David, when he was at his worſt, was moſt violent againſt the faults of others. While his conſcience was aſleep under his guilt, in the matter of Uriah ; the Spirit of the Lord takes notice, that his anger was greatly kindled againſt the man, in the parable, 2 Sam. xii. 5. And, on good grounds, it is thought, it was at the ſame time that he treated the Ammonites ſo cruelly, as is related, verſ. 31. Putting them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and making them paſs through the brick-kiln. Grace makes men zealous againſt ſin in others, as well as in themſelves : but eyes turned inward to the corruption of nature, clothe them with pity and compaſſion ; and fill them with thankfulneſs to the Lord, that they themſelves were not the perſons left to be ſuch ſpectacles of human frailty. (3.) There are not a few, who, if they be kept from afflictions in worldly things, and from groſs outbreakings in their converſation, know not what it is to have a ſad heart. If they meet with a croſs, which their proud hearts cannot ſtoop to bear, they will be ready to ſay, O to be gone ! but the corruption of their nature never makes them long for heaven. Luſts, ſcandalouſly breaking out at a time, will mar their peace : but the ſin of their nature never makes them a heavy heart. (4.) Delaying of repentance, in hopes to ſet about it afterwards. Many have their own appointed time for repentance and reformation : as if they were ſuch complete maſters over their luſts, that they can allow them to gather more ſtrength, and yet overcome them. They take up reſolutions to amend, without an eye to Jeſus Chriſt, union with him, and ſtrength from him ; a plain evidence they are ſtrangers to themſelves : and ſo they are left to themſelves, and their flouriſhing reſolutions wither ; for as they ſee not the neceſſity, ſo they get not the benefit, of the dew from heaven, to water them. (5.) Mens venturing frankly on temptations, and promiſing liberally on their own heads. They caſt themſelves fearleſsly into temptations, in confidence of their coming off fairly : but, were they ſenſible of the corruption of their nature, they would beware of entering on the devil's ground : as one girt about with bags of gun-powder, would be loath to walk where ſparks of fire are flying, leſt he ſhould be blown up. Self-jealouſing well becomes Chriſtians. Lord, is it I ? They that know the deceit of their bow, will not be very confident that they ſhall hit the mark. (6.) Unacquaintedneſs with heart-plagues. The knowledge of the plagues of the heart is a rare qualification. There are indeed ſome of them written in ſuch great characters, that he who runs may read them : but there are others more ſubtile, which few do diſcern. How few are there, to whom the bias of the heart to unbelief is a burden ? Nay, they perceive it not. Many have had ſharp convictions of other ſins, that were never to this day convinced of their unbelief ; though that is the ſin ſpecially aimed at in a thorough conviction, John xvi. 8. 9.--- He will reprove the world of ſin,------becauſe they believe not on me. A diſpoſition to eſtabliſh our own righteouſneſs, is a weed that naturally grows in every man's heart; but few ſweat at the plucking of it up: it lurks undiſcovered. The bias of the heart, to the way of the covenant of works, is a hidden plague of the heart to many. All the difficulty they find is, in getting up their hearts to duties: they find no difficulty in getting their hearts off them, and over them to Jeſus Chriſt. How hard is it to ſtave men off from their own righteouſneſs? Yet it is very hard to convince them of their leaning to it at all. Laſtly, Pride and ſelf-conceit. A view of the corruption of nature would be very humbling, and oblige him that has it to reckon himſelf the chief of ſinners. Under greateſt attainments and enlargements, it would be ballaſt to his heart, and hide pride from his eyes. The want of thorough humiliation, piercing to the ſin of one's nature, is the ruin of many profeſſors: for digging deep makes great difference betwixt wiſe and fooliſh builders, Luke vi. 48. 49.

II. I will lay before you a few things, in which ye would have a ſpecial eye to the ſin of your nature. (1.) Have a ſpecial eye to it in your application to Jeſus Chriſt. Do you find any need of Chriſt, which ſends you to him as the Phyſician of ſouls? O forget not this diſeaſe, when ye are with the Phyſician. They never yet knew well their errand to Chriſt, that went not to him for the ſin of their nature; for his blood to take away the guilt of it, and his Spirit to break the power of it. Though in the bitterneſs of your ſouls, ye ſhould lay before him a catalogue of your ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion, which might reach from earth to heaven; yet if the ſin of your nature were wanting in it, aſſure yourſelves you have forgot the beſt part of the errand a poor ſinner has to the Phyſician of ſouls. What would it have availed the people of Jericho, to have ſet before Eliſha all the veſſels in their city, full of the water that was naught, if they had not led him forth to the ſpring, to caſt in the ſalt there? 2 Kings ii. 19. 20. 21. The application is eaſy. (2.) Have a ſpecial eye to it in your repentance, whether initial or progreſſive; in your firſt repentance, and in the renewing of your repentance afterwards. Though a man be ſick, there is no fear of death, if the ſickneſs ſtrike not to his heart: and there is as little fear of the death of ſin, as long as the ſin of our nature is not touched. But if ye would repent indeed, let the ſtreams lead you up to the fountain; and mourn over your corrupt nature, as the cauſe of all ſin, in heart, lip, and life, Pſal. li. 4. 5. Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight.---Behold I was ſhapen in iniquity, and in ſin did my mother conceive me. (3.) Have a ſpecial eye upon it in your mortification, Gal. v. 24. And they that are Chriſt's have crucified the fleſh. It is the root of bitterneſs that muſt be ſtruck at; which the ax of mortification muſt be laid to, elſe we labour in vain. In vain do men go about to purge the ſtreams, while they are at no pains about the muddy fountain: it is vain religion to attempt to make the life truly good, while the corruption of nature retains its ancient vigour and the power of it is not broken. Laſtly, Ye are to eye it in your daily walk. He that would walk aright, muſt have one eye upward to Jeſus Chriſt; and another inward to the corruption of his own nature. It is not enough that we look about us, we muſt alſo look within us. There the wall is weakeſt; there our greateſt enemy lies; and there are grounds for daily watching and mourning.

III. I ſhall offer ſome reaſons, why we ſhould eſpecially notice the ſin of our nature.

1. Becauſe of all ſins, it is the moſt extenſive and diffuſive. It goes through the whole man, and ſpoils all. Other ſins mar particular parts of the image of God; but this doth at once deface the whole. A diſeaſe, affecting any particular member of the body, is ill: but that which affects the whole is worſe. The corruption of nature is the poiſon of the old ſerpent, caſt into the fountain of action: and ſo infects every action, every breathing of the ſoul.

2. It is the cauſe of all particular luſts, and actual ſins, in our hearts and lives. It is the ſpawn which the great leviathan has left in the ſouls of men; from whence comes all the fry of actual ſins and abominations, Mark vii. 21. Out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, &c. It is the bitter fountain: particular luſts are but rivulets running from it, which bring forth into the life a part only, and not the whole of what is within. Now the fountain is ſtill above the ſtreams: ſo where the water is good, it is beſt in the fountain; where it is ill, it is worſt there. The corruption of nature being that which defiles all, itſelf muſt needs be the moſt abominable thing.

3. It is virtually all ſin! for it is the ſeed of all ſins, which want but the occaſion to ſet up their heads; being in the corruption of nature, as the effect in the virtue of its cauſe. Hence it is called a body of death, (Rom. vii. 24.) as conſiſting of the ſeveral members belonging to ſuch a body of ſins, (Col. ii. 11.) whoſe life lies in ſpiritual death. It is the curſed ground, fit to bring forth all manner of noxious weeds. As the whole neſt of venomous creatures muſt needs be more dreadful, than any few of them that come creeping forth; ſo the ſin of thy nature, that mother of abominations, muſt be worſe than any particular luſts that appear ſtirring in thy heart and life. Never did every ſin appear in the converſation of the vileſt wretch that ever lived; but look thou into thy corrupt nature, and there thou mayeſt ſee all and every ſin in the ſeed and root thereof. There is a fulneſs of all unrighteouſneſs there, Rom. i. 29. There is Atheiſm, idolatry, blaſphemy, murder, adultery, and whatſoever is vile. Poſſibly none of theſe appear to thee in thy heart: but there is more in that unfathomable depth of wickedneſs, than thou knoweſt. Thy corrupt heart is like an ant's neſt, on which, while the ſtone lieth, none of them appear: but take off the ſtone, and ſtir them up but with the point of a ſtraw, you will ſee what a ſwarm is there, and how lively they be. Juſt ſuch a ſight would thy heart afford thee; did the Lord but withdraw the reſtraint he has upon it, and ſuffer Satan to ſtir it up by temptation.

4. The ſin of our nature is, of all ſins, the moſt fixed and abiding. Sinful actions, though the guilt and ſtain of them may remain, yet, in themſelves, they are paſſing. The drunkard is not always at his cups, nor the unclean perſon always acting lewdneſs. But the corruption of nature is an abiding ſin; it remains with men, in its full power, by night and by day; at all times fixed, as with bands of iron and braſs, till their nature be changed by converting grace: and the remains of it continue with the godly, until the death of the body. Pride, envy, covetouſneſs, and the like, are not always ſtirring in thee. But the proud, envious, carnal nature is ſtill with thee: even as the clock that is wrong, is not always ſtriking wrong; but the wrong ſet continues with it, without intermiſſion.

5. It is the great reigning ſin, Rom. vi. 12. Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof. There are three things you may obſerve in the corrupt heart. (1.) There is the corrupt nature; the corrupt ſet of the heart, whereby men are unapt for all good, and fitted for all evil. This the apoſtle here calls ſin, which reigns. (2.) There are particular luſts, or diſpoſitions of that corrupt nature, which the apoſtle calls the luſts thereof; ſuch as pride, covetouſneſs, &c. (3.) There is one among theſe, which is (like Saul among the people) higher by far than the reſt, namely, the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us, Heb. xii. 1. This we uſually call the predominant ſin, becauſe it doth as it were, reign over other particular luſts; ſo that other luſts muſt yield to it. Theſe three are like a river, which divides itſelf into many ſtreams, whereof one is greater than the reſt. The corruption of nature is the river head, which has many particular luſts, in which it runs; but it mainly diſburdens itſelf into what is commonly called one's predominant ſin. Now all of theſe being fed by the ſin of our nature, it is evident, that ſin is the great reigning ſin, which never loſeth its ſuperiority over particular luſts, that live and die with it, and by it. But, as in ſome rivers, the main ſtream runs not always in one and the ſame channel ; ſo particular predominants may be changed, as luſt in youth may be ſucceeded by covetouſneſs in old age. Now what doth it avail to reform in other things, while the great reigning ſin remains in its full power ? What though ſome particular luſt be broken ? If that ſin, the ſin of our nature, keep the throne, it will ſet up another in its ſtead ; as when a water-courſe is ſtopped in one place, while the fountain is not dammed up, it will ſtream forth another way. And thus ſome caſt off their prodigality, but covetouſneſs comes up in its ſtead : ſome caſt away their profanity, and the corruption of nature ſends not its main ſtream that way as before ; but it runs in another channel, namely, in that of a legal diſpoſition, ſelf-righteouſneſs, or the like. So that people are ruined, by their not eying the ſin of their nature.

Laſtly, It is an hereditary evil, Pſal. li. 5. In ſin did my mother conceive me. Particular luſts are not ſo, but in the virtue of their cauſe. A prodigal father may have a frugal ſon : but this diſeaſe is neceſſarily propagated in nature, and therefore hardeſt to cure. Surely then the word ſhould be given out againſt this ſin, as againſt the king of Iſrael, 1 Kings xxii. 31. Fight neither with ſmall nor great, ſave only with this : for this ſin being broke, all other ſins are broken with it ; and while it ſtands entire, there is no victory.

IV. That ye may get a view of the corruption of your nature, I would recommend to you three things. (1.) Study to know the ſpirituality and extent of the law of God, for that is the glaſs wherein you may ſee yourſelves. (2.) Obſerve your hearts at all times, but eſpecially under temptation. Temptation is a fire that brings up the ſcum of the vile heart : do ye carefully mark the firſt riſings of corruption. Laſtly, Go to God, through Jeſus Chriſt, for illumination by his Spirit. Lay out your ſoul before the Lord, as willing to know the vileneſs of your nature : ſay unto him, That which I know not teach thou me. And be willing to take in light from the word Believe, and you ſhall ſee. It is by the word the Spirit teacheth, but without the Spirit's teaching, all other teaching will be to little purpoſe. Though the goſpel ſhould ſhine about you, like the ſun at noon-day ; and this great truth be never ſo plainly preached, ye will never ſee yourſelves aright, until the Spirit of the Lord light his candle within your breaſt : the fulneſs and glory of Chriſt, the corruption and vileneſs of our nature, are never rightly learned, but where the Spirit of Chriſt is the teacher.

And now to ſhut up this weighty point, let the conſideration of what is ſaid, commend Chriſt to you all. Ye that are brought out of your natural ſtate of corruption unto Chriſt, be humble ; ſtill coming to Chriſt, and improving your union with him, to the further weakening of the remains of this natural corruption. Is your nature changed ? It is but in part ſo. The day was ye could not ſtir : now ye are cured ; but remember the cure is not yet perfected, ye ſtill go halting. And though it were better with you than it is, the remembrance of what you were by nature ſhould keep you low. Ye that are yet in your natural ſtate, take with it : believe the corruption of your nature ; and let Chriſt, and his grace, be precious in your eyes. O that ye would at length be ſerious about the ſtate of your ſouls ; What mind ye to do ! Ye muſt die, ye muſt appear before the judgment-ſeat of God. Will ye lie down, and ſleep another night at eaſe, in this caſe. Do it not : for before another day, ye may be ſiſted before God's dreadful tribunal, in the grave-cloaths of your corrupt ſtate ; and your vile ſouls caſt into the pit of deſtruction, as a corrupt lump, to be for ever buried out of God's ſight. For I teſtify unto you all, there is no peace with God, no pardon, no heaven for you, in this ſtate : there is but a ſtep betwixt you and eternal deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord : if the brittle thread of your life, which may be broke with a touch, ere you are aware, be indeed broken while you are in this ſtate ; you are ruined for ever, and without remedy. But come ſpeedily to Jeſus Chriſt ; he has cleanſed as vile ſouls as yours ; and he will yet cleanſe the blood that he hath not cleanſed, Joel. iii. 21. Thus far of the ſinfulneſs of man's natural ſtate.

HEAD II.

The MISERY of MAN's Natural State.

EPHESIANS ii. 3.

We—— were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

HAving ſhewed you the ſinfulneſs of man's natural ſtate, I come now to lay before you the miſery of it. A ſinful ſtate cannot be but a miſerable ſtate. If ſin go before, wrath follows of courſe. Corruption and deſtruction are ſo knit together, that the Holy Ghoſt calls deſtruction, even eternal deſtruction, corruption, Gal. vi. 8. He that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption, that is everlaſting deſtruction ; as is clear from its being oppoſed to life everlaſting, in the following clauſe. And ſo the apoſtle having ſhown the Epheſians their real ſtate by nature, to wit, that they were dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, altogether corrupt, he tells them, in the words of the text, their relative ſtate, namely, that the pit was digged for them, while in that ſtate of corruption : being dead in ſins, they were by nature children of wrath, even as others.

In the words we have four things,

1. The miſery of a natural ſtate : it is a ſtate of wrath, as well as a ſtate of ſin. We were, ſays the apoſtle, children of wrath, bound over, and liable, to the wrath of God ; under wrath in ſome meaſure ; and, in wrath, bound over to more, even the full meaſure of it, in hell where the floods of it go over the priſoners for ever. Thus Saul, in his wrath, adjudging David to die, (1 Sam. xx. 31.) and David, in his wrath, paſſing ſentence of death againſt the man in the parable, (2 Sam. xii. 5.) ſay, each of them of his ſuppoſed criminal, He ſhall ſurely die ; or as, the words in the firſt language are, He is a ſon of death. So the natural man is a child of wrath, a ſon of death. He is a malefactor, dead in law, lying in chains of guilt ; a criminal held faſt in his fetters, till the day of execution ; which will not fail, unleſs a pardon be obtained from his God, who is his Judge and Party too. By that means indeed, children of wrath may become children of the kingdom. The phraſe in the text, however common it is in the holy language, is very ſignificant. And as it is evident, that the apoſtle, calling natural men the children of diſobedience, (verſ. 2.) means more that they were diſobedient children : for ſuch may the Lord's own children be : ſo, to be children of wrath is more, than ſimply to be liable to, and under wrath. Jeſus Chriſt was liable to, and under wrath : but I doubt we have any warrant to ſay, he was a child of wrath. The phraſe ſeems to intimate, that men are, whatſoever they are in their natural ſtate, under the wrath of God ; that they are wholly under wrath : wrath is, as it were, woven into their very nature, and mixeth itſelf with the whole of the man, who is (if I may ſo ſpeak) a very lump of wrath, a child of hell, as the iron in the fire is all fire. For men naturally are children of wrath ; come forth ſo to ſpeak, out of the womb of wrath; as Jonah's gourd was the ſon of a night, (which we render, came up in a night, Jonah iv. 10.) as if it had come out of the womb of the night, (as we read of the womb of the morning, Pſal. cx. 3.) and ſo, the birth following the belly whence it came, was ſoon gone. Thus ſparks of fire are called ſons of burning coal, Job. v. 7. Marg. Iſ. xxi. 10. O my threſhing, and the corn, (or ſon) of my floor, threſhen in the floor of wrath, and, as it were, brought forth by it. Thus the natural man is a child of wrath: it comes into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones, Pſal. cxix. 18. For, though Judas was the only ſon of perdition amongſt the apoſtles; yet all men, by nature, are of the ſame family.

2. There is the riſe of this miſery; men have it by nature. They owe it to their nature; not to their ſubſtance or eſſence: for that neither is nor was ſin, and therefore cannot make them children of wrath; though for ſin, it may be under wrath: not to their nature, as qualified, at man's creation, by his Maker; but to their nature, as vitiated and corrupted by the fall: to the vitious quality, or corruption of their nature, (whereof before,) which is their principle of action, and ceaſing from action, the only principle in an unregenerate ſtate. Now by this nature, men are children of wrath; as, in time of peſtilential infection, one draws in death together with the diſeaſe then raging. Wherefore, ſeeing from our firſt being, as children of Adam, we be corrupt children, ſhapen in iniquity, conceived in ſin: we are alſo from that moment children of wrath.

3. The univerſality of this miſery. All are by nature children of wrath; we, ſaith the apoſtle, even as others; Jews, as well as Gentiles. Thoſe that are now by grace, the children of God, were by nature, in no better caſe than thoſe that are ſtill in their natural ſtate.

Laſtly There is a glorious and happy change intimated here; we were children of wrath, but are not ſo now; grace has brought us out of that fearful ſtate. This the apoſtle ſays of himſelf, and other believers. And thus, it well becomes the people of God to be often ſtanding on the ſhore, and looking back to the Red ſea of the ſtate of wrath, they were ſometimes weltering in, even as others Doctrine, The ſtate of nature is a ſtate of wrath. Every one in a natural, unregenerate ſtate, is in a ſtate of wrath. We are born children of wrath; and continue ſo, till we be born again. Nay, as ſoon as we are children of Adam, we are children of wrath.

Man's natural ſtate a ſtate of wrath.

I ſhall uſher in what I am to ſay on this point, with a few obſerves, touching the univerſality of this ſtate of wrath, which may ſerve to prepare the way of the word into your conſciences.

Wrath has gone as wide as ever ſin went. When angels ſinned, the wrath of God brake in upon them as a flood. God ſpared not the angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to hell, 2 Pet. ii. 4. And thereby it was demonſtrated, that no natural excellency in the creature will ſhield it from the wrath of God, if once it become a ſinful creature. The fineſt and niceſt piece of the workmanſhip of Heaven, if once the Creator's image upon it be defaced by ſin, God can and will daſh in pieces in his wrath, unleſs ſatisfaction be made to juſtice, and that image be repaired; neither of which the ſinner himſelf can do. Adam ſinned; and the whole lump of mankind was leavened, and bound over to the fiery oven of God's wrath. And from the text ye may learn, (1.) That ignorance of that ſtate cannot free men from it: the Gentiles, that knew not God, were by nature children of wrath, even as others. A man's houſe may be on fire, his wife and children periſhing in the flames, while he knows nothing of it; and therefore is not concerned about it. Such is your caſe, O ye that are ignorant of theſe things! Wrath is ſilently ſinking into your ſouls, while you are bleſſing yourſelves, ſaying, Ye ſhall have peace. Ye need not a more certain token that ye are children of wrath, than that ye never yet ſaw yourſelves ſuch. Ye cannot be the children of God, that never ſaw yourſelves children of the devil. Ye cannot be in the way to heaven, that never ſaw yourſelves by nature in the high road to hell. Ye are groſsly ignorant of your ſtate by nature; and ſo ignorant of God, and of Chriſt, and your need of him; and though ye look on your ignorance as a covert from wrath; yet, take it out of the mouth of God himſelf, that it will ruin you, if it be not removed, Iſ. xxvii. 11. It is a people of no underſtanding: therefore he that made them, will not have mercy on them. See 2 Theſſ. i. 8. Hoſ. iv. 6. (2.) No outward privileges can exempt men from this ſtate of wrath: for the Jews, the children of the kingdom, God's peculiar people, were children of wrath, even as others. Though ye be church-members, partakers of all church-privileges; though ye be deſcended of godly parents, of great and honourable families, be what ye will, ye are, by nature heirs of hell children of wrath. (3.) No profeſſion, nor attainments in a profeſſion of religion, do or can exempt a man from this ſtate of wrath. Paul was one of the ſtraiteſt ſect of the Jewiſh religion, Acts xxvi. 5. yet a child of wrath even as others, till he was converted. The cloſe hypocrite, and the profane, are alike, as to their ſtate; however different their converſations be: and they will be alike in their fatal end, Pſal cxxv. 5. As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity. (4.) Young ones, that are yet but ſetting out into the world, have not that to do, to make themſelves children of wrath, by following the graceleſs multitude. They are children of wrath by nature; ſo it is done already: they were born heirs of hell; they will indeed make themſelves more ſo, if they do not, while they are young, flee from that wrath they were born to, by fleeing to Jeſus Chriſt. Laſtly, Whatever men are now, by grace; they were even as others, by nature. And this may be a ſad meditation to them, that have been at eaſe from their youth, and have had no changes.

Now theſe things being premiſed, I ſhall in the firſt place, ſhew what this ſtate of wrath is: next, confirm the doctrine; and then apply it.

I. I am to ſhew what this ſtate of wrath is. But who can fully deſcribe the wrath of an angry God? None can do it. Yet ſo much of it may be diſcovered, as may ſerve to convince men of the abſolute neceſſity of fleeing to Jeſus Chriſt, out of that ſtate of wrath. Anger in men is a paſſion and commotion of the ſpirit, for an injury received; with a deſire to reſent the ſame. When it comes to a height, and is fixed in one's ſpirit, it is called wrath. Now there are no paſſions in God, properly ſpeaking: they are inconſiſtent with his abſolute unchangeableneſs, and independency: and therefore Paul and Barnabas (to remove the miſtake of the Lycaonians, who thought they were gods) tell them, they were men of like paſſions with themſelves, Acts xiv. 15. Wrath then is attributed to God, not in reſpect of the affection of wrath, but the effects thereof. Wrath is a fire in the bowels of a man, tormenting the man himſelf: but there is no perturbation in God. His wrath does not in the leaſt mar that infinite repoſe and happineſs which he hath in himſelf. It is a moſt pure, undiſturbed act of his will, producing dreadful effects againſt the ſinner. It is little we know of an infinite God; but, condeſcending to our weakneſs, he is pleaſed to ſpeak of himſelf to us after the manner of men. Let us therefore notice man's wrath, but remove every thing, in our conſideration of the wrath of God, that argues imperfection; and ſo we may attain to ſome view of it, however ſcanty. By this means we are led to take up the wrath of God againſt the natural man in theſe three.

Firſt. There is wrath in the heart of God againſt him. The Lord approves him not, but is diſpleaſed with him. Every natural man lies under the diſpleaſure of God; and that is heavier than mountains of braſs. Although he be pleaſed with himſelf, and others be pleaſed with him too, yet God looks down on him as diſpleaſed. Firſt His perſon is under God's diſpleaſure; thou hateſt all worker's of iniquity, Pſal. v. 5. A godly man's ſin diſpleaſes God, yet his perſon is ſtill accepted in the beloved, Eph. i. 6. But God is angry with the wicked every day, Pſal. vii. 11. The fire of wrath burns continually againſt him, in the heart of God. They are as dogs and ſwine, moſt abominable creatures in the ſight of God. Though their natural ſtate be gilded over with a ſhining profeſſion, yet they are abhorred of God; they are to him as ſmoke in his noſe, Iſ. lxv. 5. and lukewarm water, to be ſpewed out of his mouth, Rev. iii. 16. whited ſepulchres, Matth. xxiii. 27. a generation of vipers, Matth. xii. 34. and a people of his wrath, Iſ. x. 6. Secondly, He is diſpleaſed with all they do: it is impoſſible for them to pleaſe him being unbelievers, Heb. xi. 6. He hates their perſons; and ſo hath no pleaſure in, but is diſpleaſed with, their beſt works. Iſ. lxvi. 6. He that ſacrificeth a lamb, is as if he cut off a dog's neck, &c. Their duty, as done by them, is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. xv. 8. And as men turn their back on them whom they are angry with, ſo the Lord's refuſing communion with the natural man in his duties, is a plain indication of this wrath.

Secondly, There is wrath in the word of God againſt him. When wrath is in the heart, it ſeeks a vent by the lips: ſo God fights againſt the natural man with the ſword of his mouth, Rev. ii. 16. The Lord's word never ſpeaks good of him, but always curſeth and condemneth him. Hence it is, that when he is awakened, the word read or preached often increaſeth his horror. Firſt, It condemns all his actions, together with his corrupt nature: There is nothing he does, but the law declares it to be ſin. It is a rule of perfect obedience, from which he always, in all things, declines; and ſo it rejects every thing he doth, as ſin. Secondly, It pronounceth his doom, and denounceth God's curſe againſt him, Gal. iii. 10. For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe: for it is written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. Be he never ſo well in the world, it pronounceth a woe from heaven againſt him, Iſ. iii. 11. The Bible is a quiver filled with arrows of wrath againſt him; ready to be poured in on his ſoul. God's threatnings, in his word, hang over his head as a black cloud, ready to ſhower down on him every moment. The word is indeed the ſaints ſecurity againſt wrath: but it binds the natural man's ſin and wrath together, as a certain pledge of his ruin, if he continue in that ſtate. So the conſcience being awakened, and perceiving this tie made by the law, the man is filled with terrors in his ſoul.

Thirdly, There is wrath in the hand of God againſt the natural man. He is under heavy ſtrokes of wrath already, and is liable to more.

Firſt, There is wrath on his body. It is a piece of curſed clay, which wrath is ſinking into, by virtue of the threatening of the firſt covenant, Gen. ii. 17. In the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die. There is never a diſeaſe, gripe nor ſtitch, that affects him, but it comes on him with the ſting of God's indignation in it. They are all cords of death, ſent before to bind the priſoner.

Secondly, There is wrath upon his ſoul. (1.) He can have no communion with God; he is fooliſh, and ſhall not ſtand in God's ſight, Pſal. v. 5. When Adam ſinned, God turned him out of Paradiſe: and natural men are, as Adam left them, baniſhed from the gracious preſence of the Lord; and can have no acceſs to him, in that ſtate. There is war betwixt heaven and them: and ſo all commerce is cut off. They are without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12. The ſun is gone down on them, and there is not the leaſt glimpſe of favour towards them from heaven. (2.) Hence the ſoul is left to pine away in its iniquity. The natural darkneſs of their minds, the averſeneſs to good in their wills, the diſorder of their affections, and diſtemper of their conſciences, and all their natural plagues, are left upon them in a penal way; and, being ſo left, increaſe daily. God caſts a portion of worldly goods to them, more or leſs, as a bone is thrown to a dog: but, alas! his wrath againſt them appears, in that they get no grace. The phyſician of ſouls comes by them, and goes by them, and cures others beſide them, while they are conſuming away in their iniquity, and ripening daily for utter deſtruction. (3.) They lie open to fearful additional plagues on their ſouls, even in this life. Firſt. Sometimes they meet with deadening ſtrokes, ſilent blows, from the hand of an angry God: arrows of wrath, that enter into their ſouls without noiſe; Iſ. vi. 10. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes; leſt they ſee with their eyes, &c. God ſtrives with them for a while, and convictions enter their conſciences; but they rebel againſt the light: and, by a ſecret judgment, they are knockt in the head; ſo that, from that time, they do, as it were, live and rot above the ground. Their hearts are deadened; their affections withered; their conſciences ſtupified; and their whole ſouls blaſted; caſt forth as a branch, and withered, John xv. 16. They are plagued with judicial blindneſs. They ſhut their eyes againſt the light; and they are given over to the devil, the god of this world, to be blinded more, 2 Cor. iv. 4. Yea, God ſends them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould believe a lie, 2 Theſſ. ii. 11. Even conſcience, like a falſe light on the ſhore, leads them upon rocks; by which they are broken in pieces. They harden themſelves againſt God; and he gives up with them, and leaves them to Satan and their own hearts, whereby they are hardened more and more. They are often given up unto vile affections. Rom. i. 26. The reins are laid on their necks; and they are left to run into all exceſs, as their furious luſts draw them. Secondly. Sometimes they meet with quickning strokes, whereby their ſouls become like mount Sinai, where nothing is ſeen but fire and ſmoke; nothing heard but the thunder of God's wrath, and the voice of the trumpet of a broken law waxing louder and louder: which makes them like Paſhur, (Jer. xx. 4.) a terror to themſelves. God takes the filthy garments of their ſins, which they were wont to ſleep in ſecurely; overlays them with brimſtone, and ſets them on fire about their ears: ſo they have a hell within them.

Thirdly. There is wrath on the natural man's enjoyments. Whatever be wanting in his houſe, there is one thing that is never wanting there, Prov. iii. 33. The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked. Wrath is on all that he has; on the bread that he eats, the liquor he drinks, the cloaths which he wears, His baſket and ſtore are curſed, Deut. xxviii. 17. Some things fall wrong with him; and that comes to paſs by virtue of this wrath: other things go according to his wiſh, and there is wrath in that too; for it is a ſnare to his ſoul, Prov. i. 32. The proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them. This wrath turns his bleſſings into curſes, Mal. ii. 2. I will curſe your bleſſings; yea, I have curſed them already. The holy law is a killing letter to him, 2 Cor. iii. 6. The miniſtry of the goſpel a ſavour of death unto death, chap. ii. 16. In the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper, he eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf, 1 Cor. xi. 29. Nay, more than all that, Chriſt himſelf is to him, a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, 1 Pet. ii. 8. Thus wrath follows the natural man, as his ſhadow doth his body.

Fourthly, He is under the power of Satan, Acts xxvi. 18. The devil has overcome him, ſo he is his by conqueſt, his lawful captive, Iſ. xlix. 24. The natural man is condemned already, John iii. 18. and therefore under the heavy hand of him that hath the power of death, that is the devil. And he keeps his priſoners in the priſon of a natural ſtate, bound hand and foot, Iſ. lxi. 1. laden with divers luſts, as chains wherewithal he holds them faſt. Thou needeſt not, as many do, call on the devil to take thee; for he has a faſt hold of thee already, as a child of wrath.

Laſtly, The natural man hath no ſecurity for a moment's ſafety, from the wrath of God its coming on him to the uttermoſt. The curſe of the law, denounced againſt him, has already tied him to the ſtake: ſo that the arrows of juſtice may pierce his ſoul; and, in him, may meet all the miſeries and plagues that flow from the avenging wrath of God. See how he is ſet as a mark to the arrows of wrath, Pſal. vii. 11. 12. 13. God is angry with the wicked every day. If he turn not, he will whet his ſword; he hath bent his bow, and made it ready; he hath alſo prepared for him the inſtruments of death. Doth he lie down to ſleep? There is not a promiſe he knows of, or can know, to ſecure him that he ſhall not be in hell ere he awake. Juſtice is purſuing, and cries for vengeance on the ſinner: the law caſts the fire-balls of its curſes continually upon him: waſted and long-tired patience is that which keeps in his life. He walks amidſt enemies armed againſt him; his name may be Magor-miſſabib, i. e. terror round about. Jer. xx. 3. Angels, devils, men, beaſts, ſtones, heaven, and earth, are in readineſs, on a word of command from the Lord, to ruin him.

Thus the natural man lives, but he muſt die too; and death is a dreadful meſſenger to him. It comes upon him armed with wrath, and puts three ſad charges in his hand. (1.) Death chargeth him to bid an eternal farewell to all things in this world; to leave it, and make away to another world. Ah! what a dreadful charge muſt this be to a child of wrath! He can have no comfort from heaven; for God is his enemy: and, as for the things of the world, and the enjoyments of his luſts, which were the only ſprings of his comfort; theſe are in a moment dried up to him for ever. He is not ready for another world: he was not thinking of removing ſo ſoon; or, if he was, yet he has no portion ſecured to him in the other world, but that which he was born to, and was increaſing all his days, namely, a treaſure of wrath. But go he muſt; his clay-god, the world, muſt be parted with, and what has he more? There was never a glimmering of light, or favour from heaven, to his ſoul: and now the wrath that did hang in the threatening, as a cloud like a man's hand, is darkening the face of the whole heaven above him: and if he look unto the earth, (from whence all his light was wont to come), behold, trouble and darkneſs, dimneſs of anguiſh; and he ſhall be driven to darkneſs, Iſ. viii. 22. (2.) Death chargeth ſoul and body to part, till the great day. His ſoul is required of him, Luke. xii. 20. O what a miſerable parting muſt this be to a child of wrath! Care was indeed taken to provide for the body things neceſſary for this life: but alas! there is nothing laid up for another life, to it; nothing to be a ſeed of a glorious reſurrection: as it lived, ſo it muſt die and riſe again, ſinful fleſh, fuel for the fire of God's wrath. As for the ſoul, he was never ſolicitous to provide for it. It lay in the body, dead to God, and all things truly good; and ſo muſt be carried out into the pit, in the grave-cloaths of its natural ſtate: for now that death comes, the companions in ſin muſt part. (3.) Death chargeth the ſoul to compear before the tribunal of God, while the body lies to be carried to the grave, Eccleſ. xii. 7. The ſpirit ſhall return unto God who gave it. Heb. ix. 27. It is appointed unto all men once to die, but after this the judgment. Well were it for the ſinful ſoul, if it might be buried together with the body. But that cannot be: it muſt go and receive its ſentence; and ſhall be ſhut up in the priſon of hell, while the curſed body lies impriſoned in the grave, till the day of the general judgment.

When the end of the world, appointed of God, is come; the trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead ariſe. Then ſhall the weary earth, at the command of the Judge, caſt forth the bodies, the curſed bodies of thoſe that lived and died in their natural ſtate: The ſea, death, and hell, ſhall deliver up their dead, Rev. xx. 13. Their miſerable bodies and ſouls ſhall be reunited, and they ſiſted before the tribunal of Chriſt. Then ſhall they receive that fearful ſentence, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, Matth. xxv. 41. Whereupon they ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment, ver. 46. They ſhall be eternally ſhut up in hell, never to get the leaſt drop of comfort, nor the leaſt eaſe of their torment. There they will be puniſhed with the puniſhment of loſs, being excommunicated for ever from the preſence of God, his angels and ſaints. All means of grace, all hopes of a delivery, ſhall be for ever cut off from their eyes. They ſhall not have a drop of water to cool their tongues, Luke xvi. 24. 25. They ſhall be puniſhed with the puniſhment of ſenſe. They muſt not only depart from God, but depart into fire, into everlaſting fire. There the worm, that ſhall gnaw them, ſhall never die; the fire that ſhall ſcorch them, ſhall never be quenched. God ſhall, through all eternity, hold them up with the one hand, and pour the full vials of wrath into them with the other.

This is that ſtate of wrath natural men live in; being under much of the wrath of God, and liable to more. But, for a further view of it, let us conſider the qualities of that wrath. (1.) It is irreſiſtible; there is no ſtanding before it: Who may ſtand in thy ſight, when once thou art angry? Pſal. lxxvi. 7. Can the worm, or the moth, defend itſelf againſt him that deſigns to cruſh it? As little can worm man ſtand before an angry God. Fooliſh men indeed practically bid a defiance to Heaven: but the Lord often, even in this world, opens ſuch ſluices of wrath upon them, as all their might cannot ſtop; but they are carried away thereby, as with a flood. How much more will it be ſo in hell? (2.) It is inſupportable. What one cannot reſiſt, he will ſet himſelf to bear: but, who ſhall dwell with devouring fire? who ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings? God's wrath is a weight that will ſink men into the loweſt hell. It is a burden no man is able to ſtand under. A wounded ſpirit who can bear it? Prov. xviii. 14. (3.) It is unavoidable to ſuch as will go on impenitently in their ſinful courſe. He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that without remedy, Prov. xxix. 1. We may now fly from it indeed, by flying to Jeſus Chriſt, but ſuch as fly from Chriſt, ſhall never be able to avoid it. Whither can men fly from an avenging God? Where will they find a ſhelter? The hills will not hear them. The mountains will be deaf to their loudeſt cries, when they cry to them, to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb. (4.) It is powerful and fierce wrath, Pſal. xc. 11. Who knoweth the power of thine anger? Even according to thy fear, ſo is thy wrath. We are apt to fear the wrath of man more than we ought: but no man can apprehend the wrath of God to be more dreadful than it really is: the power of it can never be known to the utmoſt; ſeeing it is infinite, and (properly ſpeaking) has no utmoſt. How fierce ſoever it be, either on earth, or in hell, God can ſtill carry it further. Every thing in God is moſt perfect in its kind; and therefore no wrath is ſo fierce as his. O ſinner! how wilt thou be able to endure that wrath, which will tear thee in pieces, Pſal. l. 22. and grind thee to powder! Luke xx. 18. The hiſtory of the two ſhe-bears, that tare the children of Bethel, is an awful one, 2 Kings ii. 23. 24. But the united force of the rage of lions, leopards, and ſhe-bears, bereaved of their whelps, is not ſufficient to give us even a ſcanty view of the power of the wrath of God, Hoſ. xiii. 7. 8. Therefore I will be unto them as a lion: as a leopard by the way will I obſerve them. I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rent the caul of their heart, &c. (5.) It is penetrating and piercing wrath. It is burning wrath, and fiery indignation. There is no pain more exquiſite than that which is cauſed by fire: and no fire ſo piercing as the fire of God's indignation, that burns unto the loweſt hell, Deut. xxxii. 22. The arrows of mens wrath can pierce fleſh, blood and bones; but cannot reach the ſoul: but the wrath of God will ſink into the ſoul, and ſo pierce a man in the moſt tender part: likeas, when a perſon is thunder-ſtruck, oft-times there is not a wound to be ſeen in the ſkin; yet life is gone, and the bones are, as it were, melted: ſo God's wrath can penetrate into, and melt one's ſoul within him, when his earthly comforts ſtand about him entire, and untouched; as in Belſhazzar's caſe, Dan. v. 6. (6.) It is conſtant wrath, running parallel with the man's continuance in an unregenerate ſtate; conſtantly attending him from the womb to the grave. There are few ſo dark days, but the ſun ſometimes looketh out from under the clouds: but the wrath of God is an abiding cloud on the objects of it, John iii. 36. The wrath of God abideth on him that believes not. (7.) It is eternal. O miſerable ſoul! if thou fly not from this wrath, unto Jeſus Chriſt, thy miſery had a beginning, but it ſhall never have an end. Should devouring death wholly ſwallow thee up, and for ever hold thee faſt in a grave, it would be kind; but thou muſt live again, and never die; that thou mayſt be ever dying, in the hands of the living God. Cold death will quench the flame of man's wrath againſt us, if nothing elſe do it: but God's wrath, when it has come on the ſinner millions of ages, will ſtill be the wrath to come, Matth. iii. 7. 1 Theſſ. i. 10. as the water of a river is ſtill coming, how much ſoever of it has paſſed. While God is, he will purſue the quarrel. Laſtly, Howſoever dreadful it is, and though it be eternal, yet it is moſt juſt wrath: it is a clear fire, without the leaſt ſmoke of injuſtice. The ſea of wrath, raging with greateſt fury againſt the ſinner, is clear as cryſtal. The Judge of all the earth can do no wrong: he knows no tranſports of paſſion, for they are inconſiſtent with the perfection of his nature. Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I ſpeak as a man) God forbid; for then how ſhall God judge the world? Rom. iii. 5. 6.

The doctrine of the ſtate of wrath confirmed and vindicated.

II. I ſhall confirm the doctrine. Conſider, (1.) How peremptory the threatening of the firſt covenant is, In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die, Gen. ii. 17. Hereby ſin and puniſhment being connected, the veracity of God aſcertains the execution of the threatning. Now, all men being by nature under this covenant, the breach of it lays them under the curſe. (2.) The juſtice of God requires, that a child of ſin be a child of wrath; that the law being broken, the ſanction thereof ſhould take place. God, as man's ruler and judge, cannot but do right, Gen. xviii. 25. Now it is a righteous thing with God to recompence ſin with wrath, 2 Theſſ. i. 6. He is of purer eyes than to behold evil, Hab. i. 13. And he hates all the workers of iniquity, Pſal. v. 6. (3.) The horrors of a natural conſcience prove this. There is a conſcience in the breaſts of men, which can tell them, they are ſinners, and therefore liable to the wrath of God. Let men, at any time, ſoberly commune with themſelves, and they will find they have the witneſs in themſelves, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death, Rom. i. 32. (4.) The pangs of the new-birth, the work of the Spirit of bondage on elect ſouls, in order to their converſion, demonſtrate this. Hereby their natural ſinfulneſs and miſery, as liable to the wrath of God, are plainly taught them; filling their hearts with fear of that wrath. Now that this Spirit of bondage is no other than the Spirit of God, whoſe work is to convince of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment, (John xvi. 8.) this teſtimony muſt needs be true; for the Spirit of truth cannot witneſs an untruth. Mean while, true believers, being freed from the ſtate of wrath, receive not the Spirit of bondage again to fear, but receive the Spirit of adoption, Rom. viii. 15. And therefore, if fears of that nature do ariſe, after the ſoul's union with Chriſt, they come from the ſaint's own ſpirit, or from a worſe. Laſtly, The ſufferings of Chriſt plainly prove this doctrine. Wherefore was the Son of God a ſon under wrath, but becauſe the children of men were children of wrath? He ſuffered the wrath of God; not for himſelf, but for thoſe that were liable to it in their own perſons. Nay, this not only ſpeaks us to have been liable to wrath; but alſo that wrath muſt have a vent, in the puniſhing of ſin. If this was done in the green tree, what will become of the dry? What a miſerable caſe muſt a ſinner be in that is out of Chriſt; that is not vitally united to Chriſt, and partakes not of his Spirit? God, who ſpared not his own Son, ſurely will not ſpare ſuch a one.

But the unregenerate man, who has no great value for the honour of God, will be apt to riſe up againſt his Judge, and in his own heart condemn his procedure. Nevertheleſs, the Judge being infinitely juſt, the ſentence muſt be righteous. And therefore, to ſtop thy mouth, O proud ſinner, and to ſtill thy clamour againſt thy righteous Judge; conſider, Firſt, Thou art a ſinner by nature; and it is highly reaſonable that guilt and wrath be as old as ſin. Why ſhould not God begin to vindicate his honour, as ſoon as vile worms begin to impair it? Why ſhall not a ſerpent bite the thief, as ſoon as he leaps over the hedge? Why ſhould not the threatening take hold of the ſinner, as ſoon as he caſts away the command? the poiſonous nature of the ſerpent affords a man ſufficient ground to kill it, as ſoon as ever he can reach it: and, by this time, thou mayſt be convinced, that thy nature is a very compound of enmity againſt God. Secondly, Thou haſt not only an enmity againſt God, in thy nature; but haſt diſcovered it, by actual ſins, which are in his eye acts of hoſtility. Thou haſt brought forth thy luſts into the field of battle, againſt thy Sovereign Lord. And now that thou art ſuch a criminal, thy condemnation is juſt; for, beſides the ſin of thy nature, thou haſt done that againſt Heaven, which if thou hadſt done againſt men, thy life behoved to have gone for it; and ſhall not wrath from heaven overtake thee? (1.) Thou art guilty of high treaſon, and rebellion, againſt the King of heaven. The thought and wiſh of thy heart, which he knows as well as the language of thy mouth, has been, No God, Pſal. xiv. 1. Thou haſt rejected his government, blown the trumpet, and ſet up the ſtandard of rebellion againſt him; being one of thoſe that ſay, We will not have this man to reign over us, Luke xix. 14. Thou haſt ſtriven againſt, and quenched his Spirit; practically diſowned his laws, proclaimed by his meſſengers; ſtopped thine ears at their voice, and ſent them away mourning for thy pride. Thou haſt conſpired with his grand enemy the devil. Although thou art a ſworn ſervant of the King of glory, daily receiving of his favours, and living on his bounty; thou art holding a correſpondence, and haſt contracted a friendſhip with his greateſt enemy, and art acting for him againſt thy Lord; for the luſts of the devil you will do, John viii. 44. (2.) Thou art a murderer before the Lord. Thou haſt laid the ſtumbling-block of thine iniquity, before the blind world; and haſt ruined the ſouls of others, by thy ſinful courſe. And though thou doſt not ſee now; the time may come, when thou ſhalt ſee the blood of thy relations, neighbours, acquaintances, and others, upon thy head, Matth. xviii. 7. Wo unto the world becauſe of offences; Wo to that man by whom the offence cometh. Yea, thou art a ſelf-murderer before God, Prov. viii. 36. He that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own ſoul; all they that hate me, love death. Ezek. xviii. 31. Why will ye die. The laws of men go as far as they can againſt the ſelf-murderer, denying his body a burial-place amongſt others, and confiſcating his goods: what wonder is it the law of God is ſo ſevere againſt ſoul-murderers? Is it ſtrange, that they who will needs depart from God now, coſt what it will, be forced to depart from him at laſt into everlaſting fire? But what is yet more criminal, thou art guilty of the murder of the Son of God; for the LORD will reckon thee amongſt thoſe that pierced him, Rev. i. 7. Thou haſt rejected him, as well as the Jews did; and, by thy rejecting him, thou haſt juſtified their deed. They indeed did not acknowledge him to be the Son of God, but thou doſt. What they did againſt him, was in his ſtate of humiliation; but thou haſt acted againſt him, in his ſtate of exaltation. Theſe things will aggravate thy condemnation. What wonder then, if the voice of the Lamb change to the roaring of the Lion, againſt the traitor and murderer?

Object. But ſome will ſay, Is there not a vaſt diſproportion betwixt our ſin, and that wrath you talk of? I anſwer, No; God puniſheth no more than the ſinner deſerves. To rectify your miſtake in this matter, conſider, (1.) The vaſt rewards God has annexed to obedience. His word is no more full of fiery wrath againſt ſin, than it is of gracious rewards to the obedience it requires. If heaven be in the promiſes, it is altogether equal that hell be in the threatenings. If death were not in the balance with life, eternal miſery with eternal happineſs, where were the proportion? Moreover, ſin deſerves the miſery, but our beſt works do not deſerve the happineſs: yet both are ſet before us; ſin and miſery, holineſs and happineſs. What reaſon is there then to complain? (2.) How ſevere ſoever the threatnings be, yet all has enough ado to reach the end of the law, Fear him, ſays our Lord, which after he hath killed hath power to caſt into hell; yea I ſay unto you, Fear him, Luke xii. 5. This beſpeaks our dread of divine power and majeſty; but yet how few fear him indeed! The Lord knows the ſinners hearts to be exceedingly intent upon fulfilling their luſts; they cleave ſo fondly to thoſe fulſome breaſts, that a ſmall force does not ſuffice to draw them away from them. They that travel through deſarts, where they are in hazard from wild beaſts, have need to carry fire along with them; and they have need of a hard wedge that have knotty timber to cleave: ſo a holy law muſt be fenced with dreadful wrath, in a world lying in wickedneſs. But who are they that complain of that wrath as too great, but thoſe to whom it is too little to draw them off from their ſinful courſes? It was the man who pretended to fear his Lord, becauſe he was an auſtere man that kept his pound laid up in a napkin: and ſo he was condemned out of his own mouth, Luke xix. 20. 21. 22. Thou art that man, even thou whoſe objection I am anſwering. How can the wrath thou art under, and liable to, be too great, while yet it is not ſufficient to awaken thee to flee from it? Is it time to relax the penalties of the law, when men are trampling the commands of it under foot? (3.) Conſider how God dealt with his own Son, whom he ſpared not, Rom. viii. 32. The wrath of God ſeized on his ſoul and body both, and brought him into the duſt of death. That his ſufferings were not eternal flowed from the quality of the ſufferer, who was infinite; and therefore able to bear, at once, the whole load of wrath: and, upon that account, his ſufferings were infinite in value. But now that the ſufferings of a mere creature cannot be infinite in value, they muſt be protracted to an eternity. And what confidence can a rebel ſubject have to quarrel (for his part) a puniſhment execute on the king's ſon? (4.) The ſinner doth againſt God what he can. Behold, thou haſt done evil things as thou couldſt, Jer. iii. 5. That thou haſt not done more, and worſe, thanks to him who reſtrained thee; to the chain which the wolf was kept in by, not to thyſelf. No wonder God ſhew his power on the ſinner, who puts forth his power againſt God as far as it will reach. The unregenerate man puts no period to his ſinful courſe; and would put no bounds to it neither, if he were not reſtrained by divine power for wiſe ends: and therefore it is juſt he be for ever under wrath. (5.) It is infinite majeſty ſin ſtrikes againſt; and ſo it is, in ſome ſort, an infinite evil. Sin riſeth in its demerit, according to the quality of the party offended. If a man wound his neighbour, his goods muſt go for it; but if he wound his prince, his life muſt go to make amends for that. The infinity of God makes infinite wrath the juſt demerit of ſin. God is infinitely diſpleaſed with ſin: and when he acts, he muſt act like himſelf, and ſhew his diſpleaſure by proportionable means. Laſtly, Thoſe that ſhall lie for ever under this wrath, will be eternally ſinning; and therefore muſt eternally ſuffer; not only in reſpect of divine judicial procedure; but becauſe ſin is its own puniſhment, in the ſame manner as holy obedience is its own reward.

The doctrine of the miſery of man's natural ſtate applied.

Uſe (1.) Of information. Is our ſtate by nature a ſtate of wrath? Then,

1. Surely we are not born innocent. Theſe chains of wrath, which by nature are upon us, ſpeak us to be born criminals. The ſwadling-bands, wherewith infants are bound hand and foot, as ſoon as they are born, may put us in mind of the cords of wrath, with which they are held priſoners, as children of wrath.

2. What deſperate madneſs is it, for ſinners to go on in their ſinful courſe? What is it but to heap coals of fire on thine own head, to lay more and more fuel to the fire of wrath; to treaſure up unto thyſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath? Rom. ii. 5. Thou mayeſt periſh, when his wrath is kindled but a little, Pſal. ii. 12. why wilt thou increaſe it yet more? Thou art already bound with ſuch cords of death, as will not eaſily be looſed: what need is there of more? Stand, careleſs ſinner, and conſider this.

3. Thou haſt no reaſon to complain, as long as thou art out of hell, Wherefore doth a living man complain? Lam. iii. 39. If one who has forfeited his life, be baniſhed his native country, and expoſed to many hardſhips; he may well bear all patiently, ſeeing his life is ſpared. Do ye murmur, for that ye are under pain or ſickneſs? Nay, bleſs God ye are not there where the worm never dieth. Doſt thou grudge, that thou art not in ſo good a condition in the world as ſome of thy neighbours are? Be thankful rather, that ye are not in the caſe of the damned. Is thy ſubſtance gone from thee? Wonder that the fire of God's wrath hath not conſumed thy ſelf. Kiſs the rod, O ſinner, and acknowledge mercy; for God puniſheth us leſs than our iniquities deſerve, Ezra ix. 13.

4. Here is a memorandum, both for poor and rich. (1.) The pooreſt, that go from door to door, and had not one penny left them by their parents, were born to an inheritance. Their firſt father Adam left them children of wrath; and, continuing in their natural ſtate, they cannot miſs of it; for this is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God, Job. xx. 29. An heritage that will furniſh them with a habitation, who have not where to lay their head; they ſhall be caſt into utter darkneſs, Matth. xxv 30. for to them is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever, Jude 6. where their bed ſhall be ſorrow; they ſhall lie down in ſorrow, Iſ. l. 11. their food ſhall be judgment, for God will feed them with judgment, Ezek. xxxiv. 16. and their drink ſhall be the red wine of God's wrath, the dregs whereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring out, and drink them, Pſal lxxv. 8. I know that theſe who are deſtitute of worldly goods, and withal void of the knowledge and grace of God, who therefore may be called the devil's poor, will be apt to ſay here, We hope God will make us ſuffer all our miſery in this world, and we ſhall be happy in the next: as if their miſerable outward condition in time, would ſecure their happineſs in eternity. A groſs and fatal miſtake! and this is another inheritance they have, viz. Lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit, Jer xvi. 19. But the hail ſhall ſweep away the refuge of lies, Iſ. xxviii. 17. Doſt thou think O ſinner, that God, who commands judges on earth not to reſpect the perſon of the poor in judgment, Lev. xix. 15. will pervert judgment for thee? Nay, know for certain, that however miſerable thou art here, thou ſhalt be eternally miſerable hereafter, if thou liveſt and dieſt in thy natural ſtate. (2.) Many that have enough in the world, have far more than they know of. Thou hadſt

(it may be), O unregenerate man, an eſtate, a good portion, or large ſtock left thee by thy father; thou haſt improven it, and the ſun of proſperity ſhines upon thee; ſo that thou canſt ſay, with Eſau, Gen xxxiii. 9. I have enough. But know, thou haſt more than all that, an inheritance thou doſt not conſider of: thou art a child of wrath, an heir of hell. That is an heritage which will abide with thee, amidſt all the changes in the world, as long as thou continueſt in an unregenerate ſtate. When thou ſhalt leave thy ſubſtance to others, this ſhall go along with thyſelf, into another world. It is no wonder a ſlaughter-ox is fed to the full, and is not toiled as others are, Job xxi. 30. The wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction; they ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath. Well then, Rejoice, let thine heart cheer thee, walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes. Live above reproofs and warnings from the word of God: ſhew thyſelf a man of a fine ſpirit, by caſting off all fear of God; mock at ſeriouſneſs; live like thyſelf, a child of wrath, an heir of hell: But know thou, that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judgment, Eccleſ. xi. 9. Aſſure thyſelf, thy breaking ſhall come ſuddenly at an inſtant, Iſ. xxx. 13. For as the crackling of thorns under a pot, ſo is the laughter of a fool, Eccleſ. vii. 6. The fair blaze, and great noiſe they make is quickly gone; ſo ſhall thy mirth be. And then that wrath, that is now ſilently ſinking into thy ſoul, ſhall make a fearful hiſſing.

5. Wo to him, that, like Moab, hath been at eaſe from his youth, Jer. xlviii. 11. and never ſaw the black cloud of wrath hanging over his head. There are many who have no changes, therefore they fear not God, Pſal. lv. 19. They have lived in a good belief (as they call it) all their days; that is, they never had power to believe an ill report of their ſoul's ſtate. Many have come by their religion too eaſily: and as it came lightly to them, ſo it will go from them, when the trial comes. Do ye think men flee from wrath in a morning-dream? Or will they flee from the wrath they never ſaw purſuing them?

6. Think it not ſtrange, if ye ſee one in great diſtreſs about his ſoul's condition, who was wont to be as jovial and as little concerned for ſalvation as any of his neighbours. Can one get a right view of himſelf, as in a ſtate of wrath, and not be pierced with ſorrows, terrors, anxiety? When a weight, quite above one's ſtrength, lies upon him, and he is alone, he can neither ſtir hand nor foot; but when one comes to lift it off him, he will ſtruggle, to get from under it. Thunder-claps of wrath from the word of God, conveyed to the ſoul by the Spirit of the Lord, will ſurely keep a man awake.

Laſtly, It is no wonder wrath come upon churches and nations, and upon us in this land, and that infants and children yet unborn ſmart under it. Moſt of the ſociety are yet children of wrath; few are flying from it, or taking the way to prevent it; but people of all ranks are helping it on. The Jews rejected Chriſt: and their children have been ſmarting under wrath theſe ſixteen hundred years. God grant, that the bad entertainment given to Chriſt and his goſpel by this generation, be not purſued with wrath on the ſucceeding one.

Uſe (2.) Of Exhortation. And here, (1.) I ſhall drop a word to theſe who are yet in an unregenerate ſtate. (2.) To thoſe that are brought out of it. (3.) To all indifferently.

I. To you that are yet in an unregenerate ſtate, I would ſound the alarm, and warn you to ſee to yourſelves, while yet there is hope. O ye children of wrath take no reſt in this diſmal ſtate; but flee to Jeſus Chriſt, the only refuge; haſte, and make your eſcape thither. The ſtate of wrath is too hot a climate for you to live in, Mic. ii. 10. Ariſe ye and depart, for this is not your reſt. O ſinner, knoweſt thou where thou art? doſt thou not ſee thy danger? the curſe has entered into thy ſoul: wrath is thy covering: the heavens are growing blacker and blacker above thy head: the earth is weary of thee: the pit is opening her mouth for thee; and ſhould the thread of thy life be cut this moment, thou art henceforth paſt all hope for ever. Sirs, if we ſaw you putting a cup of poiſon to your mouth, we would fly to you and ſnatch it out of your hands. If we ſaw the houſe on fire about you, while ye were faſt aſleep in it, we would run to you, and drag you out of it. But, alas! ye are in ten thouſand times greater hazard: yet we can do no more, but tell you your danger; invite, exhort, beſeech, and obteſt you, to look to yourſelves; and lament your ſtupidity and obſtinacy, when we cannot prevail with you to take warning. If there were no hope of your recovery, we ſhould be ſilent, and would not torment you before the time: but though ye be loſt and undone, there is hope in Iſrael concerning this thing. Wherefore, I cry unto you in the name of the Lord, and in the word of the prophet, Zech. ix. 12. Turn ye to the ſtrong hold, ye priſoners of hope. Flee to Jeſus Chriſt out of this your natural ſtate.

Motive 1. While ye are in this ſtate, ye muſt ſtand or fall, according to the law, or covenant of works. If ye underſtood this aright, it would ſtrike through your hearts as a thouſand darts. One had better be a ſlave to the Turks, condemned to the gallies, or under Egyptian bondage, than be under the covenant of works now. All mankind were brought under it in Adam, as we heard before: and thou, in thy unregenerate ſtate, art ſtill where Adam left thee. It is true, there is another covenant brought in: but what is that to thee, who art not brought into it? Thou muſt needs be under one of the two covenants; either under the law, or under grace. That thou art not under grace, the dominion of ſin over thee manifeſtly evinceth; therefore thou art under the law, Rom. vi. 14. Do not think God has laid aſide the firſt covenant, Matth. v. 17. 18. Gal. iii. 10. No, he will magnify the law, and make it honourable. It is broken indeed on thy part; but it is abſurd to think, that therefore your obligation is diſſolved. Nay, thou muſt ſtand and fall by it, till thou canſt produce thy diſcharge from God himſelf, who is thy party in that covenant; and this thou canſt not pretend to, ſeeing thou art not in Chriſt.

Now, to give you a view of your miſery, in this reſpect, conſider theſe following things. (1.) Hereby ye are bound over to death, in virtue of the threatening of death in that covenant, Gen. ii. 17. The condition being broken, ye fall under the penalty. So it concludes you under wrath. (2.) There is no ſalvation for you under this covenant, but on a condition impoſſible to be performed by you. The juſtice of God muſt be ſatisfied for the wrong you have done already. God has written this truth in characters of the blood of his own Son. Yea, and you muſt perfectly obey the law for the time to come. So ſaith the law, Gal. iii. 12. The man that doth them ſhall live in them. Come then, O ſinner, ſee if thou canſt make a ladder, whereby thou mayſt reach the throne of God: ſtretch forth thine arms, and try if thou canſt fly on the wings of the wind, catch hold of the clouds, and pierce through theſe viſible heavens; and then either climb over, or break through, the jaſper walls of the city above. Theſe things ſhalt thou do, as ſoon as thou ſhalt reach heaven in thy natural ſtate, or under this covenant. (3.) There is no pardon under this covenant. Pardon is the benefit of another covenant, with which thou haſt nothing to do, Acts xiii. 39. And by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes. As for thee, thou art in the hand of a mercileſs creditor, which will take thee by the throat, ſaying, Pay what thou oweſt; and caſt thee into priſon, there to remain till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing: unleſs thou be ſo wiſe as to get a cautioner in time, who is able to anſwer for all thy debt, and get up thy diſcharge. This Jeſus Chriſt alone can do. Thou abideſt under this covenant, and pleadeſt mercy; but what is thy plea founded on? There is not one promiſe of mercy or pardon in that covenant. Doſt thou plead mercy for mercy's ſake?

Juſtice will ſtep in betwixt it and thee; and plead God's covenant-threatening, which he cannot deny. (4.) There is no place for repentance in this covenant, ſo as the ſinner can be helped by it. For as ſoon as ever thou ſinneſt, the law lays its curſe on thee, which is a dead weight thou canſt by no means throw off; no, not though thine head were waters, and thine eyes a fountain of tears, to weep day and night for thy ſin. That is what the law cannot do, in that it is weak through the fleſh, Rom. viii. 3. Now thou art another profane Eſau, that hath ſold the bleſſing; and there is no place for repentance, though thou ſeekeſt it carefully with tears, while under that covenant. (5.) There is no accepting of the will for the deed under this covenant, which was not made for good will, but good works. The miſtake in this point ruins many. They are not in Chriſt, but ſtand under the firſt covenant; and yet they will plead this privilege. This is juſt as if one having made a feaſt for thoſe of his own family, when they ſit down at table, another-man's ſervant that has run away from his maſter, ſhould preſumptuouſly come forward, and ſit down among them: would not the maſter of the feaſt give ſuch a ſtranger that check, Friend, how cameſt thou in hither? and, ſince he is none of his family, command him to be gone quickly. Though a maſter accept the good will of his own child for the deed, can a hired ſervant expect that privilege? (6.) Ye have nothing to do with Chriſt, while under that covenant. By the law of God a woman cannot be married to two huſbands at once: either death or divorce muſt diſſolve the firſt marriage, ere ſhe can marry another. So we muſt firſt be dead to the law, ere we can be married to Chriſt, Rom. vii. 4. The law is the firſt huſband; Jeſus Chriſt, who raiſeth the dead, marries the widow, that was heart-broken, and ſlain by the firſt huſband. But while the ſoul is in the houſe with the firſt huſband, it cannot plead a marriage-relation to Chriſt; nor the benefit of a marriage-covenant, which is not yet entered into, Gal. v. 4. Chriſt is become of no effect to you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. Peace, pardon, and ſuch like benefits, are all benefits of the covenant of grace. And ye muſt not think to ſtand off from Chriſt, and the marriage-covenant with him, and yet plead theſe benefits; more than one man's wife can plead the benefit of a contract of marriage paſt betwixt another man and his own wife. Laſtly, See the bill of excluſion, paſſed in the court of Heaven, againſt all under the covenant of works, Gal. iv. 30. The ſon of the bond-woman ſhall not be heir. Compare ver. 24. Heirs of wrath muſt not be heirs of glory. Whom the firſt covenant has power to exclude out of heaven, the ſecond covenant cannot bring into it.

Objection. Then it is impoſſible for us to be ſaved. Anſwer. It is ſo, while you are in that ſtate. But if ye would be out of that dreadful condition, haſten out of that ſtate. If a murderer be under ſentence of death; ſo long as he lives within the kingdom, the laws will reach his life: but if he can make his eſcape, and get over the ſea, into the dominions of another prince, our laws cannot reach him there. This is what we would have you to do: flee out of the kingdom of darkneſs into the kingdom of God's dear Son; out of the dominion of the law, into the dominion of grace: then all the curſes of the law, or covenant of works, ſhall never be able to reach you.

Motive 2. O ye children of wrath, your ſtate is wretched, for ye have loſt God, and that is an unſpeakable loſs. Ye are without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12. Whatever you may calls yours, ye cannot call God yours. If ye look to the earth; perhaps ye can tell us, that land, that houſe, or that herd of cattle, is yours. But let us look upward to heaven; is that God, that grace, that glory, yours? Truly, you have neither part nor lot in that matter. When Nebuchadnezzar talks of cities and kingdoms, O how big does he ſpeak! Great Babylon that I have built; my power; my majeſty: but he tells a poor tale, when he comes to ſpeak of God, ſaying, your God, Dan. ii. 47. and iv. 30. Alas! ſinner, whatever thou haſt, God is gone from thee. O the miſery of a godleſs ſoul! Haſt thou loſt God? Then, (1.) The ſap and ſubſtance of all thou haſt in the world, is gone The godleſs man, have what he will, is one that hath not Matth. xxv. 29. I defy the unregenerate man to attain to ſoul-ſatisfaction, whatever he poſſeſſeth; ſince God is not his God. All his days he eateth in darkneſs; in every condition there is a ſecret diſſatisfaction haunts his heart, like a ghoſt: the ſoul wants ſomething, though perhaps it knoweth not what it is; and ſo it will be always, till the ſoul return to God, the fountain of ſatisfaction. (2.) Thou canſt do nothing to purpoſe for thyſelf; for God is gone, his ſoul is departed from thee, Jer. vi. 8. like a leg out of joint hanging by, whereof a man has no uſe, as the word there uſed doth bear. Loſing God, thou haſt loſt the fountain of good; and ſo all grace, all goodneſs, all the ſaving influences of his Spirit. What canſt thou do then? What fruit canſt thou bring forth, more than a branch cut off from the ſtock? John xv. 5. Thou art become unprofitable, Rom. iii. 12. as a filthy rotten thing, fit only for the dunghill. (3.) Death has come up into thy windows, yea, and has ſettled on thy face; for God, in whoſe favour is life, Pſal. xxx. 5. is gone from thee, and ſo the ſoul of thy ſoul is departed. What a loathſome lump is the body, when the ſoul is gone? Far more loathſome is thy ſoul in this caſe. Thou art dead while thou liveſt. Do not deny it, ſeeing thy ſpeech is laid, thine eyes cloſed, and all ſpiritual motion in thee ceaſeth. Thy true friends, who ſee thy caſe, do lament; becauſe thou art gone into the land of ſilence. (4.) Thou haſt not a ſteady friend among all the creatures of God; for now that thou haſt loſt the Maſter's favour, all the family is ſet againſt thee. Conſcience is thine enemy: the word never ſpeaks good of thee: God's people loath thee, ſo far as they ſee what thou art, Pſal. xv. 4. The beaſts and ſtones of the field are banded together againſt thee, Job v. 23. Hoſ. ii. 18. Thy meat, drink, cloaths, grudge to be ſerviceable to the wretch that has loſt God, and abuſeth them to his diſhonour. The earth groaneth under thee; yea, the whole creation groaneth, and travelleth in pain together, becauſe of thee, and ſuch as thou art, Rom. viii. 22. Heaven will have nothing to do with thee; for there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, Rev. xxi. 27. Only hell from beneath is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming, Iſ. xiv. 9. Laſtly, Thy hell is begun already. What makes hell, but excluſion from the preſence of God? Depart from me, ye curſed. Now ye are gone from God already, with the curſe upon you. That ſhall be your puniſhment at length (if ye return not) which is now your choice. As a gracious ſtate is a ſtate of glory in the bud: ſo a graceleſs ſtate is hell in the bud, which, if it continue, will come to perfection at length.

Motive 3. Conſider the dreadful inſtances of the wrath of God; and let them ſerve to awaken thee, to flee out of this ſtate. Conſider, (1.) How it has fallen on men. Even, in this world, many have been ſet up as monuments of divine vengeance, that others might fear. Wrath has ſwept away multitudes, who have fallen together by the hand of an angry God. Conſider how the Lord ſpared not the old world, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly: and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example unto thoſe that after ſhould live ungodly, 2 Pet. ii. 5. 6. But it is yet more dreadful to think of that weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth, amongſt thoſe, who in hell lift up their eyes, but cannot get a drop of water to cool their tongues. Believe theſe things, and be warned by them, leſt deſtruction come upon thee, for a warning to others. 2. Conſider how wrath fell upon the fallen angels, whoſe caſe is abſolutely hopeleſs. They were the firſt that ventured to break the hedge of the divine law; and God ſet them up for monuments of his wrath againſt ſin. They once left their own habitation, and were never allowed to look in again at the hole of the door; but they are reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the judgment of the great day, Jude 6. Laſtly, Behold how an angry God dealt with his own Son, ſtanding in the room of elect ſinners, Rom. viii. 23. God ſpared not his own Son. Sparing mercy might have been expected, if any at all. If any perſon could have obtained it, ſurely his own Son would have got it: but he ſpared him not. The Father's delight is made a man of ſorrows: he who is the wiſdom of God becomes ſore amazed, ready to faint away in a fit of horror. The weight of this wrath makes him ſweat great drops of blood. By the fierceneſs of this fire, his heart was like wax melted in the midſt of his bowels. Behold here how ſevere God is againſt ſin! The ſun was ſtruck blind with this terrible ſight, rocks were rent, graves opened, death, as it were, in the exceſs of aſtoniſhment, letting its priſoners ſlip away. What is a deluge, a ſhower of fire and brimſtone on Sodomites, the terrible noiſe of a diſſolving world, the whole fabric of heaven and earth falling down at once, angels caſt down from heaven into the bottomleſs pit! What are all theſe, I ſay, in compariſon with this, GOD ſuffering! groaning! dying upon a croſs! Infinite holineſs did it, to make ſin look like itſelf, viz. infinitely odious. And will men live at eaſe, while expoſed to this wrath?

Laſtly, Conſider what a God he is with whom thou haſt to do, whoſe wrath thou art liable unto. He is a God of infinite knowledge and wiſdom: ſo that none of thy ſins, however ſecret, can be hid from him. He infallibly finds out all means, whereby wrath may be executed, toward the ſatisfying of juſtice. He is of infinite power, and ſo can do what he will againſt the ſinner. How heavy muſt the ſtrokes of wrath be, which are laid on by an omnipotent hand! Infinite power can make the ſinner priſoner, even when he is in his greateſt rage againſt Heaven. It can bring again the ſeveral parcels of duſt out of the grave, put them together again, reunite the ſoul and body, ſiſt them before the tribunal, hurry them away to the pit, and hold them up with the one hand, through eternity, while they are laſhed with the other. He is infinitely juſt, and therefore muſt puniſh; it were acting contrary to his nature to ſuffer the ſinner to eſcape wrath. Hence the executing of this wrath is pleaſing to him: for, though the Lord hath no delight in the death of a ſinner, as it is the deſtruction of his own creature; yet he delights in it, as it is the execution of juſtice. Upon the wicked he ſhall rain ſnares, fire and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt. Mark the reaſon: For the righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs, Pſal. xi. 6, 7. I will cauſe my fury to reſt upon them, and I will be comforted, Ezek. v. 13. I alſo will laugh at their calamity, Prov. i. 26. Finally, He lives for ever, to purſue the quarrel. Let us therefore conclude, It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Be awakened then, O young ſinner; be awakened O old ſinner, who art yet in the ſtate thou waſt born in. Your ſecurity is none of God's allowance; it is the ſleep of death: riſe out of it, ere the pit cloſe its mouth on you. It is true, you may put on a breaſt-plate of iron, make your brow braſs, and your heart as an adamant: who can help it? But God will break that brazen brow and make that adamantine heart, at laſt, to fly into a thouſand pieces. Ye may, if ye will, labour to put theſe things out of your heads, that ye may yet ſleep in a ſound ſkin, though in a ſtate of wrath. Ye may run away, with the arrows ſticking in your conſciences, to your work, to work them away! or to your beds to ſleep them out; or to company, to ſport and laugh them away: but convictions, ſo ſtifled, will have a fearful reſurrection; and the day is coming, when the arrows of wrath ſhall ſo ſtick in thy ſoul, as thou ſhalt never be able to pluck them out through the ages of eternity, unleſs thou take warning in time.

But, if any deſire to flee from the wrath to come, and for that end, to know what courſe to take, I offer them theſe few advices; and obteſt and beſeech them, as they love their own ſouls, to fall in with them. (1.) Retire by yourſelves into ſome ſecret place, and there meditate on this your miſery. Believe it, and fix your thoughts on it. Let each put the queſtion to himſelf, How can I live in this ſtate? how can I die in it? how will I riſe again and ſtand before the tribunal of God in it? (2.) Conſider ſeriouſly the ſin of your nature, heart and life. A kindly ſight of wrath flows from a deep ſenſe of ſin. They who ſee themſelves exceeding ſinful, will find no great difficulty to perceive themſelves to be heirs of wrath. (3.) Labour to juſtify God in this matter. To quarrel with God about it, and to rage like a wild bull in a net, will but fix you the more in it. Humiliation of ſoul, before the Lord, is neceſſary for an eſcape. God will not ſell deliverance, but freely gives it to thoſe, who ſee themſelves altogether unworthy of his favour. Laſtly, Turn your eyes, O priſoners of hope, towards the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and embrace him, as he offereth himſelf in the goſpel. There is no ſalvation in any other, Acts iv. 12. God is a conſuming fire; ye are the children of wrath: if the Mediator interpoſe not betwixt him and you, ye are undone for ever. If ye would be ſafe, come under his ſhadow: one drop of that wrath cannot fall there, for he delivereth us from the wrath to come, 1 Theſſ. i. 10. Accept of him in his covenant, wherein he offereth himſelf to thee: and ſo thou ſhalt, as the captive woman, redeem thy life, by marrying the conqueror. His blood will quench that fire of wrath, which burns againſt thee: in the white raiment of his righteouſneſs thou ſhalt be ſafe; for no ſtorm of wrath can pierce it.

II. I ſhall drop a few words to the ſaints.

Firſt, Remember ---that at that time (namely, when ye were in your natural ſtate) ye were without Chriſt,---having no hope, and without God in the world. Call to mind that ſtate ye were in formerly; and review the miſery of it. There are five memorials I may thence give in to the whole aſſembly of the ſaints, who are no more children of wrath; but heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt, though as yet in their minority. (1.) Remember, that, in the day our Lord took you by the hand, ye were in no better condition than others. O what moved him to take you, when he paſſed by your neighbours! he found you children of wrath, even as others; but he did not leave you ſo. He came into the common priſon, where ye lay in your fetters, even as others: and, from amongſt the multitude of condemned malefactors, he picked out you, commanded your fetters to be taken off, put a pardon in your hand, and brought you into the glorious liberty of the children of God, while he left others in the devil's fetters. (2.) Remember, there was nothing in you to engage him to love you, in the day he firſt appeared for your deliverance. Ye were children of wrath even as others; fit for hell, and altogether unfit for heaven: yet the King brought you into the palace; the King's ſon made love to you, a condemned criminal, and eſpouſed you to himſelf, on the day in which ye might have been led forth to execution. Even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemeth good in thy ſight, Matth. xi. 26. (3.) Remember, ye were fitter to be loathed than loved in that day. Wonder that, when he ſaw you in your blood he looked not at you with abhorrence, and paſſed by you. Wonder, that ever ſuch a time could be a time of love, Ezek. xvi. 8. (4.) Remember ye are decked with borrowed feathers. It is his comelineſs which is upon you, verſ. 14. It was he that took off your priſon-garments, and cloathed you with robes of righteouſneſs, garments of ſalvation; garments wherewith ye are arrayed as the lilies, which toil not, neither do they ſpin. He took the chains from off your arms, the rope from about your neck: put you in ſuch a dreſs, as ye might be fit for the court of Heaven, even to eat at the Kings table. (5.) Remember your faults this day, as Pharaoh's butler, who had forgoten Joſeph. Mind how ye have forgotten, and how unkindly you have treated him, who remembred you in your low eſtate. Is this your kindneſs to your friend? In the day of your deliverance, did ye think ye could have thus requited him your Lord.

Secondly. Pity the children of wrath, the world that lies in wickedneſs. Can ye be unconcerned for them, ye who were once in the ſame condition? Ye have got aſhore indeed, but your fellows are yet in hazard of periſhing; and will not ye make them all poſſible help for their deliverance? What they are, ye ſometimes were. This may draw pity from you, and engage you to uſe all means for their recovery. See Tit. iii. 1. 2. 3.

Thirdly. Admire that matchleſs love, which brought you out of the ſtate of wrath. Chriſt's love was active love; he loved thy ſoul from the pit of corruption. It was no eaſy work to purchaſe the life of the condemned ſinner; but he gave his life for thy life. He gave his precious blood to quench that flame of wrath, which otherwiſe would have burnt thee up. Men get the beſt view of the ſtars from the bottom of a deep pit: and from this pit of miſery, into which thou waſt caſt by the firſt Adam, thou mayeſt get the beſt view of the Sun of righteouſneſs, in all its dimenſions. He is the ſecond Adam, who took thee out of the horrible pit, and out of the miry clay. How broad were the ſkirts of that love, which covered ſuch a multitude of ſins! Behold the length of it, reaching from everlaſting to everlaſting, Pſ. ciii. 17. the depth of it, going ſo low as to deliver thee from the loweſt hell, Pſal. lxxxvi. 13. the height of it, in raiſing thee up to ſit in heavenly places, Eph. ii. 6.

Fourthly. Be humble, carry low ſails, walk ſoftly all your years. Be not proud of your gifts, graces, privileges, or attainments: but remember ye were children of wrath, even as others. The peacock walks ſlowly, hangs down his ſtarry feathers, while he looks to his black feet. Look ye to the hole of the pit, whence ye are digged; and walk humbly, as it becomes free grace's debtors.

Laſtly. Be wholly for your Lord. Every wife is obliged to be dutiful to her huſband; but double ties lie upon her who was taken from a priſon, or a dunghill. If your Lord has delivered you from wrath, ye ought, upon that very account, to be wholly his; to act for him, to ſuffer for him, and to do whatever he calls you to. The ſaints have no reaſon to complain of their lot in the world, whatever it be. Well may they bear the croſs for him; by whom the curſe was born away from them. Well may they bear the wrath of men in his cauſe, who has freed them from the wrath of God; and cheerfully go to a fire for him, by whom hell-fire is quenched to them. Soul and body, and all thou hadſt in the world were ſometime under wrath: he has removed that wrath; ſhall not all theſe be at his ſervice? That thy ſoul is not overwhelmed with the wrath of God, is owing purely to Jeſus Chriſt; and ſhall it not then be a temple for his Spirit? That thy heart is not filled with horror and deſpair, is owing to him only; to whom then ſhould it be devoted, but to him alone? That thine eyes are not blinded with the ſmoke of the pit, thy hands are not fettered with chains of darkneſs, thy tongue is not broiling in the fire of hell, and thy feet are not ſtanding in that lake that burns with fire and brimſtone, is owing purely to Jeſus Chriſt: and ſhall not theſe eyes be employed for him, theſe hands act for him, that tongue ſpeak for him, and theſe feet ſpeedily run his errands? To him who believes that he was a child of wrath, even as others; but is now delivered by the bleſſed Jeſus: nothing will appear too much, to do or ſuffer for his deliverer, when he has a fair call to it.

III. To conclude with a word to all; let no man think ſlightly of ſin, which lays the ſinner open to the wrath of God. Let not the ſin of our nature, which wreathes the yoke of God's wrath, ſo early, about our necks, ſeem a ſmall thing in our eyes. Fear the Lord, becauſe of his dreadful wrath. Tremble at the thoughts of ſin, againſt which God has ſuch fiery indignation. Look on his wrath, and ſtand in awe, and ſin not. Do you think this is to preſs you to ſlaviſh fear? If it were ſo, one had better be a ſlave to God with a trembling heart, than a free man to the devil, with a ſeared conſcience, and a heart of adamant. But it is not ſo, you may love him, and thus fear him too; yea, ye ought to do it, though ye were ſaints of the firſt magnitude. See Pſal. cxix. 120. Matth. x. 28. Luke xii. 5. Heb. xii. 28. 29. Although ye have paſſed the gulph of wrath, being in Jeſus Chriſt; yet it is but reaſonable your hearts ſhiver, when you look back to it. Your ſin ſtill deſerves wrath, even as the ſins of others: and it would be terrible to be in a fiery furnace; although, by a miracle, we were ſo fenced againſt it, as that it could not harm us.

HEAD III.

Man's utter inability to recover himſelf.

ROMANS v. 6.

For when we were yet without ſtrength, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly.

JOHN vi. 44.

No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him.

We have now had a view of the total corruption of man's nature, and that load of wrath which lies on him, that gulf of miſery he is plunged into in his natural ſtate. But there is one part of his miſery that deſerves particular conſideration; namely, his utter inability to recover himſelf, the knowledge of which is neceſſary for the due humiliation of a ſinner. What I deſign here is only to propoſe a few things, whereby to convince the unregenerate man of this his inability; that he may ſee an abſolute need of Chriſt, and of the power of his grace.

As a man that is fallen into a pit, cannot be ſuppoſed to help himſelf out of it, but by one of two ways; either by doing all himſelf alone, or taking hold of, and improving the help offered him by others; ſo an unconverted man cannot be ſuppoſed to help himſelf out of that ſtate but either in the way of the law, or covenant of works, by doing all himſelf without Chriſt, or elſe in the way of the goſpel, or covenant of grace, by exerting his own ſtrength to lay hold upon, and to make uſe of the help offered him by a Saviour. But, alas! the unconverted man is dead in the pit, and cannot help himſelf either of theſe ways: not the firſt way; for the firſt text tells us that when our Lord came to help us, we were without ſtrength, unable to recover ourſelves. We were ungodly, therefore under a burden of guilt and wrath; yet without ſtrength, unable to ſtand under it; and unable to throw it off, or get from under it: ſo that all mankind had undoubtedly periſhed, had not Chriſt died for the ungodly, and brought help to them, who could never have recovered themſelves. But when Chriſt comes, and offereth help to ſinners, cannot they take it? cannot they improve help, when it comes to their hands? No; the ſecond text tells us, they cannot; No man can come unto me, (i. e. believe in me, John vi. 35.) except the father draw him. This is a drawing which enables them to come, who, till then, could not come; and therefore could not help themſelves, by improving the help offered. It is a drawing, which is always effectual; for it can be no leſs than hearing and learning of the Father, which whoſo partakes of, cometh to Chriſt, ver. 25. Therefore it is not drawing in the way of mere moral ſuaſion, which may be, yea, and always is, ineffectual. But it is drawing by mighty power, Eph. i. 19. abſolutely neceſſary for them that have no power in themſelves, to come and take hold of the offered help.

Hearken then, O unregenerate man, and be convinced, that as thou art in a moſt miſerable ſtate by nature; ſo thou art utterly unable to recover thyſelf any manner of way. Thou art ruined, and what way wilt thou go to work, to recover thyſelf? Which of the two ways wilt thou chuſe? Wilt thou try it alone, or wilt thou make uſe of help? Wilt thou fall on the way of works, or on the way of the goſpel? I know very well, thou wilt not ſo much as try the way of the goſpel, till once thou haſt found the recovery impracticable, in the way of the law. Therefore we ſhall begin where corrupt nature teaches men to begin, viz. at the way of the law of works.

I. Sinner, I would have thee believe that thy working will never effect it. Work, and do thy beſt; thou ſhalt never be able to work thyſelf out of this ſtate of corruption and wrath. Thou muſt have Chriſt, elſe thou ſhalt periſh eternally. It is only Chriſt in you, can be the hope of glory. But if thou wilt needs try it, then I muſt lay before thee, from the unalterable word of the living God, two things which thou muſt do for thyſelf. And if thou canſt do them, it muſt be yielded that thou art able to recover thyſelf: but if not, then thou canſt do nothing this way for thy recovery.

FIRST, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments, Matth. xix. 17. That is, if thou wilt by doing, enter into life, then perfectly keep the ten commands; for the ſcope of theſe words is to beat down the pride of the man's heart, and to let him ſee an abſolute need of a Saviour, from the impoſſibility of keeping the law. The anſwer is given ſuitable to the addreſs. Our Lord checks him for his compliment, Good Maſter, ver. 16. telling him, There is none good but one, that is God, ver. 17. As if he had ſaid, You think yourſelf a good man and me another; but where goodneſs is ſpoken of, men and angels may vail their faces before the good God. And as to his queſtion, wherein he diſcovered his legal diſpoſition, Chriſt does not anſwer him, ſaying, Believe and thou ſhalt be ſaved; that would not have been ſo ſeaſonable in the caſe of one, who thought he could do well enough for himſelf, if he but knew what thing he ſhould do: but, ſuitable to the humour the man was in, he bids him keep the commandments; keep them nicely and accurately, as thoſe that watch malefactors in priſon, leſt any of them eſcape, and their life go for theirs. See then, O unregenerate man, what thou canſt do in this matter; for if thou wilt recover thyſelf in this way, thou muſt perfectly keep the commandments of God.

And, (1.) Thy obedience muſt be perfect, in reſpect of the principle of it; that is, thy ſoul, the principle of action, muſt be perfectly pure, and altogether without ſin. For the law requires all moral perfection, not only actual, but habitual: and ſo condemns original ſin; impurity of nature, as well as of actions. Now, if thou canſt bring this to paſs, thou ſhalt be able to anſwer that queſtion of Solomon's, ſo as never one of Adam's poſterity could yet anſwer it, Prov. xx. 9. Who can ſay, I have made my heart clean. But if thou canſt not, the very want of this perfection is a ſin, and ſo lays thee open to the curſe, and cuts thee off from life. Yea, it makes all thine actions, even thy beſt actions ſinful; For who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Job xiv. 4. And doſt thou think by ſin, to help thyſelf out of ſin and miſery? (2.) Thy obedience muſt alſo be perfect in parts. It muſt be as broad as the whole law of God: if thou lackeſt one thing, thou art undone; for the law denounceth the curſe on him that continueth not in every thing written therein, Gal. iii. 10. Thou muſt give internal and external obedience to the whole law; keep all the commandments in heart and life. If thou breakeſt any one of them, that will inſure thy ruin. A vain thought or idle word, will ſtill ſhut thee up under the curſe. (3.) It muſt be perfect in reſpect of degrees; as was the obedience of Adam, while he ſtood in his innocence. This the law requires, and will accept of no leſs, Matth. xxii. 37. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind. If one degree of that love required by the law be wanting; if each part of thy obedience be not ſcrewed up to the greateſt height commanded; that want is a breach of the law, and ſo leaves thee ſtill under the curſe. One may bring as many buckets of water to a houſe that is on fire, as he is able to carry: and yet it may be conſumed; and will be ſo, if he bring not as many as will quench the fire. Even ſo, although thou ſhouldſt do what thou art able, in keeping the commands; if thou fail in the leaſt degree of obedience, which the law enjoins; thou art certainly ruined for ever: unleſs thou take hold of Chriſt, renouncing all thy righteouſneſs as filthy rags. See Rom. x. 5. Gal. iii. 10. Laſtly, It muſt be perpetual, as the man Chriſt's obedience was, who always did the things that pleaſed the Father; for the tenor of the law is, Curſed is he that continueth not in all things written in the law to do them. Hence, though Adam's obedience was for a while abſolutely perfect; yet, becauſe at length he tripped in one point, viz. in eating the forbidden fruit, he fell under the curſe of the law. If one ſhould live a dutiful ſubject to his prince, till the cloſe of his days, and then conſpire againſt him, he muſt die for his treaſon. Even ſo, though thou ſhouldſt, all the time of thy life, live in perfect obedience to the law of God; and only at the hour of death entertain a vain thought, or pronounce an idle word: that idle word, or vain thought, would blot out all thy former righteouſneſs, and ruin thee; namely, in this way, in which thou art ſeeking to recover thyſelf.

Now, ſuch is the obedience thou muſt perform, if thou wouldſt recover thyſelf in the way of the law. But, though thou ſhouldſt thus obey; the law ſtakes thee down in the ſtate of wrath, till another demand of it be ſatisfied, viz.

SECONDLY. Thou muſt pay what thou oweſt. It is undeniable thou art a ſinner: and whatever thou mayſt be in time to come, juſtice muſt be ſatisfied for thy ſin already committed. The honour of the law muſt be maintained, by thy ſuffering the denounced wrath. It may be thou haſt changed thy courſe of life, or art now reſolved to do it, and ſet about the keeping of the commands of God: but what haſt thou done, or what wilt thou do with the old debt? Your obedience to God, though it were perfect, is a debt due to him, for the time wherein it is performed; and can no more ſatisfy for former ſins, than a tenant's paying the current year's rent, can ſatisfy the maſter for all bygones. Can the paying of new debts acquit a man from old accounts? Nay, deceive not yourſelves, you will find theſe laid up in ſtore with God, and ſealed up among his treaſures, Deut. xxxii. 34. It remains then, that either thou muſt bear that wrath, to which for thy ſin thou art liable, according to the law; or elſe thou muſt acknowledge thou canſt not bear it, and thereupon have recourſe to the ſurety, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Let me now aſk thee, Art thou able to ſatisfy the juſtice of God? Canſt thou pay thy own debt? Surely not: for, ſeeing he is an infinite God, whom thou haſt offended; the puniſhment, being ſuited to the quality of the offence, muſt be infinite. But ſo it is, thy puniſhment or ſufferings for ſin cannot be infinite in value, ſeeing thou art a finite creature: therefore, they muſt be infinite in duration or continuance; that is, they muſt be eternal. And ſo all thy ſufferings in this world are but an earneſt of what thou muſt ſuffer in the world to come.

Now, ſinner, if thou canſt anſwer theſe demands, thou mayſt recover thyſelf in the way of the law. But art thou not conſcious of thy inability to do any of theſe things; much more, to do them all? yet if thou do not all, thou doſt nothing. Turn then to what courſe of life thou wilt, thou art ſtill in a ſtate of wrath. Screw up thy obedience to the greateſt height thou canſt; ſuffer what God lays upon thee, yea, add, if thou wilt, to the burden, and walk under all, without the leaſt impatience: yet all this will not ſatisfy the demands of the law; and therefore thou art ſtill a ruined creature. Alas! ſinner, what art thou doing, while thou ſtriveſt to help thyſelf; but doſt not receive, and unite with Jeſus Chriſt? Thou art labouring in the fire, wearying thyſelf for very vanity; labouring to enter into heaven by the door which Adam's ſin ſo bolted, as neither he, nor any of his loſt poſterity can ever enter by it. Doſt thou not ſee the flaming ſword of juſtice, keeping thee off from the tree of life? Doſt thou not hear the law denouncing a curſe on thee, for all thou art doing; even for thy obedience, thy prayers, thy tears, thy reformation of life, &c. becauſe, being under the law's dominion, thy beſt works are not ſo good, as it requires them to be, under the pain of the curſe? Believe it, Sirs, if you live and die out of Chriſt, without being actually united to him as the ſecond Adam, a life-giving ſpirit, and without coming under the covert of his atoning blood; though ye ſhould do the utmoſt that any man on earth can do, in keeping the commands of God, ye ſhall never ſee the face of God in peace. If you ſhould, from this moment, bid an eternal farewell to this world's joy, and all the affairs thereof; and henceforth buſy yourſelves with nothing, but the ſalvation of your ſouls: if you ſhould go into ſome wilderneſs, live upon the graſs of the field, and be companions to dragons and owls; if you ſhould retire to ſome dark cavern of the earth, and weep there for your ſins, until you have wept yourſelves blind, yea, wept out all the moiſture of your body; if ye ſhould confeſs with your tongue, untill it cleave to the roof of your mouth; pray, till your knees grow hard as horns; faſt, till your body become like a ſkeleton; and after all this, give it to be burnt: the word is gone out of the Lord's mouth in righteouſneſs, and cannot return, you ſhould periſh for ever, notwithſtanding of all this, as not being in Chriſt, John xiv. 6. No man cometh unto the Father, but by me, Acts iv. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other. Mark xvi. 6. He that believeth not ſhall be damned.

Object. But God is a merciful God, and he knows we are not able to anſwer theſe demands: we hope therefore to be ſaved, if we do as well as we can, and keep the commands as well as we are able. Anſw. (1.) Though thou art able to do many things, thou art not able to do one thing aright: thou canſt do nothing acceptable to God, being out of Chriſt, John xv. 5. Without me ye can do nothing. An unrenewed man, as thou art, can do nothing but ſin; as we have already evinced. Thy beſt actions are ſin, and ſo they increaſe thy debt to juſtice: how then can it be expected they ſhould leſſen it? (2.) If God ſhould offer to ſave men, upon condition that they did all they could do, in obedience to his commands, we have ground to think, that theſe who would betake themſelves to that way, ſhould never be ſaved: for where is the man, that does as well as he can? Who ſees not many falſe ſteps he has made, which he might have evited? There are ſo many things to be done, ſo many temptations to carry us out of the road of duty, and our nature is ſo very apt to be ſet on fire of hell, that we would ſurely fail, even in ſome point, that is within the compaſs of our natural abilities. But, (3.) Though thou ſhouldſt do all thou art able to do, in vain doſt thou hope to be ſaved in that way. What word of God is this hope of thine founded on? It is neither founded on law nor goſpel; and therefore it is but a deluſion. It is not founded on the goſpel; for the goſpel leads the ſoul out of itſelf, to Jeſus Chriſt for all; and it eſtabliſheth the law, Rom. iii. 31. Whereas this hope of yours cannot be eſtabliſhed, but on the ruins of the law, which God will magnify and make honourable. And hence it appears, that it is not founded on the law neither. When God ſet Adam a working for happineſs to himſelf, and his poſterity, perfect obedience was the condition required of him; and a curſe was denounced in caſe of diſobedience. The law being broken by him, he and his poſterity were ſubjected to the penalty, for ſin committed; and withal ſtill bound to perfect obedience: for it is abſurd to think, that man's ſinning, and ſuffering for his ſin, ſhould free him from his duty of obedience to his Creator. When Chriſt came in the room of the elect, to purchaſe their ſalvation, the ſame were the terms. Juſtice had the elect under arreſt: if he minds to deliver them, the terms are known. He muſt ſatisfy for their ſin, by ſuffering the puniſhment due to it; he muſt do what they cannot do, to wit, obey the law perfectly; and ſo fulfil all righteouſneſs. Accordingly, all this he did, and ſo became the end of the law for righteouſneſs, to every one that believeth, Rom. x. 4. And now doſt thou think, God will abate of theſe terms to thee, when his own Son got no abatement of them? Expect it not, though thou ſhouldſt beg it with tears of blood; for if they prevailed, they behoved to prevail againſt the truth, juſtice, and honour of God, Gal. iii. 10. Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, which are written in the book of the law to do them, ver. 12. And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doth them, ſhall live in them. It is true, that God is merciful: but cannot he be merciful, unleſs he ſave you in a way that is neither conſiſtent with his law, nor goſpel? Hath not his goodneſs and mercy ſufficiently appeared, in ſending the Son of his love, to do what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh? He has provided help for them that cannot help themſelves: but thou, inſenſible of thine own weakneſs, wilt needs think to recover thyſelf by thine own works, while thou art no more able to do it, than to remove mountains of braſs out of their place. Wherefore I conclude, thou art utterly unable to recover thyſelf by the way of works, or of the law. O that thou wouldſt conclude the ſame concerning thyſelf.

II. Let us try next, what the ſinner can do to recover himſelf, in the way of the goſpel. It is likely, thou thinkeſt, that howbeit thou canſt not do all by thyſelf alone; yet Jeſus Chriſt offering thee help, thou canſt of thyſelf embrace it, and uſe it to thy recovery. But, O ſinner, be convinced of thine abſolute need of the grace of Chriſt: for truly, there is help offered, but thou canſt not accept of it: there is a rope caſt out to hale ſhipwrecked ſinners to land: but, alas! they have no hands to catch hold of it. They are like infants expoſed in the open field, that muſt ſtarve, though their food be lying by them, unleſs one put it into their mouths. To convince natural men of this, let it be conſidered, Firſt, That although Chriſt is offered in the goſpel, yet they cannot believe in him. Saving faith is the faith of God's elect; the ſpecial gift of God to them, wrought in them by his Spirit. Salvation is offered to them that will believe in Chriſt, but how can ye believe? John v. 44. It is offered to theſe that will come to Chriſt; but no man can come unto him, except the Father draw him.

It is offered to them that will look to him, as liſted up on the pole of the goſpel, Iſ. xlv. 22. but the natural man is ſpiritually blind, Rev. iii. 17. and as to the things of the Spirit of God, he cannot know them, for they are ſpiritually diſcerned, 1 Cor. ii. 14. Nay, whoſoever will, he is welcome; let him come, Rev. xxii. 17. but there muſt be a day of power on the ſinner, before he will be willing, Pſal. cx. 3.

Secondly, Man naturally has nothing, wherewithal to improve, to his recovery, the help brought in by the goſpel. He is caſt away in a ſtate of wrath; but is bound hand and foot, ſo that he cannot lay hold of the cords of love, thrown out to him in the goſpel. The moſt ſkilful artificer cannot work without inſtruments; nor can the moſt cunning muſician play well on an inſtrument that is out of tune. How can one believe, how can he repent, whoſe underſtanding is darkneſs, Eph. v. 8. whoſe heart is a ſtony heart, inflexible, inſenſible, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. whoſe affections are wholly diſordered and diſtempered; who is averſe to good, and bent to evil? The arms of natural abilities are too ſhort, to reach ſupernatural help: hence thoſe who moſt excel in them, are oft-times moſt eſtranged from ſpiritual things, Matth. xi. 25. Thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent.

Thirdly, Man cannot work a ſaving change on himſelf; but ſo changed he muſt be, elſe he can neither believe nor repent, nor ever ſee heaven. No action can be without a ſuitable principle. Believing, repenting, and the like, are the product of the new nature; and can never be produced by the old corrupt nature. Now, what can the natural man do in this matter? He muſt be regenerate, begotten again unto a lively hope: but as the child cannot be active in his own generation, ſo a man cannot be active, but paſſive only, in his own regeneration. The heart is ſhut againſt Chriſt: man cannot open it, only God can do it by his grace, Acts xvi. 14. He is dead in ſin: he muſt be quickened, raiſed out of his grave; who can do this but God himſelf? Eph. ii. 1. 5. Nay, he muſt be created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, Eph. ii. 10. Theſe are works of omnipotency, and can be done by no leſs power.

Fourthly, Man, in his depraved ſtate, is under an utter inability to do any thing truly good, as was cleared before at large: how then can he obey the goſpel? His nature is the very reverſe of the goſpel: how can he, of himſelf fall in with that device of ſalvation, and accept the offered remedy? The corruption of man's nature infallibly concludes his utter inability, to recover himſelf any manner of way: and whoſo is convinced of the one, muſt needs admit the other; for they ſtand and fall together. Were all the purchaſe of Chriſt offered to the unregenerate man, for one good thought, he cannot command it, 2 Cor. iii. 5. Not that we are ſufficient of ourſelves, to think any thing as of ourſelves. Were it offered on condition of a good word, yet how can ye being evil, ſpeak good things? Matth. xii. 35. Nay, were it left to yourſelves, to chuſe what is eaſieſt, Chriſt himſelf tells you, John xv. 5. Without me ye can do nothing.

Laſtly, The natural man cannot but reſiſt the Lord, offering to help him; howbeit that reſiſtance is infallibly overcome in the elect, by converting grace. Can the ſtony heart chuſe but reſiſt the ſtroke? There is not only an inability, but an enmity and obſtinacy in man's will by nature. God knows, O natural man, (whether thou knoweſt it or not,) that thou art obſtinate, and thy neck is an iron ſinew, and thy brow braſs, Iſ. xlviii. 4. and cannot be overcome, but by him, who hath broken the gates of braſs, and cut the bars of iron in ſunder. Hence is there ſuch hard work in converting of a ſinner. Sometimes he ſeems to be caught in the net of the goſpel; yet quickly he ſlips away again. The hook catcheth hold of him; but he ſtruggles, till getting free of it, he makes away with a bleeding wound. When good hopes are conceived of him, by theſe that travel in birth, for the forming of Chriſt in him; there is oft-times nothing brought forth but wind. The deceitful heart makes many a ſhift to avoid a Saviour, and to cheat the man of his eternal happineſs. Thus the natural man lies ſunk in a ſtate of ſin and wrath, utterly unable to recover himſelf.

Object. (1.) If we be under an utter inability to do any good, how can God require us to do it? Anſw. God making man upright, Eccl. vii. 29. gave him a power to do every thing he ſhould require of him: this power man loſt by his own fault. We were bound to ſerve God and to do whatſoever he commanded us, as being his creatures; and alſo we were under the ſuperadded tie of a covenant, for that effect. Now, we having, by our own fault, diſabled ourſelves; ſhall God loſe his right of requiring our taſk, becauſe we have thrown away the ſtrength he gave us, wherewithal to perform it? Has the creditor no right to require payment of his money, becauſe the debtor has ſquandered it away, and is not able to pay him? Truly, if God can require no more of us than we are able to do, we need no more to ſave us from wrath, but to make ourſelves unable for every duty, and to incapacitate ourſelves for ſerving of God any manner of way, as profane men frequently do: and ſo the deeper one is immerſed in ſin, he will be the more ſecure from wrath; for where God can require no duty of us, we do not ſin in omitting it; and where there is no ſin, there can be no wrath. (As to what may be urged by the unhumbled ſoul, againſt the putting of our ſtock in Adam's hand; the righteouſneſs of that diſpenſation was cleared before.) But moreover, the unrenewed man is daily throwing away the very remains of natural abilities; that light and ſtrength which are to be found amongſt the ruins of mankind. Nay, farther, he will not believe his own utter inability to help himſelf; ſo that out of his own mouth he will be condemned. Even thoſe who make their natural impotency to good, a covert to their ſloth, do, with others, delay the work of turning to God from time to time; under convictions, make large promiſes of reformation, which afterward they never regard; and delay their repentance to a death-bed, as if they could help themſelves in a moment, which ſpeaks them to be far from a due ſenſe of their natural inability, whatever they pretend.

Now, if God can require of men the duty they are not able to do; he can in juſtice puniſh them for their not doing it, notwithſtanding of their inability. If he have power to exact the debt of obedience, he has alſo power to caſt the inſolvent debtor into priſon, for his not paying of it. Further, though unregenerate men have no gracious abilities; yet they want not natural abilities, which nevertheleſs they will not improve. There are many things they can do, which they do not, they will not do them; and therefore their condemnation will be juſt. Nay, all their inability to good is voluntary; they will not come to Chriſt, John v. 40. They will not repent, they will die, Ezek. xviii. 15. So they will be juſtly condemned; becauſe they will not turn to God, nor come to Chriſt; but love their chains better than their liberty, and darkneſs rather than light, John iii. 19.

Object. (2.) Why do you then preach Chriſt to us; call us to come to him, to believe, repent, and uſe the means of ſalvation? Anſw. Becauſe it is your duty ſo to do. It is your duty to accept of Chriſt, as he is offered in the goſpel; to repent of your ſins, and to be holy in all manner of converſation: theſe things are commanded you of God; and his command, not your ability, is the meaſure of your duty. Moreover, theſe calls and exhortations are the means, that God is pleaſed to make uſe of, for converting his elect, and working grace in their hearts: to them, faith cometh by hearing, Rom. x. 17. while they are as unable to help themſelves as the reſt of mankind are. Upon very good grounds may we, at the command of God, who raiſeth the dead, go to their graves and cry in his name, Awake thou that ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light, Eph. v. 14. And ſeeing the elect are not to be known, and diſtinguiſhed from others before converſion: as the ſun ſhines on the blind man's face, and the rain falls on the rocks as well as on the fruitful plains; ſo we preach Chriſt to all, and ſhoot the arrow at a venture, which God himſelf directs, as he ſees meet. Moreover, theſe calls and exhortations are not altogether in vain, even to thoſe that are not converted by them. Such perſons may be convinced, though they be not converted: although they be not ſanctified by theſe means; yet they may be reſtrained by them, from running into that exceſs of wickedneſs, which otherwiſe they would arrive at. The means of grace ſerve, as it were, to embalm many dead ſouls which are never quickened by them: though they do not reſtore them to life; yet they keep them from ſmelling ſo rank as otherwiſe they would do. Finally, Though ye cannot recover yourſelves, nor take hold of the ſaving help offered to you in the goſpel: yet even by the power of nature, ye may uſe the outward and ordinary means, whereby Chriſt communicates the benefits of redemption to ruined ſinners; who are utterly unable to recover themſelves out of the ſtate of ſin and wrath. Ye may and can, if ye pleaſe, do many things, that would ſet you in a fair way for help from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Ye may go ſo far on, as to be not far from the kingdom of God, as the diſcreet ſcribe had done, Mark xii. 34. though (it would ſeem) he was deſtitute of ſupernatural abilities. Though ye cannot cure yourſelves; yet ye may come to the pool, where many ſuch diſeaſed perſons as ye are, have been cured: though ye have none to put you into it, yet ye may lie at the ſide of it: and who knows but the Lord may return, and leave a bleſſing behind him? as in the caſe of the impotent man recorded, John v. 5. 6. 7. 8. I hope Satan does not chain you to your houſes, nor ſtake you down in your fields on the Lord's day; but ye are at liberty, and can wait at the poſts of wiſdom's doors, if ye will. And when ye come thither, he doth not beat drums at your ears, that ye cannot hear what is ſaid: there is no force upon you, obliging you to apply all you hear to others; ye may apply to yourſelves what belongs to your ſtate and condition: and when ye go home, ye are not fettered in your houſes, where perhaps no religious diſcourſe is to be heard; but ye may retire to ſome ſeparate place, where ye can meditate, and poſe your conſcience with pertinent queſtions, upon what ye have heard. Ye are not poſſeſſed with a dumb devil, that ye cannot get your mouths opened in prayer to God. Ye are not ſo driven out of your beds to your worldly buſineſs, and from your worldly buſineſs to your beds again; but ye might, if ye would, beſtow ſome prayers to God upon the caſe of your periſhing ſouls. Ye may examine yourſelves as to the ſtate of your ſouls, in a ſolemn manner, as in the preſence of God; ye may diſcern that ye have no grace, and that ye are loſt and undone without it; and ye may cry unto God for it. Theſe things are within the compaſs of natural abilities, and may be practiſed where there is no grace. It muſt aggravate your guilt, that you will not be at ſo much pains about the ſtate and caſe of your precious ſouls. And if ye do not what ye can do; ye will be condemned, not only for your want of grace, but for your deſpiſing of it.

Object. (3.) But all this is needleſs, ſeeing we are utterly unable to help ourſelves out of the ſtate of ſin and wrath. Anſw. Give not place to that deluſion, which puts aſunder what God hath joined, namely, the uſe of means, and a ſenſe of our own impotency. If ever the Spirit of God graciouſly influence your ſouls, ye will become thoroughly ſenſible of your abſolute inability, and yet enter upon a vigorous uſe of means. Ye will do for yourſelves, as if ye were to do all; and yet over look all ye do, as if ye had done nothing. Will ye do nothing for yourſelves, becauſe ye cannot do all? Lay down no ſuch impious concluſion againſt your own ſouls. Do what you can; and, it may be, while ye are doing what ye can for yourſelves, God will do for you what ye cannot. Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? ſaid Philip to the Eunuch: How can I, ſaith he, except ſome man ſhould guide me? Acts viii. 30. 31. He could not underſtand the ſcripture he read; yet he could read it: he did what he could, he read; and, while he was reading, God ſent him an interpreter. The Iſraelites were in a great ſtrait at the Red ſea: and how could they help themſelves, when upon the one hand were mountains, and on the other the enemies garriſon; when Pharaoh and his hoſt were behind them, and the Red ſea before them? what could they do? Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord to Moſes, that they go forward, Exod. xiv. 15. For what end ſhould they go forward? Can they make a paſſage to themſelves through the ſea? No; but let them go forward, ſaith the Lord; though they cannot turn ſea to dry land, yet they can go forward to the ſhore: and ſo they did; and when they did what they could, God did for them what they could not do.

Queſt. Has God promiſed to convert and ſave them, who, in the uſe of means, do what they can towards their own relief? Anſw. We may not ſpeak wickedly for God: natural men being ſtrangers to the covenant of promiſe, Eph. ii. 12. have no ſuch promiſe made to them. Nevertheleſs they do not act rationally, unleſs they exert the powers they have, and do what they can. For, (1.) It is poſſible this courſe may ſucceed with them. If ye do what ye can, it may be, God will do for you what you cannot do for yourſelves. This is ſufficient to determine a man, in a matter of the utmoſt importance, ſuch as this is, Acts viii. 22. Pray God, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee, Joel ii. 14. Who knoweth if he will return? If ſucceſs may be, the trial ſhould be. If, in a wreck at ſea, all the ſailors and paſſengers had betaken themſelves each to a broken board for ſafety; and one of them ſhall ſee all the reſt periſh, notwithſtanding of their utmoſt endeavours to ſave themſelves: yet the very poſſibility of eſcaping by that means, would determine that one, ſtill to do his beſt with his board. Why then do not ye reaſon with yourſelves, as the four lepers did, who ſat at the gate of Samaria? 2 Kings vii. 3. 4. Why do ye not ſay, If we ſit ſtill, not doing what we can, we die; let us put it to a trial; if we be ſaved, we ſhall live; if not, we ſhall but die? (2.) It is probable this courſe may ſucceed. God is good and merciful; he loves to ſurprize men with his grace, and is often found of them that ſought him not, Iſ. lxv. 1. If ye do this, ye are ſo far in the road of your duty: and ye are uſing the means, which the Lord is wont to bleſs, for mens ſpiritual recovery: ye lay yourſelves in the way of the great Phyſician; and ſo it is probable ye may be healed. Lydia went, with others to the place where prayer was wont to be made; and the Lord opened her heart, Acts xvi. 13. 14. Ye plow and ſow, though no body can tell you for certain, that ye will get ſo much as your ſeed again: ye uſe means for the recovery of your health, though ye are not ſure they will ſucceed. In theſe caſes probability determines you; and why not in this alſo? Importunity, we ſee, does very much with men: therefore pray, meditate, deſire help of God; be much at the throne of grace, ſupplicating for grace; and do not faint. Though God regard not you, who, in your preſent ſtate, are but one maſs of ſin, univerſally depraved, and vitiated in all the powers of your ſoul: yet he may regard his own ordinance. Tho' he regards not your prayers, your meditations, &c. yet he may regard prayer, meditation, and the like means of his own appointment, and ſo bleſs them to you. Wherefore, if ye will not do what ye can; ye are not only dead, but ye declare yourſelves unworthy of eternal life.

To conclude, Let the ſaints admire the freedom and power of grace, which came to them in their helpleſs condition, made their chains fall off, the iron gate to open to them, raiſed the fallen creatures; and brought them out of the ſtate of ſin and wrath, wherein they would have lain and periſhed, had they not been mercifully viſited. Let the natural man be ſenſible of his utter inability to recover himſelf. Know thou art without ſtrength; and canſt not come to Chriſt till thou be drawn. Thou art loſt, and canſt not help thyſelf. This may ſhake the foundation of thy hopes, who never ſaweſt thy abſolute need of Chriſt, and his grace; but thinkeſt to ſhift for thyſelf by thy civility, morality, drowſy wiſhes and duties; and by a faith and repentance, which have ſprung up out of thy natural powers, without the power and efficacy of the grace of Chriſt. O be convinced of thy abſolute need of Chriſt, and his overcoming grace: believe thy utter inability to recover thyſelf; that ſo thou mayſt be humbled, ſhaken out of thy ſelf-confidence and lie down in duſt and aſhes, groaning out thy miſerable caſe before the Lord. A kindly ſenſe of thy natural impotency, the impotency of depraved human nature, would be a ſtep towards a delivery.

Thus far of man's natural ſtate, the ſtate of entire depravation.

STATE III.

NAMELY,

The STATE of GRACE, or BEGUN RECOVERY.

HEAD I.

REGENERATION.

1 PETER i. 23.

Being born again, not of corruptible ſeed, but of incorruptible; by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

WE proceed now to the ſtate of grace, the ſtate of begun recovery of human nature, into which all that ſhall partake of eternal happineſs, are tranſlated, ſooner or later, while in this world. It is the reſult of a gracious change, made upon thoſe who ſhall inherit eternal life; which change may be taken up in theſe two. (1.) In oppoſition to their natural real ſtate, the ſtate of corruption, there is a change made upon them in regeneration; whereby their nature is changed. (2.) In oppoſition to their natural relative ſtate, the ſtate of wrath, there is a change made upon them, in their union with the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; by which they are ſet beyond the reach of condemnation. Theſe therefore, namely, regeneration, and union with Chriſt, I deſign to handle, as the great and comprehenſive changes on a ſinner, conſtituting him in the ſtate of grace.

The firſt of theſe we have in the text; together with the outward and ordinary means, by which it is brought about. The apoſtle here, to excite the ſaints to the ſtudy of holineſs, and particularly of brotherly love, puts them in mind of their ſpiritual original. He tells them, they were born again; and that of one incorruptible ſeed, the word of God. This ſpeaks them to be brethren, partakers of the ſame new nature; which is the root from which holineſs, and particularly brotherly love, doth ſpring. We are once born ſinners; we muſt be born again, that we may be ſaints. The ſimple world ſignifies to be begotten; and ſo it may be read, Matth. xi. 11. to be conceived, Matth. i. 20. and to be born, Matth. ii. 1. Accordingly the compound word uſed in the text, may be taken in its full latitude, the laſt notion preſuppoſing the two former: and ſo regeneration is a ſupernatural real change on the whole man, fitly compared to natural or corporal generation, as will afterwards appear. The ordinary means of regeneration called the ſeed, whereof the new creature is formed, is not corruptible ſeed. Of ſuch indeed our bodies are generated: but the ſpiritual ſeed, of which the new creature is generated, is incorruptible; namely, the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. The ſound of the word of God paſſeth, even as other ſounds do: but the word laſteth, liveth and abideth, in reſpect of its everlaſting effects, on all upon whom it operates. This word, which by the goſpel is preached unto you. (verſ. 25.) impregnated by the Spirit of God, is the means of regeneration; and by it are dead ſinners raiſed to life.

DOCT. All men in the ſtate of grace are born again. All gracious perſons, namely, ſuch as are in a ſtate of favour with God, and endowed with gracious qualities and diſpoſitions, are regenerate perſons. In diſcourſing this ſubject, I ſhall ſhew what regeneration is; next, Why it is ſo called; and then apply the doctrine.

Of the nature of regeneration.

I. For the better underſtanding of the nature of regeneration, take this along with you in the firſt place; that as there are falſe conceptions in nature, ſo there are alſo in grace: and by theſe many are deluded, miſtaking ſome partial changes made upon them for this great and thorough change. To remove ſuch miſtakes, let theſe few things be conſidered. (1.) Many call the church their mother, whom God will not own to be his children, Cant. i. 6. My mother's children (i. e. falſe brethren) were angry with me. All that are baptized are not born again. Simon was baptized, yet ſtill in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity, Acts viii. 13. 23. Where Chriſtianity is the religion of the country, many will be called by the name of Chriſt, who have no more of him but the name: and no wonder, ſeeing the devil had his goats among Chriſt's ſheep, in theſe places where but few profeſſed the Chriſtian religion; 1 John ii. 12. They went out from us, but they were not of us. (2.) Good education is not regeneration. Education may chain up mens luſts, but cannot change their hearts. A wolf is ſtill a ravenous beaſt, though it be in chains. Joaſh was very devout during the life of his good tutor Jehoiada; but afterward he quickly ſhewed what ſpirit he was of, by his ſudden apoſtaſy, 2 Chron. xxiv. 2. 17. 18. Good example is of mighty influence to change the outward man: but that change often goes off, when one changes his company; of which the world affords many ſad inſtances. (3.) A turning from open profanity, to civility and ſobriety, falls ſhort of this ſaving change. Some are, for a while, very looſe, eſpecially in their younger years: but at length they reform, and leave their profane courſes. Here is a change, yet but ſuch an one as may be found in men utterly void of the grace of God, and whoſe righteouſneſs is ſo far from exceeding, that it doth not come up to the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees. (4.) One may engage in all the outward duties of religion, and yet not be born again. Though lead be caſt into various ſhapes, it remains ſtill but a baſe metal. Men may eſcape the pollutions of the world, and yet be but dogs and ſwine, 2 Pet. ii. 20. 22. All the external acts of religion are within the compaſs of natural abilities. Yea, hypocrites may have the counterfeit of all the graces of the Spirit: for we read of true holineſs, Eph. iv. 23. and faith unfeigned, 1 Tim. i. 5.; which ſhews us, that there is a counterfeit holineſs, and a feigned faith. (5.) Men may advance to a great deal of ſtrictneſs in their own way of religion; and yet be ſtrangers to the new-birth, Acts xxvi. 5. After the moſt ſtraiteſt ſect of our religion, I lived a Phariſee. Nature has its own unſanctified ſtrictneſs in religion. The Phariſees had ſo much of it, that they looked on Chriſt as little better than a mere libertine. A man whoſe conſcience hath been awakened, and who lives under the ſelf influence of the covenant of works, what will he not do that is within the compaſs of natural abilities? It was a truth, though it came out of a helliſh mouth, that ſkin for ſkin, all that a man hath will he give for his life, Job ii. 4. (6.) One may have ſharp ſoul-exerciſe and pangs, and yet die in the birth. Many have been in pain, that have but as it were brought forth wind. There may be ſore pangs and throws of conſcience, which turn to nothing at laſt. Pharaoh and Simon Magus had ſuch convictions, as made them deſire the prayers of others for them. Judas repented himſelf; and under terrors of conſcience, gave back his ill-gotten pieces of ſilver. All is not gold that gliſters. Trees may bloſſom fairly in the ſpring, on which no fruit is to be found in the harveſt: and ſome have ſharp ſoul-exerciſes, which are nothing but foretaſtes of hell.

The new-birth, howſoever in appearance hopefully begun, may be marred two ways. Firſt, Some, like Zarah, Gen. xxxviii. 28. 29. are brought to the birth, but go back again. They have ſharp convictions for a while: but theſe go off, and they turn as careleſs about their ſalvation, as profane as ever; and uſually worſe than ever; their laſt ſtate is worſe than their firſt, Matth. xii. 45. They get awakening grace, but not converting grace; and that goes off by degrees, as the light of the declining day, till it iſſue in midnight darkneſs. Secondly, Some, like Iſhmael, come forth too ſoon; they are born before the time of the promiſe, Gen. xvi. 2. compare Gal. iv. 22. and downward. They take up with a mere law-work, and ſtay not till the time of the promiſe of the goſpel. They ſnatch at conſolation, not waiting till it be given them; and fooliſhly draw their comfort from the law that wounded them. They apply the healing plaiſter to themſelves, before their wound be ſufficiently ſearched. The law, that rigorous huſband, ſeverely beats them, and throws in curſes and vengeance upon their ſouls: then they fall a reforming, praying, mourning, promiſing, and vowing, till this ghoſt be laid; which done, they fall aſleep again in the arms of the law: but they are never ſhaken out of themſelves and their own righteouſneſs, nor brought forward to Jeſus Chriſt.

Laſtly, There may be a wonderful moving of the affections, in ſouls that are not at all touched with regenerating grace. Where there is no grace, there may notwithſtanding be a flood of tears, as in Eſau, who found no place of repentance, though he ſought it carefully with tears, Heb. xii. 17. There may be great flaſhes of joy; as in the hearers of the word, repreſented in the parable by the ſtony ground, who anon with joy receive it, Matth. xiii. 20. There may alſo be great deſires after good things, and great delight in them too; as in theſe hypocrites deſcribed, Iſ. lviii. 2. Yet they ſeek me daily, and delight to know my ways ;---they take delight in approaching to God. See how high they may ſometimes ſtand, who yet fall away, Heb. vi. 4. 5. 6. They may be enlightened, taſte of the heavenly gift, be partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, taſte the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come. Common operations of the divine Spirit, like a land-flood, make a ſtrange turning of things upſide down: and when they are over, all run again in the ordinary channel. All theſe things may be, where the ſanctifying Spirit of Chriſt never reſts upon the ſoul; but the ſtony heart ſtill remains; and in that caſe theſe affections cannot but wither, becauſe they have no root.

But regeneration is a real thorough change, whereby the man is made a new creature, 2 Cor. v. 17. The Lord God makes the creature a new creature, as the goldſmith melts down the veſſel of diſhonour, and makes it a veſſel of honour. Man is, in reſpect of his ſpiritual ſtate, altogether disjointed by the fall; every faculty of the ſoul is, as it were, diſlocate: in regeneration the Lord looſeth every joint, and ſets it right again. Now this change made in regeneration is,

1. A change of qualities or diſpoſitions: it is not a change of the ſubſtance, but of the qualities of the ſoul. Vitious qualities are removed, and the contrary diſpoſitions are brought in, in their room. The old man is put off, Eph. iv. 22. the new man put on, ver. 24. Man loſt none of the rational faculties of his ſoul by ſin: he had an underſtanding ſtill, but it was darkened; he had ſtill a will, but it was contrary to the will of God. So in regeneration, there is not a new ſubſtance created, but new qualities are infuſed; light inſtead of darkneſs, righteouſneſs inſtead of unrighteouſneſs.

2. It is a ſupernatural change; he that is born again, is born of the Spirit, John iii. 5. Great changes may be made, by the power of nature, eſpecially when aſſiſted by external revelation. And nature may be ſo elevated by the common influences of the Spirit, that one may thereby be turned into another man, (as Saul was, 1 Sam. x. 6.) who yet never becomes a new man. But in regeneration, nature itſelf is changed, and we become partakers of the divine nature; and this muſt needs be a ſupernatural change. How can we that are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, renew ourſelves, more than a dead man can raiſe himſelf out of his grave? Who but the ſanctifying Spirit of Chriſt, can form Chriſt in a ſoul, changing it into the ſame image? Who, but the Spirit of ſanctification can give the new heart? Well may we ſay, when we ſee a man thus changed, This is the finger of God.

3. It is a change into the likeneſs of God, 2 Cor. iii. 18. We-----beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image. Every thing that generates, generates its like: the child bears the image of the parent; and they that are born of God, bear God's image. Man aſpiring to be as God, made himſelf like the devil. In his natural ſtate he reſembles the devil, as a child doth the father, John viii. 44. Ye are of your father the devil. But when this happy change comes, that image of Satan is defaced and the image of God reſtored. Chriſt himſelf, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, is the pattern, after which the new creature is made, Rom. viii. 29. For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son. Hence he is ſaid to be formed in the regenerate, Gal. iv. 19.

4. It is an univerſal change; all things become new, 2 Cor. v. 17. It is a bleſſed leaven, that leavens the whole lump, the whole ſpirit, and ſoul and body. Original ſin infects the whole man; and regenerating grace, which is the ſalve, goes as far as the ſore. This fruit of the Spirit is in all goodneſs; goodneſs of the mind, goodneſs of the will, goodneſs of the affections, goodneſs of the whole man; One gets not only a new head, to know religion, or a new tongue to talk of it; but a new heart to love and embrace it, in the whole of his converſation. When the Lord opens the ſluice of grace on the ſoul's new-birth-day, the waters run through the whole man, to purify and make him fruitful. In theſe natural changes ſpoken of before, there are, as it were, pieces of new cloth put into an old garment: a new life ſewed to an old heart; but the gracious change is a thorough change, a change both of heart and life.

5. Yet it is but an imperfect change. Though every part of the man is renewed, there is no part of him perfectly renewed. As an infant has all the parts of a man but none of them are come to their perfect growth; ſo regeneration brings a perfection of parts, to be brought forward in the gradual advances of ſanctification, 1 Pet. ii. 2. As new born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby. Although in regeneration, there is a heavenly light let into the mind; yet there is ſtill ſome darkneſs there; though the will is renewed, it is not perfectly renewed; there is ſtill ſome of the old inclination to ſin remaining: and thus it will be, till that which is in part be done away, and the light of glory come. Adam was created at his full ſtature; but they that are born, muſt have their time to grow up: ſo theſe that are born again, do come forth into the new world of grace, but imperfectly holy; though Adam being created upright, was at the ſame time perfectly righteous, without the leaſt mixture of ſinful imperfection.

Laſtly, Neverthleſs, it is a laſting change, which never goes off. The ſeed is incorruptible, ſaith the text; and ſo is the creature that is formed of it. The life given in regeneration, whatever decays it may fall under, can never be utterly loſt. His ſeed remaineth in him who is born of God, 1 John iii. 19. Though the branches ſhould be cut down, the root ſhall abide in the earth; and being watered with the dew of heaven, ſhall ſprout again: for the root of the righteous ſhall not be moved, Prov. xii. 3.

But to come to particulars,

First, In regeneration the mind is ſavingly enlightened. There is a new light let into the underſtanding; ſo that they who were ſometime darkneſs, are now light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8. The beams of the light of life, make their way into the dark dungeon of the heart: then the night is over, and the morning-light is come, which will ſhine more and more unto the perfect day. Now the man is illuminated,

1. In the knowledge of God. He has far other thoughts of God, than ever he had before, Hoſ. ii. 20. I will even betrothe thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and thou ſhalt know the Lord. The Spirit of the Lord brings him back to that queſtion, What is God? and catechiſeth him anew upon that grand point, ſo as he is made to ſay, I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye ſeeth thee, Job xliii. 5. The ſpotleſs purity of God, his exact juſtice, his all ſufficiency, and other glorious perfections revealed in his word, are by this new light diſcovered to the ſoul, with a plainneſs and certainty, that doth as far exceed the knowledge it had of theſe things before, as ocular demonſtration exceeds common fame. For now he ſees what he only heard of before.

2. He is enlightened in the knowledge of ſin. He hath other thoughts of it, than he was wont to have. Formerly his ſight could not pierce through the cover Satan laid over it: but now the Spirit of God ſtrips it before him, wipes off the paint and fairding; and he ſees it in its native colours, as the worſt of evils, exceeding ſinful, Rom. vii. 13. O what deformed monſters do formerly beloved luſts appear! were they right eyes, he would pluck them out: were they right hands, he would conſent to their cutting off. He ſees how offenſive ſin is to God, how deſtructive it is to the ſoul; and calls himſelf fool, for fighting ſo long againſt the Lord, and harbouring that deſtroyer as a boſom friend.

3. He is inſtructed in the knowledge of himſelf. Regenerating grace cauſeth the prodigal to come to himſelf, Luke xv. 17. and makes men full of eyes within, knowing every one the plague of his own heart. The mind being ſavingly enlightened, the man ſees how deſperately corrupt his nature is; what enmity againſt God and his holy law, has long lodged there: ſo that his ſoul loaths itſelf. No open ſepulchre, no puddle ſo vile and loathſome in his eyes as himſelf, Ezek. xxxvi. 31. Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall loath yourſelves in your own ſight. He is no worſe than he was before: but the ſun is ſhining; and ſo theſe pollutions are ſeen, which he could not diſcern, when there was no dawning in him; as the word is, Iſ. viii. 20. while as yet the day of grace was not broken with him.

4. He is enlightened in the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. i. 23. 24. But we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs: but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God. The truth is, unregenerate men, though capable of preaching Chriſt have not (properly ſpeaking) the knowledge of him, but only an opinion, a good opinion of him; as one has of many controverted points of doctrine, wherein he is far from certainty. As when ye meet with a ſtranger by the road, he behaving himſelf diſcreetly, ye conceive a good opinion of him; and therefore willingly converſe with him: but yet ye will not commit your money to him; becauſe, though ye have a good opinion of the man, he is a ſtranger to you, ye do not know him; ſo may they think well of Chriſt; but they will never commit themſelves to him, ſeeing they know him not. But ſaving illumination carries the ſoul beyond opinion, to the certain knowledge of Chriſt, and his excellency, 1 Theſſ. i. 5. For our goſpel came not unto you in word only, but alſo in power, and in the holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance. The light of grace thus diſcovers the ſuitableneſs of the myſtery of Chriſt, to the divine perfections, and to the ſinner's caſe. Hence the regenerate admire the glorious plan of ſalvation through Chriſt crucified, lay their whole weight upon it and heartily acquieſce therein; for whatever he be to others, he is to them Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God. But unrenewed men not ſeeing this, are offended in him: they will not venture their ſouls in that bottom, but betake themſelves to the broken boards of their own righteouſneſs. The ſame light convincingly diſcovers a ſuperlative worth, a tranſcendent glory and excellency in Chriſt, which darken all created excellencies, as the riſing ſun makes the ſtars to hide their heads; and ſo it engages the merchant-man to ſell at that he hath, to buy the one pearl of great price, Matth. xiii. 45. 46. makes the ſoul well content to take Chriſt for all, and inſtead of all. Even as an unſkilful merchant, to whom one offereth a pearl of great price, for all his petty wares, dares not venture on the bargain, for though he thinks, that one pearl may be more worth than all he has, yet he is not ſure of it; but when a jeweller comes to him, and aſſures him, it is worth double all his wares; he then greedily embraceth the bargain, and chearfully parts with all he has, for that pearl. Finally, This illumination in the knowledge of Chriſt convincingly diſcovereth to men a fulneſs in him, ſufficient for the ſupply of all their wants, enough to ſatisfy the boundleſs deſire of an immortal ſoul. They are perſuaded ſuch fulneſs is in him, and that in order to be communicate: they depend upon it, as a certain truth; and therefore their ſouls take up their eternal reſt in him.

5. The man is inſtructed in the knowledge of the vanity of the world, Pſal. cxix. 96. I have ſeen an end of all perfection. Regenerating grace elevates the ſoul, ſets it, as it were, amongſt the ſtars, from whence this earth cannot but appear a little, yea, a very little thing; even as heaven appeared before, while the ſoul was immerſed in the earth. Grace brings a man into a new world; where this world is reputed but a ſtage of vanity, an howling wilderneſs, a valley of tears. God hath hung the ſign of vanity at the door of all created enjoyments: yet how do men throng into the houſe, calling and looking for ſomewhat that is ſatisfying; even after it has been a thouſand times told them, there is no ſuch thing in it, it is not to be got there, Iſ. lvii. 10. Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy way; yet ſaidſt thou not, There is no hope. Why are men ſo fooliſh? the truth of the matter lies here, they do not ſee by the light of grace, they do not ſpiritually diſcern that ſign of vanity. They have often indeed made a rational diſcovery of it; but can that truly wean the heart from the world? Nay, no more than painted fire can burn off the priſoners bands.

But, the light of grace is the light of life, powerful and efficacious.

Laſtly, (To ſum up all in one word), in regeneration the mind is enlightened in the knowledge of ſpiritual things, 1 John ii. 20. Ye have an unction from the holy One, (that is, from Jeſus Chriſt, Rev. iii. 18. It is an alluſion to the ſanctuary, whence the holy oil was brought to anoint the prieſts), and ye know all things, viz. neceſſary to ſalvation. Though men be not book-learned, if they be born again, they are Spirit-learned; for all ſuch are taught of God, John vi. 45. The Spirit of regeneration teacheth them what they knew not before; and what they did know, as by the ear only, he teacheth them over again as by the eye. The light of grace is an overcoming light, determining men to aſſent to divine truths on the mere teſtimony of God. It is no eaſy thing for the mind of man to acquieſce in divine revelation. Many pretend great reſpect to the ſcriptures; whom, nevertheleſs, the clear ſcripture-teſtimony will not divorce from their pre-conceived opinions. But this illumination will make mens minds run, as captives, after Chriſt's chariot wheels; which, for their part, ſhall be allowed to drive over, and caſt down their own imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, 2 Cor. x. 5. It will make them receive the kingdom of God as a little child, Mark x. 15. who thinks he has ſufficient ground to believe any thing, if his father do but ſay it is ſo.

Secondly, The will is renewed. The Lord takes away the ſtony heart, and gives a heart of fleſh, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. and ſo of ſtones raiſeth up children to Abraham. Regenerating grace is powerful and efficacious, and gives the will a new ſet. It does not indeed force it; but ſweetly, yet powerfully draws it, ſo that his people are willing in the day of his power, Pſal. cx. 3. There is heavenly oratory in the Mediator's lips, to perſuade ſinners, Pſal. xlv. 2. Grace is poured into thy lips. There are cords of a man, and bands of love in his hands, to draw them after, Hoſ. xi 4. Love makes a net for elect ſouls, which will infallibly catch them, and hale them to land. The cords of Chriſt's love are ſtrong cords: and they need to be ſo, for every ſinner is heavier than a mountain of braſs: and Satan, together with the heart itſelf, draw the contrary way. But love is ſtrong as death: and the Lord's love to the ſoul he died for, is ſtrongeſt love; which acts ſo powerfully, that it muſt come off victorious.

1. The will is cured of its utter inability to will what is good. While the opening of the priſon to them that are bound, is proclaimed in the goſpel; the Spirit of God comes to the priſon-door, opens it, goes to the priſoner, and by the power of his grace makes his chains fall off; breaks the bond of iniquity, wherewith he was held in ſin, ſo as he could neither will nor do any thing truly good; brings him forth into a large place, working in him both to will and to do of his good pleaſure, Phil. ii. 13. Then it is that the ſoul, that was fixed to the earth, can move heaven-ward; the withered hand is reſtored, and can be ſtretched out.

2. There is wrought in the will a fixed averſion to evil. In regeneration, a man gets a new ſpirit put within him, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. and that ſpirit luſteth againſt the fleſh, Gal. v. 17. The ſweet morſel of ſin, ſo greedily ſwallowed down, he now loaths and would fain be rid of it; even as willingly as one, that had drunk a cup of poiſon would throw it up again. When the ſpring is ſtopt, the mud lies in the well unmoved: but when once the ſpring is cleared, the waters ſpringing up, will work the mud away by degrees. Even ſo, while a man continues in an unregenerate ſtate, ſin lies, at eaſe in the heart: but as ſoon as the Lord ſtrikes the rocky heart, with the rod of his ſtrength, in the day of converſion; grace is in him a well of water, ſpringing up into everlaſting life, John iv. 14. working away natural corruption, and gradually purifying the heart, Acts xv. 9. The renewed will riſeth up againſt ſin, ſtrikes at the root thereof, and the branches too. Luſts are now grievous, and the ſoul endeavours to ſtarve them: the corrupt nature is the ſource of all evil; and therefore the ſoul will be often laying it before the great Phyſician. O what ſorrow, ſhame, and ſelf-loathing fill the heart, in the day that grace makes its triumphant entrance into it! For now the madman is come to himſelf, and the remembrance of his follies cannot but cut him to the heart.

Laſtly, The will is endowed with an inclination, bent, and propenſity to good. In its depraved ſtate, it lay quite another way, being prone and bent to evil only: but now, by a pull of the omnipotent, all-conquering arm, it is drawn from evil to good; and gets another ſet. And as the former ſet was natural; ſo this is natural too, in reſpect of the new nature given in regeneration, which has its own holy luſtings, as well as the corrupt old nature hath its ſinful luſtings, Gal. v 17. The will, as renewed, inclines and points towards God and godlineſs. When God made man, his will, in reſpect of its intention, was directed towards God, as his chief end; in reſpect of its choice, it pointed towards that which God willed. When man unmade himſelf, his will was framed into the very reverſe hereof: he made himſelf his chief end, and his own will his law. But when man is new made, in regeneration, grace rectifies this diſorder in ſome meaſure, though not perfectly indeed; becauſe we are but renewed in part, while in this world. It brings back the ſinner, out of himſelf, to God as his chief end, truly, though not perfectly, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. Phil. i. 21. For me to live is Chriſt. It makes him to deny himſelf, and whatever way he turns, to point habitually towards God; who is the centre of the gracious ſoul, its home, its dwelling-place in all generations, Pſal. xc. 1. By regenerating grace, the will is framed into a conformity to the will of God. It is conformed to his preceptive will, being endowed with holy inclinations, agreeable to every one of his commands. The whole law is impreſſed on the gracious ſoul: every part of it is written over, on the renewed heart. And although remaining corruption makes ſuch blots in the writing, that oft-times the man himſelf cannot read it: yet he that wrote it can read it at all times; it is never quite blotted out, nor can be. What he has written, he has written, it ſhall ſtand; For this is the covenant-- ----I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, Heb. viii. 10. And it is a covenant of ſalt, a perpetual covenant. It is alſo conformed to his providential will; ſo that the man will no more be maſter of his own proceſs; nor carve out his lot for himſelf. He learns to ſay, from his heart, The will of the Lord be done: he ſhall chuſe our inheritance for us, Pſal. xlvii. 4. Thus the will is diſpoſed to fall in with thoſe things, which in its depraved ſtate, it could never be reconciled to.

Particularly, (1.) The ſoul is reconciled to the covenant of peace. The Lord God propoſeth a covenant of peace to ſinners; a covenant which he himſelf hath framed, and regiſtered in the Bible: but they are not pleaſed with it. Nay, an unrenewed heart cannot be pleaſed with it. Were it put into their hands, to frame it according to their mind; they would blot many things out of it, which God has put in, and put in many things God has kept out. But the renewed heart is entirely ſatisfied with the covenant, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. He hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, ordered in all things, and ſure: this is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire. Though the covenant could not be brought down to their depraved will; their will is, by grace, brought up to the covenant: they are well pleaſed with it: there is nothing in it, they would have out; nor is any thing left out of it, which they would have in. (2.) The will is diſpoſed to receive Chriſt Jeſus the Lord. The ſoul is content to ſubmit to him. Regenerating grace undermines, and brings down the towering imaginations of the heart, raiſed up againſt its rightful Lord: it breaks the iron-ſinew, which kept the ſinner from bowing to him; and diſpoſeth him to be no more ſtiff-necked, but to yield himſelf. He is willing to take on the yoke of Chriſt's commands, to take up the croſs, and to follow him. He is content to take Chriſt, on any terms. Pſal. cx. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power.

Now the mind being ſavingly enlightened, and the will renewed; the ſinner is thereby determined and enabled, to anſwer the goſpel-call. So the main work in regeneration is done; the fort of the heart is taken: there is room made for the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the innermoſt parts of the ſoul; the inner-door of the will being now opened to him, as well as the outer-door of the underſtanding. In one word, Chriſt is paſſively received into the heart; he is come into the ſoul, by his quickening Spirit, whereby ſpiritual life is given to the man, who, in himſelf was dead in ſin. And his firſt vital act, we may conceive to be an active receiving of Jeſus Chriſt diſcerned in his glorious excellency; that is, a believing on him, a cloſing with him, as diſcerned, offered, and exhibited in the word of his grace, the glorious goſpel: the immediate effect of which is union with him, John i. 12. 13. To as many as received him, to them gave he power (or privilege) to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God, Eph. iii. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith. Chriſt having taken the heart by ſtorm, and triumphantly entered into it, in regeneration; the ſoul by faith, yields itſelf to him, as it is expreſſed, 2 Chron. xxx. 8. Thus, this glorious King, who came into the heart, by his Spirit; dwells in it by faith. The ſoul being drawn, runs; and being effectually called, comes.

Thirdly, In regeneration, there is a happy change made on the affections; they are both rectified and regulated.

1. This change rectifies the affections, placing them on ſuitable objects. 2 Theſſ. iii. 5. The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God. The regenerate man's deſires are rectified; they are ſet on God himſelf, and the things above. He who before cried with the world, Who will ſhew us any good? has changed his note, and ſays, Lord, lift up the light of thy countenance upon us, Pſal. iv. 6. Sometimes he ſaw no beauty in Chriſt, for which he was to be deſired; but now he is all deſires, he is altogether lovely, Cant. v. 16. The main ſtream of his deſires is turned to run towards God; for there is the one thing he deſireth, Pſal. xxvii. 4. He deſires to be holy, as well as to be happy; and rather to be gracious than great. His hopes, which before were low, and ſtaked down to things on earth, are now raiſed, and ſet on the glory which is to be revealed. He entertains the hope of eternal life, founded on the word of promiſe, Tit. i. 2. Which hope he has, as an anchor of the ſoul, fixing the heart under trials, Heb. vi. 19. And it puts him upon purifying himſelf, even as God is pure, John iii. 3. For he is begotten again unto a lively hope, 1 Pet. i. 3. His love is raiſed, and ſet on God himſelf, Pſal. xviii. 1. On his holy law, Pſal. cxix. 97. Though it ſtrike againſt his moſt beloved luſt, he ſays, The law is holy, and the commandment holy, and juſt, and good, Rom. vii. ver. 12. He loves the ordinances of God, Pſal. lxxxiv. 1. How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hoſts! Being paſſed from death unto life, he loves the brethren, (1 John iii. 14.) the people of God, as they are called, 1 Pet. ii. 10. He loves God for himſelf; and what is God's for his ſake. Yea, as being a child of God, he loves his own enemies. His heavenly Father is compaſſionate and benevolent: He maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil, and on the good; and ſendeth rain on the juſt, and on the unjuſt: and therefore he is in the like manner diſpoſed, Matth. v. 44. 45. His hatred is turned againſt ſin, in himſelf and others, Pſal. ci. 3. I hate the work of them that turn aſide, it ſhall not cleave to me. He groans under the remains of it, and longs for deliverance, Rom. vii. 24. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! His joys and delights are in God the Lord, in the light of his countenance, in his law; and in his people, becauſe they are like him. Sin is what he chiefly fears: it is a fountain of ſorrow to him now, though formerly a ſpring of pleaſure.

2. It regulates the affections placed on ſuitable objects. Our affections, when placed on the creature, are naturally exorbitant; when we joy in it, we are apt to overjoy; and when we ſorrow, we are ready to ſorrow overmuch: but grace bridles theſe affections, clips their wings, and keeps them within bounds, that they overflow not all their banks. It makes a man hate his father, and mother, and wife, and children,---yea, and his own life alſo; comparatively; that is, to love them leſs than he loves God, Luke xiv. 26. It alſo ſanctifies lawful affections; bringing them forth from right principles, and directing them to right ends. There may be unholy deſires after Chriſt and his grace; as when men deſire Chriſt, not from any love to him, but merely out of love to themſelves. Give us of your oil, ſaid the fooliſh virgins, for our lamps are gone out, Matth. xxv. 8. There may be an unſanctified ſorrow for ſin; as when one ſorroweth for it, not becauſe it is diſpleaſing to God, but only becauſe of the wrath annexed to it, as did Pharaoh, Judas, and others. So a man may love his father and mother, from mere natural principles, without any reſpect to the command of God binding him thereto. But grace ſanctifies the affections, in ſuch caſes, making them to run in a new channel of love to God, reſpect to his commands, and regard to his glory. Again, grace ſcrews up the affections where they are too low. It gives the chief ſeat in them to God, and pulls down all other rivals, whether perſons or things making them lie at his feet. Pſal. lxxiii. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. He is loved for himſelf, and other perſons or things for his ſake. What is lovely in them, to the renewed heart, is ſome ray of the divine goodneſs appearing in them: for unto gracious ſouls they ſhine only by borrowed light. This accounts for the ſaints loving all men, and yet hating thoſe that hate God, and contemning the wicked as vile perſons. They hate and contemn them for their wickedneſs; there is nothing of God in that, and therefore nothing lovely nor honourable in it: but they love them for their commendable qualities or perfections, whether natural or moral; becauſe, in whomſoever theſe are, they are from God, and can be traced to him as their fountain. Finally, regenerating grace ſets the affections ſo firmly on God, that the man is diſpoſed, at God's command, to quite his hold of every thing elſe, in order to keep his hold of Chriſt; to hate father and mother, in compariſon with Chriſt, Luke xiv. 26. It makes even lawful enjoyments like Joſeph's mantle, to hang looſe about a man, that he may quit them, when he is in hazard to be enſnared by holding them.

If the ſtream of our affections was never thus turned, we are, doubtleſs, going down the ſtream into the pit. If the luſt of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life, have the throne in our hearts, which ſhould be poſſeſſed by the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; if we never had ſo much love to God, as to ourſelves; if ſin has been ſomewhat bitter to us, but never ſo bitter as ſuffering, never ſo bitter as the pain of being weaned from it; truly we are ſtrangers to this ſaving change. For grace turns the affections upſide down, whenever it comes into the heart.

Fourthly, The conſcience is renewed. Now that a new light is ſet up in the ſoul, in regeneration; conſcience is enlightened, inſtructed, and informed. That candle of the Lord, (Prov. xx. 27.) is now ſnuffed and brightened; ſo as it ſhines, and ſends forth its light into the moſt retired corners of the heart; diſcovering ſins which the ſoul was not aware of before: and, in a ſpecial manner, diſcovering the corruption or depravity of nature, that ſeed and ſpawn whence all actual ſins proceed. This produces the new complaint, Rom. vii. 24. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! That conſcience, which lay ſleeping in the man's boſom before, is now awakened, and makes its voice to be heard through the whole ſoul: and therefore there is no more reſt for him in the ſluggard's bed; he muſt get up and be doing, ariſe, haſte and eſcape for his life. It powerfully incites to obedience, even in the moſt ſpiritual acts, which lay not within the view of the natural conſcience; and powerfully reſtrains from ſin, even from theſe ſins, which do not ly open to the obſervation of the world. It urgeth the ſovereign authority of God, to which the heart is now reconciled, and which it willingly acknowledges; and ſo it engageth the man to his duty, whatever be the hazard from the world; for it fills the heart ſo with the fear of God, that the force of the fear of man is broken. This hath engaged many to put their life in their hand, and follow the cauſe of religion they once contemned, and reſolutely walk in the path they formerly abhorred, Gal. i. 23. He which perſecuted us in times paſt, now preacheth the faith which once he deſtroyed. Guilt now makes the conſcience to ſmart. It hath bitter remorſe for ſins paſt, which fills the ſoul with anxiety, ſorrow, and ſelf-loathing. And every new reflection on theſe ſins is apt to affect, and make its wounds bleed afreſh with regret. It is made tender, in point of ſin and duty, for the time to come: being once burnt, it dreads the fire, and fears to break the hedge where it was formerly bit by the ſerpent. Finally, the renewed conſcience drives the ſinner to Jeſus Chriſt, as the only Phyſician that can draw out the ſting of guilt; and whoſe blood alone can purge the conſcience from dead works, Heb. ix. 14: refuſing all eaſe offered to it from any other hand. And this is an evidence, that the conſcience is not only fired, as it may be in an unregenerate ſtate; but oiled alſo, with regenerating grace.

Fifthly, As the memory wanted not its ſhare of depravity, it is alſo bettered by regenerating grace. The memory is weakened, with reſpect to thoſe things that are not worth their room therein; and men are taught to forget injuries, and drop their reſentments, Matth. v. 44. 45. Do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you,---That ye may be (i. e. appear to be) the children of your Father which is in heaven. It is ſtrengthened for ſpiritual things. We have Solomon's receipt for an ill memory, Prov. iii. 1. My ſon, ſaith he, forget not my law. But how ſhall it be kept in mind? Let thine heart keep my commandments. Grace makes a heart-memory, even where there is no good head-memory, Pſal. cxix. 11. Thy word have I hid in mine heart. The heart truly touched with the powerful ſweetneſs of truth, will help the memory to retain what is ſo reliſhed. Did divine truths make deeper impreſſions on our hearts, they would thereby impreſs themſelves with more force on our memories, Pſal. cxix. 93. I will never forget thy precepts; for with them thou haſt quickened me. Grace ſanctifies the memory. Many have large, but unſanctified memories, which ſerve only to gather knowledge, whereby to aggravate their condemnation: but the renewed memory ſerves to remember his commandments to do them, Pſal. ciii. 18. It is a ſacred ſtore-houſe, from whence a Chriſtian is furniſhed in his way to Zion; for faith and hope are often ſupplied out of it, in a dark hour. It is the ſtore-houſe of former experiences; and theſe are the believer's way-marks, by noticing of which he comes to know where he is, even in a dark time, Pſal. xlii. 6. O my God, my ſoul is caſt down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, It alſo helps the ſoul to godly ſorrow and ſelf-loathing, preſenting old guilt anew before the conſcience, and making it bleed afreſh, though the ſin be already pardoned, Pſal. xxv. 7. Remember not the ſins of my youth. And where unpardoned guilt is lying on the ſleeping conſcience, it is often employed to bring in a word, which, in a moment, ſets the whole ſoul aſtir: as, when Peter remembered the words of Jeſus,---he went out and wept bitterly, Matth. xxvi. 75. The word of God, laid up in a ſanctified memory, ſerves a man to reſiſt temptations, puts the ſword in his hand againſt his ſpiritual enemies, and is a light to direct his ſteps in the way of religion and righteouſneſs.

Sixthly, There is a change made on the body, and the members thereof, in reſpect of their uſe; they are conſecrated to the Lord. Even the body is---for the Lord, 1 Cor. vi. 13. It is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 19. The members thereof, that were formerly inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin, become inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God, Rom. vi. 13. Servants to righteouſneſs unto holineſs, ver. 19. The eye, that conveyed ſinful imaginations into the heart, is under a covenant, Job. xxxi. 1. to do ſo no more; but to ſerve the ſoul, in viewing the works, and reading the word of God. The ear, that had often been death's porter, to let in ſin, is turned to be the gate of life, by which the word of life enters the ſoul. The tongue, that ſet on fire the whole courſe of nature, is reſtored to the office it was deſigned for by the Creator; namely, to be an inſtrument of glorifying him, and ſetting forth his praiſe. In a word, the whole man is for God, in ſoul and body, which by this bleſſed change are made his.

Laſtly, This gracious change ſhines forth in the converſation. Even the outward man is renewed. A new heart makes newneſs of life. When the King's daughter is all glorious within, her clothing is of wrought gold, Pſal. xlv. 13. The ſingle eye makes the whole body full of light, Matth. vi. 22. This change will appear in every part of one's converſation; particularly in theſe following things.

1. In the change of his company. Though ſometimes he deſpiſed the company of the ſaints, now they are the excellent, in whom is all his delight, Pſal. xvi. 3. I am a companion of all that fear thee, ſaith the royal pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxix. 63. A renewed man joins himſelf with the ſaints: for he and they are like minded, in that which is their main work and buſineſs: they have all one new nature; they are travelling to Immanuel's land, and converſe together in the language of Canaan. In vain do men pretend to religion, while ungodly company is their choice; for a companion of fools ſhall be deſtroyed, Prov. xiii. 20. Religion will make a man ſhy of throwing himſelf into an ungodly family, or any unneceſſary familiarity with wicked men; as one that is clean will beware of going into an infected houſe.

2. In his relative capacity, he will be a new man. Grace makes men gracious in their ſeveral relations, and natively leads them to the conſcientious performance of relative duties. It does not only make good men, and good women, but makes good ſubjects, good huſbands, good wives, children, ſervants, and, in a word, good relatives in the church, common-wealth, and family. It is a juſt exception made againſt the religion of many; namely, that they are bad relatives, they are ill huſbands, wives, maſters, ſervants, &c. How will we prove ourſelves to be new creatures, if we be ſtill but juſt ſuch as we were before, in our ſeveral relations? 2 Cor. v. 17. Therefore, if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt away: behold, all things are become new. Real godlineſs will gain a teſtimony to a man, from the conſciences of his neareſt relations; though they know more of his ſinful infirmities than others do, as we ſee in that caſe, 2 Kings iv. 2. Thy ſervant my huſband is dead, and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear the Lord.

3. In the way of his following his worldly buſineſs, there is a great change. It appears to be no more his all, as ſometime it was. Though ſaints apply themſelves to worldly buſineſs, as well as others; yet their hearts are not ſwallowed up in it. It is evident they are carrying on a trade with Heaven, as well as a trade with earth,

Philip. iii. 20. For our converſation is in heaven. And they go about their employment in the world, as a duty laid upon them by the Lord of all, doing their lawful buſineſs as the will of God, Eph. vi. 7. working, becauſe he has ſaid, Thou ſhalt not ſteal.

4. They have a ſpecial concern for the advancement of the kingdom of Chriſt in the world: they eſpouſe the intereſts of religion, and prefer Jeruſalem above their chief joy, Pſal. cxxxvii. 6. How privately ſoever they live, grace makes them a public ſpirit, which will concern itſelf in the ark and work of God; in the goſpel of God; and in the people of God; even theſe of them whom they never ſaw in the face. As children of God, they naturally care for theſe things. They have a new and unwonted concern for the ſpiritual good of others: and no ſooner do they taſte of the power of grace themſelves, but they are inclined to ſet up to be agents for Chriſt and holineſs, in the world; as appears in the caſe of the woman of Samaria, who when Chriſt had manifeſted himſelf to her, went her way into the city, and ſaith unto the men, Come, ſee a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Chriſt? John iv. 28, 29. They have ſeen and felt the evil of ſin, and therefore pity the world lying in wickedneſs. They would fain pluck the brands out of the fire, remembering that they themſelves were plucked out of it. They will labour to commend religion to others, both by word and example; and rather deny themſelves their liberty in indifferent things, than, by the uncharitable uſe of it, deſtroy others, 1 Cor. viii. 13. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no fleſh while the world ſtandeth, leſt I make my brother to offend.

5. In their uſe of lawful comforts, there is a great change. They reſt not in them, as their end; but uſe them as means to help them in their way. They draw their ſatisfaction from the higher ſprings, even while the lower ſprings are running. Thus Hannah, having obtained a ſon, rejoiced not ſo much in the gift, as in the giver, 1 Sam. ii. 1. And Hannah prayed, and ſaid, My heart rejoiceth in the Lord. Yea, when the comforts of life are gone, they can ſubſiſt without them, and rejoice in the Lord, although the fig-tree do not bloſſom, Hab. iii. 17. 18. Grace teacheth to uſe the conveniences of a preſent life paſſingly; and to ſhew a holy moderation in all things. The heart, which formerly immerſed itſelf in theſe things, without fear, is now ſhy of being over much pleaſed with them; and, being apprehenſive of danger, uſes them warily; as the dogs of Egypt run, while they lap their water out of the river Nile, for fear of the crocodiles that are in it.

Laſtly, This change ſhines forth, in the man's performance of religious duties. He who lived in the neglect of them will do ſo no more, if once the grace of God enter into his heart. If a man be new-born, he will deſire the ſincere milk of the word, 1 Pet. ii. 2. 3. Whenever the prayerleſs perſon gets the Spirit of grace, he will be in him a Spirit of ſupplication, Zech. xii. 10. It is as natural for one that is born again to fall a praying, as for the new-born babe to fall a crying, Acts ix. 11. Behold, he prayeth. His heart will be a temple for God, and his houſe a church. His devotion, which before was ſuperficial and formal, is now ſpiritual and lively; for as much as heart and tongue are touched with a live-coal from heaven: and he reſts not in the mere performing of duties, as careful only to get his taſk done; but in every duty ſeeketh communion with God in Chriſt, juſtly conſidering them as means appointed of God for that end, and reckoning himſelf diſappointed if he miſs of it. Thus far of the nature of regeneration.

The reſemblance betwixt natural and ſpiritual generation.

II. I come to ſhew why this change is called regeneration, a being born again. It is ſo called, becauſe of the reſemblance betwixt natural and ſpiritual generation, which lies in the following particulars.

Firſt, Natural generation is a myſterious thing: and ſo is ſpiritual generation, John iii. 8. The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: ſo is every one that is born of the Spirit. The work of the Spirit is felt; but his way of working is a myſtery we cannot comprehend. A new light is let into the mind, and the will is renewed; but how that light is conveyed thither, how the will is fettered with cords of love, and how the rebel is made a willing captive, we can no more tell, than we can tell how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child, Eccleſ. xi. 5. As a man hears the ſound of the wind, and finds it ſtirring; but knows not where it begins, and where it ends; ſo is every one that is born of the Spirit: he finds the change that is made upon him; but how it is produced, he knoweth not. One thing he may know, that whereas he was blind, now he ſeeth: but the ſeed of grace doth ſpring and grow up, he knoweth not how, Mark iv. 26. 27.

Secondly, In both, the creature comes to a being it had not before. The child is not, till it be generate; and a man has no gracious being, no being in grace, till he be regenerate. Regeneration is not ſo much the curing of a ſick man, as the quickening of a dead man, Eph. ii. 1. 5. Man in his depraved ſtate is a mere non-entity in grace, and is brought into a new being, by the power of him who calleth things that be not as though they were; being created in Jeſus Chriſt unto good works, Eph. ii. 10. Therefore our Lord Jeſus, to give ground of hope to the Laodiceans, in their wretched and miſerable ſtate, propoſeth himſelf as the beginning of the creation of God, Rev. iii. 14. namely, the active beginning of it; for all things were made by him, at firſt, John i. 3. From whence they might gather, that ſeeing he made them when they were nothing, he could make them over again, when worſe than nothing; the ſame hand that made them his creatures, could make them new creatures.

Thirdly, As the child is merely paſſive in generation, ſo is the child of God in regeneration. The one contributes nothing to its own generation; neither does the other contribute any thing, by way of efficiency, to its own regeneration: for though a man may lay himſelf down at the pool; yet he hath no hand in moving of the water, no efficacy in performing of the cure. One is born the child of a king, another the child of a beggar: the child has no hand at all in this difference. God leaves ſome in their depraved ſtate; others he brings into a ſtate of grace or regeneracy. If thou be thus honoured, no thanks to thee; for who maketh thee to differ from another? 1 Cor. iv. 7.

Fourthly, There is a wonderful contexture of parts in both births. Admirable is the ſtructure of man's body, in which there is ſuch a variety of organs; nothing wanting, nothing ſuperfluous. The Pſalmiſt, conſidering his own body, looks on it as a piece of marvellous work; I am fearfully and wonderfully made, ſaith he, Pſal. cxxxix. 14. and curiouſly wrought in the lower parts of the earth, ver. 15. that is, in the womb, where I know not how the bones do grow, more than I know what is a-doing in the loweſt parts of the earth. In natural generation we are curiouſly wrought, as a piece of needle-work; as the word imports: even ſo it is in regeneration, Pſal. xlv. 14. She ſhall be brought unto the King, in raiment of needle-work, raiment curiouſly wrought. It is the ſame word in both texts. And what that raiment is, the apoſtle tells us, Eph. iv. 24. It is the new man, which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. That is the raiment, he ſaith in the ſame place, we muſt put on; not excluding the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Both are curiouſly wrought, as maſter-pieces of the manifold wiſdom of God. O the wonderful contexture of graces in the new creature! O glorious creature, new-made, after the image of God! It is grace for grace in Chriſt, which makes up this new man, John i. 16: even as in bodily generation, the child has member for member in the parent; has every member the parent has in a certain proportion.

Fifthly, All this, in both caſes, hath its riſe from that which is in itſelf very ſmall and inconſiderable. O the power of God, in making ſuch a creature of corruptible ſeed, and much more in bringing forth the new creature from ſo ſmall beginnings; It is as the little cloud, like a man's hand, which ſpread, till heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain, 1 Kings xviii. 44, 45. A man gets a word at a ſermon which hundreds beſides him hear, and let ſlip: but it remains with him, works in him, and never leaves him, till the little world be turned upſide down by it; that is, till he become a new man. It is like the vapour that got up into Ahaſuerus's head, and cut off ſleep from his eyes, Eſth. vi. 1. which proved a ſpring of ſuch motions as never ceaſed, until Mordecai, in royal pomp, was brought on horſeback through the ſtreet, proud Haman trudging at his foot; the ſame Haman afterwards hanged, Mordecai advanced, and the church delivered from Haman's helliſh plot. The grain of muſtard ſeed---becometh a tree, Matth. xiii. 31, 32. God loves to bring great things out of ſmall beginnings.

Sixthly, Natural generation is carried on by degrees, Job x. 10. Haſt thou not poured me out as milk, and crudled me like cheeſe? So is regeneration. It is with the ſoul, ordinarily, in regeneration, as with the blind man cured by our Lord, who firſt ſaw men as trees walking, afterwards ſaw every man clearly, Matth. viii. 23, 24, 25. It is true, regeneration being, ſtrictly ſpeaking, a paſſing from death to life, the ſoul is quickened in a moment; likeas, when the embryo is brought to perfection in the womb, the ſoul is infuſed into the lifeleſs lump. Nevertheleſs, we may imagine ſomewhat like conception in ſpiritual generation, whereby the ſoul is prepared for quickening: and the new creature is capable of growth, 1 Pet. ii. 2. and of life more abundantly, John x. 10.

Seventhly, In both there are new relations. The regenerate may call God, Father; for they are his children, John i. 12. 13. begotten of him, 1 Pet. i. 3. The bride, the Lamb's wife, (that is the church,) is their mother, Gal. iv. 26. They are related, as brethren and ſiſters, to angels and glorified ſaints; the family of heaven. They are of the heavenly ſtock: the meaneſt of them, the baſe things of the world, 1 Cor. i. 28. the kinleſs things, (as the words imports,) who cannot boaſt of the blood that runs in their veins, are yet, by their new birth, near of kin with the excellent in the earth.

Eighthly, There is a likeneſs betwixt the parent and the child. Every thing that generates, generates its like; and the regenerate are partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 14. The moral perfections of the divine nature are, in meaſure and degree, communicated to the renewed ſoul: and thus the divine image is retrieved; ſo that, as the child reſembles the father, the new creature reſembles God himſelf, being holy as he is holy.

Laſtly, As there is no birth without pain, both to the mother and to the child; ſo there is great pain in bringing forth the new creature. The children have more or leſs of theſe birth pains, whereby they are pricked in their heart, Acts ii. 27. The ſoul hath ſore pains, when under conviction and humiliation. A wounded ſpirit who can bear? The mother is pained, Zion travels, Iſ. lxvi. 8. She ſighs, groans, crieth, and hath hard labour in her miniſters and members, to bring forth children to her Lord, Gal. iv. 19. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, until Chriſt be formed in you. And never was a mother more feelingly touched with joy, that a man-child is born into the world, than ſhe is upon the new birth of her children. But, what is more remarkable than all this; we read, not only of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt's travail (or toil) of ſoul, Iſ. liii. 11. but (what lies more directly to our purpoſe) of his pains, or pangs, as of one travailing in child-birth; ſo the word uſed, Acts ii. 24. properly ſignifies. Well may he call the new creature, as Rachel called her dear-bought ſon Benoni, i. e. the ſon of my ſorrow; and as ſhe called another, Napthali, i. e. my wreſtling: for the pangs of that travail put him to ſtrong crying and tears, Heb. v. 7. yea, into an agony and bloody ſweat, Luke xxii. 44. And in the end he died of theſe pangs, they became to him the pains of death, Acts ii. 24.

The doctrine of regeneration applied.

USE I. By what is ſaid, you may try whether you are in the ſtate of grace, or not. If ye be brought out of the ſtate of wrath, or ruin, into the ſtate of grace, or ſalvation; ye are new creatures, ye are born again. But ye will ſay, How ſhall we know whether we be born again or not? Anſ. Did you aſk me, if the ſun were riſen, and how you ſhould know, whether it were riſen, or not? I would bid you look up to the heavens, and ſee it with your eyes. And would ye know if the light be riſen in your heart? Look in, and ſee. Grace is light, and diſcovers itſelf. Look into thy mind, ſee if it has been illuminate in the knowledge of God. Haſt thou been inwardly taught what God is? Were thine eyes ever turned inward to ſee thyſelf, the ſinfulneſs of thy depraved ſtate; the corruption of thy nature; the ſins of thy heart and life? Waſt thou ever let into a view of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin? Have thine eyes ſeen King Jeſus in his beauty; the manifold wiſdom of God in him, his tranſcendent excellency, and abſolute fulneſs and ſufficiency, with the vanity and emptineſs of all things elſe? Next, What change is there on thy will? Are the fetters taken off, wherewith it was ſometimes bound up from moving heavenwards? And has thy will got a new ſet? Doſt thou find an averſion to ſin, and a proneneſs to good wrought in thy heart? Is thy ſoul turned towards God, as thy chief end? Is thy will new moulded into ſome meaſure of conformity to the preceptive and providential will of God? Art thou heartily reconciled to the covenant of peace, and fixedly diſpoſed to the receiving of Chriſt, as he is offered in the goſpel? And as to a change on your affections, are they rectified, and placed on right objects? Are your deſires going out after God? are they to his name, and remembrance of him? Iſ. xxvi. 8. Are your hopes in him? Is your love ſet upon him, and your hatred ſet againſt ſin? Does your offending a good God affect your heart with ſorrow, and do you fear ſin more than ſuffering? Are your affections regulated? Are they, with reſpect to created comforts, brought down, as being too high; and, with reſpect to God in Chriſt, ſcrewed up, as being too low? Has he the chief ſeat in your heart? And are all your lawful worldly comforts and enjoyments laid at his feet? Has thy conſcience been enlightened and awakened, refuſing all eaſe, but from the application of the blood of a Redeemer? Is thy memory ſanctified, thy body conſecrated to the ſervice of God? And art thou now walking in newneſs of life? Thus ye may diſcover, whether ye are born again, or not.

But, for your further help in this matter, I will diſcourſe a little of another ſign of regeneration, namely, the love of the brethren; an evidence whereby the weakeſt and moſt timorous ſaints have often had comfort, when they could have little or no conſolation from other marks propoſed to them. This the apoſtle lays down, 1 John iii. 14. We know that we have paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren. It is not to be thought, that the apoſtle, by the brethren in this place, means brethren by a common relation to the firſt Adam, but to the ſecond Adam Chriſt Jeſus: becauſe, howſoever true it is, that univerſal benevolence, a good-will to the whole race of mankind, takes place in the renewed ſoul, as being a lively lineament of the divine image; yet the whole context ſpeaks of thoſe that are the ſons of God, ver. 1, 2. children of God, ver. 10. born of God, ver. 9. diſtinguiſhing betwixt the children of God, and the children of the devil, ver. 10. betwixt theſe that are of the devil, ver. 8. 12. and theſe that are of God, ver. 10. And the text itſelf comes in as a reaſon why we ſhould not marvel that the world hates the brethren, the children of God, ver. 13. How can we marvel at it, ſeeing the love of the brethren is an evidence of one's having paſſed from death to life? And therefore it were abſurd to look for that love amongſt the men of the world, who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſin. They cannot love the brethren; no marvel then that they hate them. Wherefore it is plain, that by brethren here are meant brethren by regeneration.

Now, in order to ſet this mark of regeneration in a true light, conſider theſe three things. (1.) This love to the brethren, is a love to them as ſuch. Then do we love them in the ſenſe of the text, when the grace, or image of God in them, is the chief motive of our love to them. When we love the godly for their godlineſs, the ſaints for their ſanctity or holineſs: then we love God in them, and ſo may conclude, we are born of God; for every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him alſo that is begotten of him, 1 John v. 1. Hypocrites may love ſaints, on account of a civil relation to them; becauſe of their obliging converſation; for the being of the ſame opinion with themſelves in religious matters; and on many other ſuch like accounts, whereby wicked men may be induced to love the godly. But happy they, who can love them for naked grace in them; for their heaven-born temper and diſpoſition: who can pick this pearl out of a dunghill of infirmities in and about them; lay hold on it, and love them for it. (2.) It is a love that will be given to all, in whom the grace of God appears. They that love one ſaint, becauſe he is a ſaint, will have love to all the ſaints, Eph. i. 15. They will love all, who, to their diſcerning, bear the image of God. They that cannot love a gracious perſon in rags, but confine their love to thoſe of them who wear gay clothing, have not this love to the brethren in them. Theſe who confine their love to a party, to whom God has not confined his grace, are ſouls too narrow to be put among the children. In what points ſoever men differ from us, in their judgment or way; yet if they appear to agree with us, in love to God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and in bearing his image, we will love them as brethren, if we ourſelves be of the heavenly family. And, (3.) If this love be in us, the more grace any perſon appears to be poſſeſſed of, he will be the more beloved by us. The more vehemently the holy fire of grace doth flame in any, the hearts of true Chriſtians will be the more warmed in love to them. It is not with the ſaints as with many other men, who make themſelves the ſtandard for others; and love them ſo far as they think they are like themſelves. But, if they ſeem to outſhine and darken them, their love is turned to hatred and envy, and they endeavour to detract from the due praiſe of their exemplary piety: becauſe nothing reliſheth with them in the practice of religion, that goes beyond their own meaſure; what of the life and power of religion appears in others, ſerves only to raiſe the ſerpentine grudge in their Phariſaical hearts. But, as for them that are born again, their love and affection to the brethren, bears proportion to the degrees of the divine image they diſcern in them.

Now, if ye would improve theſe things to the knowledge of your ſtate, I would adviſe you, (1.) To ſet apart ſome time, when ye are at home, for a review of your caſe, and try your ſtate by what has been ſaid. Many have comfort and clearneſs as to their ſtate, at a ſermon, who in a little time loſe it again: becauſe, while they hear the word preached, they make application of it; but do not conſider of theſe things more deliberately and leiſurely, when alone. The action is too ſudden and ſhort, to give laſting comfort; and it is often ſo indeliberate, that it has bad conſequences. Therefore, ſet about this work at home, after earneſt and ſerious prayer to God for his help in it. Complain not of your want of time, while the night follows the buſy day, nor of place, while fields and out-houſes are to be got. (2.) Renew your repentance before the Lord. Guilt lying on the conſcience, unrepented of, may darken all your evidences and marks of grace. It provokes the Spirit of grace to depart; and when he goes, our light ceaſes. It is not fit time for a ſaint to read his evidences, when the candle is blown out by ſome conſcience-wounding guilt. Laſtly, Exert the powers of the new nature; let the graces of the divine Spirit in you, diſcover themſelves by action. If ye would know whether there is a ſacred fire in your breaſt, or not, ye muſt blow the coal: for although it be, and be a live-coal; yet if it be under the aſhes, it will give you no light. Settle in your hearts a firm purpoſe, through the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus, to comply with every known duty, and watch againſt every known ſin, having a readineſs of mind to be inſtructed in what ye know not. If gracious ſouls would thus manage their enquiries into their ſtate, it is likely they would have a comfortable iſſue; and if others would take ſuch a ſolemn review, and make trial of their ſtate, impartially, ſifting themſelves before the tribunal of their own conſciences, they might have a timely diſcovery of their own naughtineſs: but the neglect of ſelf-examination leaves moſt men under ſad deluſions as to their ſtate, and deprives many ſaints of the comfortable ſight of the grace of God in them.

But, that I may afford ſome further help to true Chriſtians, in their enquiries into their ſtate; I ſhall propoſe and briefly anſwer ſome caſes or doubts, which may poſſibly hinder ſome perſons from the comfortable view of their happy ſtate. The childrens bread muſt not be with-held; though, while it is reached to them, the dogs ſhould ſnatch at it.

CASE 1. "I doubt if I be regenerate; becauſe I "know not the preciſe time of my converſion; nor can "I trace the particular ſteps in the way in which it was "brought to paſs." Anſw. Though it is very deſirable to be able to give an account of the beginning, and the gradual advances of the Lord's work upon our ſouls, as ſome ſaints can diſtinctly do, (howbeit the manner of the Spirit's working is ſtill a myſtery), yet this is not neceſſary to evidence the truth of grace. Happy he that can ſay, in this caſe, as the blind man in the goſpel, One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I ſee. Likeas, when we ſee flame, we know there is fire, though we know not how or when it began; ſo the truth of grace in us may be diſcerned, though we know not how or when it was dropt into our hearts. If thou canſt perceive the happy change, which is wrought on thy ſoul; if thou findeſt thy mind is enlightened, thy will inclined to comply with the will of God in all things, eſpecially to fall in with the divine plan of ſalvation, through a crucified Redeemer; in vain doſt thou trouble thyſelf, and refuſe comfort, becauſe thou knoweſt not, how and what way it was brought about.

CASE 2. "If I were a new creature, ſin could not "prevail againſt me as it doth." Anſw. Though we muſt not lay pillows for hypocrites to reſt their heads upon, who indulge themſelves in their ſins, and make the doctrine of God's grace ſubſervient to their luſts, lying down contentedly in the bond of iniquity, like men that are fond of golden chains; yet it muſt be owned, the juſt man falleth ſeven times a-day, and iniquity may prevail againſt the children of God. But, if thou art groaning under the weight of the body of death, the corruption of thy nature, loathing thyſelf for the ſins of thy heart and life, ſtriving to mortify thy luſts, fleeing daily to the blood of Chriſt for pardon, and looking to his Spirit for ſanctification: though thou mayſt be obliged to ſay with the Pſalmiſt, Iniquities prevail againſt me: yet thou mayſt add with him, As for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them away, Pſal. lxv. 3. The new creature doth not yet poſſeſs the houſe alone: it dwells beſide an ill neighbour; namely, remaining corruption, the reliques of depraved nature. Theſe ſtruggle together for the maſtery: The fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh, Gal. v. 17. And ſometimes corruption prevails, bringing the child of God into captivity to the law of ſin, Rom. vii. 23. Let not therefore the prevailing of corruption make thee in this caſe conclude, thou art none of God's children; but let it humble thee, to be the more watchful, and to thirſt the more intenſely after Jeſus Chriſt, his blood and Spirit; and that very diſpoſition will evidence a principle of grace in thee, which ſeeks the deſtruction of ſin, that prevails ſo often againſt thee.

CASE 3. "I find the motions of ſin, in my heart, more violent, ſince the Lord began his work on my ſoul, than they were before that time. Can this conſiſt with a change of my nature." Anſw. Dreadful is the caſe of many, who, after God has had a remarkable dealing with their ſouls, tending to their reformation, have thrown off all bonds, and have become groſsly and openly immoral and profane; as if the devil had returned into their hearts, with ſeven ſpirits worſe than himſelf. All I ſhall ſay to ſuch perſons is, that their ſtate is exceeding dangerous; they are in danger of ſinning againſt the Holy Ghoſt; therefore let them repent, before it be too late. But, if it be not thus with you; tho' corruption is beſtirring itſelf more violently than formerly, as if all the forces of hell were raiſed, to hold faſt, or bring back a fugitive; I ſay, theſe ſtirrings may conſiſt with a change of your nature. When the reſtraint of grace is newly laid upon corruption, it is no wonder if this laſt acts more vigorouſly than before, warring againſt the law of the mind, Rom. vii. 23. The motions of ſin may really be moſt violent, when a new principle is brought in to caſt it out. And, as the ſun, ſending its beams through the window, diſcovers the motes in the houſe, and their motions, which were not ſeen before; ſo the light of grace may diſcover the riſings and actings of corruption, in another manner than ever the man ſaw them before; though they really do not riſe nor act more vigorouſly. Sin is not quite dead in the regenerate ſoul, it is but dying; and, dying a lingering death, being crucified, no wonder there be great fightings, when it is ſick at the heart, and death is at the door. Beſides, temptations may be more in number, and ſtronger, while Satan is ſtriving to bring you back who are eſcaped, than while he endeavoured only to retain you: After you were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions, ſays the apoſtle to the Hebrews, chap. x. 32. But, caſt not away your confidence, ver. 34. Remember his grace is ſufficient for you, and the God of peace will bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly. Pharaoh and his Egyptians never made ſuch a formidable appearance againſt the Iſraelites, as at the Red ſea, after they were brought out of Egypt: but then were the purſuers neareſt to a total overthrow, Exod. xiv. Let not this caſe therefore make you raze foundations: but be ye emptied of yourſelves, and ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, and ye ſhall come off victorious.

CASE 4. "But when I compare my love to God with my love to ſome created enjoyments, I find the pulſe of my affections beat ſtronger to the creature than the Creator. How then can I call him Father? Nay, alas! theſe turnings of heart within me, and glowings of affection to him, which ſometimes I had, are gone; ſo that I fear, all the love I ever had to the Lord, has been but a fit and flaſh of affection, ſuch as hypocrites often have. Anſw. It cannot be denied, that the predominant love of the world is a certain mark of an unregenerate ſtate, 1 John ii. 15. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Nevertheleſs, theſe are not always the ſtrongeſt affections which are moſt violent. A man's affection may be more moved, on ſome occaſions, by an object that is little regarded, than by another, that is exceedingly beloved; even as a little brook ſometimes makes a greater noiſe, than a great river. The ſtrength of our affections is to be meaſured by the firmneſs and fixedneſs of the root, not by the violence of their actings. Suppoſe a perſon meeting with a friend, who has been long abroad, finds his affections more vehemently acting towards his friend on that occaſion, than towards his own wife and children: will he therefore ſay, that he loves his friend more than them? Surely no. Even ſo, although the Chriſtian may find himſelf more moved in his love to the creature, than in his love to God; yet he is not therefore to be ſaid to love the creature more than God; ſeeing love to God is always more firmly rooted in a gracious heart, than love to any created enjoyment whatſoever; as appears, when competition ariſes in ſuch a manner, that the one or the other is to be forgone. Would ye then know your caſe? Retire into your own hearts, and there lay the two in the balance, and try which of them weighs down the other. Aſk thyſelf, as in the ſight of God, whether thou wouldſt part with Chriſt for the creature, or part with the creature for Chriſt, if thou wert left to thy choice in the matter? If you find your heart diſpoſed to part with what is deareſt to you in the world for Chriſt, at his call, you have no reaſon to conclude, you love the creature more than God; but, on the contrary, that you love God more than the creature; albeit you do not feel ſuch violent motions in the love of God, as in the love of ſome created thing, Matth. x. 37. He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me. Luke xiv. 26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother,--- he cannot be my diſciple. From which texts compared, we may infer, that he who hates, i. e. is ready to part with, father and mother for Chriſt, is, in our Lord's account, one that loves them leſs than him; and not one who loves father and mother more than him. Moreover, ye are to conſider there is a twofold love to Chriſt. (1.) There is a ſenſible love to him, which is felt as a dart in the heart, and makes a holy love-ſickneſs in the ſoul, ariſing either from want of enjoyment, as in that caſe of the ſpouſe, Cant. v. 8. I charge you, O daughters of Jeruſalem, if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him, that I am ſick of love: or elſe from the fulneſs of it, as in that caſe, Cant. ii. 5. Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples; for I am ſick of love. Theſe glowings of affections are uſually wrought in young converts, who are ordinarily made to ſing in the days of their youth, Hoſ. ii. 14. While the fire-edge is upon the young convert, he looks upon others, reputed to be godly, and not finding them in ſuch a temper and diſpoſition as himſelf, he is ready to cenſure them, and to think there is far leſs religion in the world than indeed there is. But when his own cup comes to ſettle below the brim, and he finds that in himſelf which made him queſtion the ſtate of others, he is more humbled, and feels more and more the neceſſity of daily recourſe to the blood of Chriſt for pardon, and to the Spirit of Chriſt for ſanctification; and thus grows downwards in humiliation, ſelf loathing, and ſelf-denial. (2.) There is a rational love to Chriſt, which, without theſe ſenſible emotions felt in the former caſe, evidences itſelf by a dutiful regard to the divine authority and command. When one bears ſuch a love to Chriſt; though the vehement ſtirrings of affection be wanting, yet he is truly tender of offending a gracious God; endeavours to walk before him unto all well-pleaſing; and is grieved at the heart for what is diſpleaſing unto him, 1 John v. 3. For this is the love of God that we keep his commandments. Now, although that the ſenſible love doth not always continue with you; yet ye have no reaſon to account it a hypocritical fit, while the rational love remains with you, more than a faithful and loving wife needs queſtion her love to her huſband, when her fondneſs is abated.

CASE 5. "The attainments of hypocrites and apoſtates are a terror to me, and come like a ſhaking ſtorm on me, when I am about to conclude, from the marks of grace, which I ſeem to find in myſelf, that I am in the ſtate of grace." Anſw. Theſe things ſhould indeed ſtir us up to a moſt ſerious and impartial examination of ourſelves, but ought not to keep us in a continued ſuſpenſe as to our ſtate. Sirs, ye ſee the outſide of hypocrites, their duties, their gifts, their tears, &c. but ye ſee not their inſide, ye do not diſcern their hearts, the bias of their ſpirits. Upon what ye ſee of them, ye found a judgment of charity, as to their ſtate; and ye do well to judge charitably in ſuch a caſe, becauſe ye cannot know the ſecret ſprings of their actings: but ye are ſeeking, and ought to have a judgment of certainty, as to your own ſtate; and therefore are to look in to that part of religion, which none in the world but yourſelves can diſcern in you, and which ye can as little ſee in others. An hypocrite's religion may appear far greater than that of a ſincere ſoul: but, that which makes the greateſt figure in the eyes of men, is often leaſt worth before God. I would rather utter one of thoſe groans the apoſtle ſpeaks of, Rom. viii. 26. than ſhed Eſau's tears, have Balaam's prophetic ſpirit, or the joy of the ſtony-ground hearers. The fire that ſhall try every man's work, will try, not of what bulk it is, but of what ſort it is, 1 Cor. iii. 13. Now, ye may know what bulk of religion another has: and what though it be more bulky than your own? God doth not regard that: why then do ye make ſuch a matter of it? It is impoſſible for you, without divine revelation, certainly to know of what ſort another man's religion is: but ye may certainly know what ſort your own is of, without extraordinary revelation; otherwiſe the apoſtle would not exhort the ſaints to give diligence to make their calling and election ſure, 2 Pet. i. 10. Therefore the attainments of hypocrites and apoſtates ſhould not diſturb you, in your ſerious enquiry into your own ſtate. But I will tell you two things, wherein the meaneſt ſaints go beyond the moſt refined hypocrites. (1.) In denying themſelves; renouncing all confidence in themſelves, and their own works; acquieſcing in, being well pleaſed with, and venturing their ſouls upon, God's plan of ſalvation through Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. v. 3. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. And chap. xi. 6. "Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me." Philip. iii. 3. "We are the circumciſion, which "worſhip God in the ſpirit, and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, "and have no confidence in the fleſh." (2.) In a real hatred of all ſin; being willing to part with every luſt, without exception, and to comply with every duty the Lord makes, or ſhall make known to them, Pſal. cxix. 6. Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have reſpect unto all thy commandments. Try yourſelves by theſe.

CASE 6. "I ſee myſelf fall ſo far ſhort of the ſaints "mentioned in the ſcriptures, and of ſeveral excellent "perſons of my own acquaintance; that, when I look "on them, I can hardly look on myſelf as one of the "ſame family with them." Anſw. It is indeed matter of humiliation, that we do not get forward to that meaſure of grace and holineſs, which we ſee is attainable in this life. This ſhould make us more vigorouſly preſs towards the mark: but ſurely it is from the devil, that weak Chriſtians make a rack for themſelves, of the attainments of the ſtrong. And to yield to this temptation, is as unreaſonable, as for a child to diſpute away his relation to his father, becauſe he is not of the ſame ſtature with his elder brethren. There are ſaints of ſeveral ſizes in Chriſt's family; ſome fathers, ſome young men, and ſome little children, 1 John ii. 13, 14.

CASE 7. "I never read in the word of God, nor did "I ever know of a child of God ſo tempted, and ſo left "of God, as I am; and therefore, no ſaint's caſe being "like mine, I cannot but conclude I am none of their "number." Anſw. This objection ariſes to ſome from their unacquaintedneſs with the ſcriptures, and with experienced Chriſtians. It is profitable, in this caſe, to impart the matter to ſome experienced Chriſtian friend, or to ſome godly miniſter. This has been a bleſſed mean of peace to ſome perſons; while their caſe, which appeared to them to be ſingular, has been evinced to have been the caſe of other ſaints. The ſcripture gives inſtances of very horrid temptations, wherewith the ſaints have been aſſaulted. Job was tempted to blaſpheme; this was the great thing the devil aimed at, in the caſe of that great ſaint, Job. i. 11. He will curſe thee to thy face. chap. ii. 9. Curſe God, and die. Aſaph was tempted to think it was in vain to be religious, which was in effect to throw off all religion, Pſal. lxxiii. 13. Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain. Yea, Chriſt himſelf was tempted to caſt himſelf down from a pinacle of the temple, and to worſhip the devil, Matth. iv. 6. 9. And many of the children of God have not only been attacked with, but have actually yielded to very groſs temptations for a time. Peter denied Chriſt, and curſed and ſwore that he knew him not, Mark xiv. 71. Paul, when a perſecutor, compelled even ſaints to blaſpheme, Acts xxvi. 10, 11. Many of the ſaints can, from their ſad experience, bear witneſs to very groſs temptations, which have aſtoniſhed their ſpirits, made their very fleſh to tremble, and ſickened their bodies. Satan's fiery darts make terrible work; and will coſt pains to quench them, by a vigorous managing of the ſhield of faith, Eph. vi. 16. Sometimes he makes ſuch deſperate attacks, that never was one more put to it, in running to and fro, without intermiſſion, to quench the fireballs inceſſantly thrown into his houſe by an enemy, deſigning to burn the houſe about him, than the poor tempted ſaint is to repel Satanical injections. But theſe injections, theſe horrid temptations, though they are a dreadful affliction; they are not the ſins of the tempted, unleſs they make them theirs, by conſenting to them. They will be charged upon the tempter alone, if they be not conſented to: and will no more be laid to the charge of the tempted party, than a baſtard's being laid down at a chaſte man's door, will fix guilt upon him.

But, ſuppoſe neither miniſter nor private Chriſtian, to whom you go, can tell you of any who has been in your caſe; yet you ought not thence to infer, that your caſe certainly is ſingular, far leſs to give over hopes: for it is not to be thought, that every godly miniſter, or private Chriſtian, has had experience of all the caſes a child of God may be in: and we need not doubt but ſome have had diſtreſſes known only to God and their own conſciences; and ſo to others theſe diſtreſſes are, as if they had never been. Yea, and though the ſcriptures do contain ſuitable directions for every caſe a child of God can be in; and theſe illuſtrated with a ſufficient number of examples: yet it is not to be imagined, that there are in the ſcriptures perfect inſtances of every particular caſe, incident to the ſaints. Therefore, howbeit you cannot find an inſtance of your caſe in the ſcripture; yet bring your caſe to it, and you ſhall find ſuitable remedies preſcribed there for it. And ſtudy rather to make uſe of Chriſt, for your caſe, who has ſalve for all ſores, than to know if ever any was in your caſe. Though one ſhould ſhew you an inſtance of your caſe, in an undoubted ſaint; yet none could promiſe it would certainly give you eaſe: for a ſcrupulous conſcience would readily find out ſome difference. And if nothing, but a perfect conformity of another's caſe to yours, will ſatisfy, it will be hard, if not impoſſible, to ſatisfy you. For it is with people's caſes, as with their natural faces. Though the faces of all men are of one make; and ſome are ſo very like others, that, at firſt view, we are ready to take them for the ſame: yet if you view them more accurately, you will ſee ſomething in every face, diſtinguiſhing it from all others; though poſſibly you cannot tell what it is. Wherefore I conclude, that if you can find in yourſelves the marks of regeneration, propoſed to you from the word; you ought to conclude, you are in the ſtate of grace, though your caſe were ſingular, which is indeed unlikely.

CASE laſt, "The afflictions I meet with are ſtrange "and unuſual. I doubt if ever a child of God was tryſted with ſuch diſpenſations of providence as I am." Anſ.

Much of what was ſaid on the preceeding caſe, may be helped in this. Holy Job was aſſaulted with this temptation, Job v. 1. To which of the ſaints wilt thou turn? But he rejected it, and held faſt his integrity. The apoſtle ſuppoſeth Chriſtians may be tempted to think ſtrange concerning the fiery trial, 1 Pet. iv. 12: But they have need of larger experience than Solomon's; who will venture to ſay, See this is new, Eccleſ. i. 10. And what though in reſpect of the outward diſpenſations of providence, it happen to you, according to the work of the wicked? you may be juſt notwithſtanding; according to Solomon's obſerve, Eccleſ. viii. 14. Sometimes we travel in ways, where we cannot perceive the prints of the foot of man nor beaſt: yet we cannot from thence conclude, that there was never any there before us: ſo albeit thou canſt not perceive the footſteps of the flock, in the way of thine affliction; thou muſt not therefore conclude, thou art the firſt that ever travelled that road. But what if it were ſo, that thou wert indeed the firſt? Some one ſaint or other behoved to be firſt, in drinking of each bitter cup the reſt have drunk of. What warrant have you or I to limit the holy One of Iſrael to a trodden path, in his diſpenſations towards us? Thy way is in the ſea, and thy path in the great waters: and thy footſteps are not known, Pſal. lxxvii. 19. If the Lord ſhould carry you to heaven by ſome retired road, and let you in at a back-door, (ſo to ſpeak,) you would have no ground to complain. Learn to allow ſovereignty a latitude; be at your duty; and let no affliction caſt a vail over any evidences you otherwiſe have, for your being in the ſtate of grace: for no man knoweth either their love or hatred, by all that is before them, Eccleſ. ix. 1.

USE II. Ye that are ſtrangers to this new birth, be convinced of the abſolute neceſſity of it. Are all in this ſtate of grace born again? then ye have neither part nor lot in it, who are not born again. I muſt tell you, in the words of our Lord and Saviour, (and O that he would ſpeak them to your hearts!) ye muſt be born again, John iii. 7. And for your conviction, conſider theſe few things.

Firſt, Regeneration is abſolutely neceſſary to qualify you to do any thing really good and acceptable to God. While you are not born again, your beſt works are but gliſtering ſins; for though the matter of them is good, they are quite marred in the making. Conſider, (1.) That without regeneration there is no faith, and without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. xi. 6. Faith is a vital act of the new-born ſoul. The Evangeliſt, ſhewing the different entertainment our Lord Jeſus had from different perſons, ſome receiving and ſome rejecting him, points at regenerating grace as the true riſe of that difference, without which never one would have received him. He tells us that as many as received him, were theſe who were born of God, John i. 11. 12. 13. Unregenerate men may preſume; but true faith they cannot have. Faith is a flower that grows not in the field of nature. As the tree cannot grow without a root, neither can a man believe without the new nature, whereof the principle of believing is a part. (2.) Without regeneration a man's works are dead works. As is the principle, ſo muſt the effects be: if the lungs be rotten, the breath will be unſavoury; and he who at beſt is dead in ſin, his works at beſt will be but dead works. Unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure--being abominable, and diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate, Tit. i. 15. 16. Could we ſay of a man, that he is more blameleſs in his life, than any other in the world; that he macerates his body with faſting; and has made his knees as horns with continual praying; but he is not born again: that exception would mar all. As if one ſhould ſay, There is a well-proportioned body, but the ſoul is gone; it is but a dead lump. This is a melting conſideration. Thou doſt many things materially good: but God ſaith, all theſe things avail not, as long as I ſee the old nature reigning in the man. Gal. vi. 15. For in Jeſus Chriſt neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but a new creature.

If thou art not born again; (1.) All thy reformation is naught in the ſight of God. Thou haſt ſhut the door, but the thief is ſtill in the houſe. It may be thou art not what once thou waſt: yet thou art not what thou muſt be, if ever thou ſeeſt heaven; for except a man be born again he cannot ſee the kingdom of God, John iii. 3. (2.) Thy prayers are an abomination to the Lord, Prov. xv. 8. It may be, others admire thy ſeriouſneſs; thou crieſt as for thy life: but God accounts of the opening of thy mouth, as one would account of the opening of a grave full of rottenneſs, Rom. iii. 13. Their throat is an open ſepulchre. Others are affected with thy prayers; which ſeem to them as if they would rent the heavens; but God accounts them but as the howling of a dog; They have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds, Hoſ. vii. 14. Others take thee for a wreſtler and prevailer with God; but he can take no delight in thee, nor thy prayers neither, Iſ. lxvi. 3. He that killeth an ox, is as if he ſlew a man: he that ſacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck.---He that burneth incenſe, as if he bleſſed an idol. Why but becauſe thou art yet in the gall of bitterneſs, and bond of iniquity? (3.) All thou haſt done for God and his cauſe in the world, though it may be followed with temporal rewards, yet is loſt as to divine acceptance. This is clear from the caſe of Jehu, who was indeed rewarded with a kingdom for his executing due vengeance upon the houſe of Ahab, as being a work good for the matter of it, becauſe it was commanded of God, as you may ſee, 2 Kings x. 13. yet was he puniſhed for it in his poſterity, becauſe he did it not in a right manner, Hoſ. i. 4. I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the houſe of Jehu. God looks mainly to the heart: and if ſo, truly albeit thy outward appearance be fairer than many others, yet the hidden man of thy heart is loathſome; thou lookeſt well before men, but art not as Moſes was, fair to God, as the margin hath it, Acts vii. 20. O what a difference is there betwixt the characters of Aſah and Amaziah! The high places were not removed: nevertheleſs, Aſa his heart was perfect with the Lord all his days, 1 Kings xv. 14. Amaziah did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, but not with a perfect heart, 2 Chron. xxv. 2. It may be thou art zealous againſt ſin in others, and doſt admoniſh them of their duty, and reprove them for their ſin; and they hate thee, becauſe thou doſt thy duty: but I muſt tell thee, God hates thee too, becauſe thou doſt it not in a right manner; and that thou canſt never do, whilſt thou art not born again. Laſtly, All thy ſtruggles againſt ſin in thine own heart and life, are naught. The proud Phariſee afflicted his body with faſting, and God ſtruck his ſoul in the mean time with a ſentence of condemnation, Luke xviii. Balaam ſtruggled with his covetous temper to that degree, that though he loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs, yet he would not win them by curſing Iſrael: but he died the death of the wicked, Numb. xxxi. 8. All thou doſt, while in an unregenrate ſtate, is for thyſelf; and therefore it will fare with thee as with a ſubject, who having reduced the rebels, puts the crown on his own head; and therefore loſeth all his good ſervice, and his head too.

Object. If it be thus with us, then we need never perform any religious duty at all. Anſw. The concluſion is not juſt. No inability of thine can looſe thee from the duty God's law lays on thee: and there is leſs evil in thy doing thy duty, than there is in the omitting of it. But there is a mids betwixt omitting of duty, and the doing of it as thou doſt it. A man ordereth maſons to build him an houſe. If they quite neglect the work, that will not be accepted; if they fall on, and build upon the old rotten foundation, neither will that pleaſe; but they muſt raze the old foundation, and build on firm ground. Go thou and do likewiſe. In the mean time, it is not in vain for thee, even for thee, to ſeek the Lord: for tho' he regards thee not, yet he may have reſpect to his own ordinance, and do thee good thereby, as was ſaid before.

Secondly, Without regeneration there is no communion with God. There is a ſociety on earth, whoſe fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt, 1 John i. 3. But out of that ſociety, all the unregenerate are excluded; for they are all enemies to God, as ye heard before at large. Now, can two walk together, except they be agreed? Amos iii. 3. They are all unholy: and what communion hath light with darkneſs,----Chriſt with Belial? 2 Cor. vi. 14. 15. They may have a ſhew and ſemblance of holineſs; but they are ſtrangers to true holineſs, and therefore without God in the world. How ſad is this caſe, to be employed in religious duties, but to have no fellowſhip with God in them! Ye would not be content with your meat, unleſs it fed you; nor with your cloaths, unleſs they kept you warm: and how can you ſatisfy yourſelves with your duties, while they are not effectual to your communion with God?

Thirdly, Regeneration is abſolutely neceſſary to qualify you for heaven. None go to heaven but they that are made meet for it, Col. i. 12. As it was with Solomon's temple, 1 Kings vi. 7. ſo is it with the temple above: it is built of ſtone made ready before it is brought thither: namely, of lively ſtones, 1 Pet. ii. 5. wrought for the ſelf-ſame thing, 2 Cor. v. 5. for they cannot be laid in that glorious building, juſt as they come out of the quarry of depraved nature. Jewels of gold are not meet for ſwine, and far leſs jewels of glory for unrenewed ſinners. Beggars in their rags are not meet for kings houſes; nor ſinners to enter into the King's palace, without the raiment of needle-work, Pſal. xlv. 14. 15. What wiſe man would bring fiſhes out of the water to feed in his meadow? or ſend his oxen to feed in the ſea? Even as little are the unregenerate meet for heaven, or is heaven meet for them. It would never be liked of by them.

The unregenerate would find fault with heaven on ſeveral accounts. As, (1.) That it is a ſtrange country. Heaven is the renewed man's native country: his Father is in heaven; his mother is Jeruſalem, which is above, Gal. iv. 26. He is born from above, John. iii. 3. Heaven is his home, 2 Cor. v. 1. therefore he looks on himſelf as a ſtranger on this earth, and his head is homeward, Heb. xi. 16. They deſire a better country, that is an heavenly. But the unregenerate man is the man of the earth, Pſal. x. 18. written in the earth, Jer. xvii. 13. Now, Home is home, be it never ſo homely: therefore he minds earthly things, Phil. iii. 19. There is a peculiar ſweetneſs in our native ſoil; and hardly are men drawn to leave it, and dwell in a ſtrange country. In no caſe does that prevail more, than in this; for unrenewed men would quit their pretenſions to heaven, were it not that they ſee they cannot make a better of it. (2.) There is nothing there of what they delight moſt in, as moſt agreeable to the carnal heart, Rev. xxi. 27. And there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it, any thing that defileth. When Mahomet gave out paradiſe to be a place of ſenſual delights, his religion was greedily embraced; for that is the heaven men naturally chuſe. If the covetous man could get bags full of gold there, and the voluptuous man could promiſe himſelf his ſenſual delights there, they might be reconciled to heaven, and meet for it too: but ſince it is not ſo, though they may utter fair words about it, truly it has little of their hearts. (3.) Every corner there is filled with that, which of all things they have the leaſt liking of: and that is holineſs, true holineſs, perfect holineſs. Were one that abhors ſwines fleſh, bidden to a feaſt, where all the diſhes were of that ſort of meat, but variouſly prepared; he would find fault with every diſh at the table, notwithſtanding of all the art uſed to make them palatable. It is true, there is joy in heaven, but it is holy joy; there are pleaſures in heaven, but they are holy pleaſures; there are places to ſtand by in heaven, but it is holy ground. That holineſs that caſts up in every place, and in every thing there, would mar all to the unregenerate. (4.) Were they carried thither, they would not only change their place, which would be a great heart-break to them; but they would change their company too. Truly they would never like the company there, who care not for communion with God here; nor value the fellowſhip of his people, at leaſt in the vitals of practical godlineſs. Many indeed mix themſelves with the godly on earth, to procure a name to themſelves, and to cover the naughtineſs of their hearts; but that trade could not be managed there. (5.) They would never like the employment of heaven, they care ſo little for it now. The buſineſs of the ſaints there, would be an intolerable burden to them, ſeeing it is not agreeable to their nature. To be taken up in beholding, admiring, and praiſing of him that ſitteth on the throne, and of the Lamb, would be work unſuitable, and therefore unſavoury to an unrenewed ſoul. Laſtly, They would find this fault with it, that the whole is of everlaſting continuance. This would be a killing ingredient in it, to them. How would ſuch as now account the Sabbath-day a burden, brook the celebrating of an everlaſting Sabbath in the heavens?

Laſtly, Regeneration is abſolutely neceſſary to your being admitted into heaven, John iii. 3. No heaven without it. Though carnal men could digeſt all theſe things which make heaven ſo unſuitable for them; yet God will never ſuffer them to come thither. Therefore born again ye muſt be; elſe ye ſhall never ſee heaven, ye ſhall periſh eternally. For, (1.) There is a bill of excluſion againſt you in the court of heaven, and againſt all of your ſort; Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God, John iii. 3. Here is a bar before you, that men and angels cannot remove. And to hope for heaven, over the belly of this peremptory ſentence, is to hope that God will recal his word, and ſacrifice his truth and faithfulneſs to your ſafety; which is infinitely more than to hope, the earth ſhall be forſaken for you, and the rock removed out of his place. (2.) There is no holineſs without regeneration. It is the new man, which is created in true holineſs; for without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord. Heb. xii. 14. Will the gates of pearl be opened, to let in dogs and ſwine? No; their place is without, Rev. xxii. 15. God will not admit ſuch into the holy place of communion with him here, and will he admit them into the holieſt of all hereafter? Will he take the children of the devil, and give them to ſit with him in his throne? Or will he bring the unclean into the city, whoſe ſtreet is pure gold? Be not deceived; grace and glory are but two links of one chain, which God has joined, and no man ſhall put aſunder. None are tranſplanted into the paradiſe above, but out of the nurſery of grace below. If ye be unholy while in this world, ye will be for ever miſerable in the world to come. (3.) All the unregenerate are without Chriſt, and therefore having no hope while in that caſe, Eph. ii. 12. Will Chriſt prepare manſions of glory for them, that refuſe to receive him into their hearts? nay, rather, will he not laugh at their calamity, who now ſet at nought all his counſel? Prov. i. 25. 26. Laſtly, There is an infallible connection betwixt a finally unregenerate ſtate and damnation, ariſing from the nature of the things themſelves; and from the decree of Heaven, which is fixed and unmoveable as mountains of braſs, John iii. 3. Rom. viii. 6. To be carnally minded is death. An unregenerate ſtate is hell in the bud. It is eternal deſtruction in embrio, growing daily, though thou doſt not diſcern it. Death is painted on many a fair face, in this life. Depraved nature makes men meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the damned, in utter darkneſs. (1.) The heart of ſtone within thee is a ſinking weight. As a ſtone naturally goes downward; ſo the hard ſtony heart tends downward to the bottomleſs pit. Ye are hardened againſt reproof: though ye are told your danger; yet ye will not ſee it, ye will not believe it. But remember, that the conſcience, its being now ſeared with a hot iron, is a ſad preſage of everlaſting burnings. (2.) Your unfruitfulneſs under the means of grace, fits you for the ax of God's judgments, Matth. iii. 10. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and caſt into the fire. The withered branch is fuel for the fire, John xv. 6. Tremble at this, ye deſpiſers of the goſpel: if ye be not thereby made meet for heaven, ye will be like the barren ground, bearing briers and thorns, nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to be burned, Heb. vi. 8. (3.) The helliſh diſpoſitions of mind, which diſcover themſelves in profanity of life, fit the guilty for the regions of horror. A profane life will have a miſerable end. They which do ſuch things ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God, Gal. v. 19. 20. 21. Think on this, ye prayerleſs perſons, ye mockers of religion, ye curſers and ſwearers, ye unclean, and unjuſt perſons, who have not ſo much as moral honeſty to keep you from lying, cheating, and ſtealing. What ſort of a tree think ye it to be, upon which theſe fruits grow? Is it a tree of righteouſneſs, which the Lord hath planted? Or is it not ſuch an one as cumbers the ground, which God wil pluck up for fuel to the fire of his wrath? (4.) Your being dead in ſin, makes you meet to be wrapt in flames of brimſtone, as a winding-ſheet; and to be buried in the bottomleſs pit, as in a grave. Great was the cry in Egypt, when the firſt-born in each family was dead; but are there not many families, where all are dead together? Nay, many there are, who are twice dead, plucked up by the roots. Sometime, in their life, they have been rouzed by apprehenſions of death, and its conſequences; but now they are ſo far on in their way to the land of darkneſs, that they hardly ever have the leaſt glimmering of light from heaven. (5.) The darkneſs of your minds preſageth eternal darkneſs. O the horrid ignorance ſome are plagued with; while others who have got ſome rays of reaſon's light into their heads, are utterly void of ſpiritual light in their hearts! If ye knew your caſe, ye would cry out, Oh! darkneſs! darkneſs! darkneſs! making way for the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever! The face-covering is upon you already, as condemned perſons, ſo near are ye to everlaſting darkneſs. It is only Jeſus Chriſt who can ſtop the execution, pull the napkin off the face of the condemned malefactor, and put a pardon in his hand, Iſ. xxv. 7. And he will deſtroy in this mountain the face of the covering caſt over all people. i. e. the face-covering caſt over the condemned, as in Haman's caſe, Eſth. vii. 8. As the word went out of the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face. Laſtly, The chains of darkneſs ye are bound with in the priſon of your depraved ſtate, Iſ. lxi. 1. fits you to be caſt into the burning fiery furnace. Ah miſerable men! Sometimes their conſciences ſtir within them, and they begin to think of amending their ways. But, alas! they are in chains, they cannot do it. They are chained by the heart: their luſts cleave ſo faſt to them, that they cannot, nay, they will not ſhake them off. Thus you ſee what affinity there is, betwixt an unregenerate ſtate, and the ſtate of the damned, the ſtate of abſolute and irretrievable miſery. Be convinced then, that ye muſt be born again; put a high value on the new-birth, and eagerly deſire it.

The text tells you, that the word is the ſeed, whereof the new creature is formed: therefore take heed to it, and entertain it, for it is your life. Apply yourſelves to the reading of the ſcripture. Ye that cannot read, cauſe others read it to you. Wait diligently on the preaching of the word, as, by divine appointment, the ſpecial mean of converſion; for "it pleaſed God by the "fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe," 1 Cor. i. 21. Wherefore caſt not yourſelves out of Chriſt's way: reject not the means of grace, leſt ye be found to judge yourſelves unworthy of eternal life. Attend carefully to the word preached. Hear every ſermon, as if you were hearing for eternity; and take heed, the fowls of the air pick not up this ſeed from you, as it is ſown. "Give thyſelf wholly to it," 1 Tim. iv. 15. "Receive "it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth the "word of God," 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. And hear it with application, looking on it as a meſſage ſent from Heaven to you in particular; though not to you only, Rev. iii 22. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the "Spirit ſaith unto the churches." Lay it up in your hearts, meditate upon it, and be not as the unclean beaſts, that chew not the cud. But by earneſt prayer beg the dew of heaven may fall on thy heart, that the ſeed may ſpring up there.

More particularly. (1.) Receive the teſtimony of the word of God, concerning the miſery of an unregenerate ſtate, the ſinfulneſs thereof, and the abſolute neceſſity of regeneration. (2.) Receive its teſtimony, concerning God, what a holy and juſt One he is. (3.) Examine thy ways by it; namely the thoughts of thy heart, the expreſſions of thy lips, and the tenor of thy life. Look back through the ſeveral periods of thy life: and ſee thy ſins from the precepts of the word, and learn from its threatenings, what thou art liable to, on the account of theſe ſins. (4.) View the corruption of thy nature, by the help of the ſame word of God; as a glaſs, which repreſents our ugly face in a lively manner. Were theſe things deeply rooted in the heart, they might be the ſeed of that fear and ſorrow, on account of thy ſoul's ſtate, which are neceſſary to prepare and ſtir thee up to look after a Saviour. Fix your thoughts upon him offered to thee in the goſpel, as fully ſuited to thy caſe; having by his obedience to the death, perfectly ſatisfied the juſtice of God, and brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs. This may prove the ſeed of humiliation, deſire, hope, and faith; and put thee on, to ſtretch out the withered hand unto him, at his own command.

Let theſe things ſink deeply into your hearts, and improve them diligently. Remember, whatever ye be, ye muſt be born again; elſe it had been better for you ye had never been born. Wherefore, if any of you ſhall live and die in an unregenerate ſtate, ye will be inexcuſable, having been fairly warned of your hazard.

HEAD II.

The MYSTICAL UNION betwixt Chriſt and believers.

JOHN xv. 5.

I am the vine; ye are the branches.

HAving ſpoken of the change made by regeneration, on all thoſe that ſhall inherit eternal life, in oppoſition to their natural real ſtate, the ſtate of degeneracy; I proceed to ſpeak of the change made upon them, in their union with the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in oppoſition to their natural relative ſtate, the ſtate of miſery. The doctrine of the ſaints union with Chriſt, is very plainly and fully inſiſted on, from the beginning to the 12th verſe of this chapter; which is a part of our Lord's farewell-ſermon to his diſciples. Sorrow had now filled their heart: they were apt to ſay, Alas! what will become of us, when our Maſter is taken from our head? who will then inſtruct us? who will ſolve our doubts? how will we be ſupported, under our difficulties and diſcouragements? how will we be able to live, without our wonted communication with him?

Wherefore our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſeaſonably teaches them the myſtery of their union with him, comparing himſelf to the vine ſtock, and them to the branches.

He compares, I ſay, (1.) Himſelf to a vine-ſtock; I am the vine. He had been celebrating with his diſciples the ſacrament of his ſupper, that ſign and ſeal of his people's union with himſelf; and had told them, He would drink no more of the fruit of the vine, till he ſhould drink it new with them, in his Father's kingdom: and now he ſhews himſelf to be the vine, from whence the wine of their conſolation ſhould come. The vine has leſs beauty than many other trees; but is exceeding fruitful; fitly repreſenting the low condition our Lord was then in, yet bringing many ſons to glory. But that which is chiefly aimed at, in his comparing himſelf to a vine, is to repreſent himſelf as the ſupporter and nouriſher of his people, in whom they live, and bring forth fruit. (2.) He compares them to branches, ye are the branches of that vine. Ye are the branches knit to, and growing on this ſtock, drawing all your life and ſap from it. It is a beautiful compariſon; as if he had ſaid, I am as a vine, ye are as the branches of that vine. Now there are two ſorts of branches, (1.) Natural branches, which at firſt ſpring out of the ſtock. Theſe are the branches which are in the tree, and were never out of it. (2.) There are ingrafted branches, which are branches cut off from the tree, that firſt gave them life, and put into another to grow upon it. Thus branches come to be on a tree, which originally were not on it. The branches mentioned in the text, are of the latter ſort: branches broken off, (as the word in the original language denotes,) namely, from the tree that firſt gave them life. None of the children of men are natural branches of the ſecond Adam, viz. Jeſus Chriſt the true vine; they are all the natural branches of the firſt Adam, that degenerate vine: but the elect are all of them, ſooner or later, broken off from their natural ſtock, and ingrafted into Chriſt the true vine.

DOCT. They who are in the ſtate of grace, are ingrafted in, and unite to, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. They are taken out of their natural ſtock, cut off from it; and are now ingrafted into Chriſt, as the new ſtock. It handling of this, I ſhall ſpeak to the myſtical union, (1.) More generally. (2.) More particularly.

A general view of the myſtical union.

I. In the general, for underſtanding the union betwixt the Lord Jeſus Chriſt and his elect, who believe in him, and on him.

1. It is a ſpiritual union. Man and wife, by their marriage-union, become one fleſh; Chriſt and true believers by this union, become one ſpirit, 2 Cor. vi. 17. As one ſoul or ſpirit actuates both the head, and the members in the natural body: ſo the one Spirit of God dwells in Chriſt and the Chriſtian: for, if any man have not the ſpirit of Chriſt, he is none of his, Rom viii. 9. Corporal union is made by contact; ſo the ſtones in a building are united: but this is an union of another nature. Were it poſſible we could eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of Chriſt, in a corporal and carnal manner; it would profit nothing, John vi. 63. It was not Mary's bearing him in her womb; but her believing on him, that made her a ſaint, Luke xi. 27. 28. A certain woman------ſaid unto him, Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou haſt ſucked. But he ſaid, Yea, rather bleſſed are they that hear the word of God and keep it.

2. It is a real union. Such is our weakneſs, in our preſent ſtate, ſo much are we immerſed in ſin, that we are prone to form in our fancy, an image of every thing propoſed to us: and as to whatſoever that is denied us, we are apt to ſuſpect it to be but a fiction, or what has no reality. But nothing is more real, than what is ſpiritual; as approaching neareſt to the nature of him, who is the fountain of all reality, namely, God himſelf. We do not ſee, with our eyes, the union betwixt our own ſoul and body, neither can we repreſent it to ourſelves, truly, by imagination, as we do ſenſible things; yet the reality of it is not to be doubted. Faith is no fancy, but the ſubſtance of things hoped for, Heb. xi. 1. Neither is the union thereby made betwixt Chriſt and believers, imaginary, but moſt real: For we are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones, Eph. v. 30.

3. It is a moſt cloſe and intimate union. Believers, regenerate perſons, who fiducially credit him, and rely on him, have put on Chriſt, Gal. iii. 27. If that be not enough, he is in them, John xvii. 23. formed in them, as the child in the mother's belly, Gal iv. 19. He is the foundation, 1 Cor. iii. 2. they are the lively ſtones built upon him, 1 Peter ii. 5. He is the head, and they the body, Eph. i. 22. 23. Nay, he liveth in them, as their very ſouls in their bodies, Gal. ii. 20. And, what is more than all this, they are one in the Father and the Son, as the Father is in Chriſt, and Chriſt in the Father, John xvi. 21. That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they alſo may be one in us.

4. Though it is not a mere legal union, yet it is an union ſuſtained in law. Chriſt as the cautioner, the Chriſtian as the principal debtor, are one, in the eye of the law. When the elect had run themſelves, with the reſt of mankind, in debt to the juſtice of God; Chriſt became ſurety for them, and paid the debt. When they believe on him, they are united to him in a ſpiritual marriage-union; which takes effect ſo far, that what he did and ſuffered for them is reckoned in law, as if they had done and ſuffered it themſelves. Hence they are ſaid to be crucified with Chriſt, Gal. ii. 20. buried with him, Col. ii. 12. yea, raiſed up together, (namely, with Chriſt,) and made to ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. ii. 6. In which places, ſaints on earth, of whom the apoſtle there ſpeaks, cannot be ſaid to be ſitting, but in the way of law-reckoning.

5. It is an indiſſoluble union. Once in Chriſt, ever in him. Having taken up his habitation in the heart he never removes. None can untie this happy knot. Who will diſſolve this union? will he himſelf do it? No, he will not; we have his word for it. I will not turn away from them, Jer. xxxiii. 40. But perhaps, the ſinner will do this miſchief to himſelf; no, he ſhall not, they ſhall not depart from me, ſaith their God. ibid. Can devils do it; No, unleſs they be ſtronger than Chriſt, and his Father too; Neither ſhall any man pluck them out of my hand, ſaith our Lord, John x. 28. And none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. verſ. 39. But what ſay you of death, which parts huſband and wife, yea, ſeparates the ſoul from the body? will not death do it? No; the apoſtle, Rom. viii. 38. 39. is perſwaded that neither death, (as terrible as it is,) nor life, (as deſirable as it is;) nor devils thoſe evil angels, nor the devil's perſecuting agents, though they be principalities or powers on earth, nor evil things preſent, already lying on us; nor evil things to come on us; nor the height of worldly felicity, nor depth of worldly miſery; nor any other creature, good or ill, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. As death ſeparated Chriſt's ſoul from his body, but could not ſeparate either the ſoul or body from his divine nature: ſo though the ſaints ſhould be ſeparate from their neareſt relations in the world, and from all their earthly enjoyments; yea though their ſouls ſhould be ſeparate from their bodies, and their bodies ſeparate in a thouſand pieces, their bones ſcattered, as when one cutteth or cleaveth wood: yet ſoul and body, and every piece of the body, the ſmalleſt duſt of it ſhall remain united to the Lord Chriſt: for even in death they ſleep in Jeſus, 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. and he keepeth all their bones, Pſal. xxxiv. 20. Union with Chriſt, is the grace wherein we ſtand, firm and ſtable, as mount Zion, which cannot be removed.

Laſtly, It is a myſterious union. The goſpel is a doctrine of myſteries. It diſcovers to us the ſubſtantial union of the three perſons in one God-head, 1 John

v. 7. Theſe three are one: the hypoſtatical union of the divine and human natures, in the perſon of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. iii. 16. God was manifeſt in the fleſh: and the myſtical union, betwixt Chriſt and believers; this is a great myſtery alſo, Eph v. 32. O what myſteries are here! the head in heaven, the members on earth, yet really united! Chriſt in the believer, living in him, walking in him, and the believer dwelling in God, putting on the Lord Jeſus, eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood! this makes the ſaints a myſtery to the world; yea a myſtery to themſelves.

II. I come now more particularly to ſpeak of this union with, and ingrafting into, Jeſus Chriſt. And, (1.) I ſhall conſider the natural ſtock, which the branches are taken out of. (2.) The ſupernatural ſtock, they are ingrafted into. (3.) What branches are cut off the old ſtock, and put into the new. (4.) How it is done. And laſtly, The benefits flowing from this union, and ingrafting.

Of the natural and ſupernatural ſtocks, and the branches, taken out of the former, and ingrafted into the latter.

I. Let us take a view of the ſtock, which the branches are taken out of. The two Adams, that is, Adam and Chriſt, are the two ſtocks; for the ſcripture ſpeaks of theſe two, as if there had never been more men in the world than they, 1 Cor. xv. 45. The firſt man Adam was made a living ſoul, the laſt Adam was made a quickening ſpirit: verſ. 47. The firſt man is of the earth, earthy; the ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. And the reaſon is, there never were any that were not branches of one of theſe two; all men being either in the one ſtock, or in the other; for in theſe two ſorts all mankind ſtands divided, verſ. 48. As is the earthy, ſuch are they alſo that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, ſuch are they alſo that are heavenly. The firſt Adam then is the natural ſtock: on this ſtock are the branches found growing at firſt, which are afterwards cut off, and ingrafted into Chriſt. As for the fallen angels, as they had no relation to the firſt Adam, ſo they have none to the ſecond.

There are four things to be remembred here, (1.) That all mankind (the man Chriſt excepted) are naturally branches of the firſt Adam, Rom. v. 12. By one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin: and ſo death paſſed upon all men. (2.) The bond which knit us unto the natural ſtock, was the covenant of works. Adam being our natural root, was made the moral root alſo, bearing all his poſterity, as repreſenting them in the covenant of works. For, by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners, Rom. v. 19. Now there behoved to be a peculiar relation betwixt that one man, and the many, as a foundation for imputing his ſin to them. This relation did not ariſe from the mere natural bond betwixt him and us, as of a father to his children; for ſo we are related to our immediate parents, whoſe ſins are not thereupon imputed to us, as Adam's ſin is. It behoved them to ariſe from a moral bond betwixt Adam and us: the bond of a covenant which could be no other than the covenant of works, wherein we were united to him, as branches to a ſtock. Hence Jeſus Chriſt, though a ſon of Adam, Luke iii. 23. 38. was none of theſe branches: for ſeeing he came not of Adam, in virtue of the bleſſing of marriage, which was given before the fall, (Gen. i. 28. Be fruitful and multiply, &c.) but in virtue of a ſpecial promiſe made after the fall, (Gen. iii. 15. The ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the ſerpent's head,) Adam could not repreſent him in a covenant made before his fall. (3.) As it is impoſſible for a branch to be in two ſtocks at once, ſo no man can be, at one and the ſame time, both in the firſt and ſecond Adam. (4.) Hence it evidently follows, that all who are not ingrafted in Jeſus Chriſt, are yet branches of the old ſtock, and ſo partake of the nature of the ſame. Now, as to the firſt Adam, our natural ſtock, conſider,

Firſt, What a ſtock he was originally. He was a vine of the Lord's planting, a choice vine, a noble vine, wholly a right ſeed. There was a conſultation of the Trinity at the planting of this vine, Gen. i. 26. Let us make man in our image, after our own likeneſs. There was no rottenneſs at the heart of it. There was ſap and juice enough in it to have nouriſhed all the branches, to bring forth fruit unto God. My meaning is, Adam was made able perfectly to keep the commandments of God, which would have procured eternal life to himſelf, and to all his poſterity: for ſeeing all die by Adam's diſobedience, all ſhould have had life by his obedience, if he had ſtood. Conſider, Secondly, What that ſtock now is. Ah! moſt unlike to what it was, when planted by the author and fountain of all good. A blaſt from hell, and a bite with the venomous teeth of the old ſerpent, have made it a degenerate ſtock, a dead ſtock; nay, a killing ſtock.

Firſt, It is a degenerate naughty ſtock. Therefore the Lord God ſaid to Adam, in that diſmal day, "Where art thou?" Gen. iii. 9. In what condition art thou now? "How art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a ſtrange vine unto me?" Or, Where waſt thou? Why not in the place of meeting with me? Why ſo long a coming? What meaneth this fearful change, this hiding of thyſelf from me? Alas! the ſtock is degenerate, quite ſpoilt, become altogether naught, and brings forth wild grapes. Converſe with the devil is preferred to communion with God. Satan is believed, and God, who is truth itſelf, diſbelieved. He who was the friend of God, is now in conſpiracy againſt him. Darkneſs is come into the room of light: ignorance prevails in the mind, where divine knowledge ſhone: the will, ſometime righteous and regular, is now turned rebel againſt its Lord: and the whole man is in dreadful diſorder.

Before I go further, let me ſtop and obſerve, Here is a mirror both for ſaints and ſinners. Sinners, ſtand here and conſider, what you are: and, ſaints, learn ye what once ye were. Ye ſinners, are branches of a degenerate ſtock. Fruit you may bear, indeed; but now that your vine is the vine of Sodom, your grapes muſt of courſe be grapes of gall, Deut. xxxii. 32. The ſcripture ſpeaks of two ſorts of fruit which grow on the branches upon the natural ſtock: and it is plain enough they are of the nature of their degenerate ſtock. (1.) The wild grapes of wickedneſs, Iſ. v. 2. Theſe grow in abundance by influence from hell. See Gal. v. 19. 20. 21. At their gates are all manner of theſe fruits, both new and old. Storms come from heaven to put them back, but ſtill they grow. They are ſtruck at with the ſword of the Spirit, the word of God; conſcience gives them many a ſecret blow, yet they thrive. (2.) Fruit to themſelves, Hoſ. x. 1. What elſe are all the unrenewed man's acts of obedience, his reformation, ſober deportment, his prayers, and good works? They are all done, chiefly for himſelf, not for the glory of God. Theſe fruits are like the apples of Sodom, fair to look at, but fall to aſhes when handled and tried. Ye think ye have not only the leaves of a profeſſion, but the fruits of a holy practice too: but if ye be not broken off from the old ſtock, and ingrafted in Chriſt Jeſus, God accepts not, nor regards your fruits.

Here I muſt take occaſion to tell you, there are five faults will be found in heaven, with your beſt fruits. (1.) Their bitterneſs; your cluſters are bitter, Deut. xxxii. 32. There is a ſpirit of bitterneſs, wherewith ſome come before the Lord, in religious duties, living in malice and envy; and which ſome profeſſors entertain againſt others, becauſe they outſhine them by holineſs of life, or becauſe they are not of their opinion or way. This, whereſoever it reigns, is a fearful ſymptom of an unregenerate ſtate. But I do not ſo much mean this, as that which is common to all the branches of the old ſtock, namely, the leaven of hypocriſy, Luke xii. 1.

which ſowres and embitters every duty they perform. The wiſdom, that is full of good fruits, is without hypocriſy, Jam. iii. 17. (2.) Their ill ſavour. Their works are abominable, for themſelves are corrupt, Pſal. xiv. 1. They all ſavour of the old ſtock, not of the new. It is the peculiar privilege of the ſaints, that they are unto God a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, 2 Cor. ii. 15. The unregenerate man's fruits ſavour not of love to Chriſt, nor of the blood of Chriſt, nor of the incenſe of his interceſſion, and therefore will never be accepted of in heaven. (3.) Their unripeneſs. Their grape is an unripe grape, Job xv. 33. There is no influence on them, from the Sun of righteouſneſs, to bring them to perfection. They have the ſhape of fruit, but no more. The matter of duty is in them, but they want right principles and ends: their works are not wrought in God, John ii. 21. Their prayers drop from their lips, before their hearts be impregnate with the vital ſap of the Spirit of ſupplication: their tears fall from their eyes, ere their hearts be truly ſoftened: their feet turn to new paths, and their way is altered, while yet their nature is not changed. (4.) Their lightneſs. Being weighed in the balances, they are found wanting, Dan. v. 27. For evidence whereof you may obſerve, they do not humble the ſoul, but lift it up in pride. The good fruits of holineſs bear down the branches they grow upon, making them to ſalute the ground, 1 Cor. xv. 10. I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. But the blaſted fruits of unrenewed mens performances, hang lightly on branches towering up to heaven, Judges xvii. 13. Now know I, that the Lord will do me good, ſeeing I have a Levite to my prieſt. They look indeed ſo high, that God cannot behold them; Wherefore have we faſted, ſay they, and thou ſeeſt not? Iſ. lviii. 3. The more duties they do, and the better they ſeem to perform them, the leſs are they humbled, the more they are lifted up. This diſpoſition of the ſinner, is the exact reverſe of what is to be found in the ſaint. To men, who neither are in Chriſt, nor are ſolicitous to be found in him, their duties are like windy bladders, wherewith they think to ſwim aſhore to Immanuel's land: but theſe muſt needs break, and they conſequently ſink; becauſe they take not Chriſt for the lifter up of their head, Pſal. iii. 3. Laſtly, They are not all manner of pleaſant fruits, Cant. vii. 13. Chriſt, as a King, muſt be ſerved with variety. Where God makes the heart his garden, he plants it as Solomon did his, with trees of all kind of fruits, Eccleſ. ii. 5. And accordingly it brings forth the fruit of the Spirit in all goodneſs, Eph. v. 9. But the ungodly are not ſo; their obedience is never univerſal; there is always ſome one thing or other excepted. In one word, their fruits are fruits of an ill tree, that cannot be accepted in heaven.

Secondly, Our natural ſtock is a dead ſtock, according to the threatening, Gen. ii. 17. In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die. Our root now is rottenneſs; no marvel the bloſſom go up as duſt. The ſtroke has gone to the heart, the ſap is let out, and the tree is withered. The curſe of the firſt covenant, like a hot thunder-bolt from heaven, has lighted on it, and ruined it. It is curſed now as that fig-tree, Matth. xxi. 19. Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. Now it is good for nothing, but to cumber the ground, and furniſh fuel for Tophet.

Let me enlarge a little here alſo. Every unrenewed man is a branch of a dead ſtock. When thou ſeeſt, O ſinner, a dead ſtock of a tree, exhauſted of all its ſap, having branches on it in the ſame condition, look on it as a lively repreſentation of thy ſoul's ſtate. (1.) Where the ſtock is dead, the branches muſt needs be barren. Alas! the barrenneſs of many profeſſors plainly diſcovers on what ſtock they are growing. It is eaſy to pretend to faith, but ſhew me thy faith without thy works, if thou canſt, Jam. ii. 18. (2.) A dead ſtock can convey no ſap to the branches, to make them bring forth fruit. The covenant of works was the bond of our union with the natural ſtock; but now it is become weak through the fleſh; that is, through the degeneracy and depravity of human nature, Rom. viii. 3. It is ſtrong enough to command, and to bind heavy burdens on the ſhoulders of thoſe who are not in Chriſt, but it affords no ſtrength to bear them. The ſap, that was once in the root, is now gone: and the law, like a mercileſs creditor, apprehends Adam's heirs, ſaying, Pay what thou oweſt; when, alas! his effects are riotouſly ſpent. (3.) All pains and coſt are loſt on the tree, whoſe life is gone. In vain do men labour to get fruit on the branches, when there is no ſap in the root. Firſt, The gardener's pains are loſt: miniſters loſe their labour on the branches of the old ſtock, while they continue on it. Many ſermons are preached to no purpoſe; becauſe there is no life to give ſenſation. Sleeping men may be awakened; but the dead cannot be raiſed without a miracle: even ſo the dead ſinner muſt remain ſo, if he be not reſtored to life by a miracle of grace. Secondly, The influences of Heaven are loſt on ſuch a tree: in vain doth the rain fall upon it: in vain is it laid open to the winter-cold and froſts. The Lord of the vineyard digs about many a dead ſoul, but it is not bettered. Bruiſe the fool in a morter, his folly will not depart. Though he meets with many croſſes, yet he retains his luſts: let him be laid on a ſick-bed, he will ly there like a ſick beaſt, groaning under his pain, but not mourning for, nor turning from his ſin. Let death itſelf ſtare him in the face, he will preſumptuouſly maintain his hope, as if he would look the grim meſſenger out of countenance. Sometimes there are common operations of the divine Spirit performed on him: he is ſent home with a trembling heart, and with arrows of conviction ſticking in his ſoul: but at length he prevails againſt theſe things, and turns as ſecure as ever. Thirdly, Summer and winter are alike to the branches on the dead ſtock. When others about them are budding, bloſſoming, and bringing forth fruit, there is no change on them: the dead ſtock has no growing time at all. Perhaps it may be difficult to know, in the winter, what trees are dead, and what are alive; but the ſpring plainly diſcovers it. There are ſome ſeaſons wherein there is little life to be perceived, even amongſt ſaints; yet times of reviving come at length. But even when the vine flouriſheth, and the pomegranates bud forth, (when ſaving grace is diſcovering itſelf, by its lively actings, whereſoever it is), the branches on the old ſtock are ſtill withered: when the dry bones are coming together, bone to bone, amongſt ſaints, the ſinners bones are ſtill lying about the grave's mouth. They are trees that cumber the ground, are near to be cut down; and will be cut down for the fire, if God in mercy prevent it not by cutting them off from that ſtock, and ingrafting them into another.

Laſtly, Our natural ſtock is a killing ſtock. If the ſtock die, how can the branches live? If the ſap be gone from the root and heart, the branches muſt needs wither. In Adam all die, 1 Cor. xv. 22. The root died in Paradiſe, and all the branches in it, and with it. The root is empoiſoned, thence the branches come to be infected: death is in the pot, and all that taſte of the pulſe, or pottage, are killed.

Know then, that every natural man is a branch of a killing ſtock. Our natural root not only gives us not life, but it has a killing power, reaching all the branches thereof. There are four things which the firſt Adam conveys to all his branches, and they are abiding in, and lying on, ſuch of them as are not ingrafted in Chriſt. Firſt, A corrupt nature. He ſinned, and his nature was therefore corrupted or depraved; and this corruption is conveyed to all his poſterity. He was infected, and the contagion ſpread itſelf over all his ſeed. Secondly, Guilt, that is, an obligation to puniſhment, Rom. v. 21. By one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned. The threatenings of the law, as cords of death, are twiſted about the branches of the old ſtock, to draw them over the hedge into the fire. And till they be cut off from this ſtock by the pruning knife, the ſword of vengeance hangs over their heads, to cut them down. Thirdly, This killing ſtock tranſmits the curſe into the branches. The ſtock, as the ſtock (for I ſpeak not of Adam in his perſonal and private capacity) being curſed, ſo are the branches, Gal. iii. 10. For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe. This curſe affects the whole man, and all that belongs to him, every thing he poſſeſſes; and worketh three ways. (1.) As poiſon, infecting; thus their bleſſings are curſed, Mal. ii. 2. Whatever the man enjoys, it can do him no good, but evil, being thus empoiſoned by the curſe. His proſperity in the world deſtroys him, Prov. i. 32. The miniſtry of the goſpel is a favour of death unto death, to him, 2 Cor. ii. 16. His ſeeming attainments in religion are curſed to him: his knowledge ſerves but to puff him up, and his duties to keep him back from Chriſt. (2.) It worketh as a moth, conſuming and waſting by little and little, Hoſ. v. 12. Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a moth. There is a worm at the root, conſuming them by degrees. Thus the curſe purſued Saul, till it wormed him out of all his enjoyments, and out of the very ſhew he had of religion. Sometimes they decay like the fat of lambs, and melt away as the ſnow in a ſunſhine. (3.) It acteth as a lion rampant, Hoſ. v. 14. I will be unto Ephraim as a lion. The Lord "rains on them ſnares, fire and brimſtone, and "an horrible tempeſt," in ſuch a manner, that they are hurried away with the ſtream. He teareth their enjoyments from them in his wrath, purſueth them with terrors, rents their ſouls from their bodies, and throws the deadened branch into the fire. Thus the curſe devours like fire, which none can quench. Laſtly, This killing ſtock tranſmits death to the branches upon it. Adam took the poiſonous cup and drunk it off: this occaſioned death to himſelf and us. We came into the world ſpiritually dead, thereby obnoxious to eternal death, and abſolutely liable to temporal death. This root is to us like the Scythian river, which, they ſay, brings forth little bladders every day, out of which come certain ſmall flies, which are bred in the morning, winged at noon, and dead at night: a very lively emblem of our mortal ſtate.

Now, Sirs, is it not abſolutely neceſſary to be broken off from this our natural ſtock? What will our fair leaves of a profeſſion, or our fruits of duties avail, if we be ſtill branches of the degenerate, dead and killing ſtock? But, alas; among the many queſtions toſſed among us, few are taken up about theſe, Whether am I broken off from the old ſtock, or not? Whether am I ingrafted in Chriſt, or not? Ah! Wherefore all this waſte? Why is there ſo much noiſe about religion amongſt many who can give no good account of their having laid a good foundation, being mere ſtrangers to experimental religion? I fear, if God do not in mercy timeouſly undermine the religion of many of us, and let us ſee we have none at all, our root will be found rottenneſs, and our bloſſom go up as duſt, in a dying hour. Therefore let us look to our ſtate, that we be not found fools in our latter end.

II. Let us now view the ſupernatural ſtock, in which the branches cut off from the natural ſtock are ingrafted. Jeſus Chriſt is ſometimes called the Branch, Zech. iii. 8. So he is in reſpect of his human nature, being a branch, and the top-branch of the houſe of David. Sometimes he is called a root, Iſ. xi. 10. We have both together, Rev. xxii. 16. I am the root, and the offſpring of David. David's root as God, and his offſpring as man. The text tells us, that he is the vine, i. e. he, as a Mediator, is the vine-ſtock, whereof believers are the branches. As the ſap comes from the earth into the root and ſtock, and from thence is diffuſed into the branches; ſo, by Chriſt as Mediator, divine life is conveyed from the fountain, unto theſe who are united to him by faith, John vi. 57. As the living Father hath ſent me, and I live by the Father: ſo he that eateth me, even he ſhall live by me. Now Chriſt is Mediator, not as God only, as ſome have aſſerted; nor yet as man only, as the Papiſts generally hold: but he is Mediator as God-man, Acts xx. 28.-- --The church of God which he hath purchaſed by his blood, Heb. ix. 14.---- Chriſt, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God. The divine and human natures have their diſtinct actings, yet a joint operation, in his diſcharging the office of Mediator. This is illuſtrated by the ſimilitude of a fiery ſword, which at once cuts and burns: cutting it burneth, and burning it cutteth; the ſteel cuts, and the fire burns. Wherefore Chriſt, God-man, is the ſtock, whereof believers are the branches: and they are united to whole Chriſt. They are united to him in his human nature, as being members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones, Eph. v. 30. And they are united to him in his divine nature; for ſo the apoſtle ſpeaks of this union, Col. i. 27. Chriſt in you the hope of glory. And by him they are united to the Father, and to the Holy Ghoſt, 1 John iv. 15. Whoſever ſhall confeſs that Jeſus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. Faith, the bond of this union, receives whole Chriſt God-man, and ſo unites us to him as ſuch.

Behold here, O believers, your high privilege. Ye were once branches of a degenerate ſtock, even as others: but ye are, by grace, become branches of the new vine, John xv. 1. Ye are cut out of a dead and killing ſtock and ingrafted in the laſt Adam, who was made a quickning ſpirit, 1 Cor xv. 45. your loſs by the firſt Adam is made up, with great advantage, by your union with the ſecond. Adam, at his beſt eſtate, was but a ſhrub, in compariſon with Chriſt the tree of life. He was but a ſervant; Chriſt is the Son, the Heir, and Lord of all things, the Lord from heaven. It cannot be denied, that grace was ſhown in the firſt covenant, but it is as far exceeded by the grace of the ſecond covenant, as the twilight is by the light of mid-day.

III. What branches are taken out of the natural ſtock and grafted into this vine? Anſw. Theſe are the elect and none other. They, and they only are grafted into Chriſt; and conſequently none but they are cut off from the killing ſtock. For them alone he intercedes, That they may be one in him and his Father, John xvii. 9. 23. Faith the bond of this union, is given to none elſe; it is the faith of God's elect, Tit. i. 1. The Lord paſſeth by many branches growing on the natural ſtock, and cuts off only here one, and there one, and grafts them into the true vine, according as free love hath determined. Oft does he pitch upon the moſt unlikely branch, leaving the top-boughs: paſſing by the mighty, and the noble, and calling the weak, baſe, and deſpiſed, 1 Cor. i. 26. 27. Yea, he often leaves the fair and ſmooth, and takes the rugged and knotty: and ſuch were ſome of you; but ye are waſhed, &c. 1 Cor. vi. 11. If we enquire why ſo? We find no other reaſon but, becauſe they were choſen in him, Eph. i. 4. predeſtinated to the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt, verſ. 5. Thus are they gathered together in Chriſt, while the reſt are left growing on their natural ſtock, to be afterwards bound up in bundles for the fire. Wherefore, to whomſoever the goſpel may come in vain, it will have a bleſſed effect on God's elect, Acts xiii. 48. As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. Where the Lord has much people, the goſpel will have much ſucceſs ſooner or latter. Such as are to be ſaved will be added to the myſtical body of Chriſt.

How the branches are taken out of the natural ſtock, and ingrafted into the ſupernatural ſtock.

IV. I am to ſhew how the branches are cut off from the natural ſtock, the firſt Adam, and grafted into the true vine, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Thanks to the Huſbandman, not to the branch, that it is cut off from its natural ſtock, and grafted into a new one. The ſinner, in his coming off from the firſt ſtock, is paſſive, and neither can nor will come off from it of his own accord, but clings to it, till almighty power make him to fall off, John vi. 44. No man can come unto me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him. And chap. v. 40. Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life. The ingrafted branches are God's huſbandry, 1 Cor. iii. 9. the planting of the Lord, Iſ. lxi. 3. The ordinary means he makes uſe of, in this work, is the miniſtry of the word, 1 Cor iii. 9. We are labourers together with God. But the efficacy thereof is wholly from him, whatever the miniſter's parts or piety be, verſe 7. Neither is he that planteth any thing, neither is he that watereth: but God that giveth the increaſe. The apoſtles preached to the Jews, yet the body of that people remained in infidelity, Rom. x. 16. Who hath believed our report? Yea Chriſt himſelf who ſpoke as never man ſpoke, ſaith concerning the ſucceſs of his own miniſtry, I have laboured in vain, I have ſpent my ſtrength for nought, Iſ. xlix. 4. The branches may be hacked by the preaching of the word: but the ſtroke will never go through, till it be carried home on them, by an omnipotent arm. However, God's ordinary way is, by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe, 1 Cor. i. 21.

The cutting off of the branch, from the natural ſtock, is performed by the pruning knife of the law in the hand of the ſpirit of God, Gal. ii. 19. For I through the law am dead to the law. It is by the bond of the covenant of works, as I ſaid before, that we are knit to our natural ſtock: and therefore, as a wife, unwilling to be put away, pleads and hangs by the marriage-tye; ſo do men by the covenant of works. They hold by it, like the man who held the ſhip with his hands; and when one hand was cut off, held it with the other; and when both were cut off, held it with his teeth. This will appear from a diſtinct view of the Lord's work on men, in bringing them off from the old ſtock; which now I offer in the following particulars.

Firſt, When the Spirit of the Lord comes to deal with a perſon, to bring him to Chriſt; he finds him in Laodicea's caſe, in a ſound ſleep of ſecurity, dreaming of heaven, and the favour of God, though full of ſin againſt the holy One of Iſrael, Rev. iii. 17. Thou knoweſt not that thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked. And therefore he darts in ſome beams of light into the dark ſoul; and lets the man ſee he is a loſt man, if he turn not over a new leaf, and betake himſelf to a new courſe of life. Thus by the Spirit of the Lord acting as a ſpirit of bondage, there is a criminal court erected in the man's breaſt; where he is arraigned, accuſed, and condemned for breaking the law of God, convinced of ſin and judgment, John xvi. 8. And now he can no longer ſleep ſecurely in his former courſe of life. This is the firſt ſtroke the branch gets, in order to cutting off.

Secondly, Hereupon the man forſakes his former profane courſes, his lying, ſwearing, Sabbath-breaking, ſtealing, and ſuch like practices; though they be dear to him, as right eyes, he will rather quit them, than ruin his ſoul. The ſhip is like to ſink, and therefore he throweth his goods over-board, that he himſelf may not periſh. And now he begins to bleſs himſelf in his heart, and look joyfully on his evidences for heaven; thinking himſelf a better ſervant to God than many others, Luke xviii. 11. God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers, &c. But he ſoon gets another ſtroke with the axe of the law, ſhewing him that it is only he that doth what is written in the law, who can be ſaved by it; and that his negative holineſs is too ſcanty a cover from the ſtorm of God's wrath. And thus, although his ſins of commiſſion only were heavy on him before, his ſins of omiſſion now crowd into his thoughts, attended with a train of law-curſes and vengeance. And each of the ten commands diſcharges thunder-claps of wrath againſt him, for his omitting required duties.

Thirdly, Upon this he turns unto a poſitively holy courſe of life. He not only is not profane, but he performs religious duties: he prays, ſeeks the knowledge of the principles of religion, ſtrictly obſerves the Lord's day, and, like Herod, does many things, and hears ſermons gladly. In one word, there is a great conformity, in his outward converſation, to the letter of both tables of the law. And now there is a mighty change upon the man, that his neighbours cannot but take notice of. Hence he is cheerfully admitted by the godly into their ſociety, as a praying perſon; and can confer with them about religious matters, yea, and about ſoul-exerciſe, which ſome are not acquainted with; and their good opinion of him, confirms his good opinion of himſelf. This ſtep in religion is fatal to many, who never get beyond it. But here the Lord reacheth the elect-branch a further ſtroke. Conſcience flies in the man's face, for ſome wrong ſteps in his converſation, the neglect of ſome duty, or commiſſion of ſome ſin, which is a blot in his converſation: and then the flaming ſword of the law appears again over his head; and the curſe rings in his ears, for that he continueth not in ALL things written in the law, to do them, Gal. iii. 10.

Fourthly, On this account he is obliged to ſeek another ſalve for his ſore. He goes to God, confeſſeth his ſin, ſeeks the pardon of it, promiſing to watch againſt it for the time to come: and ſo finds eaſe, and thinks he may very well take it, ſeeing the ſcripture ſaith, If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, 1 John i. 9. not conſidering that he graſps at a privilege, which is theirs only who are grafted into Chriſt, and under the covenant of grace, and which the branches yet growing on the old ſtock cannot plead. And here ſometimes there are formal and expreſs vows made againſt ſuch and ſuch ſins, and binding to ſuch and ſuch duties. Thus many go on all their days, knowing no other religion, but to do duties, and to confeſs, and pray for pardon of that wherein they fail, promiſing themſelves eternal happineſs, though they are utter ſtrangers to Chriſt. Here many elect ones have been caſt down wounded, and many reprobates have been ſlain, while the wounds of neither of them have been deep enough to cut them off from their natural ſtock. But the Spirit of the Lord gives yet a deeper ſtroke to the branch which is to be cut off, ſhewing him, that, as yet, he is but an out-ſide ſaint, and diſcovering to him the filthy luſts lodged in his heart, which he took no notice of before, Rom. vii. 9. When the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. Then he ſees his heart a dunghill of helliſh luſts, filled with covetouſneſs, pride, malice, filthineſs, and the like. Now, aſſoon as the door of the chambers of his imagery is thus opened to him, and he ſees what they do there in the dark, his outſide religion is blown up as inſufficient; and he learns a new leſſon in religion, namely, That he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly, Rom. ii. 28.

Fifthly, Upon this he goes further, even to inſide religion; ſets to work more vigorouſly than ever, mourns over the evils of his heart, and ſtrives to bear down the weeds he finds growing in that neglected garden. He labours to curb his pride and paſſion, and to baniſh ſpeculative impurities; prays more fervently, hears attentively, and ſtrives to get his heart affected in every religious duty he performs: and thus he comes to think himſelf not only an out-ſide, but an in-ſide Chriſtian. Wonder not at this, for there is nothing in it, beyond the power of nature, or what one may attain to under a vigorous influence of the covenant of works; therefore another yet deeper ſtroke is reached. The law chargeth home on the man's conſcience, that he was a tranſgreſſor from the womb; that he came into the world a guilty creature, and that in the time of his ignorance, and even ſince his eyes were opened, he has been guilty of many actual ſins, either altogether overlooked by him, or not ſufficiently mourned over. (For ſpiritual ſores, not healed by the blood of Chriſt, but ſkinned over ſome other way, are eaſily ruffled, and as ſoon break out again). And therefore the law takes him by the throat, ſaying, Pay what thou oweſt.

Sixthly, Then the ſinner ſays in his heart, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all; and ſo falls to work to pacify an offended God, and to atone for theſe ſins. He renews his repentance, ſuch as it is; bears patiently the afflictions laid upon him; yea, he afflicts himſelf, denies himſelf the uſe of his lawful comforts, ſighs deeply, mourns bitterly, cries with tears for a pardon, till he hath wrought up his heart to a conceit of having obtained it: having thus done penance for what is paſt, and reſolving to be a good ſervant to God, and to hold on in outward and inward obedience, for the time to come. But the ſtroke muſt go nearer the heart yet, ere the branch fall off. The Lord diſcovers to him, in the glaſs of the law, how he ſinneth in all he does, even when he does the beſt he can; and therefore the dreadful ſound returns to his ears, Gal. iii. 10. Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, &c. When ye faſted and mourned, ſaith the Lord, did ye at all faſt unto me, even to me? Will muddy water make clean cloaths? Will you ſatisfy for one ſin with another? Did not your thoughts wander in ſuch a duty? Were not your affections flat in another? Did not your heart give a whoriſh look to ſuch an idol? And did it not riſe in a fit of impatience under ſuch an affliction? Should I accept this of your hands? Curſed be the deceiver, which ſacrificeth to the Lord a corrupt thing, Mal. i. 13. 14. And thus he becomes ſo far broke off, that he ſees he is not able to ſatisfy the demands of the law.

Seventhly. Hence, like a broken man, who finds he is not able to pay all his debt, he goes about to compound with his creditor. And, being in purſuit of eaſe and comfort, he does what he can to fulfil the law; and wherein he fails, he looks that God will accept the will for the deed. Thus doing his duty, and having a will to do better, he cheats himſelf into a perſuaſion of the goodneſs of his ſtate: and hereby thouſands are ruined. But the elect get another ſtroke, which looſeth their hold in this caſe. The doctrine of the law is borne in on their conſciences, demonſtrating to them, that exact and perfect obedience is required by it, under pain of the curſe; and that it is doing, and not wiſhing to do, which will avail. Wiſhing to do better will not anſwer the law's demands; and therefore the curſe ſounds again, Curſed is every one that continueth------to DO them: that is, actually to do them. In vain is wiſhing then.

Eightly, Being broken off from hopes of compounding with the law, he falls a borrowing. He ſees that all he can do to obey the law, and all his deſires to be, and to do better, will not ſave his ſoul: therefore he goes to Chriſt, intreating, that his righteouſneſs may make up what is wanting in his own, and cover all the defects of his doings, and ſufferings, that ſo God for Chriſt's ſake may accept them, and thereupon be reconciled. Thus doing what he can to fulfil the law, and looking to Chriſt to make up all his defects: he comes, at length, again to ſleep in a ſound ſkin. Many perſons are ruined this way. This was the error of the Galatians, which Paul, in his epiſtle to them, diſputes againſt. But the Spirit of God breaks off the ſinner from this hold alſo: by bearing in on his conſcience that great truth, Gal. iii. 12. The law is not of faith, but the man that doth them ſhall live in them. There is no mixing of the law and faith in this buſineſs: the ſinner muſt hold by one of them, and let the other go. The way of the law, and the way of faith, are ſo far different, that it is not poſſible for a ſinner to walk in the one, but he muſt come off from the other: and if he be for doing, he muſt do all alone; Chriſt will not do a part for him, if he do not all. A garment pieced up of ſundry ſorts of righteouſneſs, is not a garment meet for the court of heaven. Thus the man who was in a dream, and thought he was eating, is awakened by the ſtroke, and behold his ſoul is faint: his heart ſinks in him like a ſtone, while he finds he can neither bear his burden himſelf alone, nor can he get help under it.

Ninthly, What can one do, who muſt needs pay, and yet neither has as much of his own as will bring him out of debt, nor can he get as much to borrow, and to beg he is aſhamed? What can ſuch a one do, I ſay, but ſell himſelf, as the man under the law, that was waxen poor? Lev. xxv. 47. Therefore the ſinner, beat off from ſo many holds, goes about to make a bargain with Chriſt, and to ſell himſelf to the Son of God, (if I may ſo ſpeak,) ſolemnly promiſing and vowing, that he will be a ſervant to Chriſt, as long as he lives, if he will ſave his ſoul. And here oft-times the ſinner makes a perſonal covenant with Chriſt, reſigning himſelf to him on theſe terms; yea, and takes the ſacrament, to make the bargain ſure. Hereupon the man's great care is, how to obey Chriſt, keep his commands, and to fulfil his bargain. And in this the ſoul finds a falſe, unſound peace, for a while; till the Spirit of the Lord fetch another ſtroke, to cut off the man from this refuge of lies likewiſe. And that happens in this manner. When he fails of the duties he engaged to, and falls again into the ſin he covenanted againſt, it is powerfully carried home on his conſcience, that his covenant is broken: ſo all his comfort goes, and terrors afreſh ſeize on his ſoul, as one that has broken covenant with Chriſt. And commonly the man, to help himſelf, renew his covenant, but breaks it again as before. And how is it poſſible it ſhould be otherwiſe, ſeeing he is ſtill upon the old ſtock? Thus the work of many, all their days, as to their ſouls, is nothing but a making and breaking ſuch covenants, over and over again.

Object. Some perhaps will ſay, "Who liveth and ſinneth not? Who is there that faileth not of the duties he has engaged to? If you reject this way as unſound, who then can be ſaved?" Anſw. True believers will be ſaved, namely, all who do by faith take hold of God's covenant. But this kind of covenant is men's own covenant, deviſed of their own heart; not God's covenant revealed in the goſpel of his grace: and the making of it is nothing elſe but the making of a covenant of works with Chriſt, confounding the law and the goſpel; a covenant he will never ſubſcribe to, though we ſhould ſign it with our heart's blood, Rom. iv. 14. For if they who are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promiſe made of none effect. v. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end, the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed. chap. xi. 6. And if by grace, then is it no more of works, otherwiſe grace is no more grace; but if it be of works, then is it no more grace, otherwiſe work is no more work. God's covenant is everlaſting; once in, never out of it again, and the mercies of it are ſure mercies. But that covenant of yours is a tottering covenant, never ſure, but broken every day. It is a mere ſervile covenant: giving Chriſt ſervice for ſalvation: but God's covenant is a filial covenant, in which the ſinner takes Chriſt, and his ſalvation freely offered, and ſo becomes a ſon, John i. 12. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God: and being become a ſon, he ſerves his Father, not that the inheritance may become his, but becauſe it is his, through Jeſus Chriſt. See Gal. iv. 24. and downward. To enter into that ſpurious covenant, is to buy from Chriſt with money; but to take hold of God's covenant, is to buy of him without money and without price. Iſ. lv. 1. that is to ſay, to beg of him. In that covenant men work for life; in God's covenant they come to Chriſt for life, and work from life. When a perſon under that covenant fails in his duty, all is gone; the covenant muſt be made over again. But under God's covenant, although the man fail in his duty, and for his failures falls under the diſcipline of the covenant; and lies under the weight of it, till ſuch time as he has recourſe anew to the blood of Chriſt for pardon, and renew his repentance: yet all that he truſted to for life and ſalvation, namely, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſtill ſtands entire, and the covenant remains firm. See Rom. vii. 24. 25. and viii. 1.

Now, though ſome men ſpend their lives in making and breaking ſuch covenants of their own; the terror upon the breaking of them wearing weaker and weaker by degrees, till at laſt it creates them little or no uneaſineſs: yet the man, in whom the good work is carried on, till it be accompliſhed in cutting him off from the old ſtock, finds theſe covenants to be, as rotten cords, broke at every touch; and the terror of God being thereupon redoubled on his ſpirit, and the waters, at every turn, getting in unto his very ſoul, he is obliged to ceaſe from catching hold of ſuch covenants, and to ſeek help ſome other way.

Tenthly, Therefore the man comes at length to beg at Chriſt's door for mercy; but yet he is a proud beggar, ſtanding on his perſonal worth. For, as the Papiſts have mediators to plead for them with the one only Mediator, ſo the branches of the old ſtock have always ſomething to produce, which, they think, may commend them to Chriſt, and engage him to take their caſe in hand. They cannot think of coming to the ſpiritual market without money in their own hand. They are like perſons who have once had an eſtate of their own, but are reduced to extreme poverty, and forced to beg. When they come to beg, they ſtill remember their former character; and though they have loſt their ſubſtance, yet they retain much of their former ſpirit: therefore they cannot think they ought to be treated as ordinary beggars, but deſerve a particular regard; and, if that be not given them, their ſpirits riſe againſt him to whom they addreſs themſelves for ſupply. Thus God gives the unhumbled ſinner many common mercies, and ſhuts him not up in the pit according to his deſerving: but all this is nothing in his eyes. He muſt be ſet down at the childrens table, otherwiſe he reckons himſelf hardly dealt with and wronged: for he is not yet brought ſo low, as to think God may be juſtified when he ſpeaketh (againſt him,) and clear from all iniquity, when he judgeth him, according to his real demerit. Pſal. li. 4. He thinks perhaps that, even before he was enlightened, he was better than many others: he conſiders his reformation of life, his repentance, the grief and tears his ſin has coſt him, his earneſt deſires after Chriſt, his prayers and wreſtlings for mercy; and uſeth all theſe now as bribes for mercy, laying no ſmall weight upon them in his addreſſes to the throne of grace. But here the Spirit of the Lord ſhoots a ſheaf of arrows into the man's heart, whereby his confidence in theſe things is ſunk and deſtroyed; and inſtead of thinking himſelf better than many, he is made to ſee himſelf worſe than any. The naughtineſs of his reformation of life is diſcovered; his repentance appears to him no better than the repentance of Judas; his tears like Eſau's, and his deſires after Chriſt to be ſelfiſh and loathſome, like theirs who ſought Chriſt becauſe of the loaves, John vi. 26. His anſwer from God ſeems now to be, Away proud beggar, how ſhall I put thee among the children? He ſeems to look ſternly on him, for his ſlighting of Jeſus Chriſt by unbelief; which is a ſin he ſcarce diſcerned before. But now at length he beholds it in its crimſon colours, and is pierced to the heart, as with a thouſand darts, while he ſees he has been going on blindly, ſinning againſt the remedy of ſin, and, in the whole courſe of his life, trampling on the blood of the Son of God. And now he is, in his own eyes, the miſerable object of law-vengeance, yea, and goſpel-vengeance too.

Eleventhly, The man being thus far humbled, will no more plead he is worthy for whom Chriſt ſhould do this thing; but, on the contrary, looks on himſelf as unworthy of Chriſt, and unworthy of the favour of God. We may compare him, in this caſe, to the young man who followed Chriſt, having a linen cloth, caſt about his naked body: on whom when the young men laid hold, he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked, Mark xiv. 51. 52. Even ſo the man had been following Chriſt, in the thin and coldriſe garment of his own perſonal worthineſs: but by it, even by it, which he ſo much truſted to, the law catcheth hold of him, to make him priſoner; and then he is fain to leave it, and flees away naked: yet not to Chriſt, but from him. If ye now tell him, he is welcome to Chriſt, if he will come to him; he is apt to ſay, Can ſuch a vile and unworthy wretch as I, be welcome to the holy Jeſus? If a plaiſter be applied to his wounded ſoul, it will not ſtick. He ſays, Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, O Lord, Luke v. 8. No man needs ſpeak to him of his repentance, for his comfort; he can quickly eſpy ſuch faults in it as makes it naught: nor of his tears; for he is aſſured they have never come into the Lord's bottle. He diſputes himſelf away from Chriſt; and concludes, now that he has been ſuch a ſlighter of Chriſt, and is ſuch an unholy and vile creature, he cannot, he will not, he ought not to come to Chriſt; and that he muſt either be in better caſe, or elſe he will never believe. And hence he now makes his ſtrongeſt efforts to amend what was amiſs in his way before: he prays more earneſtly than ever, mourns more bitterly, ſtrives againſt ſin, in heart and life, more vigorouſly, and watcheth more diligently, if by any means he may, at length, be fit to come to Chriſt. One would think the man is well humbled now: but, ah! deviliſh pride lurks under the veil of all this ſeeming humility; like a kindly branch of the old ſtock, he adheres ſtill, and will not ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God, Rom. x. 3. He will not come to the market of free grace without money. He is bidden to the marriage of the King's ſon, where the Bridegroom himſelf furniſheth all the gueſts with wedding-garments, ſtripping them of their own; but he will not come, becauſe he wants a wedding garment, howbeit he is very buſy making one ready. This is ſad work; and therefore he muſt have a deeper ſtroke yet, elſe he is ruined. This ſtroke is reached him with the axe of the law, in its irritating power. Thus the law girding the ſoul with cords of death, and holding it in with the rigorous commands of obedience, under the pain of the curſe; and God in his holy and wiſe conduct, withdrawing his reſtraining grace, corruption is irritated, luſts become violent; and the more they are ſtriven againſt, the more they rage, like a furious horſe checked with the bit. Then do corruptions ſet up their heads, which he never ſaw in himſelf before. Here ofttimes Atheiſm, blaſphemy, and, in one word, horrible things concerning God, terrible thoughts concerning the faith, ariſe in his breaſt: ſo that his heart is a very hell within him. Thus, while he is ſweeping the houſe of his heart, not yet watered with goſpel-grace, theſe corruptions which lay quiet before in neglected corners, fly up and down in it like duſt. He is as one who is mending a dam, and while he is repairing breaches in it, and ſtrengthening every part of it, a mighty flood comes down, overturns his work, and drives all away before it, as well what was newly laid, as what was laid before. Read Rom. vii. 8. 9. 10. 13. This is a ſtroke which goes to the heart: and by it, his hope of getting himſelf more fit to come to Chriſt, is cut off.

Laſtly, Now the time is come, when the man, betwixt hope and deſpair, reſolves to go to Chriſt as he is; and therefore, like a dying man, ſtretching himſelf juſt before his breath goes out, he rallies the broken forces of his ſoul, tries to believe, and in ſome ſort lays hold on Jeſus Chriſt. And now the branch hangs on the old ſtock by one ſingle tack of a natural faith, produced by the natural vigour of one's own ſpirit, under a moſt preſſing neceſſity, Pſal lxxviii. 34. 35. When he ſlew them, then they ſought him, and they returned and enquired early after God. And they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their Redeemer. Hoſ. viii. 2. Iſrael ſhall cry unto me, My God, we know thee. But the Lord, minding to perfect his work, fetches yet another ſtroke, whereby the branch falls quite off. The Spirit of God convincingly diſcovers to the ſinner his utter inability to do any thing that is good, and ſo he dieth, Rom. vii. 9. That voice powerfully ſtrikes through his ſoul, How can ye believe? John v. 44. Thou canſt no more believe, than thou canſt reach up thine hand to heaven, and bring Chriſt down from thence. And thus at length he ſees, he can neither help himſelf by working, nor by believing: and having no more to hang by, on the old ſtock, he therefore falls off. And while he is diſtreſſed thus, ſeeing himſelf like to be ſwept away with the flood of God's wrath; and yet unable ſo much as to ſtretch forth a hand to lay hold of a twig of the tree of life, growing on the banks of the river, he is taken up, and ingrafted in the true vine, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt giving him the ſpirit of faith.

By what has been ſaid upon this head, I deſign not to rack or diſtreſs tender conſciences; for though there are but few ſuch, at this day, yet God forbid I ſhould offend any of Chriſt's little ones. But, alas! a dead ſleep is fallen upon this generation, they will not be awakened, let us go as near the quick as we will; and therefore I fear there is another ſort of awakening abiding this ſermon-proof generation, which ſhall make the ears of them that hear it to tingle. However, I would not have this to be looked upon as the ſovereign God's ſtinted method of breaking off ſinners from the old ſtock: but this I aſſert as a certain truth, that all who are in Chriſt have been broken off from all theſe ſeveral confidences: and that they who were never broken off from them, are yet in their natural ſtock. Nevertheleſs, if the houſe be pulled down, and the old foundation razed, it is all a caſe, whether it was taken down ſtone by ſtone, or whether it was undermined, and all fell down together.

Now it is that the branch is ingrafted in Jeſus Chriſt. And as the law, in the hand of the Spirit of God, was the inſtrument to cut off the branch from the natural ſtock; ſo the goſpel, in the hand of the ſame Spirit, is the inſtrument uſed for ingrafting it in the ſupernatural ſtock, 1 John i. 3. That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us; and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt. See Iſ. lxi. 1. 2. 3. The goſpel is the ſilver cord let down from heaven, to draw periſhing ſinners to land. And, though the preaching of the law prepares the way of the Lord: yet it is in the word of the goſpel that Chriſt and a ſinner meet. Now, as in the natural grafting, the branch being taken up is put into the ſtock, and being put into it, takes with it, and ſo they are united; even ſo in the ſpiritual ingrafting, Chriſt apprehends the ſinner, and the ſinner, being apprehended of Chriſt, apprehends him, and ſo they become one, Phil. iii. 12.

Firſt, Chriſt apprehends the ſinner by his Spirit, and draws him to himſelf, 1 Cor. xii. 13. For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body. The ſame Spirit, which is in the Mediator himſelf, he communicates to his elect in due time, never to depart from them, but to abide in them as a principle of life. Thus he takes hold of them by his own Spirit put into them; and ſo the withered branch gets life. The ſoul is now in the hands of the Lord of life, and poſſeſſed by the Spirit of life: how can it then but live? The man gets a raviſhing ſight of Chriſt's excellency, in the glaſs of the goſpel: he ſees him a full, ſuitable and willing Saviour; and gets a heart to take him, for and inſtead of all. The Spirit of faith furniſheth him with feet to come to Chriſt, and hands to receive him. What by nature he could not do, by grace he can, the Holy Spirit working in him the work of faith with power.

Secondly, The ſinner thus apprehended apprehends Chriſt by faith, and ſo takes with the bleſſed ſtock, Eph. iii 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith. The ſoul that before tried many ways of eſcape, but all in vain, doth now look again with the eye of faith, which proves the healing look. As Aaron's rod, laid up in the tabernacle, budded, and brought forth buds, Numb. xvii. 8; ſo the dead branch, apprehended by the Lord of life, put into, and bound up with the glorious quickening ſtock, by the Spirit of life, buds forth in actual believing on Chriſt, whereby this union is completed. We having the ſame Spirit of faith------believe, 2 Cor. iv. 13. Thus the ſtock and the graft are united, Chriſt and the Chriſtian are married, faith being the ſoul's conſent to the ſpiritual marriage-covenant, which, as it is propoſed in the goſpel to mankind ſinners indefinitely, ſo it is demonſtrated, atteſted, and brought home, to the man in particular, by the Holy Spirit: and ſo he being joined to the Lord, is one ſpirit with him. Hereby a believer lives in, and for Chriſt, and Chriſt lives in, and for the believer, Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt: Nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me. Hoſ. iii. 3. Thou ſhalt not be for another man, ſo will I alſo be for thee. The bonds then of this bleſſed union are, the Spirit on Chriſt's part, and faith on the believer's part.

Now both the ſouls and bodies of believers are united to Chriſt. He that is joined to the Lord, is one ſpirit, 1 Cor. vi. 17. The very bodies of believers have this honour put upon them, that they are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 19. and the members of Chriſt, ver. 15. When they ſleep in the duſt, they ſleep in Jeſus, 1 Theſſ. iv. 14.; and it is in virtue of this union they ſhall be raiſed up out of the duſt again, Rom. viii. 11. He ſhall quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. In token of this myſtical union, the church of believers is called by the name of her Head and Huſband, 1 Cor. xii. 12. For as the body is one, and hath many members,------ſo alſo is Chriſt.

USE. From what is ſaid, we may draw theſe following inferences.

1. The preaching of the law is moſt neceſſary. He that would ingraft, muſt needs uſe the ſnedding knife. Sinners have many ſhifts to keep them from Chriſt; many things by which they keep their hold of the natural ſtock: therefore they have need to be cloſely purſued, and hunted out of their ſkulking holes, and refuges of lies.

2. Yet it is the goſpel that crowns the work; the law makes nothing perfect. The law lays open the wound, but it is the goſpel that heals. The law ſtrips a man, wounds him, and leaves him half dead: the goſpel binds up his wounds, pouring in wine and oil, to heal them. By the law we are broken off, but it is by the goſpel we are taken up, and implanted in Chriſt.

3. If any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his, Rom. viii. 9. We are told of a monſter in nature, having two bodies differently animated, as appeared from contrary affections at one and the ſame time; but ſo united, that they were ſerved with the ſelf-ſame legs. Even ſo, however men may cleave to Chriſt, call themſelves of the holy city, and ſtay themſelves upon the God of Iſrael, Iſ. xlviii. 2. and they may be bound up, as branches in him, John xv. 2. by the outward ties of ſacraments: yet if the Spirit that dwells in Chriſt, dwell not in them, they are not one with him. There is a great difference between adheſion and ingrafting. The ivy claſps and twiſts itſelf about the oak, but it is not one with it, for it ſtill grows on its own root: ſo, to allude to Iſ. iv. 1. many profeſſors take hold of Chriſt, and eat their own bread, and wear their own apparel, only they are called by his name. They ſtay themſelves upon him, but grow upon their own root: they take him to ſupport their hopes, but their delights are elſewhere.

4. The union betwixt Chriſt and his myſtical members is firm and indiſſoluble. Were it ſo that the believer only apprehended Chriſt, but Chriſt apprehended not him, we could promiſe little on the ſtability of ſuch an union; it might quickly be diſſolved: but, as the believer apprehends Chriſt by faith, ſo Chriſt apprehends him by his Spirit, and none ſhall pluck him out of his hand. Did the child only keep hold of the nurſe, it might at length weary, and let go its hold, and ſo fall away: but if ſhe have her arms about the child, it is no hazard of falling away, even though it be not actually holding by her. So, whatever ſinful intermiſſions may happen in the exerciſe of faith: yet the union remains ſure, by reaſon of the conſtant indwelling of the Spirit. Bleſſed Jeſus! All his ſaints are in thy hand, Deut. xxxiii. 3. It is obſerved by ſome, that the word Abba, is the ſame, whether you read it forward or backward: whatever the believer's caſe be, the Lord is ſtill to him, Abba, Father.

Laſtly, They have an unſure hold of Chriſt, whom he has not apprehended by his Spirit. There are many half marriages here, where the ſoul apprehends Chriſt, but is not apprehended of him. Hence, many fall away, and never riſe again: they let go their hold of Chriſt; and when that is gone, all is gone. Theſe are the branches in Chriſt, that bear no fruit, which the Huſbandman taketh away, John xv. 2. Queſt. How can that be? Anſw. Theſe branches are ſet in the ſtock by a profeſſion, or an unſound hypocritical faith; they are bound up with it, in the external uſe of the ſacraments; but the ſtock and they are never knit; therefore they cannot bear fruit. And they need not be cut off, nor broken off; they are by the Huſbandman only taken away, or (as the word primarily ſignifies) lifted up, and ſo taken away, becauſe there is nothing to hold them: they are indeed bound up with the ſtock, but they have never united with it.

Queſt. How ſhall I know if I am apprehended of Chriſt? Anſw. You may be ſatisfied in this enquiry, if you conſider and apply theſe two things.

1ſt, When Chriſt apprehends a man by his Spirit, he is ſo drawn, that he comes away to Chriſt with his whole heart: for true believing is believing with all the heart, Acts viii. 37. Our Lord's followers are like theſe who followed Saul at firſt, men whoſe hearts God has touched, 1 Sam. x. 26. When the Spirit pours in overcoming grace, they pour out their hearts like water before him, Pſal. lxii. 8. They flow unto him like a river, Iſ. ii. 2. All nations ſhall flow unto it, namely, to the mountain of the Lord's houſe. It denotes not only the abundance of converts, but the diſpoſition of their ſouls in coming to Chriſt; they come heartily and freely, as drawn with loving-kindneſs, Jer. xxxi. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power, Pſal. cx. 3. i. e. free, ready, open-hearted, giving themſelves to thee as free-will offerings. When the bridegroom has the bride's heart, it is a right marriage: but ſome give their hand to Chriſt, who give him not their heart They that are only driven to Chriſt by terror, will ſurely leave him again when that terror is gone. Terrors may break a heart of ſtone, but the pieces into which it is broken ſtill continue to be ſtone: the terrors cannot ſoften it into a heart of fleſh. Yet terror may begin the work, which love crowns. The ſtrong wind, the earthquake, and the fire going before, the ſtill ſmall voice, in which the Lord is, may come after them. When the bleſſed Jeſus is ſeeking ſinners to match with him, they are bold and perverſe: they will not ſpeak with him, till he hath wounded them, made them captives, and bound them with the cords of death. When this is done, then it is that he makes love to them, and wins their hearts. The Lord tells us, Hoſ. ii. 16---20. that his choſen Iſrael ſhall be married unto himſelf. But how will the bride's conſent be won? Why, in the firſt place, he will bring her into the wilderneſs, as he did the people, when he brought them out of Egypt, ver. 14. There ſhe will be hardly dealt with, ſcorched with thirſt, and bitten of ſerpents: and then he will ſpeak comfortably to her, or, as the expreſſion is, he will ſpeak upon her heart. The ſinner is firſt driven, and then drawn to Chriſt. It is with the ſoul as with Noah's dove, ſhe was forced back again to the ark, becauſe ſhe could find nothing elſe to reſt upon: but, when ſhe did return, ſhe would have reſted on the outſide of it, if Noah had not put forth his hand, and pulled her in, Gen. viii. 9. The Lord ſends the avenger of blood in purſuit of the criminal; and he, with a ſad heart, leaves his own city, and, with tears in his eyes, parts with his old acquaintances, becauſe he dare not ſtay with them, and he flees for his life to the city of refuge. This is not at all his choice, it is forced work; neceſſity has no law. But when he comes to the gates, and ſees the beauty of the place, the excellency and lovelineſs of it charms him; and then he enters it with heart and goodwill, ſaying, This is my reſt, and here I will ſtay; and, as one ſaid in another caſe, "I had periſhed, unleſs I had periſhed."

2dly, When Chriſt apprehends a ſoul, the heart is diſengaged from, and turned againſt ſin. As in cutting off the branch from the old ſtock, the great idol ſelf is brought down, the man is powerfully taught to deny himſelf: ſo, in the apprehending of the ſinner by the Spirit, that union is diſſolved which was betwixt the man and his luſts, while he was in the fleſh, as the apoſtle expreſſes it, Rom. vii. 5. His heart is looſed from them, though formerly as dear to him as the members of his body; as his eyes, legs, or arms: and, inſtead of taking pleaſure in them, as ſometime he did; he longs to be rid of them. When the Lord Jeſus comes to a ſoul, in the day of converting grace, he finds it like Jeruſalem, in the day of her nativity, (Ezek. xvi. 4.) with its navel not cut, drawing its fulſome nouriſhment and ſatisfaction from its luſts; but he cuts off this communication, that he may ſet the ſoul on the breaſts of his own conſolations, and give it reſt in himſelf. And thus the Lord wounds the head and heart of ſin, and the ſoul comes to him, ſaying, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit, Jer. xvi. 19.

Of the benefits flowing to true believers from their union with Chriſt.

V. And, laſtly, I come to ſpeak of the benefits flowing to true believers from their union with Chriſt. The chief of the particular benefits believers have by it, are juſtification, peace, adoption, ſanctification, growth in grace, fruitfulneſs in good works, acceptance of theſe good works, eſtabliſhment in a ſtate of grace, ſupport, and a ſpecial conduct of providence about them. As for communion with Chriſt, it is ſuch a benefit, as, being the immediate conſequent of union with him, comprehends all the reſt as mediate ones. For, look, as the branch, immediately upon its union with the ſtock, hath communion with the ſtock, in all that is in it; ſo the believer, uniting with Chriſt, hath communion with him; in which he launcheth forth into an ocean of happineſs, is led into a paradiſe of pleaſures, and has a ſaving intereſt in the treaſure hid in the field of the goſpel, the unſearchable riches of Chriſt. As ſoon as the believer is united to Chriſt, Chriſt himſelf, in whom all fulneſs dwells, is his, Cant. ii. 16. My beloved is mine, and I am his. And, how ſhall he not with him freely give us all things? Rom. viii. 32. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things preſent, or things to come, all are yours, 1 Cor. iii. 22. Thus communion with Chriſt is the great comprehenſive bleſſing neceſſarily flowing from our union with him. Let us now conſider the particular benefits flowing from it, before mentioned.

The firſt particular benefit that a ſinner hath by his union with Chriſt, is juſtification; for, being united to Chriſt, he hath communion with him in his righteouſneſs, 1 Cor. i. 30. But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom and righteouſneſs. He ſtands no more condemned, but juſtified before God, as being in Chriſt, Rom. viii. 1. There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Chriſt Jeſus. The branches hereof are, pardon of ſin, and perſonal acceptance.

Firſt, His ſins are pardoned, the guilt of them is removed. The bond obliging him to pay his debt is cancelled. God the Father takes the pen, dips it in the blood of his Son, croſſeth the ſinner's accounts, and blotteth them out of his debt-book. The ſinner out of Chriſt is bound over to the wrath of God: he is under an obligation in law to go the priſon of Hell, and there to lie till he has paid the utmoſt farthing. This ariſeth from the terrible ſanction with which the law is fenced; which is no leſs than death, Gen. ii. 17. So that the ſinner, paſſing the bounds aſſigned him, is, as Shimei in another caſe, a man of death, 1 Kings ii. 42. But now, being united to Chriſt, God ſaith, Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ranſom, Job xxxiii. 24. The ſentence of condemnation is reverſed, the believer is abſolved, and ſet beyond the reach of the condemning law. His ſins, which ſometimes were ſet before the Lord, Pſal. xc. 8. ſo that they could not be hid, God now takes and caſts them all behind his back, Iſ. xxxvii. 17. Yea, he caſts them into the depths of the ſea, Micah vii. 19. What falls into a brook may be got up again; but what is caſt into the ſea cannot be recovered. Ay, but there are ſome ſhallow places in the ſea: true, but their ſins are not caſt in there, but into the depths of the ſea; and the depths of the ſea are devouring depths, from whence they ſhall never come forth again. But what if they do not ſink? He will caſt them in with force, ſo that they ſhall go to the ground, and ſink as lead in the mighty waters of the Redeemer's blood. They are not only forgiven, but forgotten, Jer. xxxi. 34. I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their ſin no more. And though their after-ſins do in themſelves deſerve eternal wrath, and do actually make them liable to temporal ſtrokes, and fatherly chaſtiſements, according to the tenor of the covenant of grace, Pſal. lxxxix. 30.------33. yet they can never be actually liable to eternal wrath, or the curſe of the law; for they are dead to the law in Chriſt, Rom. vii. 4. And they can never fall from their union with Chriſt; nor can they be in Chriſt, and yet under condemnation, Rom. viii. 1. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus. This is an inference drawn from that doctrine of the believer's being dead to the law, delivered by the apoſtle, chap. vii. 1.----6. as is clear from the 2d, 3d, and 4th verſes of this eight chapter. And in this reſpect the juſtified man is the bleſſed man, unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, Pſal. xxxii. 2. as one who has no deſign to charge a debt on another, ſets it not down in his count-book.

2dly, The believer is accepted as righteous in God's ſight, 2 Cor. v. 21. For he is found in Chriſt, not having his own righteouſneſs, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith, Phil. iii. 9. He could never be accepted of God, as righteous, upon the account of his own righteouſneſs: becauſe, at beſt, it is but imperfect; and all righteouſneſs, properly ſo called, which will abide a trial before the throne of God, is perfect. The very name of it implies perfection: for unleſs a work be perfectly conform to the law, it is not right, but wrong; and ſo cannot make a man righteous before God, whoſe judgment is according to truth. Yet if juſtice demand a righteouſneſs of one that is in Chriſt, upon which he may be accounted righteous before the Lord, Surely ſhall ſuch an one ſay, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs, Iſ. xlv. 24. The law is fulfilled, its commands are obeyed, its ſanction is ſatisfied. The believer's cautioner has paid the debt. It was exacted, and he anſwered for it.

Thus the perſon united to Chriſt is juſtified. You may conceive of the whole proceeding herein, in this manner. The avenger of blood purſuing the criminal, Chriſt, as the Saviour of loſt ſinners, doth by the Spirit apprehend him, and draw him to himſelf; and he by faith lays hold on Chriſt: ſo the Lord our righteouſneſs, and the unrighteous creature, unite. From this union with Chriſt reſults a communion with him in his unſearchable riches, and conſequently in his righteouſneſs, that white raiment which he has for cloathing of the naked, Rev. iii. 18. Thus the righteouſneſs of Chriſt becomes his; and becauſe it is his by unqueſtionable title, it is imputed to him; it is reckoned his in the judgment of God, which is always according to the truth of the thing. And ſo the believing ſinner, having a righteouſneſs which fully anſwers the demands of the law, he is pardoned and accepted as righteous. See Iſ. xlv. 22. 24. 25. Rom. iii. and chap. v. 1. Now he is a free man. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of theſe whom God juſtifieth? Can juſtice lay any thing to their charge? No, for it is ſatisfied. Can the law? No, for it has got all its demands of them in Jeſus Chriſt, Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt. What can the law require more, after it has wounded their head, poured in wrath in full meaſure into their ſoul, and cut off their life, and brought it into the duſt of death, in ſo far as it has done all this to Jeſus Chriſt, who is their head, Eph. i. 22. their ſoul, Acts ii. 25. 27. and their life, Col. iii. 4? What is become of the ſinner's own hand-writing, which would prove the debt upon him? Chriſt has blotted it out, Col. ii. 14. But, it may be, juſtice may get its eye upon it again. No, he took it out of the way. But, O that it had been torn in pieces! may the ſinner ſay: Yea, ſo it is; the nails that pierced Chriſt's hands and feet are driven through it; he nailed it. But what if the torn pieces be ſet together again? That cannot be; for he nailed it to his croſs, and his croſs was buried with him, but will never riſe more, ſeeing Chriſt dieth no more. Where is the face-covering that was upon the condemned man? Chriſt has deſtroyed it, Iſ. xxv. 7. Where is death that ſtood before the ſinner with a grim face, and an open mouth, ready to devour him? Chriſt has ſwallowed it up in victory, verſ. 8. Glory, glory, glory to him that thus loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood.

The ſecond benefit flowing from the ſame ſpring of union with Chriſt, and coming by the way of juſtification, is peace; peace with God, and peace of conſcience, according to the meaſure of the ſenſe the juſtified have of their peace with God, Rom. v. 1. Therefore being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God. Chap. xiv. 17. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt. Whereas God was their enemy before, now he is reconciled to them in Chriſt: they are in a covenant of peace with him; and as Abraham was, ſo they are the friends of God. He is well pleaſed with them in his beloved Son. His word, which ſpoke terror to them formerly, now ſpeaks peace, if they rightly take up its language. And there is love in all his diſpenſations towards them, which makes all things work together for their good. Their conſciences are purged of that guilt and filthineſs that ſometime lay upon them: his conſcience-purifying blood ſtreams through their ſouls, by virtue of their union with him, Heb. ix. 14. How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt---purge your conſcience from dead works, to ſerve the living God? The bonds laid on their conſciences, by the Spirit of God, acting as the Spirit of bondage, are taken off, never more to be laid on by that hand, Rom. viii. 15. For ye have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear. Hereby the conſcience is quieted, aſſoon as the ſoul becomes conſcious of the application of that blood; which falls out ſooner or later, according to the meaſure of faith, and as the only wiſe God ſees meet to time it. Unbelievers may have troubled conſciences, which they may get quieted again: but alas! their conſciences become peaceable, ere they become pure; ſo their peace is but the ſeed of greater horror and confuſion. Careleſſneſs may give eaſe for a while, to a ſick conſcience; men neglecting its wounds, they cloſe again of their own accord, before the filthy matter is purged out. Many bury their guilt in the grave of an ill memory: conſcience ſmarts a little; at length the man forgets his ſin, and there is an end of it; but that is only an eaſe before death Buſineſs, or the affairs of life, often give eaſe in this caſe. When Cain is baniſhed from the preſence of the Lord, he falls a building of cities. When the evil ſpirit came upon Saul, he calls not for his Bible, nor for the prieſts to converſe with him about his caſe; but for muſic, to play it away. So many, when their conſciences begin to be uneaſy, they fill their heads and hands with buſineſs, to divert themſelves, and to regain eaſe at any rate. Yea, ſome will ſin over the belly of their convictions, and ſo get ſome eaſe to their conſciences, as Hazael gave to his maſter, by ſtifling him. Again, the performing of duties may give ſome eaſe to a diſquieted conſcience: and this is all that legal profeſſors have recourſe to, for quieting of their conſciences. When conſcience is wounded; they will pray, confeſs, mourn, and reſolve to do ſo no more: and ſo they become whole again, without an application of the blood of Chriſt, by faith. But they, whoſe conſciences are rightly quieted, come for peace and purging to the blood of ſprinkling. Sin is a ſweet morſel, that makes God's elect ſick ſouls, ere they get it vomited up. It leaves a ſting behind it, which ſome one time or other, will create them no little pain.

Elihu ſhews us both the caſe and cure, Job xxxiii. Behold the caſe one may be in, whom God has thoughts of love to. He darteth convictions into his conſcience; and makes them ſtick ſo faſt, that he cannot rid himſelf of them, verſ. 16. He openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction. His very body ſickens, verſ. 19. He is chaſtened alſo with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain. He loſeth his ſtomach, verſ. 20. His life abhorreth bread, and his ſoul dainty meat. His body pines away, ſo that there is nothing on him but ſkin and bone, verſ. 21. His fleſh is conſumed away, that it cannot be ſeen, and his bones that were not ſeen ſtick out. Though he is not prepared for death, he has no hopes of life, ver. 22. His ſoul draweth near unto the grave, and (which is the height of his miſery) his life to the deſtroyers; he is looking every moment when devils, theſe deſtroyers, Rev. ix. 11. theſe murderers, or manſlayers, John viii. 44. will come and carry away his ſoul to hell. O dreadful caſe! yet there is hope. God deſigns to keep back his ſoul from the pit, ver. 18. although he bring him forward to the brink of it. Now, ſee how the ſick man is cured. The phyſician's art cannot prevail here: the diſeaſe lies more inward, than that his medicines can reach it. It is ſoul-trouble that has brought the body into this diſorder: and therefore the remedies muſt be applied to the ſick man's ſoul and conſcience. The phyſician for this caſe, muſt be a ſpiritual Phyſician; the remedies muſt be ſpiritual, a righteouſneſs, a ranſom, or atonement. Upon the application of theſe, the ſoul is cured, the conſcience is quieted; and the body recovers, verſ. 23. 24. 25. 26. If there be a meſſenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thouſand, to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs: then he is gracious unto him, and ſaith, Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ranſom. His fleſh ſhall be freſher than a child's; he ſhall return to the days of his youth. He ſhall pray unto God, and he ſhall be favourable unto him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy. The proper phyſician for this patient, is a meſſenger, an interpreter, ver. 23. that is, as ſome expoſitors not without ground underſtand it, the great Phyſician Jeſus Chriſt, whom Job had called his Redeemer, chap. xix. 25. He is a meſſenger, the meſſenger of the covenant of peace, Mal. iii. 1. who comes ſeaſonably to the ſick man. He is an interpreter, the great interpreter of God's counſels of love to ſinners, John i. 18. One among a thouſand, even the chief among ten thouſand, Cant. v. 10. One choſen out of the people, Pſal. lxxxix. 29. One to whom the Lord hath given the tongue of the learned,---to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary, Iſ. l. 4. 5. 6. It is he that is with him, by his Spirit, now, to convince him of righteouſneſs, John xvi. 8. as he was with him before, to convince him of ſin and of judgment. His work now is, to ſhew unto him his uprightneſs, or his righteouſneſs, i. e. the interpreter Chriſt his righteouſneſs; which is the only righteouſneſs, ariſing from the paying of a ranſom, and upon which a ſinner is delivered from going down to the pit, ver. 24. And thus Chriſt is ſaid to declare God's name, Pſal. xxii. 22. and to preach righteouſneſs, Pſal. xl. 9. The phraſe is remarkable: it is not to ſhew unto the man, but unto man, his righteouſneſs; which not obſcurely intimates, that he is more than a man, who ſhews or declareth this righteouſneſs. Compare Amos iv. 13. He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what is his thought. There ſeems to be in it a ſweet alluſion to the firſt declaration of this righteouſneſs unto man, or as the word is, unto Adam, after the fall, while he lay under terror from apprehenſions of the wrath of God: which declaration was made by the meſſenger, the interpreter, namely, the eternal Word, the Son of God, called the voice of the Lord God, Gen. iii. 8. and by him appearing, probably, in human ſhape. Now, while he, by his Spirit, is the preacher of righteouſneſs to the man, it is ſuppoſed the man lays hold on the offered righteouſneſs; whereupon, the ranſom is applied to him, and he is delivered from going down to the pit: for God hath a ranſom for him. This is intimate to him: God ſaith, Deliver him, ver. 24. Hereupon his conſcience, being purged by the blood of atonement, is pacified, and ſweetly quieted. He ſhall pray unto God---and ſee his face with joy, which before he beheld with horror, ver. 26; that is, in New-Teſtament language, having an high-prieſt over the houſe of God, he ſhall draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of faith, having his heart ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, Heb. x. 21. 22. But then, what becomes of the body, the weak and weary fleſh? Why his fleſh ſhall be freſher than a child's, he ſhall return to the days of his youth, ver. 25. Yea, All his bones (which were chaſtened with ſtrong pain, ver. 19.) ſhall ſay, Lord, who is like unto thee? Pſal. xxxv. 10.

A third benefit flowing from union with Chriſt, is adoption. Believers being united to Chriſt, become children of God, and members of the family of heaven. By their union with him, who is the Son of God by nature, they become the ſons of God by grace, John i. 12. As when a branch is cut off from one tree, and grafted in the branch of another: the ingrafted branch, by means of its union with the adopting branch, (as ſome not unfitly have called it,) is made a branch of the ſame ſtock, with that into which it is ingrafted: ſo ſinners being ingrafted into Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe name is the Branch, his Father is their Father, his God their God, John xx. 17. And thus they, who are by nature children of the devil, become children of God. They have the Spirit of adoption, Rom viii. 15. namely, the Spirit of his Son, which brings them to God, as children to a Father; to pour out their complaints in his boſom, and to ſeek neceſſary ſupply, Gal. iv. 6. Becauſe ye are ſons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father. Under all their weakneſſes, they have fatherly pity and compaſſion ſhewn them, Pſal. ciii. 13. Like as a father pitieth his children: ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Although they were but fundlings, found in a deſart land; yet now that to them belongs the adoption, he keeps them as the apple of his eye, Deut. xxxii. 10. Whoſoever purſue them, they have a refuge, Prov. xiv. 26. His children ſhall have a place of refuge. In a time of common calamity, they have chambers of protection, where they may be hid, until the indignation be overpaſt, Iſ. xxvi. 20. And he is not only their refuge of protection, but their portion for proviſion, in that refuge; Pſal cxliii. 5. Thou art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living. They are provided for for eternity, Heb. xi. 16. He hath prepared for them a city. And what he ſees they have need of for time, they ſhall not want, Matth. vi. 31. 32. Take no thought ſaying, What ſhall we eat? or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithall ſhall we be clothed?

For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things. Seaſonable correction is likewiſe their privilege as ſons: ſo they are not ſuffered to paſs with their faults, as happens to others who are not children, but ſervants of the family, and will be turned out of doors for their miſcarriages at length, Heb. xii. 7. If ye endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with ſons: for what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not? They are heirs of, and ſhall inherit the promiſe, Heb. vi. 12. Nay, they are heirs of God, who himſelf is the portion of their inheritance, Pſal. xvi. 6. and joint heirs with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17. And becauſe they are the children of the great King, and young heirs of glory; they have angels for their attendants, who are ſent forth to miniſter for them, that ſhall be heirs of ſalvation, Heb. i. 14.

A fourth benefit is ſanctification, 1 Cor. i. 30. But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification. Being united to Chriſt, they partake of his Spirit, which is the Spirit of holineſs. There is a fulneſs of the Spirit in Chriſt, and it is not like the fulneſs of a veſſel, which only retains what is poured into it; but it is the fulneſs of a fountain for diffuſion and communication, which is always ſending forth its waters, and yet is always full. The Spirit of Chriſt, that ſpiritual ſap, which is in the ſtock, and from thence is communicate to the branches, is the Spirit of grace, Zech. xii. 10. And where the Spirit of grace dwells, there will be found a complication of all graces. Holineſs is not one grace only, but all the graces of the Spirit: it is a conſtellation of graces: it is all the graces in their ſeed and root. And as the ſap conveyed from the ſtock into the branch goes through it, and through every part of it: ſo the Spirit of Chriſt ſanctifies the whole man. The poiſon of ſin was diffuſed through the whole ſpirit, ſoul and body of the man; and ſanctifying grace purſues it into every corner, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. Every part of the man is ſanctified, though no part is perfectly ſo. The truth we are ſanctified by, is not held in the head, as in a priſon: but runs with its ſanctifying influences, through heart and life. There are indeed ſome graces, in every believer, which appear as top branches above the reſt: as meekneſs in Moſes, patience in Job: but ſeeing there is in every child of God, a holy principle going along with the holy law, in all the parts thereof, loving, liking, and approving of it; as appears from their univerſal reſpect to the commands of God: it is evident they are endowed with all the graces of the Spirit: becauſe there can be no leſs in the effect, then there was in the cauſe.

Now, This ſanctifying ſpirit, whereof believers partake, is unto them, (1.) A ſpirit of mortification; through the Spirit they mortify the deeds of the body, Rom. viii. 13. Sin is crucified in them, Gal. v. 24. They are planted together (namely with Chriſt) in the likeneſs of his death, which was a lingering death, Rom. vi. 4. Sin in the ſaint, though not quite dead, yet is dying. If it were dead, it would be taken down from the croſs, and buried out of his ſight; but it hangs there as yet, working and ſtruggling under its mortal wounds. Look, as when a tree has got ſuch a ſtroke as reaches the heart of it, all the leaves and branches thereof begin to fade and decay: ſo, when the ſanctifying ſpirit comes, and breaks the power of ſin, there is a gradual ceaſing from it, and dying to it, in the whole man: ſo that he no longer lives in the fleſh, to the luſts of men. He does not make ſin his trade and buſineſs; it is not his great deſign, to ſeek himſelf, and to ſatisfy his corrupt inclinations; but he is for Immanuel's land; and is walking in the high-way to it, the way which is called the way of holineſs: though the wind from hell, that was on his back before, blows now full in his face, makes his travelling uneaſy, and often drives him off the high-way. (2.) This Spirit is a Spirit of vivification to them; for he is the Spirit of life, and makes them live unto righteouſneſs, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes. Theſe that have been planted together with Chriſt, in the likeneſs of his death, ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection, Rom. vi. 5. At Chriſt's reſurrection, when his ſoul was reunited with his body, every member of that bleſſed body was enabled again, to perform the actions of life: ſo, the ſoul being influenced by the ſanctifying Spirit of Chriſt, is enabled more and more to perform all the actions of ſpiritual life. And as the whole of the law, and not ſome ſcraps of it only, is written on the holy heart; ſo believers are enabled to tranſcribe that law, in their converſation. And although they cannot write one line of it, without blots; yet God, for Chriſt's ſake, accepts of the performances, in point of ſanctification; they being diſciples of his own Son, and led by his own Spirit.

This ſanctifying Spirit, communicate by the Lord Jeſus, to his members, is the ſpiritual nouriſhment, the branches have from the ſtock into which they are ingrafted; whereby the life of grace, given them in regeneration, is preſerved, continued, and actuated. It is the nouriſhment whereby the new creature liveth, and is nouriſhed up towards perfection. Spiritual life needs to be fed, and muſt have ſupply of nouriſhment: and believers derive the ſame from Chriſt their head, whom the Father has conſtituted the head of influences, to all his members, Col. ii. 19. And not holding the head, from which all the body by joints and bands, having nouriſhment miniſtered, or ſupplied, &c. Now this ſupply is the ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, Phil. i. 19. The ſaints feed richly, eating Chriſt's fleſh, and drinking his blood, for their ſpiritual nouriſhment: yet our Lord himſelf teacheth us, that it is the Spirit that quickeneth, even that Spirit who dwells in that bleſſed body, John vi. 63. The human nature is united to the divine nature, in the perſon of the Son, and ſo (like the bowl in Zechariah's candleſtick, Zech. iv.) lies at the fountain-head, as the glorious means of conveyance of influences, from the fountain of the Deity; and receives not the Spirit by meaſure, but ever hath a fulneſs of the Spirit, by reaſon of that perſonal union. Hence, believers being united to the Chriſt, (as the ſeven lamps to the bowl, by their ſeven pipes, Zech. iv. 2.), his fleſh is to them meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed: for, feeding on that bleſſed body, (i. e. effectually applying Chriſt to their ſouls by faith), they partake more and more of that Spirit, who dwelleth therein, to their ſpiritual nouriſhment. The holineſs of God could never admit of an immediate union with the ſinful creature, nor (conſequently) an immediate communion with it: yet the creature could not live the life of grace, without communion with the fountain of life. Therefore that the honour of God's holineſs, and the ſalvation of ſinners, might jointly be provided for; the ſecond perſon of the glorious Trinity, took into a perſonal union with himſelf, a ſinleſs human nature; that ſo this holy, harmleſs, and undefiled humanity, might immediately receive a fulneſs of the ſpirit, of which he might communicate to his members, by his divine power and efficacy. And likeas, if there were a tree, having its root in the earth, and its branches reaching to heaven: the vaſt diſtance betwixt the root and the branches would not interrupt the communication betwixt the root and the top branch; even ſo the diſtance betwixt the man Chriſt, who is in heaven, and his members, who are on earth, cannot hinder the communication betwixt them. What though the parts of myſtical Chriſt (viz. the head and the members) are not contiguous, as joyned together in the way of a corporal union? The union is not therefore the leſs real and effectual. Yea, our Lord himſelf ſhews us, that albeit we ſhould eat his fleſh, in a corporal and carnal manner, yet it would profit nothing, John vi. 36. we would not be one whit holier thereby. But the members of Chriſt on earth, are united to their head in heaven, by the inviſible bond of the ſelf-ſame Spirit dwelling in both; in him as the head, and in them as the members: even as the wheels, in Ezekiel's viſion, were not contiguous to the living creatures, yet were united to them, by an inviſible bond of one ſpirit in both; ſo that, when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them, and when the living creatures were lift up from the earth, the wheels were lift up, Ezek. i. 19. For, ſays the prophet, the Spirit of the living creature was in the wheels, verſe 20.

Hence we may ſee the difference betwixt true ſanctification, and that ſhadow of it, which is to be found amongſt ſome ſtrict profeſſors of Chriſtianity, who yet are not true Chriſtians, are not regenerate by the Spirit of Chriſt, and is of the ſame kind with what has appeared in many ſober Heathens. True ſanctification is the reſult of the ſoul's union with the holy Jeſus, the firſt and immediate receptacle of the ſanctifying ſpirit; out of whoſe fulneſs, his members do, by virtue of their union with him, receive ſanctifying influences. The other is the mere product of the man's own ſpirit, which whatever it has or ſeems to have of the matter of true holineſs, yet does not ariſe from the ſupernatural principles, nor to the high aims and ends thereof: for, as it comes from ſelf, ſo it runs out into the dead ſea of ſelf again; and lies as wide of true holineſs, as nature doth of grace. They who have this baſtard holineſs, are like common boat-men, who ſerve themſelves with their own oars: whereas the ſhip bound for Immanuel's land, ſails by the blowings of the divine Spirit. How is it poſſible, there ſhould be true ſanctification without Chriſt? Can there be true ſanctification, without partaking of the Spirit of holineſs? Can we partake of that Spirit, but by Jeſus Chriſt, the way, the truth, and the life? The falling dew ſhall aſſoon make its way through the flinty rock, as influences of grace ſhall come from God to ſinners, any other way, but through him whom the Father hath conſtituted the head of influences, Col. i. 19. For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell: and chap. ii. 19. And not holding the head, from which all the body by joints and bands, having nouriſhment miniſtred and knit together, increaſeth with the increaſe of God. Hence ſee, how it comes to paſs, that many fall away from their ſeeming ſanctification, and never recover: it is becauſe they are not branches truly knit to the true vine. Mean while, others recover from their decays; becauſe of their union with the life-giving ſtock, by the quickening Spirit, 1 John ii. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us.

A fifth benefit is growth in grace. Having nouriſhment miniſtered, they increaſe with the increaſe of God, Col. ii. 19. The righteous ſhall flouriſh like the palm tree; he ſhall grow like a cedar in Lebanon, Pſal. xcii. 12. Grace is of a growing nature: in the way to Zion they go from ſtrength to ſtrength. Though the holy man be at firſt a little child in grace, yet at length he becomes a young man, a father, 1 John ii. 13. Though he does but creep in the way to heaven ſometimes: yet afterwards he walks, he runs, he mounts up with wings as eagles. Iſ. xl. 31. If a branch grafted into a ſtock never grows, it is a plain evidence of its not having knit with the ſtock.

But ſome may perhaps ſay, "If all true Chriſtians be "growing ones: what ſhall be ſaid of theſe, who in"ſtead of growing are going back?" I anſwer, Firſt, There is a great difference betwixt the Chriſtian's growing ſimply, and his growing at all times. All true Chriſtians do grow, but I do not ſay they grow at all times. A tree, that has life and nouriſhment, grows to its perfection, yet it is not always growing; it grows not in the winter. Chriſtians alſo have their winters, wherein the influences of grace, neceſſary for growth, are ceaſed. Cant. v. 2. "I ſleep." It is by faith the believer derives gracious influences from Jeſus Chriſt: likeas each lamp in the candleſtick, received oil from the bowl, by the pipe going betwixt them, Zech. iv. 2. Now, if that pipe be ſtopt, if the ſaint's faith lie dormant and inactive then all the reſt of the graces will become dim, and ſeem ready to be extinguiſhed. In conſequence whereof, depraved nature will gather ſtrength, and become active. What then will become of the ſoul? Why, there is ſtill one ſure ground of hope. The ſaints faith is not as the hypocrite's, like a pipe laid ſhort of the fountain, whereby there can be no conveyance, it ſtill remains a bond of union, betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul: and therefore, becauſe Chriſt lives, the believer ſhall live alſo, John xiv. 19. The Lord Jeſus puts in his hand by the hole of the door, and clears the means of conveyance: and then influences for growth flow, and believers graces look freſh and green again, Hoſ. xiv. 7. They that dwell under his ſhadow ſhall return: they ſhall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine. In the worſt of times, the ſaints have a principle of growth in them, 1 John iii. 9. His ſeed remaineth in him. And therefore, after decays, they revive again; namely, when the winter is over, and the Sun of righteouſneſs returns to them with his warm influences. Mud thrown into a pool may lie there at eaſe; but if it be caſt into a fountain, the ſpring will at length work it out, and run clear as formerly. Secondly, Chriſtians may miſtake their growth, and that two ways. (1.) By judging of their caſe according to their preſent feeling. They obſerve themſelves, and cannot perceive themſelves to be growing, but there is no reaſon thence to conclude they are not growing, Mark iv. 27. The ſeed ſprings and grows up, he knoweth not how. Should one fix his eye never ſo ſtedfaſtly, on the ſun running his race, or on a growing tree; he would not perceive the ſun moving, nor the tree growing: but if he compare the tree as it now is, with what it was ſome years ago; and conſider the place of the heavens, where the ſun was in the morning; he will certainly perceive the tree has grown, and the ſun has moved. In like manner may the Chriſtian know, whether he be in a growing or declining ſtate, by comparing his preſent, with his former condition. (2.) Chriſtians may miſtake their caſe, by meaſuring their growth by the advances of the top only, not of the root. Though a man be not growing taller, he may be growing ſtronger. If a tree be taking with the ground, fixing itſelf in the earth, and ſpreading out its roots; it is certainly growing, altho' it be nothing taller than formerly. So albeit the Chriſtian may want the ſweet conſolation, and flaſhes of affection, which ſometimes he has had; yet if he be growing in humility, ſelf-denial, and ſenſe of needy dependence on Jeſus Chriſt, he is a growing Chriſtian, Hoſ. xiv. 5. I will be as the dew unto Iſrael, he ſhall caſt forth his roots as Lebanon.

Queſt. But do hypocrites grow at all? And if ſo, how ſhall we diſtinguiſh betwixt their growth, and true Chriſtian growth? Anſw. To the firſt part of the queſtion; hypocrites do grow. The tares have their growth, as well as the wheat: and the ſeed that fell among thorns did ſpring up, Luke viii. 7. Only it did bring no fruit to perfection, verſe 14. Yea, a true Chriſtian may have a falſe growth. James and John ſeemed to grow in the grace of holy zeal, when their ſpirits grew ſo hot in the cauſe of Chriſt, that they would have fired whole villages, for not receiving their Lord and Maſter, Luke ix. 54. They ſaid, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and conſume them, even as Elias did? But it was indeed no ſuch thing; and therefore he rebuked them, verſ. 55. and ſaid, Ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of. To the ſecond part of the queſtion, it is anſwered, that there is a peculiar beauty in true Chriſtian growth, diſtinguiſhing it from all falſe growth: it is univerſal, regular, proportionable. It is a growing up into him in all things, which is the head, Eph. iv. 15. The growing Chriſtian grows proportionably, in all the parts of the new man. Under the kindly influences of the Sun of righteouſneſs, believers grow up as calves of the ſtall, Mal. iv. 2. Ye would think it a monſtrous growth, in theſe creatures, if ye ſaw their heads grow, and not their bodies; or if ye ſaw one leg grow, and another not: if all the parts do not grow proportionably. Ay, but ſuch is the growth of many in religion. They grow like rickety children, who have a big head, but a ſlender body: they get more knowledge into their heads, but no more holineſs into their hearts and lives. They grow very hot outwardly, but very cold inwardly; like men in a fit of the ague. They are more taken up about the externals of religion, than formerly; yet as great ſtrangers to the power of godlineſs as ever. If a garden is watered with the hand, ſome of the plants will readily get much, ſome little, and ſome no water at all; and therefore ſome wither, while others are coming forward: but after a ſhower from the clouds, all come forward together. In like manner, all the graces of the Spirit grow proportionably, by the ſpecial influences of divine grace. The branches ingrafted in Chriſt, growing aright, do grow in all the ſeveral ways of growth at once. They grow inward, growing into Chriſt, (Eph. iv. 15.) uniting more cloſely with him; and cleaving more firmly to him, as the head of influences, which is the ſpring of all other true Chriſtian growth. They grow outward, in good works, in their life and converſation. They not only, with Naphtali, give goodly words; but, like Joſeph, they are fruitful boughs. They grow upward in heavenly mindedneſs, and contempt of the world; for their converſation is in heaven, Phil. iii. 20. And finally they grow downward in humility and ſelf-loathing. The branches of the largeſt growth in Chriſt, are in their own eyes leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, Eph. iii. 8. the chief of ſinners, 1 Tim. i. 15. more brutiſh than any man, Prov. xxx. 2. They ſee they can do nothing, no not ſo much as to think any thing, as of themſelves, 2 Cor. iii. 5. that they deſerve nothing, being not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies ſhewed unto them, Gen. xxxii. 10. and that they are nothing, 2 Cor. xii. 2.

A ſixth benefit is fruitfulneſs. The branch ingrafted into Chriſt is not barren, but brings forth fruit, John xv. 5. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit. For that very end are ſouls married to Chriſt, that they may bring forth fruit unto God, Rom. vii. 4. They may be branches in Chriſt, by profeſſion, but not by real implantation, that are barren branches. Whoſoever are united to Chriſt, bring forth the fruit of goſpel obedience, and true holineſs. Faith is always followed with good works. The believer is not only come out of the grave of his natural ſtate; but he has put off his grave-clothes, namely, reigning luſts, in the which he walked ſometime like a ghoſt; being dead while he lived in them, Col. iii. 7. 8. For Chriſt has ſaid of him, as of Lazarus, Looſe him, and let him go. And now that he has put on Chriſt; he perſonates him, (ſo to ſpeak,) as a beggar, in borrowed robes, repreſents a king on the ſtage, walking as he alſo walked. Now the fruit of the Spirit in him, is in all goodneſs. Eph. v. 9. The fruits of holineſs will be found in the hearts, lips, and lives of thoſe who are united to Chriſt. The hidden man of the heart, is not only a temple built for God, and conſecrated to him; but uſed and employed for him, where love, fear, truſt, and all the other parts of unſeen religion are exerciſed, Phil. iii. 3. For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in the Spirit. The heart is no more the devil's common, where thoughts go free; for there even vain thoughts are hated, Pſal. cxix. 113. But it is God's incloſure, hedged about as a garden for him. Cant. iv. 16. It is true, there are weeds of corruption there, becauſe the ground is not yet perfectly healed; but the man, in the day of his new creation, is ſet to dreſs it, and keep it. A live-coal from the altar has touched his lips, and they are purified, Pſal. xv. 1. 2. 3. Lord who ſhall abide in thy tabernacle? Who ſhall dwell in thy holy hill? He that ſpeaketh the truth in his heart: he that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor taketh up a reproach againſt his neighbour. There may be indeed a very ſmooth tongue, where there is a falſe heart. The voice may be Jacob's, while the hands are Eſau's. But, If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain, James i. 26. The power of godlineſs will rule over the tongue, though a world of iniquity. If one be a Galilean, his ſpeech will bewray him; he will ſpeak not the language of Aſhdod, but the language of Canaan. He will neither be dumb in religion; nor will his tongue walk at random, ſeeing to the double guard nature hath given the tongue, grace hath added a third. The fruits of holineſs will be found in his outward converſation, for he hath clean hands, as well as a pure heart, Pſal. xxiv. 4. He is a godly man, and religiouſly diſcharges the duties of the firſt table of the law; he is a righteous man, and honeſtly performs the duties of the ſecond table. In his converſation he is a good Chriſtian, and a good neighbour too. He carries it towards God, as if mens eyes were upon him; and towards men, as believing God's eye to be upon him. Theſe things which God hath joined in his law, he dare not, in his practice, put aſunder.

Thus the branches in Chriſt, are full of good fruits. And thoſe fruits are a cluſter of vital actions whereof Jeſus Chriſt is the principle and end; the principle: for he lives in them, and the life they live is by faith in the Son of God, Gal. ii. 20. the end: for they live to him, and to them to live is Chriſt, Phil. i. 21. The duties of religion are in the world, like fatherleſs children, in rags; ſome will not take them in, becauſe they never loved them, nor their father; ſome take them in, becauſe they may be ſerviceable to them; but the ſaints take them in for their Father's ſake, that is for Chriſt's ſake; and they are lovely in their eyes, becauſe they are like him. O! whence is this new life of the ſaints! Surely it could never have been hammered out of the natural powers of their ſouls, by the united force of all created power. In eternal barrenneſs ſhould their womb have been ſhut up; but that being married to Chriſt, they bring forth fruit unto God, Rom. vii. 4.

If ye aſk me, How your nouriſhment, growth, and fruitfulneſs may be forwarded? I offer theſe few advices. (1.) Make ſure work, as to your knitting with the ſtock, by faith unfeigned; and beware of hypocriſy: a branch that is not ſound at the heart, will certainly wither. The trees of the Lord's planting are trees of righteouſneſs, Iſ. lxi. 3. So when others fade, they bring forth fruit. Hypocriſy is a diſeaſe in the vitals of religion, which will conſume all at length. It is a leak in the ſhip, that will certainly ſink it. Sincerity of grace will make it laſting, be it never ſo weak: as the ſmalleſt twig that is ſound at the heart, will draw nouriſhment from the ſtock, and grow, while the greateſt bough that is rotten can never recover, becauſe it receives no nouriſhment. (2.) Labour to be ſtedfaſt in the truths and way of God. An unſettled and wavering judgment, is a great enemy to chriſtian growth and fruitfulneſs, as the apoſtle teaches, Eph. iv. 14. 15. That we henceforth be no more children toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine. But ſpeaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Chriſt. A rolling ſtone gathers no fog, and a wavering judgment makes a fruitleſs life. Though a tree be never ſo ſound; yet how can it grow, or be fruitful, if ye be ſtill removing it out of one ſoil into another? (3.) Endeavour to cut off the ſuckers, as gardeners do, that their trees may thrive. Theſe are unmortified luſts. Therefore mortify your members that are upon the earth, Col. iii. 5. When the Iſraelites got meat to their luſts, they got leanneſs to their ſouls. She that has many hungry children about her hand, and muſt be ſtill putting into their mouths, will have much ado to get a bit put into her own. They muſt refuſe the cravings of inordinate affections, who would have their ſouls to proſper. Laſtly, Improve for theſe ends, the ordinances of God. The courts of our God are the place, where the trees of righteouſneſs flouriſh, Pſal. xcii. 13. The waters of the ſanctuary are the means appointed of God, to cauſe his people grow as willows by the water-courſes. Therefore drink in with deſire, the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby, 1 Pet. ii. 2. Come to theſe wells of ſalvation: not to look at them only, but to draw water out of them. The ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper is in a ſpecial manner appointed for theſe ends. It is not only a ſolemn public profeſſion, and a ſeal of our union and communion with Chriſt: but it is a means of moſt intimate communion with him, and ſtrengthens our union with him, our faith, love, repentance, and other graces, 1 Cor. x. 16. The cup of bleſſing, which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt. And chap. xii. 13. We have been all made to drink into one ſpirit. Give yourſelves unto prayer: open your mouths wide, and he will fill them. By theſe means the branches in Chriſt may be further nouriſhed, grow up, and bring forth much fruit.

A ſeventh benefit is, The acceptance of their fruits of holineſs before the Lord. Though they be very imperfect, they are accepted, becauſe they ſavour of Chriſt the bleſſed ſtock, which the branches grow upon; while the fruits of others are rejected of God, Gen. iv. 4, 5. And the Lord had reſpect unto Abel, and to his offering: but unto Cain and his offering he had not reſpect. Compare Heb. xi. 3. By faith, Abel offered unto God a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain. O how defective are the ſaints duties in the eye of the law! The believer himſelf eſpies many faults in his beſt performances: yet the Lord graciouſly receives them. There is no grace planted in the heart, but there is a weed of corruption hard by its ſide, while the ſaints are in this lower world. Their very ſincerity, is not without a mixture of diſſimulation or hypocriſy, Gal. ii. 13. Hence there are defects in the exerciſe of every grace, as well as in the performance of every duty: depraved nature always drops ſomething to ſtain their beſt works. There is ſtill ſome mixture of darkneſs with their cleareſt light. Yet this does not mar their acceptance, Cant. vi. 10. Who is ſhe that looketh forth as the morning? or, as the dawning? Behold how Chriſt's ſpouſe is eſteemed and accepted of her Lord, even when ſhe looks forth as the morning, whoſe beauty is mixed with the blackneſs of the night! When the morning was looking out, as the word is, Judges xix. 26. i. e. in the dawning of the day, as we read it. So the very dawning of grace, and goodwill to Chriſt, grace peeping out from under a maſs of darkneſs in believers, is pleaſant and acceptable to him, as the break of day, is to the weary traveller. Though the remains of unbelief make their hand of faith to ſhake and tremble: yet the Lord is ſo well pleaſed with it, that he employs it to carry away pardons and ſupplies of grace, from the throne of grace, and the fountain of grace. His faith was effectual, who cried out, and ſaid with tears, Lord I believe, help thou mine unbelief, Mark ix. 24. Though the remains of ſenſual affections make the flame of their love weak and ſmoaky; he turns his eyes from the ſmoak, and beholds the flame, how fair it is, Cant. iv. 10. How fair is thy love, my ſiſter, my ſpouſe! The ſmell of their under garments of inherent holineſs, as imperfect as it is, is like the ſmell of Lebanon, verſe 11. and that becauſe they are covered with their elder brother's cloaths, which makes the ſons of God to ſmell as a field which the Lord hath bleſſed. Their good works are accepted; their cups of cold water given to a diſciple in the name of a diſciple, ſhall not want a reward. Though they cannot offer for the tabernacle, gold, ſilver and braſs, and onyx-ſtones, let them come forward with what they have; if it were but goats-hair, it ſhall not be rejected; if it were but rams ſkins, they ſhall be kindly accepted; for they are dyed red, dipt by faith in the Mediator's blood, and ſo preſented unto God. A very ordinary work done in faith, and from faith, if it were but the building of a wall about the holy city, is a great work, Neh. vi. 3. If it were but the beſtowing of a box of ointment on Chriſt, it ſhall never be forgotten, Matth. xxvi. 13. Even a cup of cold water only given to one of Chriſt's little ones, in the name of a diſciple, ſhall be rewarded, Matth. x. 42. Nay, not a good word for Chriſt, ſhall drop from their mouths, but it ſhall be regiſtered in God's book of remembrance, Mal. iii. 16. Nor ſhall a tear drop from their eyes for him, but he will put it in his bottle, Pſal. lxvi. 8. Their will is accepted for the deed; their ſorrow for the want of will, for the will itſelf, 2 Cor. viii. 12. For if there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. Their groanings, when they cannot well word their deſires, are heard in heaven; the meaning of theſe groans is well known there, and they will be returned like the dove with an olive branch of peace in her mouth. See Rom. viii. 26. 27. Their mites are better than other mens talents. Their liſping and broken ſentences are more pleaſant to their Father in heaven, than the moſt fluent and flouriſhing ſpeeches of theſe that are not in Chriſt. Their voice is ſweet, even when they are aſhamed it ſhould be heard; their countenance is comely, even when they bluſh, and draw a veil over it, Cant. ii. 14. The Mediator takes their petition, blots out ſome parts, rectifies others, and then preſents them to the Father, in conſequence whereof they paſs in the court of heaven.

Every true Chriſtian is a temple of God. If ye look for ſacrifices, they are not wanting there; they offer the ſacrifice of praiſe, and they do good; with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed, Heb. xiii. 15. 16. Chriſt himſelf is the altar that ſanctifies the gift, verſe 10. But what comes of the ſkin and dung of their ſacrifices? They are carried away without the camp. If we look for incenſe, it is there too. The graces of the Spirit are found in their hearts: and the ſpirit of a crucified Chriſt fires them, and puts them in exerciſe; like as the fire was brought from the altar of burnt-offering, to ſet the incenſe in flame: then they mount heaven-ward, like pillars of ſmoke, Cant. iii. 6. But the beſt of incenſe will leave aſhes behind it: yes indeed: but as the prieſt took away the aſhes of the incenſe in a golden diſh, and threw them out; ſo our great High Prieſt takes away the aſhes and refuſe of all the ſaints ſervices, by his mediation in their behalf.

An eighth benefit flowing from union with Chriſt, is eſtabliſhment. The Chriſtian cannot fall away, but muſt perſevere unto the end, John x. 28. They ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any man pluck them out of my hand. Indeed if a branch do not knit with the ſtock, it will fall away when ſhaking winds ariſe: but the branch knit to the ſtock ſtands faſt, whatever wind blows. Sometimes a ſtormy wind of temptation blows from hell, and toſſeth the branches in Chriſt the true vine: but their union with him is their ſecurity: moved they may be, but removed they never can be. The Lord will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, 1 Cor. x. 13. Calms are never of a continuance; there is almoſt always ſome wind blowing; and therefore branches are rarely altogether at reſt. But ſometimes violent winds ariſe, which threaten to rend them from off their ſtock. Even ſo it is with ſaints; they are daily put to it, to keep their ground againſt temptation: but ſometimes the wind from hell riſeth ſo high, and blows ſo furiouſly, that it makes even top branches to ſweep the ground: yet being knit to Chriſt their ſtock, they get up again, in ſpight of the moſt violent efforts of the prince of the power of the air, Pſal. xciv. 18. When I ſaid, My foot ſlippeth, thy mercy, O Lord, held me up. But the Chriſtian improves by this trial: and is ſo far from being damaged, that he is benefited by it, in ſo far as it diſcovers what hold the ſoul has of Chriſt, and what hold Chriſt has of the ſoul. And look as the wind in the bellows, which would blow out the candle, blows up the fire, even ſo it often comes to paſs, that ſuch temptations do enliven the true Chriſtian, awakening the graces of the Spirit in him; and, by that means, diſcover both the reality, and the ſtrength of grace in him. And hence, as Luther, that great man of God, ſaith, ‘ One Chriſtian, who hath had experience of temptation, is worth a thouſand others.’

Sometimes a ſtormy wind of trouble and perſecution from the men of the world, blows upon the vine, i. e. myſtical Chriſt: but union with the ſtock is a ſufficient ſecurity to the branches. In a time of the church's peace and outward proſperity, while the angels hold the winds, that they blow not, there are a great many branches taken up, and put into the ſtock, which never knit with it, nor live by it, though they be bound up with it, by the bonds of external ordinances. Now, theſe may ſtand a while on the ſtock; and ſtand with great eaſe, while the calm laſts. But when once the ſtorms ariſe, and the winds blow; they will begin to fall off, one after another; and the higher the wind riſeth, the greater will the number be that falls. Yea, ſome ſtrong boughs of that ſort, when they fall, will, by their weight carry others of their own kind, quite down to the earth with them; and will bruiſe and preſs down ſome true branches in ſuch a manner, that they would alſo fall off, were it not for their being knit to the ſtock; in virtue whereof they get up their heads again, and cannot fall off, becauſe of that faſt hold the ſtock has of them. Then it is that many branches, ſometimes high and eminent, are found lying on the earth withered, and fit to be gathered up and caſt into the fire, Matth. xiii. 6. And when the ſun was up, they were ſcorched: and becauſe they had not root, they withered away. John xv. 6. If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them into the fire, and they are burned. But however violently the winds blow, none of the truly ingrafted branches, that are knit with the ſtock, are found miſſing, when the ſtorm is changed into a calm, John xvii. 12. Thoſe that thou gaveſt me, I have kept, and none of them is loſt. The leaſt twig growing in Chriſt ſhall ſtand it out, and----ſubſiſt; when the talleſt cedars growing on their own root, ſhall be laid flat on the ground, Rom. viii. 35. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? Shall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword? See verſe 36. 37. 38. 39. However ſeverely Iſrael be ſifted, yet ſhall not the leaſt grain (or as it is in the original language, a little ſtone) fall upon the earth, Amos ix. 9. It is an alluſion to the ſifting of fine peeble-ſtones from among heaps of duſt and ſand: though the ſand and duſt fall to the ground, be blown away with the wind, and trampled under foot: yet there ſhall not fall on the earth ſo much as a little ſtone, ſuch is the exactneſs of the ſieve, and care of the ſifter. There is nothing more ready to fall on the earth, than a ſtone: yet if profeſſors of religion be lively ſtones built on Chriſt the chief corner ſtone; although they be little ſtones, they ſhall not fall to the earth, whatever ſtone beat upon them. See 1 Pet. ii. 4. 5. 6. All the good grain in the church of Chriſt is of this kind: they are ſtones in reſpect of ſolidity; and lively ſtones in reſpect of activity. If men be ſolid ſubſtantial Chriſtians, they will not be like chaff toſſed to and fro with every wind; having ſo much of the livelineſs, that they have nothing of the ſtone; and if they be lively Chriſtians, whoſe ſpirit will ſtir in them, as Paul's did, when he ſaw the city wholly given to idolatry, Acts xvii. 16. they will not lie like ſtones, to be turned over, hither and thither, cut and carved, according to the luſts of men; having ſo much of the ſtone as leaves nothing of livelineſs in them.

Our God's houſe is a great houſe, wherein are not only veſſels of gold, but alſo of earth, 2 Tim. ii. 20. Both theſe are apt to contract filthineſs; and therefore when God brings trouble upon the church, he hath an eye to both. As for the veſſels of gold, they are not deſtroyed; but purged by a fiery trial in the furnace of affliction, as goldſmiths purge their gold, Iſ. i. 25. And I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy droſs. But deſtruction is to the veſſels of earth; they ſhall be broken in ſhivers, as a potter's veſſel, ver. 28. And the deſtruction (or breaking) of the tranſgreſſors, and of the ſinners, ſhall be together. It ſeems to be an alluſion to that law, for breaking the veſſels of earth, when unclean; while veſſels of wood, and conſequently veſſels of gold, were only to be rinſed, Lev. xv. 21.

A ninth benefit is ſupport. If thou be a branch ingrafted in Chriſt, the root beareth thee. The believer leans on Chriſt, as a weak woman, in a journey, leaning upon her beloved huſband, Cant. viii. 5. He ſtays himſelf upon him, as a feeble old man ſtays himſelf on his ſtaff, Iſ. l. 10. He rolls himſelf on him, as one rolls a burden, he is not able to walk under, off his own back, upon another who is able to bear it, Pſal. xxii. 8. There are many weights to hang upon, and preſs down the branches in Chriſt the true vine. But, ye know, whatever weights hang on branches, the ſtock bears all; it bears the branch and the weight that is upon it too.

1ſt, Chriſt ſupports believers in him, under a weight of outward troubles. That is a large promiſe, Iſ. xliii. 2. When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee: and through the rivers, they ſhall not overflow thee. See how David was ſupported under a heavy load, 1 Sam. xxx. 6. His city Ziklag was burnt, his wives were taken captives, his men ſpoke of ſtoning him: nothing was left him, but his God and his faith; but by his faith, he encouraged himſelf in his God. The Lord comes, and lays his croſs on his peoples ſhoulders; it preſſeth them down; they are like to ſink under it, and therefore cry Maſter, ſave us, we periſh: but he ſupports them under their burden; he bears them up, and they bear their croſs. Thus the Chriſtian having a weight of outward troubles upon him, goes lightly under his burden, having withal the everlaſting arms underneath him. The Chriſtian has a ſpring of comfort, which he cannot loſe; and therefore never wants ſomething to ſupport him. If one have all his riches in money, robbers may take theſe away; and then what has he more? But though the landed man be robbed of his money, yet his lands remain for his ſupport. They that build their comfort on worldly goods, may quickly be comfortleſs; but they that are united to Chriſt, ſhall find comfort, when all the ſtreams of worldly enjoyments are dried up, Job vi. 13. Is not my help in me? and is wiſdom driven quite from me? q. d. Though my ſubſtance is gone; though my ſervants, my children, my health, and ſoundneſs of body, are all gone; yet my grace is not gone too. Though the Sabeans have driven away my oxen and aſſes, and the Chaldeans have driven away my camels: they have not driven away my faith, and my hope too: theſe are yet in me, they are not driven from me; ſo that by them I can fetch comfort from heaven, when I can have none from earth.

2dly, Chriſt ſupports his people under a weight of inward troubles and diſcouragements. Many times heart and fleſh fail them, but then God is the ſtrength of their heart, Pſal. lxxiii. 26. They may have a weight of guilt preſſing them. This is a load that will make their back to ſtoop, and their ſpirits to ſink: but he takes it off, and puts a pardon in their hand, while they caſt their burden over upon him. Chriſt takes the ſoul, as one marries a widow under a burden of debt: and ſo when the creditors come to Chriſt's ſpouſe, ſhe carries them to her huſband, confeſſeth the debt, declares ſhe is not able to pay it, and lays all over upon him. The Chriſtian ſometimes, through careleſſneſs, loſeth his diſcharge; he cannot find it, however he ſearch for it. The law takes that opportunity: and ſends up a proceſs againſt him, for a debt paid already. God hides his face, and the ſoul is diſtreſſed. Many arrows go through the heart now; many long accounts are laid before the man, which he reads and acknowledges. Often does he ſee the officers coming to apprehend him, and the priſon-door open to receive him. What elſe keeps him from ſinking utterly under diſcouragements in this caſe, but that the everlaſting arms of a Mediator are underneath him, and that he relies upon the great Cautioner?

Further, they may have a weight of ſtrong luſts preſſing them. They have a body of death upon them. Death is a weight that preſſeth the ſoul out of the body. A leg or an arm of death (if I may ſo ſpeak) would be a terrible load. (One lively luſt will ſometimes lie ſo heavy on a child of God, that he can no more remove it, than a child could throw a giant from off him). How then are they ſupported under a whole body of death? Why, their ſupport is from the root that bears them, from the everlaſting arm that is underneath them. His grace is ſufficient for them, 2 Cor. xii. 9. The great ſtay of the believer is not the grace of God within him; that is a well, whoſe ſtreams ſometimes run dry: but it is the grace of God without him, the grace that is in Jeſus Chriſt; which is an ever-flowing fountain, to which the believer can never come amiſs. For the apoſtle tells us in the ſame verſe, it is the power of Chriſt. Moſt gladly therefore, ſaith he, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me, or tabernacle above me, as the cloud of glory did on the Iſraelites, which God ſpread for a covering, or ſhelter to them in the wilderneſs, Pſal. cv. 39. compare Iſ. iv. 5. 6. So that the believer in this combat, like the eagle, firſt flies aloft (by faith), and then comes down on the prey, Pſal. xxxiv. 5. they looked to him, and were lightened. And finally, they have a weight of weakneſs and wants upon them, but they caſt over that burden on the Lord their ſtrength, and he ſuſtains them, Pſal. lv. 22. With all their wants and weakneſs, they are caſt upon him; as the poor, weak, and naked babe coming out of the womb, is caſt into the lap of one appoint take care of it, Pſal. xxii. 10. Though they be deſtitute, (as a ſhrub in the wilderneſs, which the foot of every beaſt may tread down), the Lord will regard them, Pſal. cii. 17. It is no marvel, the weakeſt plant be ſafe in a garden: but our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is a hedge for protection to his weak and deſtitute ones, even in a wilderneſs.

Object. But if the ſaints be ſo ſupported, how is it that they fall ſo often, under temptations and diſcouragements? Anſw. (1.) How low ſoever they fall at any time, they never fall off; and that is a great matter. They are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, 1 Pet. i. 5. Hypocrites may fall, ſo as to fall off, and fall into the pit, as a bucket falls into a well when the chain breaks. But though the child of God may fall, and that ſo low as the waters go over his head: yet there is ſtill a bond of union betwixt Chriſt and him, the chain is not broken; he will not go to the ground; he will be drawn up again, Luke xxii. 31. 32. And the Lord ſaid, Simon, Simon, Satan hath deſired to have you, that he may ſift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. (2.) The falls of the ſaints flow from their not improving their union with Chriſt, their not making uſe of him by faith, for ſtaying or bearing them up, Pſal. xxvii. 13. I had fainted, unleſs I had believed. While the nurſe holds the child in her arms, it cannot fall to the ground: yet if the unwary child hold not by her; it may fall backwards in her arms, to its great hurt. Thus David's fall broke his bones, Pſal. li. 8. But it did not break the bond of union betwixt Chriſt and him: the holy Spirit, the bond of that union, was not taken from him, verſ. 11.

The laſt benefit I ſhall name, is, the ſpecial care of the huſbandman, John xv. 1. 2. I am the true vine, and my Father is the huſbandman.------Every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Believers, by virtue of their union with Chriſt, are the objects of God's ſpecial care and providence. Myſtical Chriſt is God's vine; other ſocieties in the world are but wild olive-trees. The men of the world are but God's out-field; the ſaints are his vineyard, which he has a ſpecial propriety in, and a ſpecial concern for, Cant. viii. 12. My vineyard, which is mine, is before me. He that ſlumbers not, nor ſleeps, is the keeper of it, he does keep it; leſt any hurt it, he will keep it night and day: he in whoſe hand is the dew of heaven, will water it every moment, Iſ. xxvii. 3. He dreſſeth and purgeth it, in order to further its fruitfulneſs, John xv. 2. He cuts off the luxuriant twigs that mar the fruitfulneſs of the branch. This is done, eſpecially by the word, and by the croſs, or afflictions; the ſaints need the miniſtry of the word, as much as the vineyard needeth one to dreſs and prune the vines, 1 Cor. iii. 9. We are labourers together with God; ye are God's huſbandry, ye are God's building. And they need the croſs too, 1 Pet. i. 6.

And therefore, if we ſhould reckon the croſs amongſt the benefits flowing to believers from their union with Chriſt, I judge, we ſhould not reckon amiſs. Sure I am, in their ſufferings they ſuffer with him, Rom. viii. 17. And the aſſurances they have of the croſs, have rather the nature of a promiſe, as of a threatening, Pſal. lxxxix. 30. 31. 32. 33. 'If his children forſake my law,---then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with the rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes. Nevertheleſs, my loving kindneſs will I not utterly take from him: nor ſuffer my faithfulneſs to fail.' This looks like a tutor's engaging to a dying father, to take care of the children left upon him: and to give them both nurture and admonition, for their good. The covenant of grace does truly beat the ſpears of affliction into pruning hooks, to them that are in Chriſt, Iſa. xxvii. 9. 'By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin.' Why then ſhould we be angry without our croſs? Why ſhould we be frighted at it? The believer muſt take up his croſs, and follow his leader, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. He muſt take up his ilk day's croſs, Luke xi. 23. 'If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily.' Yea, he muſt take up his holy-day's croſs too, Lam. ii. 22. 'Thou haſt called, as in a ſolemn day, my terrors round about.' The church of the Jews had, of a long time, many a pleaſant meeting at the temple, on ſolemn days, for the worſhip of God: but they got a ſolemnity of another nature, when God called together, about the temple and city, the Chaldean army that burnt the temple and laid Jeruſalem on heaps. And now, that the church of God is yet militant in this lower region, how can it be but the clouds will return after the rain? But the croſs of Chriſt (which name the ſaints troubles do bear) is a kindly name to the believer. It is a croſs indeed; but not to the believers graces, but to his corruptions. The hypocrite's ſeeming graces may indeed breathe out their laſt on a croſs, as theſe of the ſtony ground hearers did, Mat. xiii. 6. 'And when the ſun (of perſecution, ver. 21.) was up they were ſcorched: And becauſe they had no root, they withered away.' But never did one of the real graces in a believer die upon the croſs yet. Nay, as the candle ſhines brighteſt in the night, and the fire burns fierceſt in intenſe froſt: So the believer's graces are ordinarily moſt vigorous in a time of trouble.

There is a certain pleaſure and ſweetneſs in the croſs, to them who have their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern, and to find it out. There is a certain ſweetneſs in one's ſeeing himſelf upon his trials for him, and ſtanding candidate for glory. There is a pleaſure in travelling over theſe mountains, where the Chriſtian can ſee the prints of Chriſt's own feet, and the foot-ſteps of the flock, who have been there before him. How pleaſant is it to a ſaint in the exerciſe of grace to ſee how a good God croſſeth his corrupt inclinations, and prevents his folly. How ſweet is it to behold theſe thieves upon the croſs! How refined a pleaſure is there in obſerving how God draws away proviſion from unruly luſts, and ſo pincheth them, that the Chriſtian may get them governed! Of a truth, there is a paradiſe within this thorn-hedge. Many a time the people of God are in bonds; which are never looſed, till they be bound with cords of affliction. God takes them, and throws them into a fiery furnace, that burns off their bonds; and then, like the three children, Dan. iii. 25. they are looſe, walking in the midſt of the fire. God gives his children a potion, with one bitter ingredient: if that will not work upon them, he will put in a ſecond, a third, and ſo on, as there is need, that they may work together, for their good, Rom. viii. 28. With croſs-winds he haſtens them to their harbour. They are often found in ſuch ways, as that the croſs is the happieſt foot they can meet with: and well they may ſalute it, as David did Abigail, ſaying, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, which ſent thee this day to meet me, 1 Sam. xxv. 32. Worldly things are often ſuch a load to the Chriſtian, that he moves but very ſlowly heavenward. God ſends a wind of trouble that blows the burden off the man's back: and then he walks more ſpeedily on his way; after God had drawn ſome gilded earth from him, that was drawing his heart away from God, Zeph. iii. 12. I will alſo leave in the midſt of thee, an afflicted and poor people, and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord. It was an obſerve of a Heathen moraliſt, that no hiſtory makes mention of any man, who hath been made better by riches. I doubt if our modern hiſtories can ſupply the defect of ancient hiſtories in this point. But ſure I am, many have been the worſe of riches: thouſands have been hugged to death, in the embraces of a ſmiling world; and many good men have got wounds from outward proſperity, that behoved to be cured by the croſs. I remember to have read of one, who having an impoſthume in his breaſt, had in vain uſed the help of phyſicians: but being wounded with a ſword, the impoſthume was broken; and his life was ſaved by that accident, which threatened immediate death. Often have ſpiritual impoſthumes gathered in the breaſts of God's people, in time of outward proſperity, and been thus broken and diſcuſſed by the croſs. It is kindly for believers to be healed by ſtripes; although they are uſually ſo weak as to cry out for fear, at the ſight of the pruning-hook, as if it were the deſtroying ax; and to think the Lord is coming to kill them, when he is indeed coming to cure them. I ſhall now conclude, addreſſing myſelf in a few words, firſt to ſaints, and next to ſinners.

I. To you that are ſaints, I ſay,

Firſt, Strive to obtain and keep up actual communion and fellowſhip with Jeſus Chriſt; that is, to be ſtill deriving freſh ſupplies of grace, from the fountain thereof in him, by faith: and making ſuitable returns of them, in the exerciſe of grace, and holy obedience. Beware of eſtrangement betwixt Chriſt and your ſouls. If it has got in already, (which ſeems to be the caſe of many this day,) endeavour to get it removed. There are multitudes in the world that ſlight Chriſt, though ye ſhould not ſlight him: many have turned their backs on him, that ſometimes looked fair for heaven. The warm ſun of outward peace and proſperity, has cauſed ſome caſt their cloke of religion from them, who held it faſt when the wind of trouble was blowing upon them: and will ye alſo go away? John vi. 67. The baſeſt ingratitude is ſtamped on your ſlighting of communion with Chriſt, Jer. ii. 31. Have I been a wilderneſs unto Iſrael: a land of darkneſs? Wherefore ſay my people, We are lords; we will come no more unto thee? Oh! beloved, Is this your kindneſs to your friend? It is unbecoming any wife to ſlight converſe with her huſband, but her eſpecially who was taken from a priſon or a dunghill, as ye were by your Lord. But remember I pray you, this is a very ill choſen time to live at a diſtance from God: it is a time in which divine providence frowns upon the land we live in; the clouds of wrath are gathering, and are thick above our heads? It is not a time for you to be out of your chambers, Iſ. xxvi. 20. They that now are walking moſt cloſely with God, may have enough ado to ſtand when the trial comes: how hard will it be for others then, who are like to be ſurpriſed with troubles, when guilt is lying on their conſciences unremoved? To be awakened out of a ſound ſleep, and caſt into a raging ſea, as Jonah was, will be a fearful trial. To feel trouble before we ſee it coming, to be paſt hope before we have any fear, is a very ſad caſe. Wherefore break down your idols of jealouſy, mortify theſe luſts, theſe irregular appetites and deſires, that have ſtolen away your hearts, and left you like Sampſon, without his hair; and ſay, I will go and return to my firſt huſband: for then was it better with me than now, Hoſ. ii. 7.

Secondly, Walk as becomes theſe that are united to Chriſt. Evidence your union with him by walking as he alſo walked, 1 John ii. 6. If ye be brought from under the power of darkneſs, let your light ſhine before men. Shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life, as the lanthorn holds the candle, which being in it, ſhines through it, Phil. ii. 15. 16. Now that ye profeſs Chriſt to be in you, let his image ſhine forth in your converſation, and remember the buſineſs of your lives is to prove, by practical arguments, what ye profeſs.

1. You know the character of a wife, She that is married, careth how ſhe may pleaſe her huſband. Go you and do likewiſe; walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleaſing, Col. i. 10. This is the great buſineſs of life; you muſt pleaſe him, though it ſhould diſpleaſe all the world. What he hates muſt be hateful to you, becauſe he hates it. Whatever luſts come in ſuit of your hearts, deny them, ſeeing the grace of God has appeared, teaching ſo to do, and you are joined to the Lord. Let him be a covering to your eyes; for you have not your choice to make, it is made already; and you muſt not diſhonour your head. Shall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid, ſays the apoſtle, 1 Cor. vi. 15. Wilt thou take that heart of thine, which is Chriſt's dwelling-place, and lodge his enemies there? Wilt thou take that body, which is his temple, and defile it, by uſing the members thereof, as inſtruments of ſin?

2. Be careful to bring forth fruit, and much fruit. The branch well laden with fruit, is the glory of the vine, and of the huſbandman too, John xv. 8. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; ſo ſhall ye be my diſciples. A barren tree ſtands ſafer in a wood than in an orchard: and branches in Chriſt that bring not forth fruit, will be taken away and caſt into the fire.

3. Be heavenly-minded, and maintain a holy contempt of the world. Ye are united to Chriſt: he is your head and huſband, and is in heaven: wherefore your hearts ſhould be there alſo, Col. iii. 1. If ye then be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God. Let the ſerpent's ſeed go on their belly, and eat the duſt of this earth: but let the members of Chriſt be aſhamed to bow down, and feed with them.

4. Live and act dependently, depending by faith upon Jeſus Chriſt. That which grows on its own root, is a tree, not a branch. It is of the nature of a branch, to depend on the ſtock for all, and to derive all its ſap from thence. Depend on him for life, ſtrength, and all ſpiritual benefits, Gal. ii. 20. I live, yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God. For this cauſe, in the myſtical union, ſtrength is united to weakneſs, life to death, and heaven to earth: that weakneſs, death, and earth, may mount up on borrowed wings. Depend on him for temporal benefits alſo, Matth. vi. 2. Give us this day our daily bread. If we have truſted him with our eternal concerns, let us be aſhamed to diſtruſt him in the matter of our proviſion in the world.

Laſtly, Be of a meek diſpoſition, and an uniting temper with the fellow-members of Chriſt's body, as being united to the meek Jeſus, the bleſſed center of union. There is a prophecy to this purpoſe concerning the kingdom of Chriſt, Iſ. ii. 6. The wolf ſhall dwell with the lamb; and the leopard ſhall lie down with the kid. It is an alluſion to the beaſts in Noah's ark. The beaſts of prey, that were wont to kill and devour others, when once they came into the ark, lay down in peace with them: the lamb was in no hazard by the wolf there; nor the kid by the leopard. There was a beautiful accompliſhment of it in the primitive church, Acts iv. 32. And the multitude of them that believed, were of one heart and of one ſoul. And this prevails in all the members of Chriſt, according to the meaſure of the grace of God in them. Man is born naked into this world, as if God deſigned him for the picture of peace: and ſurely when he is born again, he comes not into the new world of grace, with claws to tear, a ſword to wound, and a fire in his hand, to burn up his fellow members in Chriſt, becauſe they cannot ſee with his light. Oh! it is ſad to ſee Chriſt's lillies as thorns in one another's ſides, Chriſt's lambs devouring one another like lions, and God's diamonds cutting one another: yet it muſt be remembered, that ſin is no proper cement for the members of Chriſt, though Herod and Pontius Pilate may be made friends that way. The apoſtle's rule is plain, Heb. xii. 14. Follow peace with all men, and holineſs. To follow peace no further than our humour, credit, and ſuch like things will allow us, is too ſhort: to purſue it further than holineſs, that is, conformity to the divine will, allows us, is too far. Peace is precious, yet it may be bought too dear: wherefore we muſt rather want it, than purchaſe it at the expence of truth or holineſs. But otherwiſe it cannot be over dear bought; and it will always be precious in the eyes of the ſons of peace.

II. And now, ſinners, what ſhall I ſay to you? I have given you ſome view of the privileges of theſe in the ſtate of grace: ye have ſeen them afar off. But, alas! they are not yours, becauſe ye are not Chriſt's. The ſinfulneſs of an unregenerate ſtate is yours; and the miſery of it is yours alſo: but ye have neither part nor lot in this matter. The guilt of all your ſins lies upon you; ye have no part in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. There is no peace to you, no peace with God, no true peace of conſcience: for ye have no ſaving intereſt in the great peace-maker. Ye are none of God's family; the adoption we ſpoke of, belongs not to you. Ye have no part in the Spirit of ſanctification: and, in one word, ye have no inheritance among them that are ſanctified. All I can ſay to you in this matter, is, that the caſe is not deſperate, they may yet be yours, Rev. iii. 20. Behold I ſtand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and he with me. Heaven is propoſing an union with earth ſtill, the potter is making ſuit to his own clay, and the gates of the city of refuge are not yet cloſed. O that we could compel you to come in.

Thus far of the ſtate of grace.

STATE IV.

NAMELY,

The Eternal State; or, State of Conſummate Happineſs or Miſery.

HEAD I.

Of DEATH.

JOB xxx. 23.

For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the houſe appointed for all living.

I Come now to diſcourſe of man's eternal ſtate, into which he enters by death. Of this entrance Job takes a ſolemn ſerious view, in the words of the text, which contain a general truth, and a particular application of it. The general truth is ſuppoſed; namely, that all men muſt, by death, remove out of this world; they muſt die. But whither muſt they go? They muſt go to the houſe appointed for all living; to the grave; that darkſome, gloomy, ſolitary houſe, in the land of forgetfulneſs. Whereſoever the body is laid up till the reſurrection; thither, as to a dwelling houſe, death brings us home. While we are in the body, we are but in a lodging-houſe; in an inn, on our way homeward. When we come to our grave, we come to our home, our long home, Eccleſ. xii. 5. All living muſt be inhabitants of this houſe, good and bad, old and young. Man's life is a ſtream, running into death's devouring deeps. They who now live in palaces, muſt quite them, and go home to this houſe; and they who have not where to lay their heads, ſhall thus have a houſe at length. It is appointed for all, by him whoſe counſel ſhall ſtand. This appointment cannot be ſhifted; it is a law which mortals cannot tranſgreſs. Job's application of this general truth to himſelf, is expreſſed in theſe words; I know that thou wilt bring me to death, &c. He knew, that he behoved to meet with death; that his ſoul and body behoved to part; that God who had ſet the tryſt, would certainly ſee it kept. Sometimes Job was inviting death to come to him, and carry him home to its houſe; yea, he was in hazard of running to it, before the time: Job vii. 15. My ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling and death, rather than my life. But here he conſiders God would bring him to it: yea, bring him back to it, as the word imports. Whereby he ſeems to intimate, that we have no life in this world but as run-aways from death, which ſtretcheth out its cold arms, to receive us from the womb: but though we do then narrowly eſcape its clutches, we cannot eſcape long; we will be brought back again to it. Job knew this, he had laid his account with it, and was looking for it.

DOCTRINE, All muſt die.

Although this doctrine be confirmed by the experience of all former generations, ever ſince Abel entered into the houſe appointed for all living; and though the living know that they ſhall die; yet it is needful to diſcourſe of the certainty of death, that it may be impreſſed on the mind, and duly conſidered.

Wherefore conſider, firſt, There is an unalterable ſtatute of death under which men are concluded. It is appointed unto men once to die, Heb. ix. 27. It is laid up for them, as parents lay up for their children: they may look for it, and cannot miſs it; ſeeing God has deſigned and reſerved it for them. There is no peradventure in it: we muſt needs die, 2 Sam. xiv. 14. Though ſome men will not hear of death, yet every man muſt ſee death, Pſal. lxxxix. 48. Death is a champion all muſt grapple with: we muſt enter the liſts with it, and it will have the maſtery, Eccleſ. viii. 8. There is no man that hath power over the ſpirit, to retain the ſpirit: neither hath he power in the day of death. They indeed who are found alive at Chriſt's coming, ſhall all be changed, 1 Cor. xv. 51. But that change will be equivalent to death, will anſwer the purpoſes of it. All other perſons muſt go the common road, the way of all fleſh. Secondly, Let us conſult daily obſervation. Every man ſeeth that wiſe men die, likewiſe the fool and brutiſh perſon, Pſal. xlix. 10. There is room enough, on this earth, for us, notwithſtanding of the multitudes, that were upon it before us; they are gone to make room for us; as we muſt depart to leave room for others. It is long ſince death began to tranſport men into another world, and vaſt ſhoals or multitudes are gone thither already: yet the trade is going on ſtill; death is carrying off new inhabitants daily, to the houſe appointed for all living. Who could ever hear the grave ſay, It is enough? Long has it been getting, but ſtill it aſketh. This world is ~~like a great fair or market, where ſome are coming in, others going out, while the aſſembly that is in it is confuſed, and the more part know not wherefore they are come together;~~ or, like a town ſituate on the road to a great city, through which ſome travellers are paſt, ſome are paſſing, while others are only coming in, Eccleſ. i. 4. One generation paſſeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever. Death is an inexorable, irreſiſtible meſſenger, who cannot be diverted from executing his orders by the force of the mighty, the bribes of the rich, nor the intreaties of the poor. It doth not reverence the hoary head, nor pity the harmleſs babe. The bold and daring cannot outbrave it; nor can the faint-hearted obtain a diſcharge in this war. Thirdly, The human body conſiſts of periſhing principles, Gen. iii. 19. Duſt thou art, and unto duſt thou ſhalt return. The ſtrongeſt are but brittle earthen veſſels, eaſily broken in ſhivers. The ſoul is but meanly houſed, while in this mortal body, which is not a houſe of ſtone, but a houſe of clay: the mud walls cannot but moulder away; eſpecially ſeeing the foundation is not on a rock, but in the duſt; they are cruſhed before the moth, though this inſect be ſo tender, that the gentleſt touch of a finger will diſpatch it, Job. iv. 19. Theſe principles are like gun-powder, a very ſmall ſpark lighting on them, will ſet them on fire, and blow up the houſe: the ſtone of a raiſin, or a hair in milk have choaked men, and laid the houſe of clay in the duſt. If we conſider the frame and ſtructure of our bodies, how fearfully and wonderfully we are made; and on how regular and exact a motion of the fluids, and balance of humours, our life depends: and that death has as many doors to enter in by, as the body hath pores: and if we compare the ſoul and body together, we may juſtly reckon, there is ſomewhat more aſtoniſhing in our life, than in our death; and that it is more ſtrange, to ſee duſt walking up and down on the duſt, than lying down in it. Though the lamp of our life be not violently blown out, yet the flame muſt go out at length for want of oil. And what are thoſe diſtempers and diſeaſes we are liable to, but deaths harbingers, that come to prepare its way? They meet us, as ſoon as we ſet our foot on earth; to tell us at our entry, that we do but come into the world to go out again. Howbeit, ſome are ſnatched away in a moment, without being warned by ſickneſs or diſeaſe. Fourthly, We have ſinful ſouls, and therefore have dying bodies: death follows ſin, as the ſhadow follows the body. The wicked muſt die, by virtue of the threatening of the covenant of works, Gen ii. 17. In the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely die. And the godly muſt die too: that as death entered by ſin, ſin may go out by death. Chriſt has taken away the ſting of death, as to them; albeit he has not as yet removed death itſelf. Wherefore, though it faſten on them, as the viper did on Paul's hand, it ſhall do them no harm; but becauſe the leproſy of ſin is in the walls of the houſe, it muſt be broken down, and all the materials thereof carried forth. Laſtly, Man's life in this world according to the ſcripture-account of it, is but a few degrees removed from death. The ſcripture repreſents it as a vain and empty thing, ſhort in its continuance, and ſwift in its paſſing away.

Firſt, Man's life is a vain and empty thing: while it is, it vaniſheth away; and lo! it is not. Job vii. 6. My days are vanity. If we ſuſpect afflicted Job of partiality in this matter, hear the wiſe and proſperous Solomon's character of the days of his life, Eccleſ. vii. 15. All things have I ſeen in the days of my vanity, i. e. my vain days. Moſes, who was a very active man, compares our days to a ſleep, Pſal. xc. 5. They are as a ſleep, which is not noticed till it be ended. The reſemblance is pat; few men have right apprehenſions of life, untill that death awaken them: then we begin to know we were living. We ſpend our years as a tale that is told, verſe 9. When an idle tale is a telling, it may affect a little: but when it is ended, it is forgot: and ſo is man forgotten, when the fable of his life is ended. It is a dream or viſion of the night, in which there is nothing ſolid: when one awakes, all evaniſheth; Job. xx. 8. He ſhall fly away as a dream, and ſhall not be found; yea, he ſhall be chaſed away as a viſion of the night. It is but a vain ſhow, or image; Pſal. xxxix. 6. Surely every man walketh in a vain ſhew. Man, in this world, is but, as it were, a walking ſtatue: his life is but an image of life, there is ſo much of death in it.

If we look on our life, in the ſeveral periods of it, we will find it a heap of vanities. Childhood and youth are vanity, Eccleſ. xi. 10. We come into the world the moſt helpleſs of all animals: young birds and beaſts can do ſomething for themſelves, but infant man is altogether unable to help himſelf. Our childhood is ſpent in pitiful trifling pleaſures, which become the ſcorn of our own after-thoughts. Youth is a flower that ſoon withereth, a bloſſom that quickly falls off; it is a ſpace of time in which we are raſh, fooliſh, and inconſiderate, pleaſing ourſelves with a variety of vanities, and ſwimming as it were through a flood of them. But ere we are aware, it is paſt, and we are in middle age, encompaſſed with a thick cloud of cares, through which we muſt grope: and finding ourſelves beſet with pricking thorns of difficulties, through them we muſt force our way to accompliſh the projects and contrivances of our riper thoughts. And the more we ſolace ourſelves in any earthly enjoyment we attain to, the more bitterneſs do we find in parting with it. Then comes old age, attended with its own train of infirmities, labour and ſorrow, Pſal. xc. 10. and ſets us down next door to the grave. In a word, All fleſh is graſs, Iſ. xl. 6. Every ſtage or period in life, is vanity. Man at his beſt ſtate, (his middle age, when the heat of youth is ſpent, and the ſorrows of old age have not yet overtaken him) is altogether vanity, Pſal. xxxix. 4. Death carries off ſome in the bud of childhood, others in the bloſſom of youth, and others when they are come to their fruit; few are left ſtanding, till, like ripe corn, they forſake the ground: all die one time or other.

Secondly, Man's life is a ſhort thing; it is not only a vanity, but a ſhort-lived vanity. Conſider, firſt, How the life of man is reckoned in the ſcriptures. It was indeed ſometimes reckoned by hundreds of years: but no man ever arrived at a thouſand; which yet bears no proportion to eternity. Now hundreds are brought down to ſcores; three ſcore and ten, or fourſcore, is its utmoſt length, Pſal. xc. 10. But few men arrive at that length of life. Death does but rarely wait, till men be bowing down, by reaſon of age, to meet the grave. Yet, as if years were too big a word for ſuch a ſmall thing as the life of man on earth; we find it counted by months, Job xiv. 5. The number of his months are with thee. Our courſe, like that of the moon, is run in a little time: we are always waxing or weaning, till we diſappear. But frequently it is reckoned by days; and theſe but few, Job xiv. 1. Man that is born of a woman is of few days. Nay, it is but one day in ſcripture-account; and that a hireling's day, who will preciſely obſerve when his days end, and give over his work, verſe 6. Till he ſhall accompliſh as an hireling his day. Yea, the ſcripture brings it down to the ſhorteſt ſpace of time, and calls it a moment, 2 Cor. iv. 1. Our light affliction (though it laſte all our life long) is but for a moment. But elſewhere it is brought down to yet a lower pitch, farther than which one cannot carry it, Pſal. xxxix. 5. Mine age is as nothing before thee. Agreeable to this, Solomon tells us, Eccleſ. iii. 2. there is a time to be born, and a time to die; but makes no mention of a time to live, as if our life were but a ſkip from the womb to the grave. Secondly, Conſider the various ſimilitudes by which the ſcripture repreſents the ſhortneſs of man's life. Hear Hezekiah, Iſ. xxxviii. 12. Mine age is departed, and is removed from me as a ſhepherd's tent: I have cut off like a weaver my life. The ſhepherd's tent is ſoon removed; for the flocks muſt not feed long in one place: ſuch is a man's life on this earth, quickly gone. It is a web he is inceſſantly working; he is not idle ſo much as for one moment: in a ſhort time it is wrought, and then it is cut off. Every breathing is a thread in this web; when the laſt breath is drawn, the web is woven out, he expires, and then it is cut off, he breathes no more. Man is like graſs, and like a flower, Iſ. xl. 6. All fleſh (even the ſtrongeſt and moſt healthy fleſh) is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field. The graſs is flouriſhing in the morning, but in the evening being cut down by the mowers, it is withered: ſo man ſometimes is walking up and down at eaſe in the morning, and in the evening is lying a corpſe, being knocked down by a ſudden ſtroke, with one or other of death's weapons. The flower, at beſt, is but a weak and tender thing, of ſhort continuance, where ever it grows; but obſerve, man is not compared to the flower of the garden; but to the flower of the field, which the foot of every beaſt may tread down at any time. Thus is our life liable to a thouſand accidents every day, any of which may cut us off. But though we ſhould eſcape all theſe, yet at length this graſs withereth, this flower fadeth of itſelf. It is carried off, as the cloud is conſumed, and vaniſheth away, Job vii. 9. It looks big as the morning-cloud, which promiſeth great things, and raiſeth the expectations of the huſbandman; but the ſun riſeth, and the cloud is ſcattered; death comes and man evaniſheth. The apoſtle James propoſeth the queſtion, What is our life? chap. iv. 14. Hear his own anſwer, It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away. It is as ſmoke, which goes out of the chimney, as if it would darken the face of the heavens: but quickly it is ſcattered, and appears no more: thus goeth man's life, and where is he? It is a wind, Job vii. 7. O remember that my life is wind. It is but a paſſing blaſt, a ſhort puff, a wind that paſſeth away, and cometh not again, Pſal. lxxviii. 39. Our breath is in our noſtrils, as it were always upon the wing to depart; ever paſſing and repaſſing, like a traveller; untill it go away for good and all, not to return till the heavens be no more.

Laſtly, Man's life is a ſwift thing; not only a paſſing, but a flying vanity. Have you not obſerved how ſwiftly a ſhadow hath run along the ground, in a cloudy and windy day, ſuddenly darkening the places beautified before with the beams of the ſun; but as ſuddenly diſappearing? Such is the life of man on the earth, for he fleeth as a ſhadow, and continueth not, Job xvi. 2. A weaver's ſhuttle is very ſwift in its motion; in a moment it is thrown from one ſide of the web to the other: yet our days are ſwifter than a weaver's ſhuttle, chap. vii. 6. How quickly is man toſſed through time, into eternity! See how Job deſcribes the ſwiftneſs of the time of life, chap. ix. 25. Now my days are ſwifter than a poſt; they flee away, they ſee no good. Verſe 26. They are paſſed away as the ſwift ſhips; as the eagle that haſteth to the prey. He compares his days with a poſt, a foot-poſt; a runner, who runs ſpeedily to carry tidings, and will make no ſtay. But though the poſt were like Ahimaaz, who over-ran Cuſhi; our days would be ſwifter than he; for they flee away, like a man fleeing for his life before the purſuing enemy; he runs with his utmoſt vigour, yet our days run as faſt as he. Howbeit, that is not all. Even he who is fleeing for his life, cannot run always; he muſt needs ſometimes ſtand ſtill, lie down, or turn in ſomewhere, as Siſera did into Jael's tent, to refreſh himſelf; but our time never halts. Therefore it is compared to ſhips, which can ſail night and day without intermiſſion, till they be at their port; and to ſwift ſhips, ſhips of deſire, in which men quickly arrive at the deſired haven; or, ſhips of pleaſure, that ſail more ſwiftly than ſhips of burden. Yet the wind failing, the ſhip's courſe is marred: but our time always runs with a rapid courſe. Therefore it is compared to the eagle flying; not with his ordinary flight, for that is not ſufficient to repreſent the ſwiftneſs of our days; but when he flies upon his prey, which is with an extraordinary ſwiftneſs. And thus, even thus, our days fly away.

Having thus diſcourſed of death, let us improve it, in diſcerning the vanity of the world; in bearing up with Chriſtian contentment and patience, under all troubles and difficulties in it; in mortifying our luſts; in cleaving unto the Lord with purpoſe of heart, on all hazards; and in preparing for death's approach.

And firſt, Let us hence, as in a looking-glaſs, behold the vanity of the world, and of all theſe things in it, which men ſo much value and eſteem; and therefore ſet their hearts upon. The rich and the poor are equally intent upon this world; they bow the knee to it; yet it is but a clay god; they court this bulky vanity, and run keenly to catch this ſhadow. The rich man is hugged to death in its embraces; and the poor man wearies himſelf in the fruitleſs purſuit. (What wonder if the world's ſmiles overcome us, when we purſue it ſo eagerly, even while it frowns upon us?) But look into the grave, O man, conſider and be wiſe; liſten to the doctrine of death; and learn, (1.) That, hold as faſt as thou canſt, thou ſhalt be forced to let go thy hold of the world at length. Though thou load thyſelf with the fruits of this earth; yet all ſhall fall off when thou comeſt to creep into thy hole, the houſe under ground, appointed for all living. When death comes, thou muſt bid an eternal farewell to thy enjoyments in this world; thou muſt leave thy goods to another; and whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided? Luke xii. 20. (2.) Thy portion of theſe things ſhall be very little ere long. If thou lie down on the graſs, and ſtretch thyſelf at full length, and obſerve the print of thy body when thou riſeſt, thou mayeſt ſee how much of this earth will fall to thy ſhare at laſt. It may be thou ſhalt get a coffin, and a winding-ſheet; but thou art not ſure of that: many who have had abundance of wealth, yet have not had ſo much when they took up their new houſe in the land of ſilence. But however that be, more ye cannot expect. It was a mortifying leſſon, Saladine, when dying, gave to his ſoldiers. He called for his ſtandard-bearer, and ordered him to take his winding-ſheet upon his pike; and go out to the camp with it, and tell them, that of all his conqueſts, victories, and triumphs, he had nothing now left him, but that piece of linen to wrap his body in for burial. Laſtly, This world is a falſe friend, who leaves a man in time of greateſt need, and flees from him when he has moſt to do. When thou art lying on a death-bed, all thy friends and relations cannot reſcue thee; all thy ſubſtance cannot ranſom thee, nor procure a reprieve for one day; nay, not for one hour. Yea, the more thou poſſeſſeſt of this world's goods, thy ſorrow at death is like to be the greater: for though one may live more commodiouſly in a palace than in a cottage, yet he may die more eaſily in the cottage, where he has very little to make him fond of life.

Secondly, It may ſerve as a ſtorehouſe for Chriſtian contentment and patience under worldly loſſes and croſſes A cloſe application of the doctrine of death is an excellent remedy againſt fretting, and gives ſome eaſe to a rankled heart. When Job had ſuſtained very great loſſes, he ſat down contented, with this meditation, Job i. 21. Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the name of the Lord. When providence brings a mortality or murrain among your cattle, how ready are you to fret and complain! but the ſerious conſideration of your own death, (to which you have a notable help from ſuch providential occurrences,) may be of uſe to ſilence your complaints, and quiet your rankled ſpirits. Look to the houſe appointed for all living, and learn, (1.) That ye muſt abide a ſorer thruſt, than the loſs of worldly goods. Do not cry out for a thruſt in the leg or arm: for ere long there will be a home-thruſt at the heart. You may loſe your deareſt relations: the wife may loſe her huſband, and the huſband his wife; the parents may loſe their dear children, and the children their parents. But if any of theſe trials happen to you, remember ye muſt loſe your own life at laſt; and wherefore doth a living man complain? Lam. iii. 39. It is always profitable to conſider, under affliction, how our caſe might have been worſe than it is. Whatever be conſumed, or taken from us, it is of the Lord's mercies that we ourſelves are not conſumed, verſe 22. (2.) It is but for a ſhort ſpace of time we are to be in this world. It is but little our neceſſities require in this ſhort ſpace of time: when death comes, we will ſtand in need of none of theſe things. Why ſhould men rack their heads with cares how to provide for tomorrow; while they know not if they ſhall need any thing to morrow? Though a man's proviſion for his journey be near ſpent, he is not diſquieted, if he think he is near home. Are you working with candle light, and is there little of your candle left? It may be there is as little ſand in your glaſs; and if ſo, ye have little uſe for it. (3) Ye have matters of greater weight that challenge your care. Death is at the door, beware ye loſe not your ſouls. If blood break out at one part of the body, they uſe to open a vein in another part of it, to turn the ſtream of blood, and thus to ſtop it. Thus the Spirit of the Lord ſometimes cures men of ſorrow for earthly things, by opening the heart vein to bleed for ſin. Did we purſue heavenly things the more vigorouſly that our affairs in this life proſper not, we ſhould thereby gain a double advantage: our worldly ſorrow would be diverted, and our beſt treaſure increaſed. (4.) Croſſes of this nature will not laſte long. The world's ſmiles and frowns will be quickly buried together in everlaſting forgetfulneſs. Its ſmiles go away as the foam on the water: and its frowns are as a paſſing ſtitch in a man's ſide. Time flies away with ſwift wings, and carries our earthly comforts, and croſſes too, along with it: neither of them will acompany us into the houſe appointed for all living, Job iii. 17. 'There the 'wicked ceaſe from troubling, and there the weary be at 'reſt.' Ver. 18. 'there the priſoners reſt together, they 'hear not the voice of the oppreſſor.' Ver. 19. 'The 'ſmall and great are there, and the ſervant is free from 'his maſter.' Caſt your eyes on eternity, and ye will ſee, affliction here is but for a moment. The truth is, our time is ſo very ſhort, that it will not allow either our joys or griefs to come to perfection. Wherefore, let them that weep, be as tho' they weeped not; and they that rejoyce, as though they rejoyced not, &c. 1 Cor. vii. 29. 30. 31. (5.) Death will put all men on a level. The king and the beggar muſt dwell in one houſe, when they come to their journey's end: tho' their entertainment by the way be very different. The ſmall and the great are there, Job iii. 19. We are in this world as on a ſtage: it is no great matter, whether a man act the part of a prince or a peaſant; for when they have acted their parts, they muſt both get behind the curtain, and appear no more. Laſtly, If thou be not in Chriſt, whatever thy afflictions now be, troubles, a thouſand times worſe, are abiding thee in another world. Death will turn thy croſſes into pure unmixed curſes: and then how gladly wouldſt thou return to thy former afflicted ſtate, and purchaſe it at any rate; were there any poſſibility of ſuch a return. If thou be in Chriſt, thou mayeſt well bear thy croſs. Death will put an end to all thy troubles. If a man on a journey be not well accommodated, where he lodgeth only for a night, he will not trouble himſelf much about the matter: becauſe he is not to ſtay there; it is not his home. Ye are on the road to eternity; let it not diſquiet you, that you meet with ſome hardſhips in the inn of this world. Fret not, becauſe it is not ſo well with you as with ſome others. One man travels with a cane in his hand: his ſellow-traveller (perhaps) has but a common ſtick, or ſtaff: either of them will ſerve the turn. It is no great matter which of them be yours; both will be laid aſide when you come to your journey's end.

Thirdly, It may ſerve for a bridle, to curb all manner of luſts, particularly thoſe converſant about the body. A ſerious viſit made to cold death, and that ſolitary manſion, the grave, might be of good uſe to repreſs them.

1ſt. It may be of uſe to cauſe men remit of their inordinate care of the body; which is to many the bane of their ſouls. Often do theſe queſtions, What ſhall we eat? what ſhall we drink? and wherewithal ſhall we be clothed? leave no room for another of more importance, viz. Wherewithal ſhall I come before the Lord? The ſoul is put to the rack, to anſwer theſe mean queſtions in favour of the body: while its own eternal intereſts are neglected. But ah! why are men ſo buſy to repair the ruinous cottage; leaving the inhabitant to bleed to death of his wounds, unheeded, unregarded! Why ſo much care for the body, to the neglecting of the concerns of the immortal ſoul? O! be not ſo anxious for what can only ſerve your bodies; ſince, ere long, the clods of cold earth will ſerve for back and belly too.

2dly, It may abate your pride on account of bodily endowments, which vain man is apt to glory in. Value not yourſelves on the bloſſom of youth; for while ye are in your blooming years, ye are but ripening for a grave; and death gives the fatal ſtroke, without aſking any body's age. Glory not in your ſtrength, it will quickly be gone: the time will ſoon be, when ye ſhall not be able to turn yourſelves on a bed; and ye muſt be carried by your grieving friends to your long home. And what ſignifies your healthful conſtitution? Death doth not always enter in ſooneſt where it begins ſooneſt to knock at the door; but makes as great diſpatch with ſome in a few hours, as with others in many years. Value not yourſelves on your beauty, which ſhall conſume in the grave, Pſal. xlix. 14. Remember the change death makes on the faireſt face, Job xiv. 20. Thou changeſt his countenance, and ſendeſt him away. Death makes the greateſt beauty ſo lothſome, that it muſt be buried out of ſight. Could a looking-glaſs be uſed in the houſe appointed for all living; it would be a terror to theſe, who now look oftener into their glaſſes than into their Bibles. And, what though the body be gorgeouſly arrayed? The fineſt clothes are but badges of our ſin and ſhame; and in a little time, will be exchanged for a winding ſheet; when the body will become a feaſt to the worms.

3dly, It may be a mighty check upon ſenſuality and fleſhly luſts, 1 Pet. ii. 11. I beſeech you as ſtrangers and pilgrims, abſtain from fleſhly luſts, which war againſt the ſoul. It is hard to cauſe wet wood take fire; and when the fire doth take hold of it, it is ſoon extinguiſhed. Senſuality makes men moſt unfit for divine communications, and is an effectual means to quench the Spirit. Intemperance in eating and drinking, carries on the ruin of ſoul and body at once: and haſtens death, while it makes the man moſt unmeet for it. Therefore, take heed to yourſelves, leſt at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, and ſo that day come upon you unawares, Luke xxi. 34. But, O how often is the ſoul ſtruck through with a dart, in gratifying the ſenſes! At theſe doors, deſtruction enters in. Therefore Job made a covenant with his eyes, chap. xxxi. The mouth of a ſtrange woman is a deep pit; he that is abhorred of the Lord, ſhall fall therein, Prov. xxii. 14. Let him that ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall. Beware of laſciviouſneſs; ſtudy modeſty, in your apparel, words, and actions. The ravens of the valley of death will at length pick out the wanton eye: the obſcene filthy tongue will at length be quiet, in the land of ſilence: and grim death embracing the body, in its cold arms, will effectually allay the heat of all fleſhly luſts.

Laſtly, In a word, it may check our earthly mindedneſs; and at once knock down, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life. Ah! if we muſt die, why are we thus? Why ſo fond of temporal things; ſo anxious to get them, ſo eager in the embraces of them, ſo mightily touched with the loſs of them? Let me, upon a view of the houſe appointed for all living, beſpeak the worldling, in the words of Solomon, Prov. xxiii. 5. Wilt thou ſet thine eyes upon that which is not? For riches certainly make themſelves wings, they flee away as an eagle towards heaven. Riches, and worldly things, are but a fair nothing: they are that which is not. They are not what they ſeem to be: they are but gilded vanities, that deceive the eye. Comparatively they are not; there is infinitely more of nothingneſs and not-being, than of being or reality, in the beſt of them. What is the world, and all that is in it, but a faſhion, or fair ſhow, ſuch as men make on a ſtage, a paſſing ſhow? 1 Cor. vii. 31. Royal pomp is but gaudy ſhow, or appearance, in God's account, Acts xxv. 23. The beſt name they get is good things: but, obſerve it, they are only the wicked man's good things, Luke xvi. 25. Thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, ſays Abraham, in the parable, to the rich man in hell. And well may the men of the world, call theſe things their goods; for there is no other good in them, about them, nor attending them. Now wilt thou ſet thine eyes upon empty ſhows and fancies? Wilt thou cauſe thine eyes to fly on them, as the word is? Shall mens hearts fly out at their eyes upon them, as a ravenous bird on its prey? If they do, let them know, that at length, theſe ſhall fly as faſt away from them, as ever their eyes flew upon them: like a flock of fair feathered birds, that ſettle on a fool's ground; the which, when he runs to catch them as his own, do immediately take wing, fly away, and ſitting down on his neighbour's ground, elude his expectation. Luke xii. 20. Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee: then whoſe ſhall theſe things be? Though you do not make wings to them, as many do; they make themſelves wings, and fly away; not as a tame houſe-bird, which may be catched again; nor as an hawk, that will ſhow where ſhe is by her bells, and be called again with the lure: but as an eagle, which quickly flies out of ſight, and cannot be recalled. Forbear thou to behold theſe things. O mortal! there is no reaſon, thou ſhould ſet thine eyes upon them. This world is a great inn, in the road to eternity, to which thou art travelling. Thou art attended by theſe things, as ſervants belonging to the inn, where thou lodgeſt: they wait upon thee, while thou art there; and when thou goeſt away, they will convoy thee to the door. But they are not thine, they will not go away with thee; but return to wait on other ſtrangers, as they did on thee.

Fourthly, It may ſerve as a ſpring of Chriſtian reſolution, to cleave to Chriſt, adhere to his truths, and continue in his ways; whatever we may ſuffer for ſo doing. It would much allay the fear of man, that bringeth a ſnare. Who art thou, that thou ſhouldſt be afraid of a man that ſhall die? Iſ. li. 12. Look on perſecutors as pieces of brittle clay, that ſhall be daſhed in pieces: for then ſhall ye deſpiſe them as foes that are mortal; whoſe terror, to others in the land of the living, ſhall quickly die with themſelves. The ſerious conſideration of the ſhortneſs of our time, and the certainty of death, will teach us, that all the advantage we can make by our apoſtacy, in time of trial, is not worth the while; it is not worth going out of our way to get it: and what we refuſe to forego for Chriſt's ſake, may quickly be taken from us by death. But we can never loſe it ſo honourably, as for the cauſe of Chriſt, and his goſpel: for what glory is it, that ye give up what ye have in the world; when God takes it away from you by death, whether you will or not? This conſideration may teach us to undervalue life itſelf, and chooſe to forego it, rather than to ſin. The worſt that men can do, is to take away that life, which we cannot long keep, though all the world ſhould conſpire to help us to retain the ſpirit. And if we refuſe to offer it up to God, when he calls for it in defence of his honour, he can take it from us another way; as it fared with him, who could not burn for Chriſt, but was afterwards burnt by an accidental fire in his houſe.

Laſtly, It may ſerve for a ſpur, to incite us to prepare for death. Conſider, (1.) Your eternal ſtate will be according to the ſtate in which ye die: death will open the doors of heaven or hell to you. As the tree falls, ſo it ſhall ly through eternity. If the infant be dead-born, the whole world will not raiſe it to life again: and if one die out of Chriſt, in an unregenerate ſtate, there is no more hope of him for ever. (2.) Seriouſly conſider, what it is to go into another world; a world of ſpirits, wherewith we are very little acquainted. How frightful is converſe with ſpirits, to poor mortals in this life! and how dreadful is the caſe, when men are hurried away into another world, not knowing but devils may be their companions for ever! Let us then give all diligence to make and advance our acquaintance with the Lord of that world. (3.) It is but a ſhort time ye have to prepare for death: therefore, now or never; ſeeing the time aſſigned for preparation will ſoon be over: Eccleſ. ix. 10. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave, whither thou goeſt. How can we be idle, having ſo great a work to do, and ſo little time to do it in? But if the time be ſhort, the work of preparation for death, though hard work, will not laſte long. The ſhadows of the evening make the labourer work chearfully; knowing the time to be at hand, when he will be called in from his labour. (4.) Much of our ſhort time is over already; and the youngeſt of us all cannot aſſure himſelf, that there is as much of his time to come, as is paſt. Our life in the world is but a ſhort preface to long eternity; and much of the tale is told. Oh! ſhall we not double our diligence, when ſo much of our time is ſpent, and ſo little of our great work is done? (5.) The preſent time is flying away: and we cannot bring back time paſt, it hath taken an eternal farewell of us: there is no kindling the fire again that is burnt to aſhes. The time to come is not ours: and we have no aſſurance of a ſhare in it when it comes. We have nothing we can call ours, but the preſent moment; and that is flying away: how ſoon our time may be at an end, we know not. Die we muſt: but who can tell us, when? If death kept one ſet time for all, we were in no hazard of a ſurpriſe: but daily obſervation ſhows us, there is no ſuch thing. Now the flying ſhadow of our life allows no time for loitering. The rivers run ſpeedily into the ſea from whence they came; but not ſo ſpeedily as man to the duſt from whence he came. The ſtream of time is the ſwifteſt current, and quickly runs out to eternity. Laſtly, If once death carry us off, there is no coming back again to mend our matters, Job xiv. 14. If a man die, ſhall he live again? Dying is a thing we cannot get a trial of; it is what we can only do once, Heb. ix. 27. It is appointed unto men once to die. And that which can be but once done, and yet is of ſo much importance, that our all depends on our doing it right, we have need to uſe the utmoſt diligence, that we may do it well. Therefore prepare for death, and do it timeouſly.

If ye, who are unregenerate, aſk me, what ye ſhall do to prepare for death, that ye may die ſafely? I anſwer, I have told you already, what muſt be done. And that is, your nature and ſtate muſt be changed: ye muſt be born again; ye muſt be united to Jeſus Chriſt by faith. And till this is done, ye are not capable of other directions, which belong to one's dying comfortably; whereof we may diſcourſe afterwards in the due place.

HEAD II.

The difference betwixt the righteous and the wicked in their death.

PROVERBS xiv. 32.

The wicked is driven away in his wickedneſs: but the righteous hath hope in his death.

THis text looks like the cloud betwixt the Iſraelites and Egyptians: having a dark ſide towards the latter, and a bright ſide towards the former. It repreſents death like Pharaoh's jaylor, bringing the chief butler, and the chief baker out of one priſon; the one to be reſtored to his office, and the other to be led to execution. It ſhows the difference betwixt the godly and ungodly in their death; who, as they act a very different part in life; ſo, in death, have a vaſtly different exit.

Firſt, As to the death of a wicked man: here is, (1.) The manner of his paſſing out of the world. He is driven away: namely, in his death, as is clear from the oppoſite clauſe. He is forcibly thruſt out of his place in this world: driven away as chaff before the wind. (2.) The ſtate he paſſeth away in. He dies in a ſinful and hopeleſs ſtate. Firſt, In a ſinful ſtate: he is driven away in his wickedneſs. He lived in it, and he dies in it; his filthy garments of ſin, in which he wrapt up himſelf in his life, are his priſon-garments, in which he ſhall ly wrapt up for ever. Secondly, In a hopeleſs ſtate; but the righteous hath hope in his death: which plainly imports the hopeleſſneſs of the wicked in their death. Whereby is not meant, that no wicked man ſhall have any hope at all, when he is a-dying; but ſhall die in deſpair. No: ſometimes it is ſo indeed; but frequently it is otherwiſe: fooliſh virgins may, and often do hope to the laſt breath. But the wicked man has no ſolid hope; and as for the deluſive hopes he entertains himſelf with, death will root them up, and he ſhall be for ever irretrievably miſerable.

Secondly, As to the death of a righteous man; he hath hope in his death. This is uſhered in with a but, importing a removal of theſe dreadful circumſtances, with which the wicked man is attended, who is driven away in his wickedneſs: but the godly are not ſo. Not ſo, (1.) In the manner of their paſſing out of the world. The righteous is not driven away as chaff before the wind, but led away as a bride to the marriage-chamber, carried away by the angels into Abraham's boſom, Luke xvi. 22. (2.) Not ſo as to their ſtate, when paſſing out of this life. The righteous man dies, (1.) Not in a ſinful, but in a holy ſtate. He goes not away in his ſin, but out of it. In his life he was putting off the old man, changing his priſon garments: and now the remaining rags of them are removed, and he is adorned with robes of glory. (2.) Not in a hopeleſs, but a hopeful ſtate. He hath hope in his death; he has the grace of hope, and the well founded expectation of better things, than ever he had in this world: and tho' the ſtream of his hope at death may run ſhallow: yet he has ſtill as much of it, as makes him venture his eternal intereſts upon the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

DOCTRINE I.

The wicked dying, are driven away in their wickedneſs, and in a hopeleſs ſtate.

In ſpeaking to this doctrine, (1.) I ſhall ſhew how, and in what ſenſe, the wicked are driven away in their wickedneſs, at death, (2.) I ſhall diſcover the hopeleſſneſs of their ſtate at death. And laſtly, Apply the whole.

I. How, and in what ſenſe the wicked are driven away in their wickedneſs. In diſcourſing of this matter, I ſhall briefly enquire, (1.) What is meant by their being driven away. (2.) Whence they ſhall be driven, and whither. (3.) In what reſpects they may be ſaid to be driven away in their wickedneſs. But, before I proceed, let me advertiſe you; that you are miſtaken, if you think that no perſons are to be called wicked, but they who are avowedly vitious and prophane; as if the devil could dwell in none but thoſe whoſe name is legion. In ſcripture account, all who are not righteous, in the manner hereafter explained, are reckoned wicked. And therefore the text divides the whole world into two ſorts, the righteous, and the wicked; and ye will ſee the ſame thing in that other text, Mal. iii. 18. Then ſhall ye return, and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked. Wherefore, if ye be not righteous, ye are wicked. If ye have not an imputed righteouſneſs, and alſo an implanted righteouſneſs, or holineſs; if ye be yet in your natural ſtate, unregenerated, not united to Chriſt by faith: howſoever moral and blameleſs, in the eyes of men, your converſation may be; ye are the wicked, who ſhall be driven away in your wickedneſs, if death find you in that ſtate. Now, Firſt, As to the meaning of this phraſe driven away: there are three things in it: the wicked ſhall be taken away ſuddenly, violently, and irreſiſtibly.

Firſt, Unrenewed men ſhall be taken away ſuddenly at death. Not that all wicked men die ſuddenly: nor that they are all wicked, who die ſo, God forbid! But, (1.) Death commonly comes upon them unexpected, and ſo ſurprizeth them; as the deluge came ſurprizingly on the old world, tho' they were forewarned of it long before it came; and as travail comes on a woman with child, with ſurprizing ſuddenneſs; although looked for and expected, 1 Theſſ. v. 3. Death ſeizeth them, as a creditor doth his debtor, to hale him to priſon, Pſal. lv. 15. and that when they are not aware. Death comes in, as a thief, at the window, and finds them full of buſy thoughts about this life, which that very day periſh. (2.) Death always ſeizeth them unprepared for it: the old houſe falls down about their ears, before they have another provided. When death caſts them to the door, they have not where to lay their heads; unleſs it be on a bed of fire and brimſtone. The ſoul and body are, as it were, hugging one another in mutual embraces: when death comes like a whirlwind, and ſeparates them. (3.) Death hurries them away in a moment to deſtruction, and makes a moſt diſmal change: the man for the moſt part, never knows where he is, till in hell he lift up his eyes, Luke xvi. 23. The floods of wrath ſuddenly overwhelm his ſoul; and ere he is aware, he is plunged in the bottomleſs pit.

Secondly, The unrenewed man is taken away out of the world violently. Driving is a violent action: he is chaſed out of the world, Job xviii. 18. Fain would he ſtay, if he could; but death drags him away, like a malefactor, to the execution. He ſought no other portion, than the profits and pleaſures of this world; he hath no other; he really deſires no other; how can he then go away out of it, if he were not driven?

Queſt. But may not a wicked man be willing to die? Anſw. He may indeed be willing to die; but (obſerve) it is only in one of three caſes. (1.) In a fit of paſſion, by reaſon of ſome trouble that he is impatient to be rid of. Thus many perſons, when their paſſion has got the better of their reaſon, and when, on that account, they are moſt unfit to die, will be ready to cry, O to be gone! but ſhould their deſire be granted, and death come at their call, they would quickly ſhow they were not in earneſt; and that if they go, they muſt be driven away againſt their wills. (2.) When they are brimful of deſpair, they may be willing to die. Thus Saul murdered himſelf; and Spira wiſhed to be in hell, that he might know the uttermoſt of what he believed he was to ſuffer. In this manner men may ſeek after death, while it flies from them. But fearful is the violence theſe do undergo whom the terrors of God do thus drive. (3.) When they are dreaming of happineſs after death. Fooliſh virgins, under the power of deluſion, as to their ſtate, may be willing to die, having no fear of lying down in ſorrow. How many are there, who can give no ſcripture-ground for their hope, who yet have no bands in their death! Many are driven to darkneſs ſleeping: they go off like lambs, who would roar like lions, did they but know what place they are going to: though the chariot in which they are, drives furiouſly to the depths of hell; yet they fear not, becauſe they are faſt aſleep.

Laſtly, The unregenerate man is taken away irreſiſtibly. He muſt go, though ſore againſt his will. Death will take no refuſal, nor admit of any delay: though the man has not lived half his days, according to his own computation. If he will not bow, it will break him: if he will not come forth, it will pull the houſe down about his ears; for there he muſt not ſtay. Although the phyſician help, friends groan, the wife and the children cry, and the man himſelf uſe his utmoſt efforts to retain the Spirit, his ſoul is required of him; yield he muſt, and go, where he ſhall never more ſee light.

Secondly, Let us conſider, whence they are driven, and whither. When the wicked die, (1.) They are drivven out of this world, where they ſinned; into the other world, where they muſt be judged, and receive their particular ſentences, Heb. ix. 27. It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment. They ſhall no more return to their beloved earth. Though their hearts are wedded to their earthly enjoyments, they muſt leave them, they can carry nothing hence. How ſorrowful muſt their departure be, when they have nothing in view, ſo good as that which they leave behind them! (2.) They are driven out of the ſociety of the ſaints on earth, into the ſociety of the damned in hell, Luke xvi. 22. The rich man alſo died, and was buried. ver. 23. And in hell he lift up his eyes. What a multitude of the devil's goats do now take place among Chriſt's ſheep! but at death they ſhall be led forth with the workers of iniquity, Pſal. cxxv. 5. There is a mixed multitude in this world, but no mixture in the other: each party is there ſet by themſelves. Though hypocrites grow here as tares among the wheat, death will root them up, and they ſhall be bound in bundles for the fire. (3.) They are driven out of time into eternity. While time laſtes with them, there is hope: but when time goes, all hope goes with it. Precious time is now laviſhly ſpent: it lies ſo heavy upon the hands of many, that they think themſelves obliged to take ſeveral ways to drive away time. But beware of being at a loſs what to do in life: improve time for eternity, whilſt you have it: for ere long death will drive it from you, and you from it, ſo as ye ſhall never meet again. (4.) They are driven out of their ſpecious pretences to piety. Death ſtrips them of the ſplendid robes of a fair profeſſion, with which ſome of them are adorned; and turns them off the ſtage, in the rags of a wicked heart and life. The word hypocrite, properly ſignifies a ſtage-player, who appears to be what indeed he is not. This world is the ſtage on which theſe children of the devil perſonate the children of God. Their ſhew of religion is their player's coat, under which one muſt look, who will judge of them aright. Now, death turns them out of their coat, and then they appear in their native dreſs: it unveils them, and takes off their maſk. There are none in the other world, who pretend to be better than they really are. Depraved nature acts in the regions of horror, unallayed and undiſguiſed. Laſtly, They are driven away from all means of grace; and are ſet beyond the line, quite out of all proſpect of mercy. There is no more an opportunity to buy oil for the lamp; it is gone out at death, and can never be lighted again. There may be offers of mercy and peace made after they are gone; but they are to others, not to them: there are no ſuch offers in the place to which they are driven; theſe offers are only made in that place from which they are driven away.

Laſtly, In what reſpects may they be ſaid to be driven away in their wickedneſs? Anſw. (1.) In reſpect of their being driven away, in their ſinful unconverted ſtate. Having lived enemies to God, they die in a ſtate of enmity to him: for none are brought into the ſtate of conſummate happineſs, but by the way of the ſtate of grace, or begun recovery in this life. The child dead in the womb, is born dead, and is caſt out of the womb into the grave: ſo he who is dead while he liveth, or is ſpiritually dead, is caſt forth of the womb of time, in the ſame ſtate of death, into the pit of utter miſery. O miſerable death, to die in the gall of bitterneſs, and bond of iniquity! it had been incomparably better for ſuch as die thus, that they had never been born. (2.) In regard they die ſinning, acting wickedly againſt God, in contradiction to the divine law; for they can do nothing but ſin while they live: ſo death takes them in the very act of ſinning; violently draws them from the embraces of their luſts, and drives them away to the tribunal, to receive their ſentence. It is a remarkable expreſſion, Job xxxvi. 14. They die in youth: the marginal reading is, their ſoul dieth in youth; their luſts being lively, their deſires vigorous, and expectations big, as is common in youth. And their life is among the unclean; or, And the company (or herd) of them dieth among the Sodomites, i. e. is taken away in the heat of their ſin and wickedneſs, as the Sodomites were, Gen. xix. Luke vii. 28. 29. (3.) In as much as they are driven away, loaded with the guilt of all their ſins; this is the winding-ſheet, that ſhall lie down with them in the duſt, Job xx. 11. Their works follow them into the other world; they go away with the yoke of their tranſgreſſions wreathed about their necks. Guilt is a bad companion in life, but how terrible will it be in death! It lies now, perhaps, like cold brimſtone on their benumbed conſciences: but when death opens the way for ſparks of divine vengeance, like fire, to fall upon it, it will make dreadful flames in the conſcience, in which the ſoul will be, as it were, wrapt up for ever. Laſtly, The wicked are driven away in their wickedneſs, in ſo far as they die under the abſolute power of their wickedneſs. While there is hope, there is ſome reſtraint on the worſt of men: and theſe moral endowments, which God gives to a number of men, for the benefit of mankind in this life, are ſo many allays and reſtraints upon the impetuous wickedneſs of human nature. But all hope being cut off, and theſe gifts withdrawn; the wickedneſs of the wicked will then arrive at its perfection. As the ſeeds of grace, ſown in the hearts of the elect, come to their full maturity at death; ſo wicked and helliſh diſpoſitions in the reprobate come then to their higheſt pitch. Their prayers to God will then be turned to horrible curſes, and their praiſes to hideous blaſphemies, Matth. xxii. 13. There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. This gives a diſmal, but genuine view of the ſtate of the wicked in another world.

II. I ſhall diſcover the hopeleſsneſs of the ſtate of unrenewed men, at death. It appears to be very hopeleſs, if we conſider theſe four things.

Firſt, Death cuts off their hopes and proſpects of peace and pleaſure in this life. Luke xii. 19. Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. ver. 20. But God ſaid unto him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee: then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be, which thou haſt provided? They look for great matters in this world, they hope to increaſe their wealth, to ſee their families proſper, and to live at eaſe: but death comes like a ſtormy wind, and ſhakes off all their fond hopes, like green fruit from off a tree. When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath upon him. He may begin a web of contrivances, for advancing his worldly intereſt: but before he gets it wrought out, death comes, and cuts it out. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts periſh, Pſal. cxlvi. 4.

Secondly, When death comes, they have no ſolid grounds to hope for eternal happineſs. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, tho' he hath gained, when God taketh away his ſoul? Job xxvii. 8. Whatever hopes they fondly entertain, they are not founded on God's word, which is the only ſure ground of hope: if they knew their own caſe, they would ſee themſelves only happy in a dream. And indeed what hope can they have? The law is plain againſt them, and condemns them. The curſes of it (theſe cords of death) are about them already. The Saviour whom they ſlighted, is now their Judge; and their Judge is their enemy. How then can they hope? They have bolted the door of mercy againſt themſelves, by their unbelief. They have deſpiſed the remedy, and therefore muſt die without mercy. They have no ſaving intereſt in Jeſus Chriſt, the only channel of conveyance, in which mercy flows: and therefore they can never taſte of it. The ſword of juſtice guards the door of mercy, ſo as none can enter in, but the members of the myſtical body of Chriſt, over whoſe heads is a covert of atoning blood, the Mediator's blood. Theſe indeed may paſs without harm, for juſtice has nothing to require of them. But others cannot paſs, ſince they are not in Chriſt: death comes to them with the ſting in it, the ſting of unpardoned guilt. It is armed againſt them with all the force the ſanction of a holy law can give it, 1 Cor. xv. 56. The ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law. When that law was given on Sinai, the whole mount quaked greatly, Exod. xix. 18. When the Redeemer was making ſatiſfaction for the elect's breaking of it, the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, Matth. xxvii. 51. What poſſible ground of hope then is there to the wicked man, when death comes upon him armed with the force of this law? How can he eſcape that fire, which burnt unto the midſt of heaven? Deut. iv. 11. How ſhall he be able to ſtand in that ſmoke, that aſcended as the ſmoke of a furnace? Exod. xix. 18. How ſhall he endure the terrible thunders and lightnings, ver. 16. and dwell in the darkneſs, clouds, and thick darkneſs? Deut. iv. 11. All theſe reſemblances heaped together, do but faintly repreſent the fearful tempeſt of wrath and indignation, which ſhall purſue the wicked to the loweſt hell; and for ever abide on them, who are driven to darkneſs at death.

Thirdly, Death roots up their deluſive hopes of eternal happineſs: then it is their covenant with death, and agreement with hell is broken. They are awakened out of their golden dreams, and at length lift up their eyes; Job viii. 14. Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off, and whoſe truſt ſhall be a ſpider's web. They truſt all ſhall be well with them after death: but this their truſt is but a web woven out of their own bowels, with a great deal of art and induſtry. They wrap themſelves up in this their hope, as the ſpider wraps herſelf in her web. But it is but a weak and ſlender defence; for however it may withſtand the threatnings of the word of God; death, that beſom of deſtruction, will ſweep them and it both away, ſo as there ſhall not be the leaſt ſhred of it left them; but he who this moment will not let his hope go, ſhall next moment be utterly hopeleſs. Death overturns the houſe built on the ſand; it leaves no man under the power of deluſion.

Laſtly, Death makes their ſtate abſolutely and for ever hopeleſs. Matters cannot be retrieved and amended after death. For (1.) Time once gone can never be recalled. If cries or tears, price or pains, could bring time back again; the wicked man might have hope in his death. But tears of blood will not prevail; nor will his roaring for millions of ages, cauſe it to return. The ſun will not ſtand ſtill untill the ſluggard awake, and enter on his journey; and when once it is gone down, he needs not expect the night to be turned into day for his ſake: he muſt lodge through the long night of eternity where his time left him. (2.) There is no returning to this life, to amend what is amiſs: it is a ſtate of probation and trial, which terminates at death; and therefore we cannot return to it again: it is but once we thus live, and once we die. Death carries the wicked man to his own place, Acts i. 25. This life is our working day; death cloſeth our day and our work together. We may readily imagine the wicked might have ſome hope in their death; if, after death has opened their eyes, they could return to life, and have but the trial of one Sabbath, one offer of Chriſt, one day, or but one hour more, to make up their peace with God: but, man lieth down, and riſeth not till the heavens be no more; they ſhall not awake, nor be raiſed out of their ſleep, Job xiv. 12. Laſtly, In the other world, men have no acceſs to get their ruined ſtate and condition retrieved, if they never ſo fain would. For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt, Eccleſ. ix. 10. Now a man may flee from the wrath to come; now he may get into a refuge: but when once death has done its work, the door is ſhut: there are no more offers of mercy, no more pardons: where the tree is fallen, there it muſt ly.

Let what has been ſaid be carefully pondered, and that it may be of uſe, let me exhort you.

Firſt, To take heed that ye entertain no hopes of heaven, but what are built on a ſolid foundation: tremble to think what fair hopes of happineſs death ſweeps away like cobwebs; how the hopes of many are cut off, when they ſeem to themſelves to be at the very threſhold of heaven; how, in the moment they expected to be carried by angels into Abraham's boſom, into the regions of bliſs and peace, they are carried by devils into the ſociety of the damned in hell, into the place of torment, and regions of horror. I beſeech you to beware, (1.) Of a hope built up, where the ground was never cleared. The wiſe builder digged deep, Luke vi. 48. Were your hopes of heaven never ſhaken; but have ye had good hopes all your days? Alas for it; you may ſee the myſtery of your caſe explained, Luke xi. 21. When a ſtrong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace. But if they have been ſhaken, take heed leſt there have only ſome breaches been made in the old building, which you have got repaired again, by ways and means of your own. I aſſure you, your hope (howſoever fair a building it is) is not to truſt to; unleſs your old hopes have been razed, and you have built on a foundation quite new. (2.) Beware of that hope which looks briſk in the dark; but loſeth all its luſtre when it is ſet in the light of God's word, when it is examined and tried by the touchſtone of divine revelation, John iii. 20. For every one that doth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved. Ver. 21. But he that doth the truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought in God. That hope, which cannot abide ſcripture trial, but ſinks when ſearched into by ſacred truth, is a deluſion, and not a true hope: for God's word is always a friend to the graces of God's Spirit, and an enemy to deluſion. (3.) Beware of that hope, which ſtands without being ſupported by ſcripture evidences. Alas! many are big with hopes, who cannot give, becauſe they really have not any ſcripture grounds for them. Thou hopeſt that all ſhall be well with thee after death: but what word of God is it, on which thou haſt been cauſed to hope? Pſal. cxix. 49. What ſcripture-evidence haſt thou to prove, that thy hope is not the hope of the hypocrite? What haſt thou, after impartial ſelf-examination, as in the ſight of God, found in thyſelf, which the word of God determines to be a ſure evidence of his right to eternal life, who is poſſeſſed of it? Numbers of men are ruined with ſuch hopes as ſtand unſupported by ſcripture-evidence. Men are fond and tenacious of theſe hopes; but death will throw them down, and leave the ſelf-deceiver hopeleſs. Laſtly, Beware of that hope of heaven, which doth not prepare and diſpoſe you for heaven, which never makes your ſoul more holy, 1 John iii. 3. Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himſelf, even as he is pure. The hope of the moſt part of men is, rather a hope to be free of pain and torment in another life; than a hope of true happineſs, the nature whereof is not underſtood and diſcerned: and therefore it ſtakes down in ſloth and indolence, and does not excite to mortification and a heavenly life. So far are they from hoping aright for heaven; that they muſt own, if they ſpeak their genuine ſentiments, removing out of this world into any other place whatſoever, is rather their fear than their hope. The glory of the heavenly city does not at all draw their hearts upwards towards it: nor do they lift up their heads with joy, in the proſpect of arriving at it. If they had the true hope of the marriage day, they would, as the bride, the lamb's wife, be making themſelves ready for it, Rev. xix. 7. But their hopes are produced by their ſloth, and their ſloth is nouriſhed by their hopes. Oh! Sirs, as ye would not be driven away hopeleſs in your death, beware of theſe hopes. Raze them now, and build on a new foundation; leſt death leave not one ſtone of them upon another, and ye never be able to hope any more.'

Secondly, Haſten, O ſinners, out of your wickedneſs, out of your ſinful ſtate, and out of your wicked life; if ye would not at death be driven away in your wickedneſs. Remember the fatal end of the wicked man, as the text repreſents it. I know there is a great difference in the death of the wicked, in reſpect of ſome circumſtances: but all of them, in their death, agree in this, that they are driven away in their wickedneſs. Some of them die reſolutely, as if they ſcorned to be afraid. Some in raging deſpair, ſo filled with horror, that they cry out, as if they were already in hell: others in ſullen deſpondency, oppreſſed with fears, inſomuch that their hearts are ſunk within them, upon the remembrance of miſpent time, and the view they have of eternity; having neither head nor heart to do any thing for their own relief. And others die ſtupid: they lived like beaſts; and they die like beaſts, without any concern on their ſpirits about their eternal ſtate. They groan under their bodily diſtreſs, but have no ſenſe of the danger of their ſouls. One may with almoſt as much proſpect of ſucceſs ſpeak to a ſtone, as ſpeak to them: vain is the attempt to teach them; nothing that can be ſaid moves them. To diſcourſe to them, either of the joys of heaven, or the torments of hell, is to plow on a rock, or beat the air. Some die like the fooliſh virgins, dreaming of heaven; their foreheads are ſteeled againſt the fears of hell, with preſumptuous hopes of heaven. Their buſineſs, who would be uſeful to them, is not to anſwer doubts about the caſe of their ſouls; but to diſpute them out of their falſe hopes. But which way ſoever the unconverted man dies, he is driven away in his wickedneſs. O dreadful caſe! Oh, let the conſideration of ſo horrible a departure out of this world, move you to betake yourſelves to Jeſus Chriſt, as an all ſufficient Saviour, an almighty Redeemer. Let it prevail to drive you out of your wickedneſs, to holineſs of heart and life. Though you reckon it pleaſant to live in wickedneſs; you cannot but own, it is bitter to die in it. And if you leave it not in time, you ſhall go in your wickedneſs to hell, the proper place of it, that it may be ſet there on its own baſe. For when you are paſſing out of this world, all your ſins, from the eldeſt to the youngeſt of them, will ſwarm about you, hang upon you, accompany you to the other world; and, as ſo many furies, ſurround you there for ever.

Laſtly, O be concerned for others, eſpecially for your relations, that they may not continue in their ſinful natural ſtate, but be brought into a ſtate of ſalvation; leſt they be driven away in their wickedneſs at death. What would ye not do to prevent any of your friends dying an untimely death? But, alas; do not ye ſee them in hazard of being driven away in their wickedneſs? Is not death approaching them, even the youngeſt of them? And are they not ſtrangers to true Chriſtianity, remaining in that ſtate, in which they came into the world! Oh, make haſte to pluck the brand out of the fire, before it be burnt to aſhes. The death of relations often leaves a ſting in the hearts of theſe they leave behind them; for that they did not do for their ſouls, as they had opportunity: and that now the opportunity is for ever taken out of their hands.

DOCTRINE II.

The ſtate of the godly in death, is a hopeful ſtate.

We have ſeen the dark ſide of the cloud looking towards ungodly men, paſſing out of the world: let us now take a view of the bright ſide of it, ſhining on the godly, as they are entering upon their eternal ſtate. In diſcourſing this ſubject, I ſhall confirm this doctrine, anſwer an objection againſt it, and then make ſome practical improvement of the whole.

For confirmation, let it be obſerved, that although the paſſage out of this world by death, has a frightful aſpect to poor mortals; and to miſcarry in it muſt needs be of fatal conſequence: yet the following circumſtances make the ſtate of the godly in their death, happy and hopeful.

Firſt, They have a truſty good friend before them in the other world. Jeſus Chriſt, their beſt friend, is Lord of that land, to which death carries them. When Joſeph ſent for his father to come down to him to Egypt, telling him God had made him lord over all Egypt, Gen. xlv. 9. and Jacob ſaw the waggons Joſeph had ſent to carry him, the ſpirit of Jacob revived, ver. 27. He frankly reſolves to undertake the journey. I think, when the Lord calls a godly man out of this world, he ſends him ſuch glad tidings, and ſuch a kind invitation into the other world, that if he had faith to believe it, his ſpirit muſt revive, when he ſees the waggon of death, which comes to carry him thither. It is true indeed, he has a weighty trial to undergo; after death the judgment. But the caſe of the godly is altogether hopeful; for the Lord of the land is their huſband, and their huſband is the judge; the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son, John v. 22. And ſurely the caſe of the wife is hopeful, when her own huſband is her judge, even ſuch a huſband as hates putting away. No huſband is ſo loving and ſo tender of his ſpouſe, as the Lord Chriſt is of his. One would think, it would be a very bad land, which a wife would not willingly go to, where her huſband is the ruler and judge. Moreover, their judge is the advocate, 1 John ii. 1. We have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous. And therefore they need not fear their being put back, and falling into condemnation. What can be more favourable? Can they think, that he who pleads their cauſe, will himſelf paſs ſentence againſt them? Yet further, their advocate is their Redeemer; they are redeemed with the precious blood of Chriſt, 1 Pet. i. 18. 19. So when he pleads for them, he is pleadiug his own cauſe. Though an advocate may be careleſs of the intereſt of one who employs him; ſurely he will do his utmoſt to defend his own right, which he hath purchaſed with his money: and ſhall not their advocate defend the purchaſe of his own blood? But more than all that; their Redeemer is their head, and they are his members, Eph. v. 23. 30. Though one were ſo ſilly as to let his own purchaſe go, without ſtanding up to defend his right; yet ſurely he will not quit a limb of his own body. Is not their caſe then hopeful in death, who are ſo cloſely linked and allied to the Lord of the other world, who hath the keys of hell and of death?

Secondly, They ſhall have a ſafe paſſage to another world. They muſt indeed go through the valley of the ſhadow of death: but though it be in itſelf a dark and ſhady vale, it ſhall be a valley of hope to them: they ſhall not be driven through it, but walk through it; as men in perfect ſafety, who fear no evil, Pſal. xxiii. 4. Why ſhould they fear? They have the Lord of the land's ſafe conduct, his paſs ſealed with his own blood: namely, the bleſſed covenant, which is the ſaint's death-bed comfort. 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Although my houſe be not ſo with God, yet he hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, ordered in all things and ſure: for this is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, although he make it not to grow. Who then can harm them? It is ſafe riding in Chriſt's chariot, (Cant. iii. 9.), both through life and death. They have good and honourable attendants, a guard, even a guard of angels. Theſe encamp about them in the time of their life; and ſurely will not leave them in the day of their death. Theſe happy miniſtering ſpirits are attendants on their Lord's bride, and will doubtleſs convey her ſafe home to his houſe. When friends in mournful mood ſtand by the ſaint's bed-ſide, waiting to ſee him draw his laſt breath; his ſoul is waited for of holy angels, to be carried by them into Abraham's boſom, Luke xvi. 22. The captain of the ſaints ſalvation is the captain of this holy guard: he was their guide even unto death, and he will be their guide through it too, Pſal. xxiii. 4. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me. They may, without fear, paſs that river, being confident it ſhall not overflow them; and may walk through that fire, being ſure they ſhall not be burnt by it.

Death can do them no harm. It cannot even hurt their bodies: for though it ſeparate the ſoul from the body; it cannot ſeparate the body from the Lord Chriſt. Even death is to them but ſleep in Jeſus, 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. They continue members of Chriſt, though in a grave. Their duſt is precious duſt; laid up in the grave, as in their Lord's cabinet. They lie in a grave mellowing; as precious fruit laid up to be brought forth to him, at the reſurrection. The huſbandman has corn in his barn, and corns lying in the ground: the latter is more precious to him than the former; becauſe he looks to get it returned with increaſe. Even ſo the dead bodies of the ſaints are valued by their Saviour: they are ſown in corruption, to be raiſed in incorruption; ſown in diſhonour, to be raiſed in glory, 1 Cor. xv. 42. 43. It cannot hurt their ſouls. It is with the ſouls of the ſaints at death, as with Paul and his company in their voyage, whereof we have the hiſtory, Acts xxvii. The ſhip was broke in pieces, but the paſſengers got all ſafe to land. When the dying ſaint's ſpeech is laid, his eyes ſet, and his laſt breath drawn; the ſoul gets ſafe away into the heavenly paradiſe, leaving the body to return to its earth, but in the joyful hope of a re-union at its glorious reſurrection How can death hurt the godly? It is a foiled enemy: if it caſt them down, it is only that they may riſe up more glorious. Our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt hath aboliſhed death, 2 Tim. i. 10. The ſoul and life of it is gone: it is but a walking ſhade that may fright, but cannot hurt ſaints: it is only the ſhadow of death to them; it is not the thing itſelf: their dying is but as dying, or ſomewhat like dying. The apoſtle tells us, It is Chriſt that died, Rom. viii. 34. Stephen, the firſt Chriſtian martyr, though ſtoned to death, yet but fell aſleep, Acts vii. 60. Certainly, the nature of death is quite changed, with reſpect to the ſaints. It is not to them, what it was to Jeſus Chriſt their head: it is not the invenomed ruinating thing, wrapt up in the ſanction of the firſt covenant, Gen. ii. 17. In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die. It comes to the godly without its ſting: they may meet it with that ſalutation, O death, where is thy ſting Is this Mara? Is this bitter death? It went out full into the world, when the firſt Adam opened the door to it: but the ſecond Adam hath brought it again empty to his own people. I feel a ſting, may the dying ſaint ſay; yet it is but a bee-ſting, ſtinging only through the ſkin: but, O death, where is thy ſting, thine old ſting, the ſerpent's ſting, that ſtings to the heart and ſoul? The ſting of death is ſin: but that is taken away. If death arreſt the ſaint, and carry him before the Judge, to anſwer for the debt he contracted; the debt will be found paid by the glorious Cautioner; and he has the diſcharge to ſhow. The thorn of guilt is pulled out of the man's conſcience; and his name is blotted out of the black roll, and written among the living in Jeruſalem. It is true, it is a great journey to go through the valley of the ſhadow of death: but the ſaint's burden is taken away from off his back, his iniquity is pardoned, he may walk at eaſe; no lion ſhall be there, nor any ravenous beaſt: the redeemed may walk at leiſure there, free from all apprehenſions of danger.

Laſtly, They ſhall have a joyful entrance into the other world. Their arrival in the regions of bliſs, will be celebrated with rapturous hymns of praiſe to their glorious Redeemer. A dying day is a good day to a godly man. Yea, it is his beſt day; it is better to him than his birth-day, or than the moſt joyous day he ever had on earth. A good name, ſays the wiſe man, is better than precious ointment: and the day of death, than the day of one's birth, Eccleſ. vii. 1. The notion of the immortality of the ſoul, and of future happineſs, which obtained among ſome Pagan nations, had wonderful effects on them. Some of them, when they mourned for the dead, did it in woman's apparel; that being moved with the indecency of the garb, they might the ſooner lay aſide their mourning. Others buried them without any lamentation or mourning; but had a ſacrifice, and a feaſt for friends, upon that occaſion. Some were wont to mourn at births, and rejoice at burials. But the practice of ſome Indian nations is yet more ſtrange, of whom it is reported, that upon the huſband's deceaſe, his ſeveral wives were in uſe to contend before the judges, which of them was the beſt beloved wife; and ſhe, in whoſe favours it was determined, with a chearful countenance, threw herſelf into the flames prepared for her huſband's corpſe, was burned with it, and reckoned happy; while the reſt lived in grief, and were accounted miſerable. But howſoever lame notions of a future ſtate aſſiſted by pride, affectation of applauſe, apprehenſions of difficulties in this life, and ſuch like principles proper to depraved human nature, may influence rude uncultivated minds, when ſtrengthened by the arts of hell: O what ſolid joy and conſolation may they have, who are true Chriſtians, being in Chriſt, who hath brought life and immortality to light through the goſpel! 2 Tim. v. 10. Death is one of theſe all things, that work together for good, to them that love God, Rom. viii. 28. When the body dies, the ſoul is perfected: the body of death goes off, at the death of the body. What harm did the jailor to Pharaoh's butler, when he opened the priſon-door to him, and let him out? Is the bird in worſe caſe, when at liberty, than when confined in a cage? Thus, and no worſe, are the ſouls of the ſaints treated by death. It comes to the godly man, as Haman came to Mordecai, with the royal apparel and the horſe, Eſther iv. 11. with commiſſion to do them honour; howſoever aukwardly it be performed: I queſtion not but Haman performed the ceremony with a very ill mien, a pale face, a down look, and a cloudy countenance; and like one who came to hang him, rather than to honour him. But he, whom the king delighted to honour, behoved to be honoured; and Haman, Mordecai's grand enemy, muſt be the man employed to put this honour upon him. Glory, glory, glory, bleſſing and praiſe to our Redeemer, our Saviour, our Mediator, by whoſe death, grim devouring death is made to do ſuch a good office to thoſe, whom it might otherwiſe have hurried away in their wickedneſs, to utter and eternal deſtruction! A dying day is, in itſelf, a joyful day to the godly; it is their redemption-day; when the captives are delivered, when the priſoners are ſet free. It is the day of the pilgrims coming home from their pilgrimage; the day in which the heirs of glory return from their travels, to their own country, and their Father's houſe; and enter in actual poſſeſſion of the glorious inheritance. It is their marriage-day: now is the time of eſpouſals; but then the marriage is conſummate, and a marriage-feaſt begun, which has no period. If ſo, is not the ſtate of the godly in death, a hopeful ſtate?

Object. 'But if the ſtate of the godly in their death be 'ſo hopeful, how comes it to paſs that many of them, 'when dying are full of fears, and have little hope?' Anſw. It muſt be owned, that ſaints do not all die in one and the ſame manner: there is a diverſity among them, as well as among the wicked; yet the worſt caſe of a dying ſaint is indeed a hopeful one. Some die triumphantly, in a full aſſurance of faith. 2 Tim. iv. 6. The time of my departure is at hand. ver. 7. I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith. ver. 8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs. They get a taſte of the joys of heaven, while here on earth; and begin the ſongs of Zion, while yet in a ſtrange land. Others die in a ſolid fiducial dependence on their Lord and Saviour: tho' they cannot ſing triumphantly, yet they can and will ſay confidently, the Lord is their God. Though they cannot triumph over death, with old Simeon, having Chriſt in his arms, and ſaying, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word. For mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation, Luke ii. 29. 30. yet they can ſay with dying Jacob, I have waited for thy ſalvation, O Lord, Gen. xlix. 18. His left hand is under their head to ſupport them; though his right hand doth not embrace them: they firmly believe, though they are not filled with joy in believing. They can plead the covenant, and hang by the promiſe, although their houſe is not ſo with God, as they could wiſh. But the dying day of ſome ſaints may be like that day mentioned, Zech. xiv. 7. Not day, nor night. They may die under great doubts and fears; ſetting as it were, in a cloud, and going to heaven in a miſt. They may go mourning without the ſun, and never put off their ſpirit of heavineſs, till death ſtrip him of it. They may be carried to heaven through the confines of hell; and may be purſued by the devouring lion, even to the very gates of the New Jeruſalem; and may be compared to a ſhip almoſt wrecked in ſight of the harbour, which yet gets ſafe into her port, 1 Cor. iii. 15. If any man's work ſhall be burnt, he ſhall ſuffer loſs: but he himſelf ſhall be ſaved, yet ſo as by fire. There is ſafety amidſt their fears, but danger in the wicked's ſtrongeſt confidence; and there is a bleſſed ſeed of gladneſs in their greateſt ſorrows, Light is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart, Pſal. xcvii. 11.

Now, ſaints are liable to ſuch perplexity in their death, becauſe, though they be Chriſtians indeed, yet they are men of like paſſions with others; and death is a frightful object in itſelf, whatever dreſs it appear in: the ſtern countenance, with which it looks at mortals, can hardly miſs of cauſing them ſhrink. Moreover, the ſaints are of all men moſt jealous of themſelves. They think of eternity, and of a tribunal, more deeply than others do: with them, it is a more ſerious thing to die, than the reſt of mankind are aware of. They know the deceits of the heart, the ſubtilities of depraved human nature, better than others do. And therefore they may have much ado to keep up hope on a death-bed: while others paſs off quietly, like ſheep to the ſlaughter: the rather that Satan, who uſeth all his art to ſupport the hopes of the hypocrite, will do his utmoſt to mar the peace, and increaſe the fears of the ſaint. Finally, The bad frame of ſpirit, and ill condition, in which death ſometimes ſeizeth a true Chriſtian, may cauſe this perplexity. By his being in the ſtate of grace, he is indeed always habitually prepared for death, and his dying ſafely is inſured; but there is more requiſite to his actual preparation, and dying comfortably; his ſpirit muſt be in good condition too.

Wherefore there are three caſes, in which death cannot but be very uncomfortable to a child of God. (1.) If it ſeize him at a time when the guilt of ſome particular ſin unrepented of, is lying on his conſcience; and death comes on that very account, to take him out of the land of the living; as was the caſe with many of the Corinthian believers, 1 Cor. xi. 30. For this cauſe (namely, of unworthy communicating) many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep. If a perſon is ſurpriſed with the approach of death, while lying under the guilt of ſome unpardoned ſin, it cannot but cauſe a mighty conſternation. (2.) When death catches him napping. The midnight cry muſt be frightful to ſleeping virgins. The man who lies in a ruinous houſe, and awakens not till the timber begins to crack, and the ſtones to drop down about his ears, may indeed get out of it ſafely, but not without fears of being cruſhed by its fall. When a Chriſtian has being going on in a courſe of ſecurity and backſliding, and awakes not till death comes to his bedſide; it is no marvel if he get a fearful awakening. Laſtly, When he has loſt ſight of his ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, and cannot produce evidences of his title to heaven. It is hard to meet death without ſome evidence of a title to eternal life at hand: hard to go through the dark valley, without the candle of the Lord ſhining upon the head. It is a terrible adventure to launch out into eternity, when a man can make no better of it, than a leap in the dark, not knowing where he ſhall light, whether in heaven or hell.

Nevertheleſs the ſtate of the ſaints in their death, is always in itſelf hopeful. The preſumptuous hopes of the ungodly in their death, cannot make their ſtate hopeful; neither can the hopeleſſneſs of a ſaint make his ſtate hopeleſs: for God judgeth according to the truth of the thing, not according to mens opinions about it. Howbeit, the ſaints can no more be altogether without hope, than they can be altogether without faith. Their faith may be very weak, but it fails not; and their hope very low, yet they will, and do hope to the end. Even while the godly ſeem to be carried away with the ſtream of doubts and fears; there remains ſtill as much hope as determines them to lay hold on the tree of life, that grows on the banks of the river, Jonah ii. 4. Then I ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight: yet I will look again toward thy temple.

USE. This ſpeaks comfort to the godly againſt the fear of death. A godly man may be called a happy man before his death; becauſe, whatever befall him in life, he ſhall certainly be happy at death. You who are in Chriſt, who are true Chriſtians, have hope in your end; and ſuch a hope as may comfort you againſt all thoſe fears, which ariſe from the conſideration of a dying hour. This I ſhall branch out in anſwering ſome caſes briefly.

CASE I. The proſpect of death (will ſome of the ſaints ſay) is uneaſy to me, not knowing what ſhall become of my family, when I am gone. Anſw. The righteous hath hope in his death, as to his family, as well as himſelf. Although you have little, for the preſent, to live upon; which has been the caſe of many of God's choſen ones, 1 Cor. iv. 11. We (namely the apoſtles, ver. 9.) both hunger and thirſt, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place: and though you have nothing to leave them, as was the caſe of that ſon of the prophets who did fear the Lord, and yet died in debt, which he was unable to pay, as his poor widow repreſents, 2 Kings iv. 1; yet you have a good friend to leave them to; a covenanted God, to whom you may confidently commit them, Jer. xlix. 11. Leave thy fatherleſs children, I will preſerve them alive; and let thy widows truſt in me. The world can bear witneſs of ſignal ſettlements made upon the children of providence, ſuch as by their pious parents have been caſt upon God's providential care. It has been often remarked, that they wanted neither proviſion nor education. Moſes is an eminent inſtance of this. He, albeit he was an outcaſt infant (Exod. ii. 3.) yet was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians, Acts vii. 22. and became king in Jeſhurun, Deut. xxxiii. 5. O! may we not be aſhamed, that we do not ſecurely truſt him, with the concerns of our families, to whom, as our Saviour and Redeemer, we have committed our eternal intereſts?

CASE II. Death will take us away from our dear friends; yea, we ſhall not ſee the Lord in the land of the living, in the bleſſed ordinances. Anſw. It will take you to your beſt friend, the Lord Chriſt. And the friends you leave behind you, if they be indeed perſons of worth, you will meet again, when they come to heaven: and you will never be ſeparated any more. If death take you away from the temple below, it will carry you to the temple above. It will indeed take you from the ſtreams, but it will ſet you down by the fountain. If it put out your candle, it will carry you where there is no night, where there is an eternal day.

CASE III. I have ſo much ado in time of health, to ſatisfy myſelf as to my intereſt in Chriſt, about my being a real Chriſtian, a regenerate man; that I judge it is almoſt impoſſible I ſhould die comfortably. Anſw. If it is thus with you, then double your diligence, to make your calling and election ſure. Endeavour to grow in knowledge, and walk cloſely with God: be diligent in ſelf-examination; and pray earneſtly for the holy Spirit, whereby you may know the things freely given you of God. If you are enabled by the power and Spirit of Chriſt thus diligently to proſecute your ſpiritual concerns; though the time of your life be neither day nor night, yet at evening-time, it may be light. Many weak Chriſtians indulge doubts and fears about their ſpiritual ſtate, as if they placed at leaſt ſome part of religion in this imprudent practice: but towards the period of life, they are forced to think and act in another manner. The traveller, who reckons he has time to ſpare, may ſtand ſtill debating with himſelf, whether this or the other be the right way: but when the ſun begins to ſet, he is forced to lay aſide his ſcruples, and reſolutely to go forward in the road he judges to be the right one, leſt he ly all night in the open fields. Thus ſome Chriſtians, who perplex themſelves much, throughout the courſe of their lives, with jealous doubts and fears, content themſelves when they come to die, with ſuch evidences of the ſafety of their ſtate, as they could not be ſatisfied with before; and by diſputing leſs againſt themſelves, and believing more, court the peace they formerly rejected, and gain it too.

CASE IV. I am under a ſad decay in reſpect of my ſpiritual condition. Anſw. Bodily conſumptions may make death eaſy: but it is not ſo in ſpiritual decays. I will not ſay, that a godly man cannot be in ſuch a caſe when he dies, but I believe it is rarely ſo. Ordinarily (I ſuppoſe) a cry comes to awaken ſleeping virgins, before death come. Samſon is ſet to grind in the priſon, until his locks grow again. David and Solomon fell under great ſpiritual decays; but before they died, they recovered their ſtrength and vigour. However, beſtir ye yourſelves without delay, to ſtrengthen the things that remain: your fright will be the leſs, that ye awake from ſpiritual ſleep ere death come to your bed-ſide: and you ought to loſe no time, ſeeing you know not how ſoon death may ſeize you.

CASE V. It is terrible to think of the other world, that world of ſpirits, which I have ſo little acquaintance with. Anſw. Thy beſt friend is Lord of that other world. Abraham's boſom is kindly even to theſe who never ſaw his face. After death thy ſoul becomes capable of converſe with the bleſſed inhabitants of that other world. The ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, were once ſuch as thy ſpirit now is. And as for the angels, howſoever they be of a ſuperior nature in the rank of beings, yet our nature is dignified above theirs in the man Chriſt, and they are all of them, thy Lord's ſervants, and ſo thy fellow-ſervants.

CASE VI. The pangs of death are terrible. Anſw. Yet not ſo terrible as pangs of conſcience, cauſed by a piercing ſenſe of guilt, and apprehenſions of divine wrath, with which I ſuppoſe thee to be not altogether unacquainted. But who would not endure bodily ſickneſs, that the ſoul may become ſound, and every whit whole? Each pang of death will ſet ſin a ſtep nearer the door; and with the laſt breath, the body of ſin will breathe out its laſt. The pains of death will not laſte long; and the Lord thy God will not leave, but ſupport thee under them.

CASE VII. But I am like to be cut off in the midſt of my days. Anſw. Do not complain, you will be the ſooner at home: you thereby have the advantage of your fellow-labourers, who were at work before you, in the vineyard. God, in the courſe of his providence, hides ſome of his ſaints early in the grave, that they may be taken away from the evil to come. An early removal out of this world, prevents much ſin and miſery: and they have no ground of complaint, who get the reſidue of their years in Immanuel's land. Surely thou ſhalt live as long as thou haſt work cut out for thee, by thy great Maſter, to be done for him in this world: and when that is at an end, it is high time to be gone.

CASE VIII. I am afraid of ſudden death. Anyw. Thou mayeſt indeed die ſo. Good Eli died ſuddenly, 1 Sam. iv. 18. Yet death found him watching, ver. 13. Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour the Lord doth come, Matth. xxiv. 42. But be not afraid, it is an unexpreſſible comfort, that death, come when it will, can never catch thee out of Chriſt; and therefore can never ſeize thee, as a jailor, to hurry thee into the priſon of hell. Sudden death may haſten and facilitate thy paſſage to heaven, but can do thee no prejudice.

CASE IX. I am afraid it be my lot to die wanting the exerciſe of reaſon. Anſw. I make no queſtion but a child of God, a true Chriſtian, may die in this caſe. But what harm? There is no hazard in it, as to his eternal ſtate; a diſeaſe, at death, may diveſt him of his reaſon, but not of his religion. When a man, going a long voyage, has put his affairs in order, and put all his goods aboard; he himſelf may be carried aboard the ſhip ſleeping: all is ſafe with him, although he knows not where he is, till he awake in the ſhip. Even ſo the godly man, who dies in this caſe, may die uncomfortably, but not unſafely.

CASE laſt. I am naturally timorous, and the very thoughts of death are terrible to me. Anſw. The leſs you think on death, the thoughts of it will be the more frightful: but make it familiar to you by frequent meditations upon it, and you may thereby allay your fears. Lock at the white and bright ſide of the cloud: take faith's view of the city that hath foundations: ſo ſhall you ſee hope in your death. Be duly affected with the body of ſin and death, the frequent interruptions of your communion with God, and with the glory which dwells on the other ſide death: this will contribute much to remove ſlaviſh fear.

It is pity, ſaints ſhould be ſo fond of life as they often are: they ought always to be in good terms with death. When matters are duly conſidered, it might well be expected every child of God, every regenerate man, ſhould generouſly profeſs concerning this life, what Job did, chap. vii. 16. I lothe it, I would not live always. In order to gain their hearts to this deſirable temper, I offer the following additional conſiderations.

Firſt, Conſider the ſinfulneſs that attends life in this world. While ye live here, ye ſin, and ſee others ſinning. Ye breathe infectious air. Ye live in a peſt houſe. Is it at all ſtrange to lothe ſuch a life? (1.) Your own plague ſores are running on you. Doth not the ſin of your nature make you groan daily? Are you not ſenſible, that though the cure be begun, it is yet far from being perfected? Has not the leproſy got into the walls of the houſe, which cannot be removed without pulling it down? Is not your nature ſo vitiate, that no leſs than the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body can root out the diſeaſe? Have you not your ſores without, as well as your ſickneſs within? Do ye not leave marks of your pollution on whatſoever paſſes through your hands? Are not all your actions tainted and blemiſhed with defects and imperfections? Who elſe then ſhould be much in love with life, but ſuch whoſe ſickneſs is their health, and who glory in their ſhame? (2.) The loathſome ſores of others are always before your eyes, go where you will. The follies and wickedneſs of men are every where conſpicuous, and make but an unpleaſant ſcene. The ſinful world is but an unſightly company, a diſagreeable croud, in which the moſt loathſome are the moſt numerous. (3.) Are not your own ſores oft times breaking out again, after healing? Frequent relapſes may well cauſe us remit of our fondneſs for this life. To be ever ſtruggling, and anon falling into the mire again, makes weary work. Do ye never wiſh for cold death, thereby effectually to cool the heat of theſe luſts, which ſo often take fire again; even after a flood of godly ſorrow has gone over them? (4.) Do not ye ſometimes infect others, and others infect you? There is no ſociety in the world, in which every member of it doth not ſometimes lay a ſtumbling block before the reſt. The beſt carry about with them the tinder of a corrupt nature, which they cannot be rid of while they live, and which is liable to be kindled at all times, and in all places: yea, they are apt to inflame others, and become the occaſions of ſinning. Certainly theſe things are apt to imbitter this life to the ſaints.

Secondly. Conſider the miſery and trouble that attend it. Reſt is deſirable, but it is not to be found on this ſide of the grave Worldly troubles attend all men in this life. This world is a ſea of trouble, where one wave rolls upon another. They who fancy themſelves beyond the reach of trouble, are miſtaken: no ſtate, no ſtage of life is exempted from it. The crowned head is ſurrounded with thorny cares. Honour many times paves the way to deep diſgrace: riches for the moſt part, are kept to the hurt of the owners. The faireſt roſe wants not prickles, and the heavieſt croſs is ſometimes wrapt up in the greateſt earthly comfort. Spiritual troubles attend the ſaints in this life. They are like travellers travelling in a cloudy night, in which the moon ſometimes breaks out from under one cloud, but quickly hides her head again under another: no wonder they long to be at their journey's end. The ſudden alterations the beſt frame of ſpirit is liable to, the perplexing doubts, confounding fears, ſhort-lived joys, and long running ſorrows, which have a certain affinity with the preſent life, muſt needs create in the ſaints a deſire to be with Chriſt, which is beſt of all.

Laſtly, Conſider the great imperfections attending this life. While the ſoul is lodged in this cottage of clay, the neceſſities of the body are many; it is always craving. The mud-walls muſt be repaired and patched up daily, till the clay cottage fall down for good and all. Eating, drinking, ſleeping, and the like, are, in themſelves, but mean employments for a rational creature; and will be reputed ſuch by the heaven-born ſoul. They are badges of imperfection, and, as ſuch, unpleaſant to the mind, aſpiring unto that life and immortality, which is brought to light through the goſpel: and would be very grievous, if this ſtate of things were of long continuance. Doth not the gracious ſoul often find itſelf yoked with the body, as with a companion in travel, unable to keep pace with it? When the ſpirit is willing, the fleſh is weak. When the ſoul would mount upward, the body is as a clog upon it, and as a ſtone tied to the foot of a bird attempting to fly. The truth is, O believer! thy ſoul in this body is, at beſt, but like a diamond in a ring, where much of it is obſcured: it is far ſunk in the vile clay, till relieved by death.

I conclude this ſubject with a few directions how to prepare for death, ſo as we may die comfortably. I ſpeak not here of habitual preparation for death, which a true Chriſtian, in virtue of his gracious ſtate, never wants, from the time he is born again and united to Chriſt: but of actual preparation or readineſs, in reſpect of his circumſtantiate caſe, frame, and diſpoſition of mind and ſpirit; the want of which makes even a ſaint very unfit to die.

Firſt, Let it be your conſtant care to keep a clean conſcience, a conſcience void of offence toward God, and toward man, Acts xxiv. 16. Beware of a ſtanding controverſy betwixt God and you, on the account of ſome iniquity regarded in the heart. When an honeſt man is about to leave his country, and not to return, he ſettles accompts with thoſe he had dealings with, and lays down methods for paying his debts timeouſly; leſt he be reckoned a bankrupt, and be attacked by an officer, when he is going off. Guilt lying on the conſcience is a fountain of fears; and will readily ſting ſeverely, when death ſtares the criminal in the face. Hence it is, that many, even of God's children, when a-dying, are made to wiſh paſſionately, and deſire eagerly that they may live to do what they ought to have done, before that time. Wherefore, walk cloſely with God, be diligent, ſtrict and exact in your courſe; beware of a looſe, careleſs, and irregular converſation: as ye would not lay up for yourſelves anguiſh and bitterneſs of ſpirit, in a dying hour. And becauſe, through the infirmity cleaving to us, in our ſtate of imperfection, in many things we offend all, renew your repentance daily, and be ever waſhing in the Redeemer's blood. As long as ye are in the world, ye will need to waſh your feet, John xiii. 10. that is, to make application to the blood of Chriſt, anew, for purging your conſciences from the guilt of daily miſcarriages. Let death find you at the fountain; and if ſo, it will find you ready to anſwer its call.

Secondly, Be always watchful, waiting for your change. Like unto men that wait for their Lord, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately, Luke xxi. 36. Beware of ſlumbering and ſleeping, while the bridegroom tarries. To be awakened out of ſpiritual ſlumber, by a ſurprizing call to paſs into another world, is a very frightful thing: but he who is daily waiting for the coming of his Lord, ſhall comfortably receive the grim meſſenger, while he beholds him uſhering in him, of whom he may confidently ſay, This is my God: I have waited for him. The way to die comfortably, is to die daily. Be often eſſaying (as it were) to die. Bring yourſelves familiarly acquainted with death, by making many viſits to the grave, in ſerious meditations upon it. This was Job's practice, chap. xvii. 13. 14. I have made my bed in the darkneſs. Go thou, and do likewiſe; and when death comes, thou ſhalt have nothing ado but to ly down. 'I have ſaid 'to corruption, thou art my father; to the worm, thou 'art my mother and my ſiſter.' Do thou ſay ſo too; and thou wilt be the fitter to go home to their houſe. Be frequently reflecting upon your conduct, and conſidering what courſe of life you wiſh to be found in when death arreſts you: and act accordingly. When you do the duties of your ſtation in life, or are employed in acts of worſhip, think with yourſelves, that, it may be, this is the laſt opportunity; and therefore act as if you was never to do more of that kind. When you lie down at night, compoſe your ſpirits, as if you was not to awake, till the heavens be no more. And when you awake in the morning, conſider that new day as your laſt; and live accordingly. Surely that night cometh, of which you will never ſee the morning; and that morning, of which you will never ſee the night. But which of your mornings or nights will be ſuch, you know not.

Thirdly, Employ yourſelves much in weaning your hearts from the world. The man who is making ready to go abroad, buſies himſelf in taking leave of his friends. Let the mantle of earthly enjoyments hang looſe about you, that it may be eaſily dropt, when death comes to carry you away into another world. Moderate your affections towards your lawful comforts of life: and let not your hearts be too much taken with them. The traveller acts unwiſely, who ſuffers himſelf to be ſo allured with the conveniencies of the inn where he lodgeth, as to make his neceſſary departure from it grievous. Feed with fear, and walk through the world as pilgrims and ſtrangers. Likeas, when the corn is forſaking the ground, it is ready for the ſickle: when the fruit is ripe, it falls off the tree eaſily: ſo, when a Chriſtian's heart is truly weaned from the world, he is prepared for death, and it will be the more eaſy to him. A heart diſengaged from the world is an heavenly one: and then are we ready for heaven, when our heart is there before us, Matth. vi. 21.

Fourthly, Be diligent in gathering and laying up evidences of your title to heaven, for your ſupport and comfort at the hour of death. The neglect hereof mars the joy and conſolation which ſome Chriſtians might otherwiſe have at their death. Wherefore examine yourſelves frequently, as to your ſpiritual ſtate; that evidences, which lie hid and unobſerved, may be brought to light, and taken notice of. And if you would manage this work ſucceſsfully, make ſolemn ſerious work of it. Set apart ſome time for it. And after earneſt prayer to God, through Jeſus Chriſt, for the enlightning influences of the Holy Spirit, whereby ye may be enabled to underſtand his own word, to diſcern his own work in your ſouls; ſift yourſelves before the tribunal of your conſciences, that ye may judge yourſelves in this weighty matter.

And in the firſt place, Let the marks of a regenerate ſtate be fixed, from the Lord's word: and have recourſe to ſome particular text for that purpoſe: ſuch as Prov. viii. 17. ‘ I love them that love me.’ Compare Luke xiv. 26. ‘ If any man come to me, and hate not his ‘ father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren ‘ and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be ‘ my diſciple. Pſal. cxix. 6. Then ſhall I not be aſham‘ ed, when I have reſpect unto all thy commandments. ‘ Pſal. xviii. 23. I was alſo upright before him: and I ‘ kept myſelf from mine iniquity.’ Compare Rom. vii. 22. 23. ‘ For I delight in the law of God, after the in‘ ward man: but I ſee another law in my members ‘ warring againſt the law of my mind, &c. 1 John iii. ‘ 3. And every man that hath this hope in him, puri‘ fieth himſelf, even as he is pure, Matth. v. 3. Bleſſed ‘ are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of hea‘ ven. Phil. iii. 3. For we are the circumciſion which ‘ worſhip (or ſerve) God in the ſpirit, and rejoyce in ‘ Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.’ The ſum of the evidence ariſing from theſe texts, lies here. A real Chriſtian is one who loves God for himſelf as well as for his benefits; and that with a ſupreme love, above all perſons and all things; he has an awful and impartial regard to God's commands: he oppoſeth and wreſtleth againſt that ſin, which of all others, moſt eaſily beſets him; he approveth and loveth the holy law, even in that very point, wherein it ſtrikes againſt his moſt beloved luſt: his hope of heaven engageth him in the ſtudy of univerſal holineſs; in the which he aims at perfection, though he cannot reach it in this life: he ſerves the Lord not only in acts of worſhip, but in the whole of his converſation; and as to both, is ſpiritual in the principle, motives, aims, and ends of his ſervice: yet he ſees nothing in himſelf to truſt to, before the Lord: Chriſt and his fulneſs is the ſtay of his ſoul; and his confidence is cut off from all that is not Chriſt, or in Chriſt, in point of juſtification, or acceptance with God; and in point of ſanctification too. Every one in whom theſe characters are found, has a title to heaven, according to the word. It is convenient and profitable to mark ſuch texts for this ſpecial uſe, as they occur, while you read the ſcriptures, or hear ſermons. The marks of a regenerate ſtate thus fixed; in the next place, impartially ſearch and try your own hearts thereby, as in the ſight of God, with dependence on him for ſpiritual diſcerning, that ye may know whether they be in you or not. And when ye find them, form the concluſion deliberately and diſtinctly; namely, that therefore you are regenerate, and have a title to heaven. Thus you may gather evidences. But be ſure to have recourſe to God in Chriſt by earneſt prayer, for the teſtimony of the ſpirit, whoſe office is to bear witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God, Rom. viii. 16. Moreover, carefully obſerve the courſe and method of providence towards you: and likewiſe how your ſoul is affected under the ſame in the various ſteps thereof: compare both with ſcripture-doctrines, promiſes, threatnings, and examples: ſo ſhall ye perceive, if the Lord deals with you as he uſeth to do unto thoſe that love his name; and if you be going forth by the footſteps of the flock, this may afford you comfortable evidence. Walk tenderly and circumſpectly; and the Lord will manifeſt himſelf to you, according to his promiſe, John xiv. 21. He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifeſt myſelf to him. But it is in vain to think on ſucceſsful ſelf-examination, if ye be looſe and irregular in your converſation.

Laſtly, Diſpatch the work of your day and generation, with ſpeed and diligenee. David, after he had ſerved his own generation by the will of God, fell on ſleep. Acts xiii. 36. God has allotted us certain pieces of work of this kind, which ought to be diſpatched before the time of working be over. Eccleſ. ix. 10. ‘ Whatſoever thy ‘ hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there ‘ is no work, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave ‘ whither thou goeſt.’ Gal. vi. 10. ‘ As we have ‘ therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, ‘ eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith.’ If a paſſenger, after he is got on ſhipboard, and the ſhip is getting under ſail, remember that he has ommitted to diſpatch a piece of neceſſary buſineſs when he was aſhore, it muſt needs be uneaſy to him; even ſo, reflection in a dying hour, upon neglected ſeaſons, and loſt opportunities, cannot fail to diſquiet a Chriſtian. Wherefore whatever is incumbent upon thee to do for God's honour, and the good of others: either as the duty of thy ſtation, or by ſpecial opportunity put into thy hand, perform it ſeaſonably, if thou wouldſt die comfortably.

HEAD III.

The RESURRECTION.

JOHN v. 28. 29.

Marvel not at this : for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice, and ſhall come forth, they that have done good, unto the reſurrection of life ; and they that have done evil, unto the reſurrection of damnation.

THESE words are part of the defence our Lord Jeſus Chriſt makes for himſelf, when perſecuted by the Jews, for curing the impotent man, and ordering him to carry away his bed on the Sabbath ; and for vindicating his conduct, when accuſed by them of having thereby profaned that day. On this occaſion he profeſſeth himſelf not only Lord of the Sabbath, but alſo Lord of life and death ; declaring, in the words of the text, the reſurrection of the dead to be brought to paſs by his power. This he introduceth with theſe words, as with a ſolemn preface, Marvel not at this, i. e. at this ſtrange diſcourſe of mine : do not wonder to hear me, whoſe appearance is ſo very mean in your eyes, talk at this rate ; for the day is coming, in which the dead ſhall be raiſed by my power.

Obſerve in this text, (1.) The doctrine of the reſurrection aſſerted : All that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice, and ſhall come forth. The dead bodies, which are reduced to duſt, ſhall revive, and evidence life by hearing and moving. (2.) The author of it, Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of man, ver. 27. The dead ſhall hear his voice, and be raiſed thereby. (3.) The number that ſhall be raiſed, All that are in the graves, i. e. all the dead bodies of men, howſoever differently diſpoſed of, as it were, in different kinds of graves ; or all the dead, good and bad. They are not all buried in graves, properly ſo called : ſome are burnt to aſhes ; ſome drowned, and buried in the bellies of fiſhes ; yea, ſome devoured by maneaters, called cannibals : but, whereſoever the matter or ſubſtance of which the body was compoſed, is to be found, thence they ſhall come forth. (4.) The great diſtinction that ſhall be made betwixt the godly and the wicked. They ſhall indeed both riſe again in the reſurrection. None of the godly ſhall be miſſing ; though, perhaps, they either had no burial, or a very obſcure one : and all the wicked ſhall come forth ; their vaulted tombs ſhall hold them no longer than the voice is uttered. But the former ſhall have a joyful reſurrection to life, whilſt the latter have a dreadful reſurrection to damnation. Laſtly, The ſet time of this great event : there is an hour, or certain fixed period of time, appointed of God for it. We are not told when that hour will be, but that it is coming : for this, among other reaſons, that we may always be ready.

DOCTRINE.

There ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead.

In diſcourſing of this ſubject, I ſhall, firſt, ſhew the certainty of the reſurrection ; next, I ſhall enquire into the nature of it ; and, laſtly, make ſome practical improvement of the whole.

I. In ſhewing the certainty of the reſurrection, I ſhall evince (1.) That God can raiſe the dead. And, (2.) That he will do it ; which are the two grounds or topics laid down by Chriſt himſelf, when diſputing with the Sadducees, Matth. xxii. 29. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the ſcriptures nor the power of God.

Firſt, Seeing God is almighty, ſurely he can raiſe the dead. We have inſtances of this powerful work of God, both in the Old and New Teſtament. The ſon of the widow in Sarepta was raiſed from the dead, 1 Kings xvii. 22 ; the Shunamite's ſon, 2 Kings iv. 35 ; and the man caſt into the ſepulchre of Eliſha, chap. xiii. 21. In which we may obſerve a gradation, the ſecond of theſe miraculous events being more illuſtrious than the firſt, and the third than the ſecond. The firſt of theſe perſons was raiſed when he was but newly dead ; the prophet Elijah, who raiſed him, being preſent at his deceaſe. The ſecond, when he had lien dead a conſiderable time ; namely, while his mother travelled from Shunem to mount Carmel, (reckoned about the diſtance of ſixteen miles), and returned from thence to her houſe, with Eliſha who raiſed him. The laſt, not till they were burying him, and the corpſe was caſt into the prophet's grave. In like manner, in the New Teſtament, Jairus's daughter, (Mark v. 41.) and Dorcas, (Acts ix. 40.) were both raiſed to life, when lately dead ; the widow's ſon in Nain, when they were carrying him out to bury him, Luke vii. 11. 15 ; and Lazarus, when ſtinking in the grave, John xi. 39. 44.

Can men make curious glaſſes out of aſhes, reduce flowers into aſhes, and raiſe them again out of theſe aſhes, reſtoring them to their former beauty ; and cannot the great Creator, who made all things of nothing, raiſe man's body, after it is reduced into duſt ? If it be objected, 'How can mens bodies be raiſed up again, 'after they are reſolved into duſt, and the aſhes of many 'generations are mingled together ?' Scripture and reaſon furniſh the anſwer ; With men it is impoſſible, but not with God. It is abſurd for men to deny that God can do a thing, becauſe they ſee not how it may be done. How ſmall a portion do we know of his ways ! How abſolutely incapable are we of conceiving diſtinctly of the extent of almighty power, and much more of comprehending its actings, and the method of procedure ! I queſtion not, but many illiterate men are as great Infidels to many chymical experiments, as ſome learned men are to the doctrine of the reſurrection : and as theſe laſt are ready to deride the former, ſo the Lord will have them in deriſion. What a myſtery was it to the Indians, that the Europeans could, by a piece of paper, converſe together at the diſtance of ſome hundreds of miles ? And how much were they aſtoniſhed to ſee them, with their guns, produce as it were thunder and lightening in a moment, and at pleaſure kill men afar off ? Shall ſome men do ſuch things as are wonders in the eyes of others, becauſe they cannot comprehend them : and ſhall men confine the infinite power of God within the narrow boundaries of their own ſhallow capacities, in a matter noways contrary to reaſon ? An inferior nature has but a very imperfect conception of the power of a ſuperior. Brutes do not conceive of the actings of reaſon in men ; and men have but lame notions of the power of angels : how low and inadequate a conception then, muſt a finite nature have of the power of that which is infinite ! Though we cannot conceive how God acts, yet we ought to believe he can do above what we can think or conceive of.

Wherefore let the bodies of men be laid in the grave ; let them rot there, and be reſolved into the moſt minute particles : or let them be burnt, and the aſhes caſt into rivers, or thrown up into the air, to be ſcattered by the wind : let the duſt of a thouſand generations be mingled, and the ſteams of the dead bodies wander to and fro in the air : let birds or wild beaſts eat the dead bodies, or the fiſhes of the ſea devour them, ſo that the parts of human bodies, thus deſtroyed, paſs into ſubſtantial parts of birds, beaſts, or fiſhes: or, what is more than that, let man-eaters, who themſelves muſt die and riſe again, devour human bodies; and let others devour them again; and then let our modern Sadducees propoſe the queſtion in theſe caſes, as the ancient Sadducees did, in the caſe of the woman who had been married to ſeven huſbands ſucceſſively, Matth. xxii. 28. We anſwer, as our bleſſed Lord and Saviour did, ver. 29. Ye do err, not knowing the ſcriptures, nor the power of God. We believe God to be omniſcient and omnipotent; infinite in knowledge and in power: and hence, agreeable to the dictates of reaſon, we conclude the poſſibility of the reſurrection, even in the caſes ſuppoſed.

Material things may change their forms and ſhapes; may be reſolved into the principles of which they are formed: but they are not annihilated or reduced to nothing; nor can they be ſo by any created power. God is omniſcient, his underſtanding is infinite: therefore he knows all things whatſoever; what they were at any time, what they are, and where they are to be found. Though the country-man who comes into the apothecary's ſhop, cannot find out the drug he wants; yet the apothecary himſelf knows what he has in his ſhop, whence it came, and where it is to be found. And in a mingle of many different ſeeds, the expert gardiner can diſtinguiſh betwixt ſeed and ſeed. Why then may not omniſcience diſtinguiſh betwixt duſt and duſt? Can he who knows all things to perfection, be liable to any miſtake about his own creatures? Whoſo believes an infinite underſtanding, muſt needs own, that no maſs of duſt is ſo jumbled together, but God perfectly comprehends, and infallibly knows, how the moſt minute particle, and every one of them is to be matched. And therefore he knows where the particles of each dead body are; whether in the earth, ſea, or air; how confuſed ſoever they lie. And particularly, he knows where to find the primitive ſubſtance of the man-eater; howſoever evaporate or reduced, as it were, into air or vapour, by ſweat or perſpiration: and how to ſeparate the parts of the body that was eaten, from the body of the eater, howſoever incorporate or made one body with it: and ſo underſtands, not only how, but whence he is to bring back the primitive ſubſtance of the man-eater to its proper place; and alſo to ſeparate from the man-eater's body, that part of the devoured body which goes into its ſubſtance, and is indeed but a very ſmall part of it. It is certain the bodies of men, as of all other animals or living creatures, are in a continual flux: they grow and are ſuſtained by daily food; ſo ſmall a part whereof becomes nouriſhment, that the moſt part is evacuate. And it is reckoned that, at leaſt, as much of the food is evacuate inſenſibly by perſpiration, as is voided by other perceptible ways. Yea, the nouriſhing part of the food, when aſſimilate, and thereby become a part of the body, is evacuate by perſpiration through the pores of the ſkin, and again ſupplied by the uſe of the food: yet the body is ſtill reckoned one and the ſame body. Whence we may conclude, that it is not eſſential to the reſurrection of the body, that every particle of the matter, which at any time was part of a human body, ſhould be reſtored to it, when it is raiſed up from death to life. Were it ſo, the bodies of men would become of ſo huge a ſize, that they would bear no reſemblance of the perſons. It is ſufficient to denominate it the ſame body that died, when it is riſen again, if the body that is raiſed be formed in its former proportions of the ſame particles of matter, which at any time were its conſtituent parts, howſoever it be refined: likeas, we reckon it is the ſame body that was pined away by long ſickneſs, which becomes fat and fair again after recovery.

Now, to this infinite underſtanding join infinite power, whereby he is able to ſubdue all things unto himſelf; and this glorioully great work appears moſt reaſonable. If omniſcience diſcover every little particle of duſt, where it is, and how it is to be matched, cannot omnipotence bring them, and join them together in their order? Can the watch maker take up the ſeveral pieces of a watch, lying in a confuſed heap before him, and ſet each in its proper place; and cannot God put the human body into order after its diſſolution? Did he ſpeak this world into being, out of nothing; and can he not form man's body out of its pre-exiſtent matter? If he calleth thoſe things which be not, as though they were; ſurely he can call things that are diſſolved, to be as they were, before the compound was reſolved into its parts and principles. Wherefore, God can raiſe the dead. And why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God ſhould raiſe the dead? Acts xxvi. 8.

Secondly, God will do it. He not only can do it; but he certainly will do it, becauſe he has ſaid it. Our text is very full to this purpoſe, ‘ All that are in their graves ſhall hear his voice: and ſhall come forth; they that have done good, unto the reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the reſurrection of damnation.’ Theſe words relate to, and are an explanation of that part of Daniel's prophecy, Dan. xii. 2. ‘ And many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt.’ The which appears to have been calculate to confront the doctrine of the Sadducees which the Holy Ghoſt knew was to be at a great height in the Jewiſh church, under the perſecution of Antiochus. There are many other texts in the Old and New Teſtament, that might here be adduced; ſuch as Acts xxiv. 15. ‘ And have hope towards God, which they themſelves alſo allow, that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, both of the juſt and unjuſt.’ Job xix. 26. 27. ‘ And though after my ſkin worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God: whom I ſhall ſee for myſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold, and not another, though my reins be conſumed within me.’ But I need not multiply teſtimonies, in a matter ſo clearly and frequently taught in ſacred ſcripture. Our Lord and Saviour himſelf proves it againſt the Sadducees, in that remarkable text, Luke xx. 37. 38. ‘ Now that the dead are raiſed, even Moſes ſhewed at the buſh, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob; For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him.’ Theſe holy partriarchs were now dead: nevertheleſs, the Lord JEHOVAH is called their God, namely, in virtue of the covenant of grace, and in the ſenſe thereof; in which ſenſe, the phraſe comprehends all bleſſedneſs, as that, which by the covenant, is ſecured to them who are in it, Heb. xi. 16. ‘ God is not aſhamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city.’ He is not called the God of their ſouls only; but their God, the God of their perſons, ſouls, and bodies; the which, by virtue of his truth and faithfulneſs, muſt have its full effect: now it cannot have its full effect on the dead, who in as far as they are dead, are far from all bleſſedneſs; but on the living, who alone are capable of it: therefore, ſince God is ſtill called their God, they are living in reſpect of God, altho' their bodies are yet in the grave; for in reſpect of him, who by his power can reſtore them to life, and in his covenant has declared his will and purpoſe ſo to do, and whoſe promiſe cannot fail, they all are to be reckoned to live; and, conſiſtent with the covenant, their death is but a ſleep, out of which, in virtue of the ſame covenant, ſecuring all bleſſedneſs to their perſons, their whole man, they muſt and ſhall certainly be awakened. The Apoſtle Paul proves the reſurrection at large, 1 Cor. xv. and ſhews it to be a fundamental article; the denial whereof is ſubverſive of Chriſtianity, ver. 13. 14. ‘ If there be no reſurrection of the dead, then is Chriſt not riſen. And if Chriſt be not riſen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is alſo vain.’

To aſſiſt us in conceiving of it, the ſcripture gives us types of the reſurrection of the dead; as the dry bones living, Ezek. xxxvii. Jonah's coming out of the whale's belly, Mat. xii. 40. And nature affords us emblems and reſemblances of it, as the ſun's ſetting and riſing again; night and day, winter and ſummer, ſleeping and awaking; ſwallows in winter lying void of all appearance of life, in ruinous buildings and ſubterraneous caverns, and reviving again in the ſpring ſeaſon; the ſeeds dying under the clod, and thereafter ſpringing up again: all which, and the like, may juſtly be admitted, as deſigned by the God of nature, though not for proofs, yet for memorials of the reſurrection; whereof we have aſſurance from the ſcripture, 1 Cor. xv. 36. ‘Thou fool, that which thou ſoweſt is not quickened, except it die.’

II. I ſhall enquire into the nature of the reſurrection, ſhewing, 1ſt, Who ſhall be raiſed. 2dly, What ſhall be raiſed. 3dly, How the dead ſhall be raiſed.

Firſt, Who ſhall be raiſed, Our text tells us who they are; namely, All that are in the graves, i. e. all mankind who are dead. As for thoſe perſons, who ſhall be found alive at the ſecond coming of Chriſt; they ſhall not die, and ſoon thereafter be raiſed again: but ſuch a change ſhall ſuddenly paſs upon them, as ſhall be to them inſtead of dying and riſing again: ſo that their bodies ſhall become like to thoſe bodies which are raiſed out of the graves, 1 Cor. xv. 51. 52. ‘We ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed; In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.’ Hence theſe who are to be judged at the great day, are diſtinguiſhed into quick and dead, Acts x. 42. All the dead ſhall ariſe, whether godly or wicked, juſt or unjuſt (Acts xxiv. 15.) old or young; the whole race of mankind, even theſe who never ſaw the ſun, but died in their mother's belly, Rev. xx. 12. And I ſaw the dead ſmall and great ſtand before God. The ſea and earth ſhall give up their dead without reſerve; none ſhall be kept back.

Secondly, What ſhall be raiſed? The bodies of mankind. A man is ſaid to die when the ſoul is ſeparated from the body, and returns unto God who gave it, Eccleſ. xii. 7. But it is the body only which is laid in the grave, and can be properly ſaid to be raiſed: wherefore the reſurrection is, ſtrictly ſpeaking, competent to the body only. Moreover, it is the ſame body that dies, which ſhall riſe again. At the reſurrection, men ſhall not appear with other bodies for ſubſtance, than theſe which they now have, and which are laid down in the grave: but with the ſelf-ſame bodies, endowed with other qualities. The very notion of a reſurrection implies this; ſince nothing can be ſaid to riſe again, but that which falls. But to illuſtrate it a little, Firſt, it is plain from ſcripture-teſtimony. The Apoſtle tells, it is this mortal which muſt put on immortality, 1 Cor. xv. 53. and that Chriſt ſhall change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body, Philip. iii. 21. Death in ſcripture language, is a ſleep; and the reſurrection an awaking out of that ſleep, Job xiv. 12. which ſhews the body riſing up, to be the ſelf-ſame that died. Secondly, The equity of the divine procedure, both with reſpect to the godly and the wicked, evinces this. It is not reckoned equal among men, that one do the work, and another get the reward. Though the glorifying of the bodies of ſaints, is not, properly ſpeaking, and in a ſtrict ſenſe, the reward of their ſervices or ſufferings on earth: yet this is evident, that it is not at all agreeable to the manner of the divine diſpenſation, that one body ſerve him, and another be glorified: that one fight, and another receive the crown. How can it be imagined that the temples of the Holy Ghoſt (as theſe bodies of believers are termed, 1 Cor. vi. 19.) ſhould always ly in rubbiſh; and others be reared up in their ſtead; That theſe members of Chriſt (ver. 15.) ſhall periſh utterly, and other bodies come in their room? Nay, ſurely, as theſe bodies of the ſaints now bear a part in glorifying God, and ſome of them ſuffer in his cauſe; ſo they ſhall partake of the glory that is to be revealed. And theſe bodies of the wicked which are laid in the duſt, ſhall be raiſed again; that the ſame body which ſinned may ſuffer. Shall one body ſin here, and another ſuffer in hell for that ſin? Shall that body, which was the ſoul's companion in ſin, ly for ever hid in the duſt; and another body, which did not act any part in ſinning, be its companion in torment? No, no; it is that body, which now takes up all their thoughts to provide for its back and belly, that ſhall be raiſed up to ſuffer in hell. It is that tongue that is now the ſwearing, lying tongue, which will need water to cool it in eternal flames. Theſe ſame feet that now ſtand in the way of ſinners, and carry men in their ungodly courſes, ſhall ſtand in the burning lake. And theſe now covetous and laſcivious eyes ſhall take part in the fire and ſmoak of the pit.

Thirdly, How the dead ſhall be raiſed. The ſame Jeſus, who was crucified without the gates of Jeruſalem, ſhall, at the laſt day, to the conviction of all, be declared both Lord and Chriſt: appearing as Judge of the world, attended with his mighty angels, 2 Theſſ. i. 7. he ſhall deſcend from heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. The trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead ſhall be raiſed, and theſe who are alive changed; 1 Cor. xv. 52. Whether this ſhout, voice, and trumpet do denote ſome audible voice, or only the workings of divine power, for the raiſing of the dead, and other awful purpoſes of that day, (though the former ſeems probable) I will not poſitively determine. There is no queſtion but this coming of the Judge of the world will be in greater majeſty and terror than we can conceive: yet that awful grandeur, majeſty, and ſtate, which was diſplayed at the giving of the law, viz. thunders heard, lightnings and a thick cloud upon the mount ſeen, the Lord deſcending in fire, the whole mount quaking greatly, and the voice of the trumpet waxing louder and louder (Exod. xix. 16. 18. 19.) may help forward a becoming thought of it. However, the ſound of this trumpet ſhall be heard all the world over; it ſhall reach to the depths of the ſea, and the bowels of the earth. At this loud alarm, bones ſhall come together, bone to his bone: the ſcattered duſt of all the dead ſhall be gathered together, duſt to his duſt, neither ſhall one thruſt another, they ſhall walk every one in his path; and meeting together again, ſhall make up that very ſame body which crumbled into duſt in the grave. And at the ſame alarming voice, ſhall every ſoul come again into its own body never more to be ſeparated. The dead can ſtay no longer in their graves, but muſt bid an eternal farewell to their long homes; They hear his voice, and muſt come forth, and receive their final ſentence.

Now, as there is a great difference betwixt the godly and the wicked in their life, and in their death; ſo will there be alſo in their reſurrection.

The godly ſhall be raiſed up out of their graves, by virtue of the Spirit of Chriſt, the bleſſed bond of their union with him, Rom. viii. 11. He that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Jeſus Chriſt aroſe from the dead, as the firſt fruits of them that ſlept, 1 Cor. xv. 20. So they that are Chriſt's, ſhall follow at his coming, ver. 23. The myſtical Head having got above the waters of death, he cannot but bring forth the members after him in due time. They ſhall come forth with unexpreſſible joy; for then ſhall that paſſage of ſcripture, which, in its immediate ſcope, reſpected the Babyloniſh captivity, be fully accompliſhed in its extenſive ſpiritual view, Iſa. xxvi. 19. Awake and ſing, ye that dwell in the duſt. As a bride adorned for her huſband, goes forth of her bed-chamber unto the marriage: ſo ſhall the ſaints go forth of their graves, unto the marriage of the lamb. Joſeph had a joyful out going from the priſon, Daniel from the lions den, and Jonah from the whale's belly; yet thoſe are but faint repreſentations of the ſaints outgoing from the grave at the reſurrection. Then ſhall they ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, in higheſt ſtrains; death being quite ſwallowed up in victory. They had while in this life, ſometimes ſung by faith, the triumphant ſong over death and the grave, O death where is thy ſting? O grave where is thy victory? 1 Cor. xv. 55. But when they ſing the ſame from ſight and ſenſe; the black band of doubts and fears which frequently diſturbed them and diſquieted their minds, is for ever caſhiered.

May we not ſuppoſe the ſoul and body of every ſaint, as in mutual embraces, to rejoice in each other, and triumph in their happy meeting again? And may not one imagine the body to addreſs the ſoul thus? ‘O my ſoul, have we got together again after ſo long a ſeparation! art thou come back into thine old habitation, never more to remove! O joyful meeting! how unlike is our preſent ſtate to what our caſe was, when a ſeparation was made betwixt us at death! Now is our mourning turned into joy; the light and gladneſs, ſometimes ſown, are now ſprung up; and there is a perpetual ſpring in Immanuel's land. Bleſſed be the day in which I was united to thee; whoſe chief care was to get Chriſt in us the hope of glory, and to make me a temple for his holy Spirit. O bleſſed ſoul, which, in the time of our pilgrimage, kept thine eye on the land then afar off, but now near at hand! thou tookeſt me into ſecret places, and there madeſt me bow theſe knees before the Lord, that I might bear a part in our humiliations before him; and now is the due time, and I am lifted up. Thou didſt employ this tongue, in confeſſions, petitions, and thankſgivings: which henceforth ſhall be employed in praiſing for evermore. Thou madeſt theſe (ſometimes) weeping eyes, ſow that ſeed of tears, which is now ſprung up in joy that ſhall never end. I was happily beat down by thee and kept in ſubjection, while others pampered their fleſh, and made their bellies their gods to their own deſtruction: and now I glorioully ariſe to take my place in the manſions of glory, whilſt they are dragged out of their graves to be caſt into fiery flames. Now my ſoul, thou ſhalt complain no more of a ſick and pained body; thou ſhalt be no more clogged with weak and weary fleſh: I ſhall now hold pace with thee in the praiſes of our God for evermore.’ And may not the ſoul ſay? ‘O happy day in which I return to dwell in that bleſſed body, which was, and is, and will be for ever a member of Chriſt, a temple of the holy Spirit! Now ſhall I be eternally knit to thee: the ſilver cord ſhall never be looſed more: death ſhall never make another ſeparation betwixt us. Ariſe then, my body, and come away; and let theſe eyes which ſerved to weep over my ſins, behold now with joy the face of our glorious Redeemer; lo! this is our God, and we have waited for him. Let theſe ears which ſerved to hear the word of life in the temple below, come now and hear the hallelujahs in the temple above. Let theſe feet that carried me to the congregation of ſaints on earth, take their place now among theſe who ſtand by. And let that tongue which confeſſed Chriſt before men, and uſed to be ſtill dropping ſomething to his commendation, join the quire of the upper houſe, in his praiſes for evermore. Thou ſhalt faſt no more, but keep an everlaſting feaſt: thou ſhalt weep no more, neither ſhall thy countenance be overclouded; but thou ſhalt ſhine for ever, as a ſtar in the firmament. We took part together in the fight, come now, let us go together to receive and wear the crown.’

But on the other hand, the wicked ſhall be raiſed by the power of Chriſt, as a juſt Judge, who is to render vengeance to his enemies. The ſame divine power which ſhut up their ſouls in hell, and kept their bodies in a grave, as in a priſon, ſhall bring them forth, that ſoul and body together may receive the dreadful ſentence of eternal damnation, and be ſhut up together in the priſon of hell.

They ſhall come forth of their graves with unſpeakable horror and conſternation. They ſhall be dragged forth, as ſo many malefactors out of a dungeon, to be led to execution; crying to the mountains and to the rocks, to fall on them, and hide them from the face of the Lamb. Fearful was the cry in Egypt, that night the deſtroying angel went through, and ſlew their firſt-born. Dreadful were the ſhouts, at the earth's opening her mouth, and ſwallowing up Dathan and Abiram, and all that appertained to them. What hideous crying then muſt there be, when, at the ſound of the laſt trumpet, the earth and ſea ſhall open their mouths, and caſt forth all the wicked world, delivering them up to the dreadful Judge? How will they cry, roar, and tear themſelves! How will the jovial companions weep and howl, and curſe one another! How will the earth be filled with their doleful ſhrieks and lamentations, while they are pulled out like ſheep for the ſlaughter? They who, while they lived in the world, were profane debauchees, covetous worldings, or formal hypocrites, ſhall then, in anguiſh of mind, wring their hands, beat their breaſts, and bitterly lament their caſe, roaring forth their complaints, and calling themſelves beaſts, fools, and madmen, for having acted ſo mad a part in this life, and not having believed what they then ſee. They were driven away in their wickedneſs, at death: and now all their ſins riſe with them, and, like ſo many ſerpents, twiſt themſelves about their wretched ſouls, and bodies too; which now have a frightful meeting, after a long ſeparation.

Then we may ſuppoſe the miſerable body thus to accoſt the ſoul, ‘Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy, my worſt enemy, ſavage ſoul, more cruel than a thouſand tygers? Curſed be the day ever we met. O that I had remained a lifeleſs lump, rotted in the belly of my mother, and had never received ſenſe, life, nor motion! O that I had rather been the body of a toad or ſerpent, than thy body; for then had I lien ſtill, and had not ſeen this terrible day! If I behoved to be thine, O that I had been thy aſs, or one of thy dogs, rather than thy body; for then wouldeſt thou have taken more true care of me than thou didſt! O cruel kindneſs! haſt thou thus hugged me to death, thus nouriſhed me to the ſlaughter? Is this the effect of thy tenderneſs for me? Is this what I am to reap of thy pains and concern about me? What do riches and pleaſures avail now, when this fearful reckoning is come; of which thou hadſt fair warning? O cruel grave, why didſt thou not cloſe thy mouth upon me for ever? why didſt thou not hold faſt thy priſoner? why haſt thou ſhaken me out, while I lay ſtill and was at reſt? Curſed ſoul, wherefore didſt thou not abide in thy place, wrapt up in flames of fire? Wherefore art thou come back to take me alſo down to the bars of the pit? Thou madeſt me an inſtrument of unrighteouſneſs; and now I muſt be thrown into the fire. This tongue was by thee employed in mocking at religion, curſing, ſwearing, lying, backbiting, and boaſting; and withheld from glorifying God: and now it muſt not have ſo much as a drop of water to cool it in the flames. Thou didſt withdraw mine ears from hearing the ſermons, which gave warning of this day. Thou foundeſt ways and means to ſtop them from attending to ſeaſonable exhortations, admonitions, and reproofs. But why didſt thou not ſtop them from hearing the ſound of this dreadful trumpet? Why doſt thou not rove and fly away on the wings of imagination, thereby, as it were, tranſporting me during theſe frightful tranſactions; as thou waſt wont to do, when I was ſet down at ſermons, communions, prayers, and godly conferences: that I might now have as little ſenſe of the one, as I formerly had of the other? But ah! I muſt burn for ever, for thy love to thy luſts, thy profanity, thy ſenſuality, thy unbelief, and hypocriſy.’ But may not the ſoul anſwer? ‘Wretched and vile carcaſe, I am now driven back into thee. O that thou hadſt lien rotting for ever in thy grave! Had I not torment enough before? Muſt I be knit to thee again, that being joined together as two dry ſticks for the fire, the wrath of God may the more keenly burn us up? It was by caring for you I loſt myſelf. It was your back and your belly, and the gratifying of your ſenſes, which ruined me. How often was I enſnared by your ears? how often betrayed by your eyes? It was to ſpare you, that I neglected opportunities of making peace with God, loitered away Sabbaths, lived in the neglect of prayer; went to the houſe of mirth, rather than to the houſe of mourning; and that I chuſed to deny Chriſt, and forſake his cauſe and intereſts in the world; and ſo am fallen a ſacrifice to your curſed eaſe. When at any time my conſcience began to awake, and I was ſetting myſelf to think of my ſins, and the miſery I have felt ſince we parted, and now feel, it was you that diverted me from theſe thoughts, and drew me off to make proviſion for thee, O wretched fleſh! By your ſilken cords of fleſhly luſts, I was drawn to deſtruction, over the belly of my light and conſcience: but now they are turned into iron chains, with which I am to be held under wrath for evermore. Ah wretched profits! ah! curſed pleaſures! for which I muſt lie for ever in utter darkneſs!’ But no complaints will then avail. O that men were wiſe, that they underſtood this, that they would conſider their latter end!

As to the qualities with which the bodies of the ſaints ſhall be endowed at the reſurrection, the apoſtle tells us, they ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, glorions, powerful and ſpiritual, 1 Cor. xv. 42. 43. 44. ‘It is ſown in corruption, it is raiſed in incorruption: it is ſown in diſhonour, it is raiſed in glory: it is ſown in weakneſs, it is raiſed in power: it is ſown a natural body, it is raiſed a ſpiritual body.’

Firſt. The bodies of the ſaints ſhall be raiſed incorruptible. They are now as the bodies of others, a very maſs of corruption, full of the ſeeds of diſeaſes, and death; and when dead, become ſo nauſeous, even to their deareſt friends, that they muſt be buried out of their ſight, in a grave, there to rot and be conſumed: yea loathſome ſores and diſeaſes make ſome of them very unſightly, even while alive. But at the reſurrection, they leave all the ſeeds of corruption behind them in the grave; and riſe incorruptible, incapable of the leaſt indiſpoſition, ſickneſs, or ſore, and much more of dying, External violences and inward cauſes of pain ſhall for ever ceaſe: they ſhall feel it no more: yea they ſhall have an everlaſting youth and vigour, being no more ſubject to the decays which age produced in this life.

Secondly. They ſhall be glorious bodies; not only beautiful, comely, and well proportioned, but full of ſplendor and brightneſs. The moſt beautiful face, and beſt proportioned body that now appears in the world, is not to be named in compariſon with the body of the meaneſt ſaint at the reſurrection; for then ſhall the righteous ſhine forth as the ſun, Matth. xiii. 43. If there was a dazzling glory on Moſes's face, when he came down from the mount; and if Stephen's face was as it had been the face of an angel, when he ſtood before the council, how much more ſhall the faces of the ſaints be beautified and glorious, full of ſweet agreeable majeſty, when they have put off all corruption, and ſhine as the ſun? But obſerve, this beauty of the ſaints is not reſtricted to their faces, but diffuſes itſelf through their whole bodies; for the whole body is raiſed in glory, and ſhall be faſhioned like unto their Lord and Saviour's glorious body: in whoſe transfiguration not only did his face ſhine as the ſun, but alſo his raiment was white as the light, Matth. xvii. 2. Whatever defects or deformities the bodies of the ſaints had, when laid in the grave, occaſioned by accidents in life, or ariſing from ſecret cauſes of their formation in the womb, they ſhall riſe out of the grave free of all theſe. But ſuppoſe the marks of the Lord Jeſus, the ſcars or prints of the wounds and bruiſes ſome of the ſaints received while on earth, for his ſake, ſhould remain in their bodies after the reſurrection; likeas the print of the nails remained in Chriſt's body, after his reſurrection; theſe marks will rather be badges of diſtinction, and add to their glory, than detract from their beauty. But howſoever that be, ſurely Iſaac's eyes ſhall not be dim, nor will Jacob halt; Leah ſhall not be tender-eyed, nor Mephiboſheth lame of his legs. For as the goldſmith melts down the old crazy veſſel, and caſts it over again into a new mold, bringing it forth with a new luſtre; ſo ſhall the vile body, which lay diſſolved in the grave, come forth at the reſurrection in perfect beauty and comely proportion.

Thirdly, They ſhall be powerful and ſtrong bodies. The ſtrongeſt men on earth being frail and mortal, may juſtly be reckoned weak and feeble; in regard their ſtrength, howſoever great, is quickly worn out and conſumed. Many of the ſaints now have bodies weaker than others; but the feeble among them (to allude to Zech. xii. 8.) at that day ſhall be as David, and the houſe of David ſhall be as God. A grave divine ſays, that one ſhall be ſtronger at the reſurrection than an hundred, yea, than thouſands are now. Certainly great, and vaſtly great muſt the ſtrength of glorified bodies be; ſeeing they ſhall bear up an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. The mortal body is not at all adapted to ſuch a ſtate. Do tranſports of joy occaſion death, as well as exceſſive grief does? And can it bear up under a weight of glory? Can it ſubſiſt in union with a ſoul filled with heaven's raptures? Surely no. The mortal body would ſink under that load, and ſuch a fill would make the earthen pitcher to fly in pieces. The ſcripture has plainly told us, that fleſh and blood (namely,) in their preſent frail ſtate, though it were the fleſh and blood of a giant, cannot inherit the kingdom of God 1 Cor. xv. 50. How ſtrong muſt the bodily eyes be, which, to the ſoul's eternal comfort, ſhall behold the dazzling glory and ſplendor of the new Jeruſalem; and ſtedfaſtly look at the tranſcendent glory and brightneſs of the man Chriſt, the Lamb who is the light of that city, the inhabitants whereof ſhall ſhine as the ſun? The Lord of heaven doth now, in mercy, hold back the face of his throne, and ſpreadeth his cloud upon it; that mortals may not be confounded with the rays of glory, which ſhine forth from it, Job xxvi. 9. But then the vail ſhall be removed, and they made able to behold it, to their unſpeakable joy. How ſtrong muſt their bodies be, who ſhall not reſt night nor day; but be without intermiſſion for ever employed in the heavenly temple, to ſing and proclaim the praiſes of God without wearineſs, which is a weakneſs incident to the frail mortal, but incompetent to the glorified body!

Laſtly, They ſhall be ſpiritual bodies. Not that they ſhall be changed into ſpirits, but they ſhall be ſpiritual, in reſpect of their ſpirit-like qualities and endowments. The body ſhall be abſolutely ſubſervient to the ſoul, ſubject to it, and influenced by it; and therefore no more a clog to its activity, nor the animal appetites a ſnare to it. There will be no need to beat it down, nor to drag it to the ſervice of God. The ſoul, in this life, is ſo much influenced by the body, that in ſcripture-ſtile it is ſaid to be carnal; but then the body ſhall be ſpiritual, readily ſerving the ſoul in the buſineſs of heaven, and in that only, as if it had no more relation to earth, than a ſpirit. It will have no further need of the now neceſſary ſupports of life, namely, food and raiment, and the like. They ſhall hunger no more, neither thirſt any more, Rev. vii. 16. For in the reſurrection, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven. Then ſhall the ſaints be ſtrong, without meat or drink, warm without clothes, ever in perfect health without medicine, and ever freſh and vigorous, though they ſhall never ſleep, but ſerve him night and day in his temple, Rev. vii. 15. They will need none of theſe things, more than ſpirits do. They will be nimble and active as ſpirits, and of a moſt refined conſtitution. The body, that is now lumpiſh and heavy, ſhall then be moſt ſprightly. No ſuch thing as melancholy ſhall be found to make the heart heavy, and the ſpirits flag and ſink.

Where the carcaſe is, there ſhall the ſaints, as ſo many eagles, be gathered together. I ſhall not further dip into this matter: The day will declare it.

As to the qualities of the bodies of the wicked, at the reſurrection, I find the ſcripture ſpeaks but little of them. Whatever they may need, they ſhall not get a drop of water to cool their tongues, Luke xvi. 24. 25. Whatever may be ſaid of their weakneſs, it is certain they will be continued for ever in life, that they may be ever dying: they ſhall bear up, howſoever unwillingly, under the load of God's wrath, and ſhall not faint away under it. The ſmoke of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever. And they have no reſt day nor night. Surely they ſhall not partake of the glory and beauty of the ſaints. All their glory dies with them, and ſhall never riſe again. Daniel tells us, they ſhall awake to ſhame, and everlaſting contempt, chap. xii. 2. Shame follows ſin, as the ſhadow followeth the body: but the wicked in this world walk in the dark, and often under a diſguiſe: nevertheleſs, when the Judge comes in flaming fire, at the laſt day, they will be brought to the light; their maſk will be taken off, and the ſhame of their nakedneſs will clearly appear to themſelves and others, and fill their faces with confuſion. Their ſhame will be too deep for bluſhes: but all faces ſhall gather blackneſs, at that day, when they ſhall go forth of their graves, as malefactors out of their priſons to execution: for their reſurrection is the reſurrection of damnation. The greateſt beauties, who now pride themſelves in their comelineſs of body, not regarding their deformed ſouls, will then appear with a ghaſtly countenance, a grim and death-like viſage. Their looks will be frightful, and they will be horrible ſpectacles, coming forth of their graves, like infernal furies out of the pit. They ſhall riſe alſo to everlaſting contempt. They ſhall then be the moſt contemptible creatures, filled with contempt from God, as veſſels of diſhonour, whatever honourable uſes they have been employed to in this world; and filled alſo with contempt from men. They will be moſt deſpicable in the eyes of the ſaints, even of thoſe ſaints who gave them honour here, either for their high ſtation, the gifts of God in them, or becauſe they were of the ſame human nature with themſelves. But then ſhall their bodies be as ſo many loathſome carcaſes, which they ſhall go forth and look upon with abhorrence: yea, they ſhall be an abhorring unto all fleſh, Iſ. lxvi. 24. The word here rendered an abhorring, is the ſame which in the other text is rendered contempt; and Iſaiah and Daniel point at one and the ſame thing, namely, the loathſomeneſs of the wicked at the reſurrection. They will be loathſome in the eyes of one another. The unclean wretches were never ſo lovely to each other, as then they will be loathſome: dear companions in ſin will then be an abhorring, each one to his fellow; and the wicked, great, and honourable men, ſhall be no more regarded by their wicked ſubjects, their ſervants, their ſlaves, than the mire in the ſtreets.

Uſe I. Of comfort to the people of God. The doctrine of the reſurrection is a ſpring of conſolation and joy unto you. Think on it, O believers, when ye are in the houſe of mourning, for the loſs of your godly relations or friends, That ye ſorrow not, even as others which have no hope; for ye will meet again, 1 Theſſ. iv. 13. 14. They are but lain down to reſt in their beds for a little while (Iſ. lvii. 2.); but in the morning of the reſurrection they will awake again, and come forth of their graves. The veſſel of honour was but coarſe, it had much alloy of baſe metal in it; it was too weak, too dim and inglorious, for the upper-houſe, whatever luſtre it had in the lower one. It was cracked, it was polluted; and therefore it behoved to be melted down, that it may be refined, and faſhioned more gloriouſly. Do but wait a while, and you ſhall ſee it come forth out of the furnace of earth, vying with the ſtars in brightneſs; nay, as the ſun when he goeth forth in his might. Have you laid your infant children in the grave? You will ſee them again. Your God calls himſelf the God of your ſeed; which, according to our Saviour's expoſition, ſecures the glorious reſurrection of the body. Wherefore let the covenant you embraced, for yourſelf, and your babes now in the duſt, comfort your heart, in the joyful expectation, that, by virtue thereof, they ſhall be raiſed up in glory; and that as being no more infants of days, but brought to a full and perfect ſtature, as is generally ſuppoſed. Be not diſcouraged by reaſon of a weak and ſickly body; there is a day coming, when thou ſhalt be every whit whole. At the reſurrection, Timothy ſhall be no more liable to his often infirmities; his body, that was weak and ſickly, even in youth, ſhall be raiſed in power: Lazarus ſhall be heal and ſound, his body being raiſed incorruptible. And although, perhaps, thy weakneſs will not allow thee, now, to go one furlong to meet the Lord in public ordinances: yet the day cometh, when thy body ſhall be no more a clog to thee, but thou ſhalt meet the Lord in the air, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. It will be with the ſaints coming up from the grave, as with the Iſraelites when they came out of Egypt, Pſal. cv. 37. There was not one feeble perſon among their tribes. Haſt thou an uncomely or deformed body? There is a glory within, which will then ſet all right without, according to all the deſire of thine heart. It ſhall riſe a glorious, beautiful, handſome, and well-proportioned body. Its uncomelineſs, or deformities, may go with it to the grave, but they ſhall not come back with it. O that theſe, who are now ſo deſirous to be beautiful and handſome, would not be too haſty to affect it with their fooliſh and ſinful arts, but wait and ſtudy the heavenly art of beautifying the body, by endeavouring now to become all glorious within, with the graces of God's Spirit! This would at length make them admirable and everlaſting beauties. Thou muſt indeed, O believer, grapple with death, and ſhalt get the firſt fall: but thou ſhalt riſe again, and come off victorious at laſt. Thou muſt go down to the grave; but, though it be thy long home, it will not be thine everlaſting home. Thou will not hear the voice of thy friends there; but thou ſhalt hear the voice of Chriſt there. Thou mayſt be carried thither with mourning, but ſhalt come up from it rejoicing. Thy friends indeed will leave thee there, but thy God will not. What God ſaid to Jacob, concerning his going down to Egypt, (Gen. xlvi. 3. 4.) he ſays to thee, anent thy going down to the grave, Fear not to go down---I will go down with thee, and I will alſo ſurely bring thee up again. O ſolid comfort! O glorious hopes! Wherefore, comfort yourſelves, and one another with theſe words, 1 Theſſ. iv. 18.

Uſe II. Of terror to all unregenerate men. Ye who are yet in your natural ſtate, look at this piece of the eternal ſtate; and conſider what will be your part in it, if ye be not in time brought into the ſtate of grace. Think, O ſinner, on that day, when the trumpet ſhall ſound, at the voice of which, the bars of the pit ſhall be broken aſunder, the doors of the grave ſhall fly open, the devouring depths of the ſea ſhall throw up their dead, the earth caſt forth hers; and death every where, in the exceſs of aſtoniſhment, ſhall let go its priſoners; and thy wretched ſoul and body ſhall be re-united, to be ſifted before the tribunal of God. Then if thou hadſt a thouſand worlds at thy diſpoſal, thou wouldſt gladly give them all away, upon condition thou mighteſt ly ſtill in thy grave, with the hundredth part of that eaſe, wherewith thou haſt ſometimes lain at home, on the Lord's day: or (if that cannot be obtained) that thou mighteſt be but a ſpectator of the tranſactions of that day: as thou haſt been at ſome ſolemn occaſions, and rich goſpel feaſts: or (if even that is not to be purchaſed) that a mountain or a rock might fall on thee, and cover thee from the face of the Lamb. Ah! how are men bewitched, thus to trifle away the precious time of life, in (almoſt) as little concern about death, as if they were like the beaſts that periſh! ſome will be telling where their corpſe muſt be laid; while yet they have not ſeriouſly conſidered, whether their graves ſhall be their beds, where they ſhall awake with joy in the morning of the reſurrection ; or their priſons, out of which they ſhall be brought to receive the fearful ſentence. Remember, now is your ſeed-time ; and as ye ſow, ye ſhall reap. God's ſeed-time begins at death ; and at the reſurrection, the bodies of the wicked, that were ſown full of ſins, that ly down with them in the duſt (Job xx. 11.) ſhall ſpring up again, ſinful, wretched, and vile. Your bodies, which are now inſtruments of ſin, the Lord will lay aſide for the fire, at death ; and bring them forth for the fire, at the reſurrection. That body, which is not now employed in God's ſervice, but is abuſed by uncleanneſs and laſciviouſneſs, will then be brought forth in all its vileneſs, thenceforth to lodge with unclean ſpirits. The body of the drunkard ſhall then ſtagger by reaſon of the wine of the wrath of God, poured out to him, and poured into him, without mixture. Theſe who now pleaſe themſelves in their revellings, will reel to and fro at another rate ; when inſtead of their ſongs and muſick, they ſhall hear the ſound of the laſt trumpet. Many toil their bodies for worldly gain, who will be loth to diſtreſs them for the benefit of their ſouls ; by labour, unreaſonably hard, they will quite diſfit them for the ſervice of God : and, when they have done, will reckon it a very good reaſon for ſhifting duty, that they are already tired out with other buſineſs : but the day cometh when they will be made to abide a yet greater ſtreſs. They will go ſeveral miles for back and belly, who will not go half the way for the good of their immortal ſouls ! they will be ſickly and unable on the Lord's day, who will be tolerably well all the reſt of the week. But when that trumpet ſounds, the dead ſhall find their feet, and none ſhall be miſſing in that great congregation. When the bodies of the ſaints ſhine as the ſun, frightful will the looks of their perſecutors be. Fearful will their condition be, who ſometimes ſhut up the ſaints in naſty priſons, ſtigmatized, burned them to aſhes, hanged them, and ſtuck up their heads and hands in publick places, to fright others from the ways of righteouſneſs, which they ſuffered for. Many faces now fair, will then gather blackneſs. They ſhall be no more admired and careſsed for that beauty, which has a worm at the root, that will cauſe it to iſſue in loathſomeneſs and deformity. Ah ! what is that beauty, under which there lurks a monſtrous deformed, and graceleſs heart ? What but a ſorry paint, a ſlight varniſh : which will leave the body ſo much the more ugly, before that flaming-fire, in which the Judge ſhall be revealed from heaven, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the goſpel, 2 Theſſ. i. 7. 8. They ſhall be ſtript of all their ornaments, and not have a rag to cover their nakedneſs : but their carcaſſes ſhall be abhorring to all fleſh, and ſerve as a foil to ſet off the beauty and glory of the righteous, and make it appear the brighter.

Now is the time to ſecure for yourſelves, a part in the reſurrection of the juſt. The which if ye would do, unite with Jeſus Chriſt by faith, riſing ſpiritually from ſin, and glorifying God with your bodies. He is the reſurrection and the life, John xi. 25. If your bodies be members of Chriſt, temples of the Holy Ghoſt ; they ſhall certainly ariſe in glory. Get into this ark now, and ye ſhall come forth with joy into the new world. Riſe from your ſins : caſt away theſe grave-clothes, putting off your former luſts. How can one imagine, that theſe, who continue dead while they live, ſhall come forth, at the laſt day, unto the reſurrection of life ? But that will be the privilege of all thoſe, who having firſt conſecrated their ſouls and bodies to the Lord by faith, do glorify him with their bodies, as well as their ſouls : living and acting to him, and for him ; yea, and ſuffering for him too, when he calls them to it.

HEAD IV.

The General JUDGMENT.

MATTH. xxv. 31. 32. 33. 34. 41. 46.

When the Son of man ſhall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then ſhall he ſit upon the throne of his glory. And before him ſhall be gathered all nations ; and he ſhall ſeparate them one from another, as a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats : and he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then ſhall the King ſay unto them on his right hand, Come, ye bleſſed, &c. Unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye curſed, &c. And theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment : but the righteous into life eternal.

THE dead being raiſed, and theſe found alive at the coming of the Judge, changed, follows the general judgment, plainly and awfully deſcribed in this portion of ſcripture ; in which we ſhall take notice of the following particulars. (1.) The coming of the Judge. When the Son of man ſhall come in his glory, &c. The Judge is Jeſus Chriſt the Son of man : the ſame, by whoſe almighty power, as he is God, the dead will be raiſed. He is alſo called the King, ver. 34. The judging of the world being an act of the Royal Mediator's kingly office. He will come in glory ; glorious in his own Perſon, and having a glorious retinue, even all the holy angels with him, to miniſter unto him at this great ſolemnity. (2.) The Judge's mounting the tribunal. He is a King, and therefore it is a throne, a glorious throne, He ſhall ſit upon the throne of his glory, ver. 31. (3.) The compearance of the parties. Theſe are all nations ; all and every one, ſmall and great, of whatſoever nation, who ever were, are, or ſhall be on the face of the earth ; all ſhall be gathered before him ; ſiſted before his tribunal. (4.) The ſorting of them. He ſhall ſeparate the elect ſheep and reprobate goats, ſetting each party by themſelves : as a ſhepherd who feeds his ſheep and goats together all the day, ſeparates them at night, ver. 32. The godly he will ſet on his right hand, as the moſt honourable place ; the wicked on the left, ver. 33. Yet ſo as they ſhall be both before him, ver. 32. It ſeems to be an alluſion to a cuſtom in the Jewiſh courts, in which, one ſat at the right hand of the Judge, who wrote the ſentence of abſolution ; another at their left, who wrote the ſentence of condemnation. (5.) The ſentencing of the parties, and that according to their works ; the righteous being abſolved, and the wicked condemned, ver. 34. 41. Laſtly, the execution of both ſentences, in the driving away of the wicked into hell, and carrying the godly to heaven, ver. 49.

DOCTRINE.

There ſhall be a general Judgment.

This doctrine I ſhall, (1.) confirm, (2.) explain, and (3.) apply.

I. For confirmation of this great truth, that there ſhall be a general judgment.

Firſt, It is evident from plain ſcripture-teſtimonies.

The world has in all ages been told of it. Enoch before the flood, taught it in his prophecy, related Jude ver. 14. 15. ‘ Behold the Lord cometh with ten thouſand of ‘ his ſaints, to execute judgment upon all, ’&c. Daniel deſcribes it, chap. vii. 9 10. ‘ I beheld till the thrones were caſt down, and the Ancient of days did ſit, whoſe garment was white as ſnow, and the hair of his head like pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery ſtream iſſued and came from before him; thouſand thouſands miniſtered unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him; the judgment was ſet, and the books were opened.’ The Apoſtle is very expreſs. Acts xvii. 31. ‘ He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs by that man whom he hath ordained.’ See Matth xvi. 27. 2 Cor. v. 10. 2. Theſſ. i. 7. 8. 9. 10. Rev xx. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. God has not only ſaid it, but he has ſworn it, Rom. xiv. 10. 11. ‘ We muſt all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt. For it is written, As I live, ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow to me, and every tongue ſhall confeſs to God.’ So that the truth of God is moſt ſolemnly plighted for it.

Secondly, The rectoral juſtice and goodneſs of God, the ſovereign Ruler of the world, do neceſſarily require it, in as much as they require its being well with the righteous, and ill with the wicked. Howbeit, we often now ſee wickedneſs exalted, while truth and righteouſneſs fall in the ſtreets; piety oppreſſed, while profanity and irreligion do triumph. This is ſo very ordinary, that every one, who ſincerely embraceth the way of holineſs, muſt, and doth lay his account with the loſs of all he has, which the world can take away from him. Luke xiv. 26. ‘ If any man come to me, and hate not his ‘ father, and mother, and wife, and children, and bre- ‘ thren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot ‘ be my diſciple.’ But it is inconſiſtent with the juſtice and goodneſs of God, that the affairs of men ſhould always continue in this ſtate, which they appear in, from one generation to another; but that every man be rewarded according to his work: and ſince that is not done in this life, there muſt be a judgment to come; ‘ See- ‘ ing it is a righteous thing with God to recompenſe ‘ tribulation to them that trouble you: and to you who ‘ are troubled, reſt with us, when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be ‘ revealed from heaven.’ 2 Theſſ. i. 6. 7. There will be a day, in which the tables will be turned; and the wicked ſhall be called to an account for all their ſins, and ſuffer the due puniſhment of them; and the pious ſhall be the proſperous; for, as the Apoſtle argues for the happy reſurrection of the ſaints, ‘ If in this life only ‘ we have hope in Chriſt, we are of all men moſt miſer- ‘ able.’ 1. Cor. xv. 19. It is true, God ſometimes puniſheth the wicked, in this life; that men may know, he is a God that judgeth in the earth: but yet much wickedneſs remains unpuniſhed, and undiſcovered; to be a pledge of the judgment to come. If none of the wicked were puniſhed here, they would conclude that God had utterly forſaken the earth: if all of them were puniſhed in this life, men would be apt to think, there is no after reckoning. Therefore, in the wiſdom of God, ſome are puniſhed now and ſome not. Sometimes the Lord ſmites ſinners, in the very act of ſin: to ſhew unto the world, that he is witneſs to all their wickedneſs, and will call them to an account for it. Sometimes he delays long, ere he ſtrike; that he may diſcover to the world, that he forgets not mens ill deeds, though he does not preſently puniſh them. Beſides all this, the ſins of many do outlive them; and the impure fountain, by them opened, runs long after they are dead and gone. As in the caſe of Jeroboam the firſt king of the ten tribes, whoſe ſin did run on all along unto the end of that unhappy kingdom, 2 Kings xvii. 22. ‘ The children of ‘ Iſrael walked in all the ſins of Jeroboam, which ‘ he did; they departed not from them, ver. 23. ‘ Until the Lord removed Iſrael out of his ſight.’

Thirdly, The reſurrection of Chriſt is a certain proof, that there ſhall be a day of Judgment. This argument Paul uſeth to convince the Athenians, that Jeſus Chriſt will be the Judge of the world; Whereof, ſays he, he hath given aſſurance to all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead, Acts xvii. 31. The Judge is already named, his patent written and ſealed, yea and read before all men, in his riſing again from the dead. Hereby God has given aſſurance of it, (or offered faith, Marg.) He hath, by raiſing Chriſt from the dead, exhibited his credentials as the Judge of the world. When, in the days of his humiliation, he was ſiſted before a tribunal, arraigned, accuſed, and condemned of men; he plainly told them of his judgment, and that he himſelf would be the Judge, Matth, xxvi. 64. ‘ Hereafter ſhall ye ſee the ‘ Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and ‘ coming in the clouds of heaven.’ And now that he was raiſed from the dead, though condemned as a blaſphemer on this very head; is it not an undeniable proof from heaven, of the truth of what he aſſerted? Moreover this was one of the great ends of Chriſt's death and reſurrection. For to this end Chriſt died and roſe, and revived, that he might be the Lord (i. e. The Lord Judge, as is evident from the context) both of the dead and of the living, Rom. xiv. 9.

Laſtly, Every man bears about with him a witneſs to this, within his own breaſt. Rom. ii. 15. Which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another. There is a tribunal erected within every man, where conſcience is accuſer, witneſs, and judge, binding over the ſinner to the judgment of God. This fills the moſt profligate wretches with horror, and inwardly ſtings them, on the commiſſion of ſome atrocious crime; in effect ſummoning them to anſwer for it, before the judge of the quick and dead. And this it doth, even when the crime is ſecret, and hid from the eyes of the world. It reacheth thoſe, whom the laws of men cannot reach, becauſe of their power or craft. When men have fled from the judgment of their fellow-creatures; yet, go where they will, conſcience, as the ſupreme Judge's officer, ſtill keeps hold of them, reſerving them in its chains to the judgment of the great day. And whether they eſcape puniſhment from men, or fall by the hand of public juſtice, when they perceive death's approach, they hear from within, of this after-reckoning; being conſtrained to hearken thereto, in theſe the moſt ſerious minutes of their life. If there be ſome, in whom nothing of this doth appear, we have no more ground thence to conclude againſt it, than we have to conclude, that becauſe ſome men do not groan, therefore they have no pain; or that dying is a mere jeſt, becauſe there have been, who ſeemed to make little elſe of it. A good face may be put upon an ill conſcience: and the more hopeleſs mens caſe is, they reckon it the more their intereſt, to make no reflections on their ſtate and caſe. But every one, who will conſult himſelf ſeriouſly, ſhall find in himſelf the witneſs to the judgment to come. Even the Heathens wanted not a notion of it, though mixed with fictions of their own. Hence, though ſome of the Athenians, when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead, mocked, Acts xvii. 32; yet there is no account of their mocking, when they heard of the general judgment, ver. 31.

II. For explication, the following particulars may ſerve to give ſome view of the nature and tranſactions of that great day.

I. God ſhall judge the world by Jeſus Chriſt. He will judge the world in righteouſneſs by that man, whom he hath ordained, Acts xvii. 31. The pſalmiſt tells us, that God is Judge himſelf, Pſal. l. 6. The holy bleſſed Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt is Judge, in reſpect of judiciary authority, dominion, and power: but the Son incarnate is the Judge, in reſpect of diſpenſation, and ſpecial exerciſe of that power. The judgment ſhall be exerciſed or performed by him, as the royal Mediator: for he has a delegated power of judgment from the Father, as his ſervant, his King, whom he hath ſet upon his holy hill of Zion, (Pſal. ii. 6.) and to whom he hath committed all judgment, John v. 22. This is a part of the Mediator's exaltation, given him in conſequence of his voluntary humiliation, Philip. ii. 8. 9. 10. He humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, (i. e. power and authority over all, to wit), That at (or in) the name of Jeſus (not the name Jeſus; that is not the name above every name, being common to others, as to Juſtus, Col. iv. 11. and Joſhua, Heb. iv. 8.) every knee ſhould bow. The which is explained by the apoſtle himſelf, of ſtanding before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, Rom. xiv. 10. 11. So he who was judged and condemned of men, ſhall be the Judge of men and angels.

II. Jeſus Chriſt the judge, deſcending from heaven into the air, (1 Theſſ. iv. 16. 17.) ſhall come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, Matth. xxiv. 30. This his coming will be a mighty ſurprize to the world, which will be found in deep ſecurity; fooliſh virgins ſleeping, and the wiſe ſlumbering. There will then be much luxury and debauchery in the world, little ſobriety and watchfulneſs; a great throng of buſineſs, but a great ſcarcity of faith and holineſs. As it was in the days of Noah, ſo alſo ſhall it be in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, untill the day that Noah entered into the ark: and the flood came, and deſtroyed them all. Likewiſe alſo as it was in the days of Lot: they did eat, they drank, they bought, they ſold, they planted, they builded. Even thus ſhall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed, Luke xvii. 26. 27. 28. 30. The coming of the Judge will ſurpriſe ſome at markets, buying and ſelling; others at table, eating and drinking, and making merry; others buſy with their new plantings; ſome building new houſes; nay, ſome's wedding-day will be their own and the world's judgment-day. But the Judge cometh! the markets are marred; the buyer throws away what he has bought; the ſeller caſts down his money; they are raiſed from the table, and their mirth is extinguiſhed in a moment; though the tree be ſet in the earth, the gardiner may not ſtay to caſt the earth about it; the workmen throw away their tools, when the houſe is half built, and the owner regards it no more; the bridegroom, bride, and gueſts, muſt leave the wedding feaſt, and appear before the tribunal: for, Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, Rev. i. 7. He ſhall come moſt gloriouſly; for he will come in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels, Mark viii. 38. When he came in the fleſh, to die for ſinners, he laid aſide the robes of his glory, and was deſpiſed, and rejected of men: but when he comes again, to judge the world, ſuch ſhall be his viſible glory and majeſty, that it ſhall caſt an eternal vail over all earthly glory, and fill his greateſt enemies with fear and dread. Never had prince or potentate in the world, ſuch a glorious train, as will accompany this Judge: all the holy angels ſhall come with him, for his honour and ſervice. Then he, who was led to the croſs with a band of ſoldiers, will be gloriouſly attended to the place of judgment, by (not a multitude of the heavenly hoſt, but) the whole hoſt of angels; all his holy angels, ſays the text.

III. At the coming of the Judge, the ſummons are given to the parties by the ſound of the laſt trumpet; at which the dead are raiſed, and theſe found alive changed; of which before, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. 17. O loud trumpet, that ſhall be heard at once, in all corners of the earth, and of the ſea! O wonderful voice, that will not only diſturb thoſe who ſleep in the duſt; but effectually awaken, rouſe them out of their ſleep, and raiſe them from death! Were trumpets ſounding now, drums beating, furious ſoldiers crying and killing men, women and children running and ſhrieking, the wounded groaning and dying; thoſe who are in the graves, would have no more diſturbance, than if the world were in moſt profound peace. Yea, were ſtormy winds caſting down the lofty oaks, the ſeas roaring and ſwallowing up the ſhips, the moſt dreadful thunders going along the heavens, lightnings every where flaſhing, the earth quaking, trembling, opening, and ſwallowing up whole cities, and burying multitudes at once; the dead would ſtill enjoy a perfect repoſe, and ſleep ſoundly in the duſt; though their own duſt ſhould be thrown out of its place. But at the ſound of this trumpet, they ſhall all awake. The morning is come, they can ſleep no longer; the time of the dead, that they muſt be judged: they muſt get out of their graves, and appear before the Judge.

IV. The Judge ſhall ſit down on the tribunal; he ſhall ſit on the throne of his glory. Sometime he ſtood before a tribunal on earth, and was condemned as a malefactor: then he ſhall ſit on his own tribunal, and judge the world. Sometime he hung upon the croſs, covered with ſhame: then he ſhall ſit on a throne of glory. What this throne ſhall be, whether a bright cloud, or what elſe, I ſhall not enquire. Our eyes will give an anſwer to that queſtion at length. John ſaw a great white throne, Rev. xx. 11. His throne (ſays Daniel) was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire, chap. vii. 9. Whatever it be, doubtleſs it ſhall be a throne glorious beyond expreſſion; and, in compariſon with which, the moſt glorious throne on the earth is but a ſeat on a dunghill; and the ſight of it will equally ſurpriſe kings, who ſat on thrones in this life, and beggars who ſat on dunghills. It will be a throne, for ſtatelineſs and glory, ſuited to the quality of him, who ſhall ſit on it. Never had a judge ſuch a throne, and never had a throne ſuch a judge in it.

Leaving the diſcovery of the nature of the throne, untill that day, it concerns us more nearly to conſider what a Judge will ſit upon it; a point in which we are not left to uncertain conjectures. The Judge on the throne will be (1.) A viſible Judge, viſible to our bodily eyes, Rev. i. 7. Every eye ſhall ſee him. When God gave the law on mount Sinai, the people ſaw no ſimilitude, only they heard a voice: but when he calls the world to an account, how they have obſerved his law; the man Chriſt being Judge, we ſhall ſee our Judge with our eyes, either to our eternal comfort or confuſion: according to the entertainment we give him now. That very body which was crucified without the gates of Jeruſalem, betwixt two thieves, ſhall then be ſeen on the throne, ſhining in glory. We now ſee him ſymbolically in the ſacrament of his ſupper; the ſaints ſee him by the eye of faith: then, all ſhall ſee him with theſe eyes now in their heads. (2.) A Judge having full authority and power, to render unto every one according to his works. Chriſt, as God, hath authority of himſelf; and as Mediator, he hath a judicial power and authority, which his Father has inveſted him with, according to the covenant betwixt the Father and the Son, for the redemption of ſinners. And his divine glory will be a light, by which all men ſhall ſee clearly to read his commiſſion for this great and honourable employment. All power is given unto him in heaven and in earth, Matth. xxviii. 18. He hath the keys of hell and of death, Revel. i. 18. There can be no appeal from his tribunal: ſentence once paſt there, muſt ſtand for ever; there is no reverſing of it. All appeals are from an inferior court to a ſuperior one; but when God gives ſentence againſt a man, where can he find a higher court to bring his proceſs to? This judgment is the Mediator's judgment; and therefore the laſt judgment. If the Interceſſor be againſt us, who can be for us? If Chriſt condemn us, who will abſolve us? (3.) A Judge of infinite wiſdom. His eyes will pierce into, and clearly diſcern the moſt intricate caſes. His omniſcience qualifies him for judging of the moſt retired thoughts, as well as of words and works. The moſt ſubtile ſinner, ſhall not be able to outwit him, nor, by any artful management, to palliate the crime. He is the ſearcher of hearts, to whom nothing can be hid or perplexed; but all things are naked and open unto his eyes, Heb. iv. 13. (4.) A moſt juſt Judge: a Judge of perfect integrity. He is the righteous Judge, (2 Tim. iv. 8.) and his throne a great white throne, (Rev. xx. 11.) from whence no judgment ſhall proceed, but what is moſt pure and ſpotleſs. The Thebans painted juſtice blind, and without hands: for judges ought not to reſpect perſons, nor take bribes. The Areopagites judged in the dark; that they might not regard who ſpoke, but what was ſpoken. With the Judge on this throne, there will be no reſpect of perſons; he will neither regard the perſons of the rich, nor of the poor; but juſt judgment ſhall go forth, in every one's cauſe. Laſtly, An omnipotent Judge, able to put his ſentence in execution. The united force of devils and wicked men will be altogether unable to withſtand him. They cannot retard the execution of the ſentence againſt them one moment; far leſs can they ſtop it altogether. Thouſand thouſands (of angels) miniſter unto him, Dan. vii. 10. And, by the breath of his mouth, he can drive the curſed herd whither he pleaſeth.

V. The parties ſhall compear. Theſe are men and devils. Although thoſe laſt, the fallen angels, were, from the firſt moment of their ſinning, ſubjected to the wrath of God, and were caſt down to hell; and whereſoever they go, they carry their hell about with them: yet it is evident, that they are reſerved unto judgment, (2 Pet. ii. 4.) namely, unto the judgment of the great day, Jude 6. And then they ſhall be ſolemnly and publicly judged, 1 Cor. vi. 3. Know ye not that we ſhall judge angels? At that day they ſhall anſwer for their trade of ſinning and tempting to ſin; which they have been carrying on from the beginning. Then many a helliſh brat, which Satan has laid down at the ſaints door, but not adopted by them, ſhall be laid at the door of the true father of it, that is, the devil. And he ſhall receive the due reward of all the diſhonour he has done to God, and of all the miſchief he has done to men. Thoſe wicked ſpirits now in chains, (though not in ſuch ſtrait cuſtody, but that they can go about, like roaring lions, ſeeking whom they may devour,) ſhall then receive their final ſentence, and be ſhut up in their den, namely, in the priſon of hell; where they ſhall be held in extreme and unſpeakable torment, through all eternity, Rev. xx. 10. And the devil that deceived them, was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and the falſe prophet are, and ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever. In proſpect of which, the devils ſaid to Chriſt, Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? Matth. viii. 29.

But what we are chiefly concerned to take notice of, is the caſe of men at that day. All men muſt compear before this tribunal. All of each ſex, of every age, quality, and condition; the great and ſmall, noble and ignoble: none are excepted. Adam and Eve, with all their ſons and daughters, (every one who has had, or, to the end of the world, ſhall have a living ſoul united to a body,) will make up this great congregation. Even thoſe, who refuſed to come to the throne of grace, ſhall be forced to the bar of juſtice: for there can be no hiding from the all-ſeeing Judge, no flying from him who is preſent every where, no reſiſting of him who is armed with Almighty power. We muſt all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, 2 Cor. v. 10. Before him ſhall be gathered all nations, ſays the text. This is to be done by the miniſtry or angels. By them ſhall the elect be gathered, Mark xiii. 27. Then ſhall he ſend his angels, and ſhall gather together his elect from the four winds. And they ſhall alſo gather the reprobate. Matth. xiii. 40. 41. So ſhall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man ſhall ſend forth his angels, and they ſhall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. From all corners of the world, ſhall the inhabitants thereof be gathered unto the place, where he ſhall ſet his throne for judgment.

VI. There ſhall be a ſeparation made betwixt the righteous and the wicked; the fair company of the elect ſheep being ſet on Chriſt's right hand, and the reprobate goats on his left. There is no neceſſity to wait for this ſeparation, till the trial be over; ſince the parties do riſe out of their graves, with plain outward marks of diſtinction, as was cleared before. The ſeparation ſeems to be effected by that double gathering, before mentioned, the one of the elect, Mark xiii. 27. the other of them that do iniquity, Matth. xiii. 41. The elect, being caught up together in the clouds, meet the Lord in the air, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. and ſo are ſet on his right hand; and the reprobate left on the earth, (Matth. xxiv. 40.) upon the Judge's left hand. Here is now a total ſeparation of two parties, who were always oppoſite to each other, in their principles, aims, and manner of life, who, when together, were a burden the one to the other, under which the one groaned, and the other raged: but now they are freely parted; never to come together any more. The iron and clay (allude to Dan. ii. 41. 43.) which could never mix, are quite ſeparated; the one being drawn up into the air, by the attractive virtue of the ſtone cut out of the mountain, namely, Jeſus Chriſt; the other left upon its earth, to be trode under foot.

Now let us look to the right hand, and there we will ſee a glorious company of ſaints ſhining, as ſo many ſtars in their orbs; and with a chearful countenance beholding him who ſitteth upon the throne. Here will be two wonderful ſights, which the world uſed not to ſee. (1.) A great congregation of ſaints, in which not ſo much as one hypocrite. There was a bloody Cain in Adam's family; a curſed Ham in Noah's family in the ark: a treacherous Judas in Chriſt's own family; but in that company ſhall be none but ſealed ones, members of Chriſt, having all one Father. And this is a ſight reſerved for that day. (2.) All the godly upon one ſide. Seldom or never do the ſaints on earth make ſuch a harmony, but there are ſome jarring ſtrings among them. It is not to be expected, that men who ſee but in part, though they be all going to one city, will agree as to every ſtep in the way: no, we need not look for it, in this ſtate of imperfection. But at that day, Paul and Barnabas ſhall meet in peace and unity, though once the contention was ſo ſharp between them, that they departed aſunder, the one from the other, Acts xv. 39. There ſhall be no more diviſions, no more ſeparate ſtanding amongſt thoſe who belong to Chriſt. All the godly, of the different parties, ſhall then be upon one ſide; ſeeing, whatever were their differences in leſſer things, while in the world, yet even then they met and concentred all in one Lord Jeſus Chirſt, by a true and lively faith, and in the one way of holineſs, or practical godlineſs. And the naughty hypocrites, of whatſoever party, ſhall be led forth with the workers of iniquity.

Look to the left hand, and there you will ſee the curſed goats (all the wicked ones, from Cain to the laſt ungodly perſon, who ſhall be in the world) gathered together into one moſt miſerable congregation. There are many aſſemblies of the wicked now; then there ſhall be but one. But all of them ſhall be preſent there, brought together as one herd for the ſlaughter, bellowing and roaring, weeping and howling for the miſeries come, and that are coming on them. (And remember, thou ſhalt not be a mere ſpectator, to look at theſe two ſo different companies; but muſt thyſelf take thy place in one of the two, and ſhalt ſhare with the company, whatever hand it be upon.) Theſe who now abhor no ſociety ſo much as that of the ſaints, would then be glad to be allowed to get in among them; though it were but to ly among their feet. But then not one tare ſhall be found with the wheat; he will thoroughly purge his floor. Many of the right hand men of this world, will be left hand men in that day. Many, who muſt have the door on the right hand of theſe, who are better than they (if the righteous be more excellent than his neighbour) ſhall then be turned to the left hand, as moſt deſpicable wretches. O how terrible will this ſeparation be to the ungodly! How dreadful will this gathering of them together into one company be! What they will not believe, they will then ſee, namely, that but few are ſaved. They think it enough now, to be neighbour like, and can ſecurely follow the multitude: but the multitude on the left hand will yield them no comfort. How will it ſting the ungodly Chriſtian, to ſee himſelf ſet on the ſame hand with Turks and Pagans? How will it gall men to find themſelves ſtanding, profane Proteſtants, with idolatrous Papiſts; praying people, with their profane neighbours, who mocked at religious exerciſes; formal profeſſors, ſtrangers to the new birth and the power of godlineſs, with perſecutors! Now there are many oppoſite ſocieties in the world: but then all the ungodly ſhall be in one ſociety. And how dreadful will the faces of companions in ſin be to one another there! What doleful ſhrieks, when the whoremonger and his whore ſhall meet; when the drunkards, who have had many a jovial day together, ſhall ſee one another in the face; when the huſband and wife, the parents and children, maſters and ſervants, and neighbours, who have been ſnares and ſtumbling blocks to one another to the ruin of their own ſouls, and theſe of their relatives, ſhall meet again in that miſerable ſociety? Then there will be curſes inſtead of ſalutations; and tearing of themſelves, and raging againſt one another, inſtead of the wonted embraces.

VII. The parties ſhall be tried. The trial cannot be difficult, in regard the Judge is omniſcient, and nothing can be hid from him. But, that his righteous judgment may be made evident to all, he will ſet the hidden things of darkneſs in cleareſt light at that trial, 1 Cor. iv. 5.

Men ſhall be tried, Firſt, Upon their works; for God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil. Eccleſ. xii. 14. The Judge will try every man's converſation, and ſet his deeds done in the body, with all the circumſtances thereof, in a true light. Then will many actions, commended and applauded of men, as good and juſt, be diſcovered to have been evil and abominable, in the ſight of God: and many works, now condemned by the world, will be approven and commended by the great Judge, as good and juſt. Secret things will be brought to light; and what was hide from the view of the world, ſhall be laid open. Wickedneſs, which hath kept its lurking place in ſpight of all human ſearch, will then be brought forth to the glory of God, and the confuſion of impenitent ſinners who hide it. The world appears now very vile in the eyes of thoſe, who are exerciſed to godlineſs: but it will then appear a thouſand times more vile, when that which is done of men in ſecret, comes to be diſcovered. Every good action ſhall then be remembered; and the hidden religion and good works, moſt induſtriouſly concealed by the ſaints, from the eyes of men, ſhall no more lie hid: for though the Lord will not allow men to proclaim every man his own goodneſs; yet he himſelf will do it in due time. Secondly, Their words ſhall be judged, Matth. xii. 37. For by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned. Not a word ſpoken for God and his cauſe in the world, from love to himſelf, ſhall be forgotten. They are all kept in remembrance, and ſhall be brought forth as evidences of faith, and of an intereſt in Chriſt, . Mal. iii. 16. Then they that feared the Lord ſpake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before him.---ver. 17. And they ſhall be mine, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, in that day when I make up my jewels. And the tongue which did run at random, ſhall then confeſs to God; and the ſpeaker ſhall find it to have been followed, and every word noted, that dropped from his unſanctified lips. Every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give an account thereof in the day of judgment, Matth. xii. 36. And if they ſhall give account of idle words, that is, words ſpoken to no good purpoſe, neither for God's glory, one's own, nor one's neighbour's good; how much more ſhall mens wicked words, their ſinful oaths, curſes, lies, filthy communications, and bitter words, be called over again, that day? The tongues of many ſhall then fall upon themſelves, and ruin them. Thirdly, Mens thoughts ſhall be brought into the judgment: the Judge will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts, 1 Cor. iv. 5. Thoughts go free from man's judgment, but not from the judgment of the heart-ſearching God, who knows mens thoughts, without the help of ſigns to diſcern them by. The ſecret ſprings of mens actions will then be brought to light; and the ſins, that never came further than the heart, will then be laid open. O what a figure will man's corrupt nature make, when his inſide is turned out, and all his ſpeculative impurities are expoſed! The rottenneſs that is within many a whited ſepulchre, the ſpeculative filthineſs and wantonneſs, murder and malignity, now lurking in the hearts of men, as in the chambers of imagery, will then be diſcovered, and what good was in the hearts of any, ſhall no more lie concealed. If it was in their hearts to build a houſe to the Lord, they ſhall hear, that they did well that it was in their heart.

This trial will be righteous and impartial, accurate and ſearching, clear and evident. The Judge is the righteous Judge, and he will do right to every one. He has a juſt balance for good and evil actions, and for honeſt and falſe hearts. The fig-leaf cover of hypocriſy will then be blown aſide, and the hypocrite's nakedneſs will appear; as when the Lord came to judge Adam and Eve in the cool (or, as the word is, in the wind) of the day, Gen. iii. 8. The fire (which tries things moſt exquiſitely) ſhall try every man's work, of what ſort it is, 1 Cor. iii. 13. Man's judgment is oft-times perplexed and confuſed: but here the whole proceſs ſhall be clear and evident, as written with a ſun-beam. It ſhall be clear to the Judge, to whom no caſe can be intricate; to the parties, who ſhall be convinced, Jude 15. And the multitudes on both ſides ſhall ſee, the Judge is clear when he judgeth; for then the heavens ſhall declare his righteouſneſs in the audience of all the world; and ſo it ſhall be univerſally known, Pſal. l. 6.

On theſe accounts it is, that this trial is held out in the ſcripture, under the notion of opening of books; and men are ſaid to be judged out of thoſe things written in the books, Rev. xx. 12. The Judge of the world, who infallibly knoweth all things, hath no need of books to be laid before him, to prevent miſtake in any point of law or fact: but the expreſſion points at his proceeding, as moſt nice, accurate, juſt, and well grounded, in every ſtep of it. Now there are four books, that ſhall be opened in that day.

Firſt, The book of God's remembrance or omniſcience, Mal. iii. 16. This is an exact record of every man's ſtate, thoughts, words, and deeds, good or evil: it is, as it were, a day-book, in which the Lord puts down all that paſſeth in mens hearts, lips, and lives; and it is a filling up every day that one lives. In it are recorded mens ſins and good works, ſecret and open, with all their circumſtances. Here are regiſtered all their privileges, mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, ſometime laid to their hand; the checks, admonitions, and rebukes, given by teachers, neighbour's afflictions, and mens own conſciences; every thing in its due order. This book will ſerve only as a libel, in reſpect of the ungodly: but it will be for another uſe in reſpect of the godly, namely, for a memorial of their good. The opening of it is the Judge's bringing to light what is written in it; the reading, as it were, of the libel and memorial, reſpectively, in their hearing.

Secondly, The book of conſcience will be opened, and ſhall be as a thouſand witneſſes to prove the fact, Rom. ii. 15. ‘Which ſhew the work of the law written in ‘their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs.’ Conſcience is a cenſor going with every man whitherſoever he goes, taking an account of his deeds done in the body, and, as it were, noting them in a book: the which being opened, will be found a double of the former, ſo far as it relates to one's own ſtate and caſe. Much is written in it, which cannot be read now; the writing of conſcience being, in many caſes, like to that which is made with the juice of lemons, not to be read, till it be held before the fire: but then men ſhall read it clearly and diſtinctly: the fire which is to try every man's work, will make the book of conſcience legible in every point.

Though the book be ſealed now, (the conſcience blind, dumb, and deaf), the ſeals will then be broken, and the book opened. There ſhall be no more a weak or miſinformed conſcience, among theſe on the right hand, or theſe on the left. There ſhall not be a ſilent conſcience, and far leſs a ſeared conſcience, amongſt all the ungodly crew: but their conſciences ſhall be moſt quick-ſighted, and moſt lively, in that day. None ſhall then call good evil, or evil good. Ignorance of what ſin is, and what things are ſins, will have no place among them: and the ſubtile reaſonings of men, in favour of their luſts, will then be for ever baffled by their own conſciences. None ſhall have the favour (if I may ſay ſo) of lying under the ſoft covert of deluſion: but they ſhall all be convicted by their conſcience. Nill they, will they, they ſhall look on this book, read, and be confounded, and ſtand ſpeechleſs; knowing that nothing is charged upon them by miſtake; ſince this is a book, which was always in their own cuſtody. Thus ſhall the Judge make every man ſee himſelf, in the glaſs of his own conſcience, which will make quick work.

Thirdly, The book of the law ſhall be opened. This book is the ſtandard and rule, by which is known what is right, and what is wrong; as alſo, what ſentence is to be paſſed accordingly, on theſe who are under it. As to the opening of this book, in its ſtatutory part, which ſhews what is ſin, and what is duty; it falls in with the opening of the book of conſcience. For conſcience is ſet by the ſovereign Lawgiver, in every man's breaſt, to be his private teacher, to ſhew him the law, and his private paſtor, to make application of the ſame; and at that day will be perfectly fit for its office; ſo that the conſcience, which is muſt ſtupid now, ſhall then read to the man, moſt accurate, but dreadful lectures on the law. But what ſeems (mainly at leaſt) pointed at, by the opening of this book, is the opening of that part of it, which determines the reward of mens works. Now, the law promiſeth life, upon perfect obedience: but none can be found on the right hand, or on the left, who will pretend to that, when once the book of conſcience is opened, it threateneth death upon diſobedience, and will effectually bring it upon all under its dominion. And this part of the book of the law, determining the reward of mens works, is opened, only to ſhew what muſt be the portion of the ungodly, and that there they may read their ſentence before it be pronounced. But it is not opened for the ſentence of the ſaints; for no ſentence abſolving a ſinner, could ever be drawn out of it. The law promiſeth life, not as it is a rule of actions, but as a covenant of works: And therefore innocent man could not have demanded life upon his obedience, till the law was reduced into the form of a covenant; as was ſhewn before. But the ſaints having been, in this life, brought under a new covenant, namely, the covenant of grace, were dead to the law, as a covenant of works, and it was dead to them. Wherefore, as they ſhall not have any fears of death from it, ſo they can have no hopes of life from it, ſince they are not under the law, but under grace, Rom. vi. 14. But, for their ſentence, another book is opened; of which in the next place.

Thus the book of the law is opened, for the ſentence againſt all thoſe on the left hand: and by it they will clearly ſee the juſtice of the judgment againſt them, and how the Judge proceeds therein according to law. Nevertheleſs, there will be this difference, namely, that theſe who had only the natural law, and lived not under any ſpecial revelation, ſhall be judged by that law of nature they had in their hearts; which law bears, that they who commit ſuch things (as they will ſtand convicted of) are worthy of death, Rom. i. 23. But theſe, who had the written law, to whom the word of God came, as it has ſounded in the viſible church, ſhall be judged by that written law. So ſays the apoſtle, Rom. ii. 12. For as many as have ſinned without (the written) law, ſhall periſh without (the written) law; and as many as have ſinned in the law (i. e. under the written law) ſhall be judged by the (written) law.

Laſtly, Another book ſhall be opened, which is the book of life, Rev. xx. 12. In this, the names of all the elect are written, as Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, Luke x. 20. Your names are written in heaven. This book contains God's gracious and unchangeable purpoſe, to bring all the elect to eternal life; and that, in order thereto, they be redeemed by the blood of his Son, effectually called, juſtified, adopted, ſanctified, and raiſed up by him at the laſt day without ſin. It is now lodged in the Mediator's hand, as the book of the manner of the kingdom, and having perfected the work the Father gave him to do; he ſhall on the great day produce, and open the book, and preſent the perſons therein named, faultleſs before the preſence of his glory. Jude 24. Not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, Eph. v. 27. None of them all, who are named in the book ſhall be miſſing. They ſhall be found qualified, according to the order of the book, redeemed, called, juſtified, ſanctified, raiſed up without ſpot: what remains then, but that, according to the ſame book, they obtain the great end, namely, everlaſting life. This may be gathered from that precious promiſe, Rev. iii. 5. He that overcometh, the ſame ſhall be clothed in raiment (being raiſed in glory) and I will confeſs his name (it ſhall be, as it were, read out among the reſt of God's elect) before my father, and before his angels. Here is the ground of the ſaints abſolviture, the ground of the bleſſed ſentence they receive. The book of life being opened, it will be known to all, who are elected and who are not. Thus far of the trial of the parties.

Eightly, Then ſhall the Judge pronounce that bleſſed ſentence on the ſaints, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, Matth. xxv. 34. It is moſt probable, the man Chriſt will pronounce it with an audible voice; which not only all the ſaints, but all the wicked likewiſe ſhall hear and underſtand. Who can conceive the inexpreſſible joy, with which theſe happy ones ſhall hear theſe words? Who can imagine the fulneſs of joy, which ſhall be poured into their hearts, with theſe words reaching their ears? And who can conceive how much of hell ſhall break into the hearts of all the ungodly crew, by theſe words of heaven? It is certain this ſentence ſhall be pronounced, before the ſentence of damnation, Matth. xxv. 34. Then ſhall the King ſay unto them on his right hand, Come ye bleſſed, &c. Ver. 41. Then ſhall he ſay alſo to them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye curſed, &c. There is no need of this order, that the ſaints may, without fear or affrightment, hear the other ſentence on the reprobate: they who are raiſed in glory, caught up to meet the Lord in the air, preſented without ſpot, and whoſe ſouls (for the far greater part of them) have been ſo long in heaven before, ſhall not be capable of any ſuch fear. But hereby they will be orderly brought in, to ſit in judgment, as Chriſt's aſſeſſors, againſt the ungodly; whoſe torment will be aggravated by it. It will be a hell to them, to be kept out of hell, till they ſee the doors of heaven opened to receive the ſaints, who once dwelt in the ſame world with them; and perhaps in the ſame country, pariſh, or town, and ſat under the ſame miniſtry with themſelves. Thus will they ſee heaven afar off, to make their hell the hotter. Like that unbelieving lord, 2 Kings vii. 19. 20. They ſhall ſee the plenty with their eyes, but ſhall not eat thereof. Every word of the bleſſed ſentence ſhall be like an envenomed arrow ſhot into their hearts, while they ſee what they have loſt, and from thence gather what they are to expect.

declares

This ſentence paſſeth on the ſaints according to their works, Rev. xx. 12. but not for their works, nor for their faith neither, as if eternal life were merited by them. The ſentence itſelf overthrows this abſurd conceit. The kingdom they are called to, was prepared for them, from the foundation of the world; not left to be merited by themſelves, who were but of yeſterday. They inherit it as ſons, but procure it not to themſelves, as ſervants do the reward of their work. They were redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and cloathed with his ſpotleſs righteouſneſs, which is the proper cauſe of the ſentence. They were alſo qualified for heaven, by the ſanctification of his Spirit; and hence it is according to their works: ſo that the ungodly world ſhall ſee now, that the Judge of the quick and dead does good to them, who were good. Therefore it is added to the ſentence, For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat, &c. ver. 35. 36. which doth not denote the ground, but the evidence of their right to heaven; as if a judge ſhould ſay, he abſolves a man purſued for debt; for the witneſſes depone that it is paid already. So the apoſtle ſays, 1 Cor. x. 5. But with many of them God was not well pleaſed, for they were overthrown in the wilderneſs. Their overthrow in the wilderneſs was not the ground of God's diſpleaſure with them, but it was an evidence of it. And thus our Lord teacheth us the neceſſary connection betwixt glory and good works, namely, works evangeſically good; works having a reſpect to Jeſus Chriſt, and done out of faith in him, and love to him, without which they will not be regarded in that day. And the ſaints will ſo far be judged according to ſuch works, that the degrees of glory amongſt them ſhall be according to theſe works! For it is an eternal truth, He that ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap ſparingly, 2 Cor. ix. 6.

Thus ſhall the good works of the godly have a glorious, but a gratuitous reward; a reward of grace, not of debt, which will fill them with wonder at the riches of free grace, and the Lord's condeſcending to take any notice, eſpecially ſuch public notice, of their poor worthleſs works. The which ſeems to be the import of what they are ſaid to anſwer, ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred? &c. ver. 37. 38. 39. And may they not juſtly wonder to ſee themſelves ſet down to the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb, in conſequenceof a dinner or ſupper, a little meat or drink, (ſuch as they had), which they gave to a hungry or thirſty member of Chriſt, for his ſake? O plentiful harveſt, following upon the ſeed of good works! Rivers of pleaſures ſpringing up from (perhaps) a cup of cold water given to a diſciple, in the name of a diſciple! Eternal manſions of glory riſing out of a night's lodging given to a ſaint, who was a ſtranger! Everlaſting robes of glory given in exchange of a new coat, or (it may be) an old one, beſtowed on ſome ſaint, who had not neceſſary cloathing! A viſit to a ſick ſaint, repayed by Chriſt himſelf, coming in the glory of his Father, with all his holy angels! A viſit made to a poor priſoner for the cauſe of Chriſt, repayed with a viſit from the Judge of all, taking away the viſitant with him to the palace of heaven, there to be ever with himſelf! Theſe things will be matter of everlaſting wonder; and ſhould ſtir up all, to ſow liberally in time, while the ſeed-time of good works do laſte. But it is Chriſt's ſtamp on good works, that puts a value on them, in the eye of a gracous God; which ſeems to be the import of our Lord's reply, ver. 40. In as much as ye have done it unto one of the leaſt of theſe my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

IX. Now the ſaints having received their own ſentence, they ſhall judge the world, 1 Cor. vi. 2. This was not fulfilled, when the empire became Chriſtian, and Chriſtians were made magiſtrates. No, the Pſalmiſt tells us, This honour have all the ſaints, Pſal. cxlix. 9. And the apoſtle, in the forecited place, adds, And if the world ſhall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the ſmalleſt matters? ver. 3. Know ye not that we ſhall judge angels? Being called, they come to receive their kingdom, in the view of angels and men: they go, as it were, from the bar to the throne, To him that overcometh, will I grant to ſit with me in my throne, Rev. iii. 21. They ſhall not only judge the world, in Chriſt their head, by way of communion with him; by their works compared with theſe of the ungodly; or by way of teſtimony againſt them: but they ſhall be aſſeſſors to Jeſus Chriſt the Judge, giving their voice againſt them, conſenting to his judgment as juſt, and ſaying Amen to the doom pronounced againſt all the ungodly: as is ſaid of the ſaints, upon the judgment of the great whore, Rev. xix. 1. 2. Hallelujah-----for true and righteous are his judgments. Thus the upright ſhall have dominion over them, in the morning of the reſurrection, Pſal. xlix. 14. Then, and not till then, ſhall that be fully accompliſhed, which ye may read, Pſal. cxlix. 6. 7. 8, 9. Let the high praiſes of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged ſword in their hand, to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and puniſhments upon the people---- -this honour have all his ſaints. O! what a ſtrange turn of affairs will appear here! What an aſtoniſhing ſight will it be, to ſee wicked church-men and ſtateſmen, ſtanding as criminals before the ſaints, whom ſometimes they condemned as heretics, rebels and traitors! To ſee men of riches and power ſtand pale-faced, before theſe whom they oppreſſed! To ſee the mocker ſtand trembling before theſe he mocked! The worldly-wiſe man, before theſe whom he accounted fools! Then ſhall the deſpiſed faces of the ſaints be dreadful faces to the wicked: and thoſe who ſometimes were the ſong of the drunkards, ſhall then be a terror to them. All wrongs muſt be righted at length, and every one ſet in his proper place.

X. The Judge ſhall pronounce the ſentence of damnation on all the ungodly multitude. Then ſhall he ſay unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, ver. 41. Fearful doom! and that from the ſame mouth from whence proceeded the ſentence of abſolution before. It was an aggravation of the miſery of the Jews, when their city was deſtroyed, that they were ruined by one who was accounted the darling of the world. O! what an aggravation of the miſery of the wicked will it be, that he ſhall pronounce this ſentence alſo! to hear the curſe from mount Zion, muſt needs be moſt terrible. To be damned by him, who came to ſave ſinners, muſt be double damnation. But thus it ſhall be. The lamb of God ſhall rore as a lion againſt them! he ſhall excommunicate them, and caſt them out of his preſence for ever, by a ſentence from the throne, ſaying, Depart from me, ye curſed; he ſhall adjudge them to everlaſting fire, and the ſociety of devils for evermore. And this ſentence alſo, we ſuppoſe, ſhall be pronounced with an audible voice, by the man Chriſt. And all the ſaints ſhall ſay, Hallelujah, true and righteous are his judgments. None were ſo compaſſionate as the ſaints, when on earth, during the time of God's patience. But now that time is at an end; their compaſſion on the ungodly is ſwallowed up in joy, in the Mediator's glory, and his execution of juſt judgment, by which his enemies are made his footſtool. Though ſometimes the righteous man did weep in ſecret places for their pride, and becauſe they would not hear; yet then he ſhall rejoyce when he ſeeth the vengeance, he ſhall waſh his feet in the blood of the wicked, Pſal. lviii. 10. No pity ſhall then be ſhewn to them from their neareſt relations. The godly wife ſhall applaud the juſtice of the Judge, in the condemnation of her ungodly huſband: the godly huſband ſhall ſay Amen to the damnation of her who lay in his boſom; the godly parents ſhall ſay Hallelujah, at the paſſing of the ſentence againſt their ungodly child: and the godly child ſhall, from his heart, approve the damnation of his wicked parents, the father who begat him, and the mother who bore him. The ſentence is juſt: they are judged according to their works, Rev. xx. 12.

There is no wrong done them. For I was an hungry, ſaith our Lord, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirſty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a ſtranger, and ye took me.

not in : naked, and ye clothed me not : ſick, and in priſon, and ye viſited me not, ver. 42. 43. Theſe are not only evidences of their ungodly and curſed ſtate, but moſt proper cauſes and grounds of their condemnation ; for though good works do not merit ſalvation, yet evil works merit damnation. Sins of one kind only, namely, of omiſſion, are here mentioned ; nor that theſe alone ſhall then be diſcovered, (for the opening of the books lays all open) but becauſe theſe, though there were no more, are ſufficient to damn unpardoned ſinners. And if men ſhall be condemned for ſins of omiſſion, much more for ſins of commiſſion. The omiſſion of works of charity and mercy, is condeſcended on particularly, to ſtop the mouths of the wicked ; for it is moſt juſt, that he have judgment without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy, James ii. 13. The mentioning of the omiſſion of acts of charity and mercy towards the diſtreſſed members of Chriſt, intimates, that it is the judgment of thoſe who have heard of Chriſt in the goſpel, that is principally intended here, in this portion of ſcripture ; and that the ſlighting of Chriſt will be the great cauſe of the ruin of thoſe who hear the goſpel ; but the enmity of the hearts of the wicked againſt Chriſt himſelf, is diſcovered by the entertainment they now give to his members.

In vain will they ſay, When ſaw we thee an hungred, or a thirſt ? &c. ver. 44. For the Lord reckons, and will reckon the world's unkindneſs to his people, unkindneſs to himſelf ; In as much as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not to me, ver. 45. O meat and drink unhappily ſpared, when a member of Chriſt was in need of it ! O wretched neglect, that the ſtranger ſaint was not taken in ! it had been better for them, that they had quitted their own room, and their own bed, than he had wanted lodging. O curſed cloathing, may the wicked ſay, that was in my houſe, locked up in my cheſt, or hanging in my wardrobe, and was not brought out to clothe ſuch a one ! O that I had ſtripped myſelf, rather than he had gone away without cloathing ? Curſed buſineſs, that diverted me from viſiting ſuch a ſick ſaint ? O that I had rather watched whole nights with him. Wretch that I was ? why did I ſit at eaſe in my houſe, when he was in priſon, and did not viſit him ? But now the tables are turned : Chriſt's ſervants ſhall eat, but I ſhall be hungry ; his ſervants ſhall drink, but I ſhall be thirſty : they rejoyce, but I am aſhamed, Iſa. lxv. 13. They are taken in, but I am caſt out, and bid depart : they are cloathed with robes of glory, but I walk naked, and they ſee my ſhame, Rev. xvi. 15. They are raiſed up on high, beyond the reach of ſickneſs or pain ; but I muſt now ly down in ſorrow, Iſa. l. 11. Now ſhall they go to the palace of heaven, but I muſt go to the priſon of hell.

But if our Lord thus reſents men's neglecting to help his people under theſe, and the like diſtreſſes ; what may they expect, who are the authors and inſtruments of them ? if they ſhall be fed with wrath, who fed them not, when they were hungry ; what ſhall become of thoſe, who robbed and ſpoiled them, and took their own bread away from them ? What a full cup of wrath ſhall be the portion of thoſe who were ſo far from giving them meat or drink, when hungry or thirſty, that they made it a crime for others to entertain them, and made themſelves drunken with their blood ! they muſt lodge with devils for evermore, who took not in the Lord's people, when ſtrangers ; then, what a lodging ſhall thoſe have, who drave them out of their own houſes, out of their native land, and made them ſtrangers ? Men will be condemned for not cloathing them, when naked : then how heavy muſt the ſentence of thoſe be, who have ſtript them, and made them go without cloathing ? Surely, if not viſiting of them in ſickneſs, or in a priſon, ſhall be ſo ſeverely puniſhed : they ſhall not eſcape a moſt heavy doom, who have caſt them into priſons, and have put them under ſuch hardſhips, as have impaired their health, brought ſickneſs on them, and cut their days in priſon, or out of priſon.

To put a face upon ſuch wicked practices, men will pretend to retain an honour for Chriſt and religion, while they thus treat his members, walking in his ways, and keeping the truth. They are here repreſented to ſay, ‘ When ſaw we thee an hungred, or a-thirſt, or a ſtranger, or naked, or ſick, or in priſon, and did not miniſter unto thee ?’ ver. 44. As if they ſhould ſay, Our bread, drink, lodging, cloathing and viſits, were indeed refuſed, but not to Chriſt ; but to a ſet of men, of a bad character, men who turned the world upſide down, (Acts xvii. 9.) who troubled Iſrael, (2 Kings xviii. 17.) an humorous and fantaſtic ſort of people, having laws diverſe from all people ; factious and rebellious (they did not keep the king's laws) and therefore a very dangerous ſet of men ; it was not for the King's profit to ſuffer them, Eſther iii. 8. But although men caſt iniquity upon the godly, and give them ill names, that they may treat them as criminals ; all theſe pretences will avail them nothing, in the great day, before the righteous Judge, nor before their own conſciences neither : but the real ground of their enmity againſt the ſaints, will be found (to their own conviction) to be their enmity againſt Chriſt himſelf. This ſeems to be the import of the objection of the damned, (ver. 44. and of the anſwer to it, ver. 45.) ‘ In as much as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not to me.’

Laſtly, Sentence being paſt on both parties, follows the full execution of the ſame, ver. 46. And theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment, but the righteous into life eternal. The damned ſhall get no reprieve, but go to their place without delay ; they ſhall be driven away from the judgment-ſeat into hell ; and the ſaints ſhall enter into the King's palace, Pſal. xlv. 15. namely, into heaven, the ſeat of the bleſſed. But our Lord Chriſt and his glorious company, ſhall keep the field that day, and ſee the backs of all their enemies ; for the damned go off firſt.

In this day of the Lord, the great day, ſhall be the general conflagration ; by which thoſe viſible heavens, the earth, and ſea ſhall paſs away. Not that they ſhall be annihilated, (or reduced to nothing) that is not the operation of fire ; but they ſhall be diſſolved, and purged by that fire, from all the effects of ſin, or of the curſe, upon them ; and then renewed, and made more glorious and ſtable. Of this conflagration, the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks, 2 Pet. iii. 10. ‘ But the day of the Lord will come, as a thief in the night : in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat : the earth alſo, and the works that are therein ſhall be burnt up.’ See alſo ver. 7. 12. And of the renewing of the world, he adds, ver. 13. ‘ Nevertheleſs we, according to his promiſe, look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs.

It ſeems moſt agreeable to the ſcriptures, and to the nature of the thing, to conceive this conflagration to follow after the general judgment ; ſentence being paſſed on both parties before it. And I judge it probable, that it will fall in with the putting of the ſentence in execution againſt the damned ; ſo as they ſhall (according to their ſentence) depart, and the heavens and the earth paſs away, together and at once, at that furious rebuke from the throne, driving away the damned, out of the world (in this fire) to the everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Even as, in the deluge, with which the apoſtle Peter compares the conflagration, or burning of the world, (2 Pet. iii. 6. 7.), the world itſelf, and the wicked upon it, periſhed together ; the ſame water which deſtroyed the earth, ſweeping away the inhabitants. For it is not likely that the wicked ſhall at all ſtand on the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs, (2 Pet. iii. 13.) And as for this earth, it ſhall flee away, (which ſeems to denote a very quick diſpatch), and it ſhall flee from his face, who ſits on the throne, Rev. xx. 11. And I ſaw a great white throne, and him that ſat on it, from whoſe face the earth and the heavens fled away. The execution of the ſentence on the wicked is alſo thus expreſſed; They ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence, or from the face of the Lord, 2 Theſſ. i. 9. The original word is the ſame in both texts, the which, being compared, ſeem to ſay, that theſe creatures, abuſed by the wicked, being left to ſtand as witneſſes againſt them, in the judgment, are, after ſentence paſſed on their abuſers, made to paſs away with them from the face of the Judge. It is true, the flying away of the earth and heaven is narrated (Rev. xx. 11.) before the judgment; but that will not prove its going before the judgment; more than the narrating of the judgment, ver. 12. before the reſurrection, ver. 13. will prove the judgment to be before it. Further, it is remarkable, in the execution of the ſentence, Rev. xx. 14. 15. that not only the reprobate are caſt into the lake, but death and hell are caſt into it likewiſe: all effects of ſin and of the curſe, are removed out of the world, (for which very cauſe ſhall the conflagration be), and they are confined to the place of the damned. Beſides all this, it is evident the end of the world is by the conflagration: and the apoſtle tells us, (1 Cor. xv. 24. 25.) that then cometh the end, when he ſhall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he ſhall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power. For he muſt reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The which laſt, as it muſt be done before the end; ſo it ſeems not to be done, but by putting the ſentence in execution, paſſed in the day of judgment, againſt the wicked.

Now, if the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah, that are ſet forth for an example, (Jude 7.) was ſo dreadful, how terrible will that day be, when the whole world ſhall be at once in flames! How will wretched worldlings look, when their darling world ſhall be all on fire? Then ſhall ſtrong caſtles, and towering palaces, with all their rich furniture, go up together in one flame, with the loweſt cottages. What heart can fully conceive the terror of that day to the wicked, when the whole fabric of heaven and earth ſhall at once be diſſolved by that fire! When that miſerable company ſhall be driven from the tribunal to the pit, with fire within them, and fire without them; and fire behind them, and on every hand of them; and fire before them awaiting them in the lake: whither this fire (for ought appears) may follow them.

As for the particular place of this judgment, though ſome point us to the valley of Jehoſhaphat for it; yet our Lord, who infallibly knew it, being aſked the queſtion, by his diſciples, Where, Lord? told them only, Whereſoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together, Luke xvii. 37. After which anſwer, it is too much for men to renew the queſtion. As for the time, when it ſhall be, in vain do men ſearch for what the Lord has purpoſedly kept ſecret, Acts i. 7. It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, which the Father has put in his own power. The apoſtle Paul, after having very plainly deſcribed the ſecond coming of Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. 17. adds, (chap. v. 1. 2.) But of the times and ſeaſons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you: for yourſelves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord ſo cometh as a thief in the night. Nevertheleſs, ſome, in ſeveral ages, have made very bold with the time; and ſeveral particular years, which are now paſt, have been given out to the world, for the time of the end, by men who have pried into the ſecrets of God. Time has proclaimed to the world their raſhneſs and folly; and it is likely they will be no more happy in their conjectures, whoſe determinate time is yet to come. Let us reſt in that he cometh. God hath kept that day hid from us, that we may be every day ready for it, Matth. xxv. 13. Watch therefore: for ye know neither the day, nor the hour, wherein the Son of man cometh. And let us remember, that the laſt day of our life, will determine our ſtate in the laſt day of the world: and as we die, ſo ſhall we be judged.

I ſhall now ſhut up this ſubject, with ſome application of what has been ſaid.

USE I. Of comfort to all the ſaints. Here is abundance of conſolation to all, who are in the ſtate of grace. Whatever be your afflictions in the world, this day will make up all your loſſes. Though ye have lien among the pots: yet ſhall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with ſilver, and her feathers with yellow gold. Pſal. lxviii. 13. Though the world reproach, judge, and condemn you; the Judge will at that day, abſolve you, and bring forth your righteouſneſs as the light. The world's fools, will then appear to have been the only wiſe men who were in it. Though the croſs be heavy, you may well bear it, in expectation of the crown of righteouſneſs, which the righteous Judge will then give you. If the world do deſpiſe you, and treat you with the utmoſt contempt, regard it not: the day cometh wherein you ſhall ſit with Chriſt, in his throne. Be not diſcouraged by reaſon of manifold temptations. But reſiſt the devil, in confidence of a full and complete victory: for you ſhall judge the tempter at laſt. Though you have hard wreſtling now, with the body of ſin and death; yet ye ſhall get all your enemies under your feet at length, and be preſented faultleſs before the preſence of his glory. Let not the terror of that day diſpirit you, when you think upon it: let theſe who have ſlighted the Judge, and continue enemies to him, and to the way of holineſs, droop and hang down their heads, when they think of his coming: but lift ye up your heads with joy, for the laſt day will be your beſt day. The Judge is your Head and Huſband, your Redeemer, and your Advocate. Ye muſt appear before the judgment-ſeat, but ye ſhall not come into condemnation, John v. 24. His coming will not be againſt you, but for you. He came in the fleſh, to remove the lawful impediments of the ſpiritual marriage, by his death: he came in the goſpel to you, to eſpouſe you to himſelf: he will come, at the laſt day, to ſolemnize the marriage, and take the bride home to his Father's houſe. Even ſo, come Lord Jeſus.

USE II. Of terror to all unbelievers. This may ſerve to awaken a ſecure generation, a world lying in wickedneſs, as if they were never to be called to an account for it; and ſlighting the Mediator, as if he were not to judge them. Ah! how few have the lively impreſſions of the judgment to come! Moſt men live, as if what is ſaid of it, from the word, were but idle tales. The profane lives of many, ſpeak the thoughts of it to be far from their hearts, and in very deed make a mock of it before the world, ſaying in effect, Where is the promiſe of his coming? The hypocriſy of others, who blind the eyes of the world with a ſplendid profeſſion, being in appearance Chriſt's ſheep, while they are indeed the devil's goats, is an evidence, that the great ſeparation of the ſheep from the goats, is very little laid to heart. How do many indulge themſelves in ſecret wickedneſs, of which they would be aſhamed before witneſſes; not conſidering, that their moſt ſecret thoughts and actions will, at that day, be diſcovered before the great congregation! How eagerly are mens hearts ſet on the world, as if it were to be their everlaſting habitation! The ſolemn aſſemblies, and public ordinances, wherein the Judge is upon a tranſaction of peace with the criminals, are undervalued: mens hearts will ſwim like feathers, in the waters of the ſanctuary; that will ſink like ſtones, to the bottom, in cares of this life: they will be very ſerious in trifles of this world; and trifle in the moſt ſerious and weighty things of another world. But O conſider the day, that is approaching, in which Chriſt ſhall come to judgment, the world ſhall be ſummoned, by the ſound of the laſt trumpet, to compear before his tribunal. The Judge ſhall ſit on his throne, and all nations ſhall be ſifted before him; the ſeparation ſhall be made betwixt the godly and the wicked; the books opened, and the dead judged out of them; one party ſhall be adjudged to everlaſting life, and the other to everlaſting fire, according to their works.

It would be a ſight of admirable curioſity, if thou couldſt wrap up thyſelf in ſome dark cloud, or hide thyſelf in the cleft of ſome high rock, from whence thou mighteſt eſpy wicked kings, princes, judges, and great ones of the earth, riſing out of their marble tombs, and brought to the bar, to anſwer for all their cruelty, injuſtice, oppreſſion, and profanity, without any marks of diſtinction, but what their wickedneſs puts upon them; profane, unholy, and unfaithful church men, purſued with the curſes of the ruined people, from their graves, to the judgment-ſeat, and charged with the blood of ſouls, to whom they gave not faithful warning: mighty men ſtanding trembling before the Judge, unable to recover their wonted boldneſs, to outwit him with their ſubtilities, or defend themſelves by their ſtrength; delicate women caſt forth of their graves, as abominable branches, dragged to the tribunal, to anſwer for their ungodly lives; the ignorant ſuddenly taught in the law, to their coſt; and the learned declared, before the world, fools and laborious triflers; the Atheiſt convinced, the hypocrite unmaſked; and the profane, at long run, turned ſerious about his eternal ſtate: ſecret murders, adulteries, thefts, cheats, and other works of darkneſs, which ſcorned all human ſearch, diſcovered and laid open before the world with their moſt minute circumſtances: no regard had to the rich, no pity ſhewn to the poor: the ſcales of the world turned; oppreſſed and deſpiſed piety ſet on high; and proſperous wickedneſs at laſt brought low: all, not found in Chriſt, arraigned, convicted, and condemned without reſpect of perſons, and driven from the tribunal to the pit; while theſe found in him, at that day, being abſolved before the world, go with him into heaven. Nay but thou canſt not ſo eſcape. Thyſelf, whoſoever thou art, not being in Chriſt, muſt bear a part in this tragical and frightful action.

Sinner, that ſame Lord Chriſt, whom thou now deſpiſeſt, whom thou woundeſt through the ſides of his meſſengers, and before whom thou doſt prefer thy luſts, will be thy Judge. And a neglected Saviour will be a ſevere Judge. O! what mountain, what rock wilt thou get to fall on thee, and hide thee from the face of him that ſitteth on the throne? thou haſt now a rock within thee, a heart of adamant, ſo that thou canſt count the darts of the word as ſtubble, and laugh at the ſhaking of the ſpear; but that rock will rent at the ſight of the Judge; that hard heart will then break, and thou ſhalt weep and wail, when weeping and wailing will be to no purpoſe. Death's bands will fall off; the grave will vomit thee out; and the mountains ſhall ſkip from thee, and the rocks refuſe to grind thee to powder. How will theſe curſed eyes abide the ſight of the Judge! behold he cometh! where is the profane ſwearer, who tore his wounds? the wretched worldling, now abandoned of his god? the formal hypocrite, who kiſſed him and betrayed him? The deſpiſer of the goſpel, who ſent him away in his meſſengers groaning, profaned his ordinances, and trampled under foot his precious blood? O murderer, the ſlain man is thy Judge: there is he whom thou didſt ſo maltreat: behold the neglected Lamb of God appearing as a lion againſt thee. How will thine heart endure the darts of his fiery looks! that rocky heart now kept out againſt him, ſhall then be blown up: that face, which refuſeth to bluſh now, ſhall then gather blackneſs: arrows of wrath ſhall pierce, where arrows of conviction cannot enter now. What wilt thou anſwer him, when he riſeth up, and chargeth thee with thy unbelief and impenitency? Wilt thou ſay, thou waſt not warned? Conſcience within thee will give thee the lie: the ſecret groans and wearineſs of thoſe who warned thee, will witneſs the contrary. If a child or a fool did tell you, that your houſe were on fire, you would immediately run to quench it; but, in matters of eternal concern, men will firſt fill their hearts with prejudices againſt the meſſengers, and then caſt their meſſage behind their backs. But theſe ſilly ſhifts and pretences will not avail in the day of the Lord. How will theſe curſed ears, now deaf to the call of the goſpel, inviting ſinners to come to Chriſt, hear the fearful ſentence, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels? No ſleepy hearer ſhall be there: no man's heart will then wander: their hearts and eyes will then be fixed on their miſery, which they will not now believe. O that we knew in this our day, the things that belong to our peace.

Laſtly, Be exhorted to believe this great truth; and believe it ſo as you may prepare for the judgment betimes. Set up a ſecret tribunal in your own breaſts, and often call yourſelves to an account there. Make the Judge your friend in time, by cloſing with him in the offer of the goſpel; and give all diligence, that ye may be found in Chriſt, at that day. Caſt off the works of darkneſs, and live, as believing you are, at all times, and in all places, under the eye of your Judge, who will bring every work into judgment, wirh every ſecret thing. Be fruitful in good works, knowing that as ye ſow ye ſhall reap. Study piety towards God, righteouſneſs and charity towards men. Lay up in ſtore plenty of works of charity and mercy, towards them who are in diſtreſs, eſpecially ſuch as are of the houſhold of faith, that they may be produced that day as evidences, that ye belong to Chriſt. Shut not up your bowels of mercy, now, towards the needy; leſt ye then find no mercy. Take heed, that in all your works, ye be ſingle and ſincere: aiming in them all, at the glory of your Lord, a teſtimony of your love to him, and obedience to his command. Leave it to hypocrites, who have their reward, to proclaim every man his own goodneſs, and to ſound a trumpet, when they do their alms. It is a baſe and unchriſtian ſpirit, which cannot have ſatisfaction in a good work, unleſs it be expoſed to the view of others: it is utterly unworthy of one, who believes that the laſt trumpet ſhall call together the whole world: before whom the Judge himſelf ſhall publiſh works truly good, how ſecretly ſoever they were done. Live in a believing expectation of the coming of the Lord. Let your loins be always girt, and your lamps burning; ſo when he comes, whether in the laſt day of your life, or in the laſt day of the world, ye ſhall be able to ſay with joy, Lo, this is our God, and we have waited for him.

HEAD V.

The Kingdom of HEAVEN.

MATTH. xxv. 34.

Then ſhall the King ſay unto them on his right hand, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

HAving from this portion of ſcripture, which the text is a part of, diſcourſed of the general judgment; and being to ſpeak of the everlaſting happineſs of the ſaints, and the everlaſting miſery of the wicked, from the reſpective ſentences to be pronounced upon them, in the great day; I ſhall take them in the order wherein they lie before us; the rather that, as ſentence is firſt paſſed upon the righteous, ſo the execution thereof is firſt begun, though poſſibly the other may be fully executed before it be completed.

The words of the text contain the joyful ſentence itſelf, together with an hiſtorical introduction thereto, which gives us an account of the Judge pronouncing the ſentence, the King, Jeſus Chriſt; the parties on whom it is given, them on his right hand; and the time when, then, aſſoon as the trial is over. Of theſe I have ſpoke already. It is the ſentence itſelf we are now to conſider, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, &c. Stand aback, O ye profane goats; have away all unregenerate ſouls, not united to Jeſus Chriſt: this is not for you. Come, O ye ſaints, brought out of your natural ſtate, into the ſtate of grace, behold here the ſtate of glory awaiting you. Here is glory let down to us in words and ſyllables; a looking-glaſs, in which you may ſee your everlaſting happineſs; a ſcheme (or draught) of Chriſt's Father's houſe, wherein there are many manſions.

This glorious ſentence bears two things. (1.) The complete happineſs, to which the ſaints are adjudged, the kingdom. (2.) Their ſolemn admiſſion to it, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit, &c. Firſt, Their complete happineſs is a kingdom. A kingdom is the top of worldly felicity; there is nothing on earth greater than a kingdom; therefore the hidden weight of glory in heaven is held forth to us under that notion. But it is not an ordinary kingdom, it is the kingdom; the kingdom of heaven, ſurpaſſing all the kingdoms of the earth, in glory, honour, profit, and pleaſure, infinitely more than they do, in theſe, excel the low and inglorious condition of a beggar, in rags and on a dunghill. Secondly, There is a ſolemn admiſſion of the ſaints into this their kingdom, Come ye, inherit the kingdom. In the view of angels, men, and devils, they are inveſted with royalty, and ſolemnly inaugurated, before the whole world, by Jeſus Chriſt the heir of all things, who hath all power in heaven and in earth. Their right to the kingdom is ſolemnly recognized and owned. They are admitted to it, as undoubted heirs of the kingdom, to poſſeſs it by inheritance, or lot, as the word properly ſignifies, becauſe, of old, inheritances were deſigned by lot, as Canaan to Iſrael, God's firſt-born, as they are called, Exod. iv. 22. And becauſe this kingdom is the Father's kingdom, therefore they are openly acknowledged, in their admiſſion to it, to be the bleſſed of Chriſt's Father; the which bleſſing was given them, long before this ſentence, but is now ſolemnly recognized, and confirmed to them, by the Mediator, in his Father's name. It is obſervable, he ſays not, Ye bleſſed of the Father, but, Ye bleſſed of my Father; to ſhew us, that all bleſſings are derived upon us, from the Father, the Fountain of bleſſing, as he is the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, through whom we are bleſſed, Eph. i. 3. And finally, they are admitted to this kingdom, as that which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world, in God's eternal purpoſe, before they, or any of them, were; that all the world may ſee eternal life to be the free gift of God.

DOCTRINE, The ſaints ſhall be made completely happy, in the poſſeſſion of the kingdom of heaven.

Two things I ſhall here enquire into: (1.) The nature of this kingdom. (2.) The admiſſion of the ſaints thereto. And then I ſhall make ſome practical improvement of the whole.

FIRST, As to the nature of the kingdom of heaven, our knowledge of it is very imperfect; for eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, 1 Cor. ii. 9. As, by familiar reſemblances, parents inſtruct their little children, concerning things, of which otherwiſe they can have no tolerable notion: ſo our gracious God, in conſideration of our weakneſs, is pleaſed to repreſent to us heaven's happineſs, under ſimilitudes taken from earthly things, glorious in the eyes of men; ſince naked diſcoveries of the heavenly glory, diveſted of earthly reſemblances, would be too bright for our weak eyes, and in them we would loſe ourſelves. Wherefore now, one can but ſpeak as a child, of theſe things, which the day will fully diſcover.

The ſtate of glory is repreſented under the notion of a kingdom; a kingdom among men, being that in which the greateſt number of earthly good things doth concentre. Now every ſaint ſhall, as a king, inherit a kingdom. All Chriſt's ſubjects ſhall be kings, each one with his crown upon his head: not that the great King ſhall diveſt himſelf of his royalty, but he will make all his children partakers of his kingdom.

I. The ſaints ſhall have kingly power and authority given them. Our Lord gives not empty titles to his favourites; he makes them kings indeed. The dominion of the ſaints will be a dominion, far exceeding that of the greateſt monarch ever was in earth. They will be abſolute maſters over ſin, that ſometime had the dominion over them. They will have a complete rule over their own ſpirits; an entire management of all their affections and inclinations, which now create them ſo much moleſtation: the turbulent rout of corrupt affections ſhall be for ever expelled out of that kingdom, and never be able any more to give the leaſt diſturbance. They ſhall have power over the nations, the ungodly of all nations, and ſhall rule them with a rod of iron, Rev. ii. 26. 27. The whole world of the wicked ſhall be broken before them: Satan ſhall be bruiſed under their feet, Rom. xvi. 20. He ſhall never be able to faſten a temptation on them any more: but he will be judged by them; and, in their ſight, caſt with the reprobate crew, into the lake of fire and brimſtone. So ſhall they rule over their oppreſſors. Having fought the good fight, and got the victory, Chriſt will entertain them, as Joſhua did his captains, cauſing them come near, and put their feet on the necks of kings, Joſh. x. 24.

II. They ſhall have the enſigns of royalty. For a throne, Chriſt will grant them to ſit with him in his throne, Rev. iii. 21. They will be advanced to the higheſt honour and dignity they are capable of; and in the enjoyment of it, they will have an eternal undiſturbed repoſe, after all the toſſings they met with in the world, in their way to the throne. For a crown, they ſhall receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away, 1 Pet. v. 4. Not a crown of flowers, as ſubjects being conquerors, or victors, ſometimes have got: ſuch a crown quickly fades, but their crown never fadeth. Not a crown of gold, ſuch as earthly kings do wear: even a crown of gold is often ſtained, and at beſt can never make them happy who wear it. But it ſhall be a crown of glory. A crown of glory is a crown of life, (Rev. ii. 10.), that life, which knows no end: a crown which death can never make to fall off one's head. It muſt be an abiding crown; for it is a crown of righteouſneſs, 2 Tim. iv. 8. It was purchaſed for them by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is imputed to them; they are qualified for it, by inherent righteouſneſs; God's righteouſneſs or faithfulneſs ſecures it to them. They ſhall have a ſceptre, a rod of iron. (Rev. ii. 27.) terrible to all the wicked world. And a ſword too, a two-edged ſword in their hand, to execute vengeance upon the Heathen, and puniſhments upon the people, Pſal. cxlix. 6. 7. They ſhall have royal apparel. The royal robes in this kingdom are white robes, Rev. iii. 4. They ſhall walk with me in white. And theſe laſt do, in a very particular manner, point at the inconceiveable glory of the ſtate of the ſaints in heaven.

The Lord is pleaſed often to repreſent unto us, the glorious ſtate of the ſaints, under the notion of their being clothed in white garments. It is promiſed to the overcomer, that he ſhall be clothed in white raiment, Rev. iii. 5. The elders about the throne, are clothed in white raiment, chap. iv. 4. The multitude before the throne, are clothed with white robes, chap. vii. 9. arrayed in white robes, ver. 13. made white in the blood of the Lamb, ver. 14. I own, the two laſt teſtimonies adduced, do reſpect the ſtate of the ſaints on earth: but withal the terms are borrowed from the ſtate of the church in heaven. All garments, properly ſo called, being badges of ſin and ſhame, ſhall be laid aſide by the ſaints, when they come to their ſtate of glory. But if we conſider on what occaſions white garments were wont to be put on, we ſhall find much of heaven under them.

Firſt, The Romans, when they manumitted their bond ſervants, gave them a white garment, as a badge of their freedom. So ſhall the ſaints, that day, get on their white robes; for it is the day of the glorious liberty of the children of God, (Rom. viii. 21.) the day of the redemption of their body, ver. 33. They ſhall no more ſee the houſe of bondage, nor ly any more among the pots. If we compare the ſtate of the ſaints on earth, with that of the wicked, it is indeed a ſtate of freedom, whereas the other is a ſtate of ſlavery: but in compariſon with their ſtate in heaven, it is but a ſervitude. A ſaint on earth is indeed a young prince, and heir to the crown; but his motto may be, I ſerve; for he differeth nothing from a ſervant, though he be lord of all, Gal. iv. 1. What are the groans of a ſaint, the ſordid and baſe work he is ſometimes found employed in, the black and tattered garments he walks in, but badges of this comparative ſervitude? But from the day the ſaints come to the crown, they receive their complete freedom, and ſerve no more. They ſhall be fully freed from ſin, which of all evils is the worſt, both in itſelf, and in their apprehenſion too: how great then muſt that freedom be, when theſe Egyptians whom they ſee to-day, they ſhall ſee them again no more for ever? They ſhall be free from all temptation to ſin: Satan can have no acceſs to tempt them any more, by himſelf, nor by his agents. A full anſwer will then be given to that petition, they have ſo often repeated, Lead us not into temptation. No hiſſing ſerpent can come into the paradiſe above: no ſnare nor trap can be laid there, to catch the feet of ſaints: they may walk there fearleſsly, for they can be in no hazard: there are no lions dens, no mountains of the leopards, in the promiſed land. Nay, they ſhall be ſet beyond the poſſibility of ſinning, for they ſhall be confirmed in goodneſs. It will be the conſummate freedom of their will, to be for ever unalterably determined to good. And they ſhall be freed from all the effects of ſin; There ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain, Rev. xxi. 4. What kingdom is like unto this? Death makes it way now into a palace, as eaſily as into a cottage: ſorrow fills the heart of one who wears a crown on his head: royal robes are no fence againſt pain, and crying by reaſon of pain. But in this kingdom no miſery can have place. All reproaches ſhall be wiped off; and never ſhall a tear drop any more from their eyes. They ſhall not complain of deſertions again; the Lord will never hide his face from them: but the Sun of righteouſneſs ſhining upon them, in his meridian brightneſs, will diſpel all clouds, and give them an everlaſting day, without the leaſt mixture of darkneſs. A deluge of wrath, after a fearful thunder-clap from the throne, will ſweep away the wicked from before the judgment-ſeat, into the lake of fire: but they are, in the firſt place, like Noah, brought into the ark, and out of harm's way.

Secondly, White raiment hath been a token of purity; therefore the Lamb's wife is arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, Rev. xix. 8. And thoſe who ſtood before the throne, waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, chap. vii. 14. The ſaints ſhall then put on the robes of perfect purity, and ſhine in ſpotleſs holineſs, like the ſun in his ſtrength, without the leaſt cloud to intercept his light. Abſolute innocence ſhall then be reſtored, and every appearance of ſin baniſhed far from this kingdom. The guilt of ſin, and the reigning power of it, are now taken away in the ſaints; nevertheleſs ſin dwelleth in them, Rom. vii. 20. But then it ſhall be no more in them: the corrupt nature will be quite removed, that root of bitterneſs will be plucked up, and no veſtiges of it left in their ſouls; their nature ſhall be altogether pure and ſinleſs. There ſhall be no darkneſs in their minds: but the underſtanding of every ſaint, when he is come to his kingdom, will be as a globe of pure unmixed light. There ſhall not be the leaſt averſion to good, or inclination to evil in their wills: but they will be brought to a perfect conformity to the will of God; bleſt with angelical purity, and fixed therein. Their affections ſhall not be liable to the leaſt diſorder or irregularity: it will coſt them no trouble to keep them right: they will get ſuch a ſet of purity, as they can never loſe. They will be ſo refined from all earthly droſs, as never to ſavour more of any thing but heaven. Were it poſſible they ſhould be ſet again amidſt the enſnaring objects of an evil world, they ſhould walk among them without the leaſt defilement; as the ſun ſhines on the dunghill, yet untainted; and as the angels preſerved their purity in the midſt of Sodom. Their graces ſhall then be perfected; and all the imperfections now cleaving to them, done away. There will be no more ground for complaints of weakneſs of grace: none in that kingdom ſhall complain of an ill heart, or a corrupt nature. It doth not yet appear what we ſhall be, but——when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him, 1 John iii. 2.

Thirdly, Among the Jews, theſe who deſired to be admitted into the prieſtly office, being tried, and found to be of the prieſt's line, and without blemiſh, were clothed in white, and enrolled among the prieſts. This ſeems to be alluded to, Rev. iii. 5. He that overcometh the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life. So the ſaints ſhall not be kings only, but prieſts withal; for they are a Royal Prieſthood, 1 Pet. ii. 9. They will be prieſts upon their thrones. They are judicially found deſcended from the great High-Prieſt of their profeſſion, begotten of him by his Spirit, of the incorruptible ſeed of the word, and without blemiſh: ſo the trial being over, they are admitted to be prieſts in the temple above, that they may dwell in the houſe of the Lord for ever. There is nothing upon earth more glorious than a kingdom, nothing more venerable than the Prieſthood: and both meet together in the glorified ſtate of the ſaints. The general aſſembly of the firſt-born, (Heb. xii. 23.) whoſe is the prieſthood and the double portion, appearing in their white robes of glory, will be a reverend and glorious company. That day will ſhew them to be the perſons whom the Lord has choſen out of all the tribes of the earth, to be near unto him, and to enter into his temple, even into his holy place. Their prieſthood begun on earth, ſhall be brought to its perfection, while they ſhall be employed in offering the ſacrifice of praiſe to God and the Lamb, for ever and ever. They got not their portion in the earth, with the reſt of the tribes; but the Lord himſelf was their portion, and will be their double portion, through the ages of eternity.

Fourthly, They were wont to wear white raiment, in a time of triumph; to the which alſo there ſeems to be an alluſion, Rev. iii. 5. He that overcometh, the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment. And what is heaven, but an everlaſting triumph? None can get thither, but ſuch as fight, and overcome too. Though Canaan was given to the Iſraelites, as an inheritance: they behoved to conquer it, ere they could be poſſeſſors of it. The ſaints, in this world, are in the field of battle; often in red garments, garments rolled in blood: but the day approacheth in which they ſhall ſtand before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands, Rev. vii. 9. having obtained a complete victory over all their enemies. The palm was uſed as a ſign of victory; becauſe that tree, oppreſſed with weights, yieldeth not, but rather ſhooteth upwards. And palm-trees were carved on the doors of the moſt holy place, 1 Kings vi. 32. which was a ſpecial type of heaven; for heaven is the place which the ſaints are received into, as conquerors.

Behold the joy and peace of the ſaints, in their white robes. The joys ariſing from the view of paſt dangers, and of riches and honours gained at the very door of death do moſt ſenſibly touch one's heart: and this will be an ingredient in the everlaſting happineſs of the ſaints, which could have had no place, in the heaven of innocent Adam, and his ſinleſs offſpring, ſuppoſing him to have ſtood. Surely the glorified ſaints will not forget the entertainment they met with in the world: it will be for the glory of God to remember it, and alſo for the heightening of their joy. The Sicilian king, by birth the ſon of a potter, acted a wiſe part, in that he would be ſerved at his table with earthen veſſels; the which could not but put an additional ſweetneſs in his meals, not to be reliſhed by one born heir to the crown. Can ever meat be ſo ſweet to any as to the hungry man? Or can any have ſuch a reliſh of plenty, as he who has been under pinching ſtraits? The more difficulties the ſaints have paſſed through, in their way to heaven, the place will be the ſweeter to them, when they come at it. Every happy ſtroke, ſtruck in the ſpiritual warfare, will be a jewel in their crown of glory. Each victory obtained againſt ſin, Satan, and the world, will raiſe their triumphant joy the higher. The remembrance of the croſs will ſweeten the crown: and the memory of their travel through the wilderneſs will put an additional verdure on the fields of glory; while they walk through them, minding the day, when they went mourning without the ſun.

And now that they appear triumphing in white robes, it is a ſign they have obtained an honourable peace: ſuch a peace as their enemies can diſturb no more. So every thing peculiarly adapted to their militant condition is laid aſide. The ſword is laid down; and they betake themſelves to the pen of a ready writer, to commemorate the praiſes of him, by whom they overcame. Publick ordinances, preaching, ſacraments, ſhall be honourably laid aſide; there is no temple there, Rev. xxi. 22. Sometimes theſe were ſweet to them: but the travellers being all got home, the inns appointed for their entertainment by the way, are ſhut up: the candles are put out, when the ſun is riſen; and the tabernacle uſed in the wilderneſs is folded up, when the temple of glory is come in its room. Many of the ſaints duties will then be laid aſide; as one gives his ſtaff out of his hand, when he is come to the end of his journey. Praying ſhall then be turned into praiſing, and there being no ſin to confeſs, no wants to ſeek ſupply of: confeſſion and petition ſhall be ſwallowed up in everlaſting thankſgiving. There will be no mourning in heaven, they have ſown in tears. The reaping time of joy is come, and God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes, Rev. xxi. 4. No need of mortification there; and ſelf-examination is then at an end. They will not need to watch any more; the danger is over. Patience has had its perfect work, and there is no uſe for it there. Faith is turned into ſight, and hope is ſwallowed up in the ocean of ſenſible and full enjoyment. All the rebels are ſubdued, the ſaints quietly ſet on their throne; and ſo the forces, needful in the time of the ſpiritual warfare, are diſbanded; and they carry on their triumph in profoundeſt peace.

Laſtly, White garments were worn on feſtival days, in token of joy. And ſo ſhall the ſaints be clothed in white raiment, for they ſhall keep an everlaſting Sabbath to the Lord, Heb. iv. 9. There remaineth therefore a reſt (or keeping of a Sabbath) to the people of God. The Sabbath, in the eſteem of ſaints, is the queen of days; and they ſhall have an endleſs Sabbatiſm in the kingdom of heaven; ſo ſhall their garments be always white. They will have an eternal reſt, with an uninterrupted joy: for heaven is not a reſting place, where men may ſleep out an eternity: (there they reſt not day nor night) but their work is their reſt, and continual recreation; and toil and wearineſs have no place there. They reſt there in God, who is the centre of their ſouls. Here they find the completement, or ſatisfaction, of all their deſires; having the full enjoyment of God, and uninterrupted communion with him. This is the point unto the which till the ſoul come, it will always be reſtleſs: but that point reached, it reſts; for he is the laſt end, and the ſoul can go no further. It cannot underſtand, will, nor deſire more; but in him it has what is commenſurable to its boundleſs deſires. This is the happy end of all the labours of the ſaints; their toil and ſorrows iſſue in a joyful reſt. The Chaldeans meaſuring their natural day, put the day firſt, and the night laſt: but the Jews counted the night firſt, and the day laſt Even ſo the wicked begin with a day of reſt and pleaſure; but end with a night of everlaſting toil and ſorrow: but God's people have their gloomy night firſt, and then comes their day of eternal reſt. The which, Abraham in the parable, obſerved to the rich man in hell, Luke xvi. 25. Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

III. If one enquires where the kingdom of the ſaints lies? It is not in this world; it lies in a better country, that is an heavenly, Heb. xi. 16. a country better than the beſt of this world; namely, the heavenly Canaan, Immanuel's land, where nothing is wanting to complete the happineſs of the inhabitants. This is the happy country, bleſſed with a perpetual ſpring, and which yieldeth all things, for neceſſity, conveniency, and delight. There men ſhall eat angels food; they ſhall be entertained with the hidden manna, Rev. ii. 17. without being ſet to the painful gathering of it: they will be fed to the full, with the product of the land falling into their mouths, without the leaſt toil to them. That land enjoys an everlaſting day; for there is no night there, Rev. xxi. 25. An eternal ſun ſhine beautifies this better country; but there is no ſcorching heat there. No clouds ſhall be ſeen there for ever; yet it is not a land of drought: the trees of the Lord's planting are ſet by the rivers of water, and ſhall never want moiſture; for they will have an eternal ſupply of the Spirit, by Jeſus Chriſt, from his Father. This is the country from whence our Lord came, and whither he is gone again; the country which all the holy patriarchs and prophets had their eye upon, while on earth; and which all the ſaints, who have gone before us, have fought their way to; and unto which, the martyrs have joyfully ſwimmed through a ſea of blood. This earth is the place of the ſaints pilgrimage; that is their country, where they find their everlaſting reſt.

IV. The royal city is that great city, the holy Jeruſalem, deſcribed at large, Rev. xxi. 10. to the end of the chapter. (It is true, ſome learned divines place this city in the earth: but the particulars of the deſcription ſeem to me favour thoſe moſt, who point us to the other world for it.) The ſaints ſhall reign in that city, whoſe wall is of jaſper, (verſe 16.) and the foundations of the wall garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones, verſe 19. and the ſtreet of pure gold, (verſe 21.) So that their feet ſhall be ſet on that, which the men of this world ſet their hearts upon. This is the city God has prepared for them, (Heb. xi. 16.) a city that hath foundations, (verſe 10.) a continuing city, (chap. xiii. 14.) which ſhall ſtand and flouriſh, when all the cities of the world are laid in aſhes; and which ſhall not be moved, when the foundations of the world are overturned. It is a city, that never changeth its inhabitants; none of them ſhall ever be removed out of it; for life and immortality reign there, and no death can enter into it. It is bleſſed with a perpetual peace, and can never be in the leaſt diſturbed. Nothing from without can annoy it; the gates thereof are not ſhut at all by day; and there is no night there, Rev. xxi. 25. There can nothing from within trouble it. No want of proviſion there, no ſcarcity; no diſcord amongſt the inhabitants. Whatever contentions are amongſt the ſaints now, no veſtige of their former jarrings ſhall remain there. Love to God and to one another, ſhall be perfected: and theſe of them, who ſtood at greateſt diſtance here, will joyfully embrace and delight in one another there.

V. The royal Palace is Chriſt's Father's houſe in which are many manſions, John xiv. 2. There ſhall the ſaints dwell for ever. That is the houſe prepared for all the heirs of glory, even theſe of them who dwell in the meaneſt cottage now, or have not where to lay their heads. As our Lord calls his ſaints to a kingdom, he will provide them a houſe ſuitable to the dignity he puts upon them. Heaven will be a convenient, ſpacious, and glorious houſe, for thoſe whom the king delighteth to honour. Never was a houſe purchaſed at ſo dear a rate as this, being the purchaſe of the Mediator's blood; and no leſs could it be afforded for to them; never was there ſo much ado, to fit inhabitants for a houſe. The ſaints were, by nature, utterly unfit for this houſe, and human art and induſtry could not make them meet for it. But the Father gives the deſigned inhabitants to his Son, to be by him redeemed; the ſon pays the price of their redemption, even his own precious blood; that with the allowance of juſtice, they may have acceſs to the houſe: and the holy ſpirit ſanctifies them by his grace, that they may be meet to come in thither, where no unclean thing can enter. And no marvel, for it is the King's palace, they enter into, (Pſal. xlv. 15.) The houſe of the kingdom, where the great King keeps his court, where he has his throne, and ſhews forth his glory, in a ſingular manner, beyond what mortals can conceive.

VI. Paradiſe is their Palace-garden. This day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe, ſaid our Saviour to the penitent thief on the croſs, Luke xxiii. 43. Heaven is a paradiſe for pleaſure and delight, where there is both wood and water; A pure river of water of life, clear as cryſtal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb, and of either ſide of the river, the tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, and yields her fruit every month, Rev. xxii. 1. 2. How happy might innocent Adam have been in the earthly paradiſe, where there was nothing wanting for neceſſity, nor delight! Eden was the moſt pleaſant ſpot of the uncorrupted earth, and paradiſe the moſt pleaſant ſpot of Eden; but what is earth in compariſon of heaven? The glorified ſaints are advanced to the heavenly paradiſe. There they ſhall not only ſee, but eat of the tree of life, which is in the midſt of the paradiſe of God, Rev. ii. 7. They ſhall behold the Mediator's glory, and be ſatisfied with his goodneſs. No flaming ſword will be there, to keep the way of the tree of life, but they ſhall freely eat of it, and live for ever. And they ſhall drink of the river of pleaſures, (Pſal. xxxvi. 8.) theſe ſweeteſt and pureſt pleaſures, the which Immanuel's land doth afford; and ſhall ſwim in an ocean of unmixed delight for evermore.

VII. They ſhall have royal treaſures, ſufficient to ſupport the dignity they are advanced unto. Since the ſtreet of the royal city is pure gold, and the twelve gates thereof are twelve pearls; their treaſure muſt be of that which is better than gold or pearl. It is an eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. iv. 17. O precious treaſure! a treaſure not liable to inſenſible corruption, by moth, or ruſt; a treaſure which none can ſteal from them, Matth. vi. 23. Never did any kingdom afford ſuch a precious treaſure, nor a treaſure of ſuch variety: for he that overcometh ſhall inherit all things, Rev. xxi. 7. No treaſures on earth are ſtored with all things; if they were all put together in one, there would be far more valuable things wanting in that one, than found in it. This then is the peculiar treaſure of theſe kings, who inherit the kingdom of heaven. They ſhall want nothing that may contribute to their full ſatisfaction. Now they are rich in hope: but then they will have their riches in hand. Now all things are theirs in reſpect of right: then all ſhall be theirs in poſſeſſion. They may go for ever through Immanuel's land, and behold the glory and riches thereof, with the ſatisfying thought, that all they ſee is their own. It is pity theſe ſhould ever be uneaſy under the want of earthly good things, who may be ſure they ſhall inherit all things at length.

VIII. Albeit there is no (material) temple therein, no mediate ſerving of God in the uſe of ordinances, as here on earth; yet, as for this kingdom, The Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple of it, Rev. xxi. 22. As the temple was the glory of Canaan, ſo will the celeſtial temple be the glory of heaven. The ſaints ſhall be brought in thither as a royal prieſthood, to dwell in the houſe of God for ever: for Jeſus Chriſt will then make every ſaint a pillar in the temple of God, and he ſhall go no more out, Rev. iii. 12. as the prieſts and Levites did, in their courſes, go out of the material temple. There the ſaints ſhall have the cloud of glory, the divine preſence, with moſt intimate and uninterrupted communion with God: there they ſhall have Jeſus Chriſt, the true ark, wherein the fiery law ſhall be for ever hid from their eyes: and the mercy-ſeat, from which nothing ſhall be breathed, but everlaſting peace and goodwill towards them: the cherubims, the ſociety of holy angels, who ſhall join with them in eternal admiration of the myſtery of Chriſt: the golden candleſtick, with its ſeven lamps, for the glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof, Rev. xxi. 23. the incenſe-altar, in the interceſſion of Chriſt, who ever liveth to make interceſſion for them, Heb. vii. 25. eternally exhibiting the merits of his death and ſufferings; and efficaciouſly willing for ever, that theſe, whom the Father had given him, be with him: and the ſhew-bread table, in the perpetual feaſt, they ſhall have together, in the enjoyment of God. This leads me more particularly to conſider

IX. The ſociety in this kingdom. What would royal power and authority, enſigns of royalty, richeſt treaſures, and all other advantages of kingdoms, avail, without comfortable ſociety? ſome crowned heads have had but a ſorry life through the want of it: their palaces have been but unto them as priſons, and their badges of honour as chains on a priſoner: while hated of all, they had none they could truſt in, or whom they could have comfortable fellowſhip with, but the chief part of heavens happineſs lies in the bleſſed ſociety the ſaints ſhall have there. For clearing of which, conſider theſe few things.

Firſt, The ſociety of the ſaints, among themſelves, will be no ſmall part of heaven's happineſs. The communion of ſaints on earth is highly prized by all theſe who are travelling through the world unto Zion: and companions in ſin can never have ſuch true pleaſure and delight in one another, as ſometimes the Lord's people have in praying together, and converſing about theſe things which the world is a ſtranger to. Here the ſaints are but few in company, at beſt: and ſome are ſo poſted as that they ſeem to themſelves to dwell alone; having no acceſs to ſuch, as they would freely unboſom themſelves to, in the matter of their ſpiritual caſe; they ſigh and ſay, Wo is me! For I am as when they have gathered the ſummer-fruits--there is no cluſter to eat: the good man is periſhed out of the earth, Micah vii. 1. 2. But in the general aſſembly of the firſt-born in heaven, none of all the ſaints, who ever were, or will be on the earth, ſhall be a-miſſing. They will be all of them together in one place, all poſſeſs one kingdom, all ſit down together to the marriage ſupper of the Lamb. Here the beſt of ſaints want not their ſinful imperfections, making their ſociety leſs comfortable: but there they ſhall be perfect, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, Eph. v. 27. And all natural, as well as ſinful imperfections, are then done away: they ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, Dan. xii. 3.

There we will ſee Adam and Eve in the heavenly paradiſe, freely eating of the tree of life; Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the holy patriarchs, no more wandering from land to land, but come to their everlaſting reſt, all the prophets feeding their eyes on the glory of him, of whoſe coming they propheſied: the twelve apoſtles of the Lamb ſitting on their twelve thrones; all the holy martyrs in their long white robes, with their crowns upon their heads: the godly kings advanced to a kingdom which cannot be moved; and them that turn many to righteouſneſs, ſhining as the ſtars for ever and ever. There will we ſee our godly friends, relations, and acquaintances, pillars in the temple of God, to go no more out from us. And it is more than probable, that the ſaints will know one another in heaven; that at leaſt, they will know their friends, relatives, and theſe they were acquainted with on earth, and ſuch as have been moſt eminent in the church: howbeit that knowledge will be purged from all earthly thoughts and affections. This ſeems to be included in that perfection of happineſs to which the ſaints ſhall be advanced there. If Adam knew who and what Eve was, at firſt ſight, when the Lord God brought her to him, (Gen. ii. 23. 24.) why ſhould one queſtion, but huſbands and wives, parents and children will know each other in glory? If the Theſſalonians, converted by Paul's miniſtry, ſhall be his crown of rejoicing in the preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, at his coming, (1 Theſſ. ix. 19.) why may not one conclude that miniſters will know their people, and people their miniſters, in heaven? And if the diſciples, on the mount of transfiguration, knew Moſes and Elias, whom they had never ſeen before, (Matth. xvii. 4.) we have ground to think, we ſhall know them too, and ſuch as they, when we come to heaven. The communion of ſaints ſhall be moſt intimate there; they ſhall ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, Matth. viii. 11. Lazarus was carried by the angels into Abraham's boſom, (Luke xvi. 23.) which denotes moſt intimate and familiar ſociety. And though diverſity of tongues ſhall ceaſe, 1 Cor. xiii. 8. I make no queſtion, but there will be an uſe of ſpeech in heaven; and that the ſaints ſhall glorify God in their bodies there, as well as in their ſpirits, ſpeaking forth his praiſes with an audible voice. (As for the language, we ſhall underſtand what it is, when we come thither.) When Paul was caught up to the third heavens, the ſeat of the Bleſſed, he heard there unſpeakable words, which is not lawful for a man to utter, 2 Cor. xii. 4. Moſes and Elias, on the mount with Chriſt, talked with him, Matth. xvii. 3. and ſpake of his deceaſe which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem, Luke ix. 31.

Secondly, The ſaints will have the ſociety of all the holy angels there. An innumerable company of angels ſhall be companions to them in their glorified ſtate. Happy were the ſhepherds, who heard the ſong of the heavenly hoſt, when Chriſt was born! but thrice happy they, who ſhall join their voices to theirs in the choir of ſaints and angels in heaven, when he ſhall be glorified in all who ſhall be about him there! Then ſhall we be brought acquainted with theſe bleſſed ſpirits who never ſinned. How bright will theſe morning-ſtars ſhine in the holy place! they were miniſtering ſpirits to the heirs of ſalvation, loved them for their Lord and Maſter's ſake; encamped round about them, to preſerve them from danger; how joyſully will they welcome them to their everlaſting habitations, and rejoice to ſee them come at length to their kingdom, as the tutor doth his pupils! The ſaints ſhall be no more afraid of them, as ſometime they were wont to be: they ſhall have put off mortality, and infirmities of the fleſh, and be themſelves, as the angels of God, fit to entertain communion and fellowſhip with theſe ſhining ones. And both being brought under one head, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, they ſhall join in the praiſes of God, and of the Lamb, ſaying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, &c. Rev. v. 11. 12. Whether the angels ſhall (as ſome think) aſſume airy bodies, that they may be ſeen by the bodily eyes of the ſaints, and be in nearer capacity to converſe with them, I know not; but, as they want not ways of converſe amongſt themſelves, we have no reaſon to think that converſation betwixt them and the ſaints, ſhall be for ever blocked up.

Laſtly, They ſhall have ſociety with the Lord himſelf in heaven, glorious communion with God and Chriſt, which is the perfection of happineſs. I chuſe to ſpeak of communion with God and the man Chriſt, together; becauſe as we derive our grace from the Lamb, ſo we will derive our glory from him too, the man Chriſt being (if I may be allowed the expreſſion) the centre of the divine glory in heaven, from whence it is diffuſed unto all the ſaints. This ſeems to be taught us by theſe ſcriptures which expreſs heaven's happineſs, by being with Chriſt. Luke xxiii. 43. This Day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe. John xvii 24. Father, I will that theſe alſo whom thou haſt given me, be with me, (and remarkable to this purpoſe is what follows,) that they may behold my glory. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. So ſhall we ever be with the Lord, to wit the Lord Chriſt, whom we ſhall meet in the air. This alſo ſeems to be the import of theſe ſcriptures wherein God and the Lamb, the ſlain Saviour, are jointly ſpoken of, in the point of the happineſs of the ſaints in heaven, Rev. vii. 17. For the Lamb which is in the midſt of the throne, ſhall feed them, and ſhall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes, Chap. xxi. 3. Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, to wit, as in a tabernacle, (ſo the word ſignifies,) that is, in the fleſh of Chriſt, (Compare John i. 14.) and ver. 22. The Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple of it. Here lies the chief happineſs of the ſaints in heaven; that without which they could never be happy, though lodged in that glorious place, and bleſſed with the ſociety of angels there. What I will venture to ſay of it, ſhall be compriſed in three things.

1ſt. The ſaints in heaven ſhall have the glorious preſence of God, and of the Lamb: God himſelf ſhall be with them, Rev. xxi. 3. And they ſhall ever be with the Lord. God is every where preſent, in reſpect of his eſſence: the ſaints militant have his ſpecial gracious preſence. There they are brought near to the throne of the great King, and ſtand before him, where he ſhews his inconceivable glory. There they have the tabernacle of God, on which the cloud of glory reſts, the all glorious human nature of Chriſt, wherein the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells, not vailed as in the days of his humiliation, but, ſhining through that bleſſed fleſh (that all the ſaints may behold his glory) and making that body more glorious than a thouſand ſuns: ſo that the city has no need of the ſun, nor of the moon, but the glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof, (properly the candle thereof) Rev. xxi. 23. i. e. The Lamb is the luminary, or luminous body, which gives light to the city; as the ſun and moon now give light to the world, or as a candle lightens a dark room: and the light proceeding from that glorious luminary, for the city is the glory of God. Sometime the candle burnt very dim, it was hid under a buſhel, in the time of his humiliation! but that, now and then, it darted out ſome rays of this light, which dazzled the eyes of the ſpectators; but now it is ſet on high, in the city of God, where it ſhines, and ſhall ſhine for ever, in perfection of glory. It was ſometimes laid aſide, as a ſtone diſallowed of the builders: but now it is, and forever will be the light or luminary of that city; and that, like unto a ſtone moſt precious, even like a jaſper ſtone, clear as cryſtal, ver 11.

Who can conceive the happineſs of the ſaints, in the preſence-chamber of the great King, where he ſits in his chair of ſtate, making his glory eminently to appear in the man Chriſt? His gracious preſence makes a mighty change upon the ſaints in this world: his glorious preſence in heaven then muſt needs ſcrew up their graces to their perfection, and elevate their capacities. The ſaints do experience, that the preſence of God now with them in his grace, can make a little heaven of a ſort of hell: how great then muſt the glory of heaven be, by his preſence there in his glory! If a candle, in ſome ſort, beautifies a cottage or priſon, how will the ſhining ſun beautify a palace or paradiſe! The gracious preſence of God made a wilderneſs lightſome to Moſes, the valley of the ſhadow of death to David, a fiery furnace to the three children: what a raviſhing beauty ſhall then ariſe from the ſun of righteouſneſs, ſhining in his meridian brightneſs on the ſtreet of the city laid with pure gold? This glorious preſence of God in heaven will put a glory on the ſaints themſelves. The pleaſanteſt garden hath no beauty, when the darkneſs of the night ſits down on it; but the ſhining ſun puts a glory on the blackeſt mountains; ſo theſe who are now as bottles in the ſmoke, when ſet in the glorious preſence ot God, will be glorious both in ſoul and body.

2dly, The ſaints in heaven ſhall have the full enjoyment of God and of the Lamb. This is it that perfectly ſatisfies the rational creature; and here is the ſaints everlaſting reſt. This will make up all their wants, and fill the deſires of their ſouls, which after all here obtained, ſtill cry, Give, give, not without ſome anxiety: becauſe though they do enjoy God, yet they do not enjoy him fully. As to the way and manner of this enjoyment, our Lord tells us, John xvii. 3. This is life eternal, that they may know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent. Now there are two ways how a deſirable object is known moſt perfectly and ſatisfyingly; the one is by ſight, the other is by experience: ſight ſatisfies the underſtanding, and experience ſatisfies the will. Accordingly one may ſay, that the ſaints enjoy God and the Lamb in heaven. (1.) By an intuitive knowledge. (2.) By an experimental knowledge, both of them perfect, I mean, in reſpect of the capacity of the creature; for otherwiſe a creature's perfect knowledge of an infinite Being is impoſſible. The ſaints below enjoy God, in that knowledge they have of him by report, from his holy word, which they believe; they ſee him likewiſe darkly in the glaſs of ordinances, which do, as it were, repreſent the bridegroom's picture, or ſhadow, while he is abſent: they have alſo ſome experimental knowledge of him; they taſte that God is good, and the Lord is gracious. But the ſaints above ſhall not need a good report of the king, they ſhall ſee himſelf; therefore faith ceaſeth; they will behold his own face; therefore ordinances are no more: there is no need of a glaſs: they ſhall drink, and drink abundantly of that whereof they have taſted; and ſo hope ceaſeth, for they are at the utmoſt bounds of their deſires.

1. The ſaints in heaven ſhall enjoy God and the Lamb, by ſight, and that in a moſt perfect manner, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. For now we ſee through a glaſs darkly; but then face to face. Here our ſight is but mediate, as by a glaſs, in which we ſee not things themſelves, but the images of things: but there we ſhall have an immediate view of God and the Lamb. Here our knowledge is but obſcure: there it ſhall be clear without the leaſt mixture of darkneſs. The Lord doth now converſe with his ſaints, through the latteſſes of ordinances: but then ſhall they be in the preſence chamber with him. There is a vail now on the glorious face, as to us; but when we come to the upper-houſe, that vail, through which ſome rays of beauty are now darted, will be found entirely taken off; and then ſhall glorious excellencies and perfections, not ſeen in him by mortals, be clearly diſcovered, for we ſhall ſee his face, Rev. xxii. 4. The phraſe ſeems to be borrowed from the honour put on ſome in the courts of monarchs, to be attendants on the king's perſon. We read. Jer. lii. 25. ſeven men of them, that were (Heb. Seers of the king's face, i. e. as we read it) near the king's perſon. O unſpeakable glory! the great King keeps his court in heaven; and the ſaints his courtiers ever near the King's perſon, ſeeing his face. The throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it, and his ſervants ſhall ſerve him, and they ſhall ſee his face, Rev. xxii. 3. 4.

(1.) They ſhall ſee Jeſus Chriſt with their bodily eyes, ſince he will never lay aſide the human nature. They will always behold that glorious bleſſed body, which is perſonally united to the divine nature, and exalted far above principalities and powers, and every name that is named. There we will ſee with our eyes, that very body which was born of Mary at Bethlehem, and crueified at Jeruſalem betwixt two thieves; the bleſſed head, that was crowned with thorns; the face, that was ſpit upon; the hands and feet, that were nailed to the croſs; all ſhining with inconceivable glory. The glory of the man Chriſt will attract the eyes of all the ſaints, and he will be for ever admired in all them that believe, 2 Theſſ. i. 10. Were each ſtar in the heavens, ſhining as the ſun in its meridian brightneſs, and the light of the ſun ſo increaſed, as the ſtars, in that caſe, ſhould bear the ſame proportion to the ſun, in point of light, that they do now; it might poſſibly be ſome faint reſemblance of the glory of the man Chriſt, in compariſon with that of the ſaints; for though the ſaints ſhall ſhine forth as the ſun; yet not they, but the Lamb ſhall be the light of the city. The wiſe men fell down, and worſhipped him, when they ſaw him a young child, with Mary his mother, in the houſe. But, O what raviſhing ſight will it be to ſee him in his kingdom, on his throne, at the Father's right hand! The Word was made fleſh, (John i. 14.) and the glory of God ſhall ſhine through that fleſh, and the joys of heaven ſpring out from it, unto the ſaints, who ſhall ſee and enjoy God in Chriſt. For ſince the union betwixt Chriſt and the ſaints is never diſſolved, but they continue his members for ever; and the members cannot draw their life, but from their head: ſeeing that which is independent on the head, as to vital influence, is no member: therefore Jeſus Chriſt will remain the everlaſtlaſting bond of union betwixt God and the ſaints; from whence their eternal life ſhall ſpring, John xvii. 2. 3. Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, &c. ver. 22. 23. And the glory which thou gaveſt me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one: I in him, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one. Wherefore the immediate enjoyment of God in heaven is to be underſtood, in reſpect of the laying aſide of the word and ſacraments, and ſuch external means as we enjoy God by in this world; but not as if the ſaints ſhould then caſt off their dependence ou their Head for vital influences: nay, the Lamb which is in the midſt of the throne, ſhall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of waters, Rev. vii. 17.

Now when we ſhall behold him, who died for us, that we might live for evermore, whoſe matchleſs love made him ſwim through the Red Sea of God's wrath to make a path in the midſt of it for us, by which we might paſs ſafely to Canaan's land; then we will ſee what a glorious one he is, who ſuffered all this for us; what entertainment he had in the upper-houſe; what hallelujahs of angels could not hinder him to hear the groans of a periſhing multitude on earth, and to come down for their help; and what a glory he laid aſide for us. Then will we be more able to comprehend with all ſaints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Chriſt, which paſſeth knowledge, Eph. iii. 18. 19. When the ſaints ſhall remember, that the waters of wrath he was plunged into, are the wells of ſalvation, from whence they draw all their joy; that they have got the cup of ſalvation in exchange of the cup of wrath, his Father gave him to drink, which his ſinleſs human nature ſhivered at; how will their hearts leap within them, burn with ſeraphic love, like coals of juniper, and the arch of heaven ring with their ſongs of ſalvation! The Jews, celebrating the feaſt of tabernacles, (which was the moſt joyful of all their feaſts, and laſted ſeven days) went once every day about the altar, ſinging Hoſanna, with their myrtle palms, and willow branches in their hands, (the two former ſigns of victory, the laſt of chaſtity) in the mean time bending their boughs towards the altar. When the ſaints are preſented, as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt; and as conquerors have got their palms in their hands, how joyfully will they compaſs the altar evermore, and ſing their Hoſannas, or rather their Hallelujahs about it, bending their palms towards it, acknowledging themſelves to owe all unto the Lamb that was ſlain, and redeemed them with his blood! And to this agrees what John ſaw, Rev. vii. 9. 10. A great multitude—ſtood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Salvation to our God which ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

(2.) They ſhall ſee God, Matth. v. 8. They will be happy in ſeeing the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt, (not with their bodily eyes, in reſpect of which God is inviſible, 1 Tim. i. 17. but) with the eyes of their underſtanding; being bleſſed with the moſt perfect, full, and clear knowledge of God and divine things, which the creature is capable of. This is called the beatific viſion, and is the perfection of the underſtanding, the utmoſt term thereof, it is but an obſcure delineation of the glory of God, that mortals can have on earth; a ſight as it were, of his back parts, Exod. xxxiii. 23. But there they will ſee his face, Rev. xxii. 4. They ſhall ſee him in the fulneſs of his glory, and behold him fixedly: whereas it is but a paſſing view they can have of him here, Exod. xxxiv. 6. There is a vaſt difference betwixt the ſight of a king in his night-cloaths, quickly paſſing by us; and a fixed leiſure view of him, ſitting on his throne in his royal robes, his crown on his head, and his ſceptre in his hand: ſuch a difference will there be, betwixt the greateſt manifeſtation of God that ever a ſaint had on earth, and the diſplay of his glory that ſhall be ſeen in heaven. There the ſaints ſhall eternally, without interruption, feed their eyes upon him, and be ever viewing his glorious perfections. And as their bodily eyes ſhall be ſtrengthened, and fitted to behold the glorious majeſty of the man Chriſt; as eagles gaze on the ſun without being blinded thereby; ſo their minds ſhall have ſuch an elevation as will fit them to ſee God in his glory: their capacities ſhall be enlarged, according to the meaſure in which he ſhall be pleaſed to communicate himſelf unto them for their complete happineſs.

This bliſsful ſight of God, being quite above our preſent capacities, we muſt needs be much in the dark about it. But it ſeems to be ſomething elſe, than the ſight of that glory, which we will ſee with our bodily eyes, in the ſaints, and in the man Chriſt, or any other ſplendor or refulgence from the Godhead whatſoever; for no created thing can be our chief good and happineſs, nor fully ſatisfy our ſouls; and it is plain, that theſe things are ſomewhat different from God himſelf. Therefore I conceive, that the ſouls of the ſaints ſhall ſee God himſelf: ſo the ſcriptures teach us, that we ſhall ſee face to face, and know even as we are known, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. and that we ſhall ſee him as he is, 1 John iii. 2. Howbeit the ſaints can never have an adequate conception of God: they cannot comprehend that which is infinite. They may touch the mountain, but cannot graſp it in their arms. They cannot, with one glance of their eye, behold what grows on every ſide: but the divine perfections will be an unbounded field, in which the glorified ſhall walk eternally, ſeeing more and more of God; ſince they can never come to the end of that which is infinite. They may bring their veſſels to this ocean every moment, and fill them with new waters. What a raviſhing ſight would it be, to ſee all the perfections, and lovely qualities, that are ſcattered here and there among the creatures, gathered together into one! But even ſuch a ſight would be infinitely below this bliſsful ſight the ſaints ſhall have in heaven. For they ſhall ſee God, in whom all theſe perfections ſhall eminently appear, with infinitely more; whereof there is no veſtige to be found in the creatures. In him ſhall they ſee every thing deſirable, and nothing but what is deſirable.

Then ſhall they be perfectly ſatisfied as to the love of God towards them, which they are now ready to queſtion on every turn. They will be no more ſet to perſuade themſelves of it, by marks, ſigns, and teſtimonies: they will have an intuitive knowledge of it. They ſhall (with the profoundeſt reverence be it ſpoken) look into the heart of God, and there ſee the love he bore to them from all eternity, and the love and good-will he will bear to them for evermore. The glorified ſhall have a moſt clear and diſtinct underſtanding of divine truths, for in his light we ſhall ſee light, Pſal. xxxvi. 9. The light of glory will be a complete commentary on the Bible, and looſe all the hard and knotty queſtions in divinity. There is no joy on earth, comparable to that which ariſeth from the diſcovery of truth; no diſcovery of truth comparable to the diſcovery of ſcripture-truth, made by the Spirit of the Lord unto the ſoul. I rejoice at thy word, ſays the Pſalmiſt, as one that findeth great ſpoil, Pſal. cxix. 162. Yet it is but an imperfect diſcovery we have of it while here. How raviſhing then will it be, to ſee the opening of the whole treaſure, hid in that field! They ſhall alſo be let into the underſtanding of the works of God. The beauty of the works of creation and providence will then be ſet in a due light. Natural knowledge will be brought to perfection by the light of glory. The web of providence, concerning the church, and all men whatſoever, will then be cut out, and laid before the eyes of the ſaints: and it will appear a moſt beautiful mixture; ſo as they ſhall all ſay together, on the view of it, He hath done all things well. But, in a ſpecial manner, the work of redemption ſhall be the eternal wonder of the ſaints, and they will admire and praiſe the glorious contrivance for ever. Then ſhall they get a full view of its ſuitableneſs to the divine perfections, and to the caſe of ſinners; and clearly read the covenant, that paſſed betwixt the Father and the ſon, from all eternity, touching their ſalvation. They ſhall for ever wonder and praiſe, and praiſe and wonder, at the myſteries of wiſdom and love, goodneſs and holineſs, mercy and juſtice, appearing in the glorious device. Their ſouls ſhall be eternally ſatisfied with the ſight of God himſelf, and of their election by the Father, their redemption by the Son, and application thereof to them by the Holy Spirit.

2. The ſaints in heaven ſhall enjoy God in Chriſt by experimental knowledge, which is, when the object itſelf is given and poſſeſſed. This is the participation of the divine goodneſs in full meaſure; which is the perfection of the will, and utmoſt term thereof. The Lamb ſhall lead them unto living fountains of waters, Rev. vii. 17. Theſe are no other but God himſelf, the fountain of living waters, who will fully and freely communicate himſelf unto them. He will pour out of his goodneſs eternally into their ſouls, and then ſhall they have a moſt lively ſenſation, in the innermoſt part of their ſouls of all that goodneſs they have heard of, and believed to be in him; and of what they ſee in him by the light of glory. This will be an everlaſting practical expoſition of that word, which men and angels cannot ſufficiently unfold, to wit, God himſelf ſhall—be their God, Rev. xxi. 3. God will communicate himſelf unto them fully: they will no more be ſet to taſte of the ſtreams of divine goodneſs in ordinances, as they were wont; but ſhall drink at the fountain head. They will be no more entertained with ſips and drops, but filled with all the fulneſs of God. And this will be the entertainment of every ſaint: for though in created things, what is given to one is withheld from another, yet infinite good can fully communicate itſelf to all, and fill all. Theſe who are heirs of God, the great heritage, ſhall then enter into a full poſſeſſion of their inheritances: and the Lord will open his treaſures of goodneſs unto them, that their enjoyment may be full. They ſhall not be ſtinted to any meaſure: but the enjoyment ſhall go as far as their enlarged capacities can reach. As a narrow veſſel cannot contain the ocean, ſo neither can the infinite creature comprehend an infinite good; but no meaſure ſhall be ſet to the enjoyment, but what ariſeth from the capacity of the creature; ſo that, although there be degrees of glory, yet all ſhall be filled, and have what they can hold; though ſome would be capable to hold more than others, there will be no want to any of them; all ſhall be fully ſatisfied, and perfectly bleſſed in the full enjoyment of divine goodneſs, according to their enlarged capacities. As when bottles of different ſizes are filled, ſome contain more, others leſs; yet all of them have what they can contain. The glorified ſhall have all, in God, for the ſatisfaction of all their deſires. No created thing can afford ſatisfaction to all our deſires: clothes may warm us, but they cannot feed us; the light is comfortable, but cannot nouriſh us. But in God we ſhall have all our deſires, and ſhall deſire nothing without him. They ſhall be happy ones, that deſire nothing but what is truly deſirable: and withal have all they deſire. God will be all in all to the ſaints: he will be their life, health, riches, honour, peace, and all good things. He will communicate himſelf freely to them: the door of acceſs to him ſhall never be ſhut again, for one moment. They may, when they will, take of the tree of life, for they will find it on each ſide of the river, Rev. xxii. 2. There will be no vail betwixt God and them, to be drawn aſide; but his fulneſs ſhall ever ſtand open to them. No door to knock at, in heaven; no aſking to go before receiving; the Lord will allow his people an unreſtrained familiarity with himſelf there.

Now they are in part made partakers of the divine nature; but then they ſhall perfectly partake of it; that is to ſay, God will communicate to them his own image, make all his goodneſs not only paſs before them, but paſs into them, and ſtamp the image of all his own perfections upon them, ſo far as the creature is capable to receive the ſame; from whence ſhall reſult a perfect likeneſs to him, in all things in or about them, which completes the happineſs of the creature. And this is what the Pſalmiſt ſeems to have had in view, Pſal. xvii. 15. I ſhall be ſatisfied, when I awake, with thy likeneſs; the perfection of God's image, following upon the beatifick viſion. And ſo ſays John, 1 John iii. 2. We ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him as he is. Hence there ſhall be a moſt cloſe and intimate union betwixt God and the ſaints: God ſhall be in them, and they in God, in the way of a moſt glorious and perfect union; for then ſhall they dwell in love made perfect. God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him, 1 John iv. 16. How will the ſaints knit with God, and he with them; when he ſhall ſee nothing in them but his own image; when their love ſhall arrive at its perfection: no nature, but the divine nature, being left in them, and all imperfection ſwallowed up in that glorious transformation into the likeneſs of God! their love to the Lord being purged from the droſs of ſelf-love, ſhall be moſt pure; ſo as they will love nothing but God, and in God. It ſhall be no more faint and languiſhing, but burn like coals of juniper. It will be a light without darkneſs, a flaming fire without ſmoak. As the live coal, when all the moiſture is gone out of it, is all fire; ſo will the ſaints be all love, when they come to the full enjoyment of God in heaven, by intuitive and experimental knowledge of him by ſight, and full participation of the divine goodneſs.

Laſtly, From this glorious preſence and enjoyment ſhall ariſe an unſpeakable joy, which the ſaints ſhall be filled with. In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy. Pſal. xvi. 11. The ſaints ſometimes enjoy God in the world, when their eyes being held they cannot perceive it, they have not the comfort of the enjoyment; but then, all miſtakes being removed, they ſhall not only enjoy God, but reſt in the enjoyment with inexpreſſible joy and ſatisfaction. The deſire of earthly things breeds torment, and the enjoyment of them often ends in loathing. But though the glorified ſaints ſhall ever deſire more and more of God, their deſires ſhall not be mixt with the leaſt anxiety, ſince the fulneſs of the God-head ſtands always open to them: therefore they ſhall hunger no more, they ſhall not have the leaſt uneaſineſs, in their eternal appetite after the hidden manna, neither ſhall continued enjoyment breed loathing; they ſhall never think they have too much; therefore it is added, neither ſhall the ſun light on them, nor any heat, Rev. vii. 16. The enjoyment of God and the Lamb will be ever freſh and new to them, through the ages of eternity; for they ſhall drink of living fountains of waters, where new waters are continually ſpringing up in abundance, ver. 17. They ſhall eat of the tree of life, which for variety, affords twelve manner of fruits, and theſe always new and freſh, for it yields every month, Rev. xxv. 1. Their joy ſhall be pure and unmixed, without any dregs of ſorrow, not ſlight and momentary, but ſolid and everlaſting, without interruption. They will enter into joy, Matth. xxv. 21. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. The expreſſion is ſomewhat unuſual, and brings me in mind of that word of our ſuffering Redeemer, Mark xiv. 34. My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful unto death. His ſoul was beſet with ſorrows, as the word, there uſed, will bear; the floods of ſorrow went round about him, encompaſſing him on every hand: whitherſoever he turned his eyes, ſorrow was before him, it ſprang in upon him from heaven, earth, and hell, all at once; thus was he entered into ſorrow, and therefore ſaith, Pſal. lxix. 2. I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me. Now wherefore all this, but that his own might enter into joy? Joy ſometimes enters into us now, with much ado to get acceſs, while we are encompaſſed with ſorrows; but then joy ſhall not only enter into us, but we ſhall enter into it, and ſwim for ever in an ocean of joy: where we will ſee nothing but joy, whitherſoever we turn our eyes. The preſence and enjoyment of God and the Lamb will ſatisfy us with pleaſures for evermore: and the glory of our ſouls and bodies, ariſing from thence, will afford us everlaſting delight. The ſpirit of heavineſs, how cloſely ſoever it cleaves to any of the ſaints now, ſhall drop off then: their weeping ſhall be turned into ſongs of joy, and bottles of tears ſhall iſſue in rivers of pleaſures. Happy they who now ſow in tears, which ſhall ſpring up in joy, in heaven, and bow their heads there with a weight of glory upon them.

Thus far of the ſociety in this kingdom of the ſaints.

X. In the laſt place, the kingdom ſhall endure for ever. As every thing in it is eternal, ſo the ſaints ſhall have an undoubted certainty and full aſſurance of the eternal duration of the ſame. This is a neceſſary ingredient in perfect happineſs; for the leaſt uncertainty, as to the continuance of any good with one, is not without ſome fear, anxiety and torment: and therefore is utterly inconſiſtent with perfect happineſs. But the glorified ſhall never have fear, nor cauſe of fear, of any loſs: they ſhall be ever with the Lord, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. They ſhall all attain the full perſuaſion, that nothing ſhall be able to ſeparate them from the love of God; nor from the full enjoyment of him, for ever. The inheritance reſerved in heaven is incorruptible; it hath no principle of corruption in itſelf, to make it liable to decay; but endures for evermore: it is undefiled; nothing from without can mar its beauty, nor is there any thing in itſelf to offend thoſe who enjoy it. And therefore it fadeth not away; but ever remains in its native luſtre, and primitive beauty, 1 Pet. i. 4. Hitherto of the nature of the kingdom of heaven.

Secondly, Proceed we now to ſpeak of the admiſſion of the ſaints into this their kingdom; where I ſhall briefly touch upon two things: (1.) The formal admiſſion, in the call unto them from the Judge, to come to their kingdom. (2.) The quality in which they are admitted and introduced to it.

I. Their admiſſion, the text ſhews to be, by a voice from the throne; the King calling to them, from the throne, before angels and men, to come to their kingdom. Come and go are but ſhort words: but they will be ſuch as will afford matter of thought to all mankind, through the ages of eternity: ſince upon the one depends everlaſting happineſs, and upon the other everlaſting miſery.

Now our Lord bids the worſt of ſinners, who hear the goſpel, come; but the moſt part will not come unto him. Some few, whoſe hearts are touched by his ſpirit, do embrace the call, and their ſouls within them ſay, Behold, we come unto thee; they give themſelves to the Lord, forſake the world and their luſts for him; they bear his yoke, and caſt it not off, no not in the heat of the day, when the weight of it (perhaps) makes them ſweat the blood out of their bodies. Behold the fools! ſaith the carnal world, whither are they going? But ſtay a little, O fooliſh world! From the ſame mouth, whence they had the call they are now following, another call ſhall come which will make amends for all. Come ye bleſſed of my father, inherit the kingdom.

The ſaints ſhall find an inexpreſſible ſweetneſs in this call, Come. (1.) Hereby Jeſus Chriſt ſhews his deſire of their ſociety in the upper houſe, that they may be ever with him there. Thus he will open his heart unto them, as ſometimes he did to his Father concerning them, ſaying, Father, I will that they—be with me, where I am, John xvii. 24. Now the travel of his ſoul ſtands before the throne, not only the ſouls, but the bodies he has redeemed; and they muſt come, for he muſt be completely ſatisfied. (2.) Hereby they are ſolemnly invited to the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb. They were invited to the lower table, by the voice of the ſervants, and the ſecret workings of the Spirit within them; and they came, and did partake of the feaſt of divine communications in the lower houſe: but Jeſus Chriſt in perſon ſhall invite them, before all the world, to the higher table. (3.) By this he admits them into the manſions of glory. The keys of heaven hang at the girdle of our royal Mediator. All power in heaven is given to him, (Matth. xxviii. 18.) and none can get in thither but whom he admits. When they were living on earth, with the reſt of the world, he opened the everlaſting doors of their hearts, entered into them himſelf, and ſhut them again: ſo as ſin could never re-enter, to reign there as formerly: and now he opens heaven's doors to them, and draws his doves into the ark, and ſhuts them in there; ſo as the law, death, and hell, can never get them out again. The ſaints in this life were ſtill labouring to enter into that reſt: but Satan was always pulling them back, their corruptions always drawing them down; inſomuch that they have ſometimes been left to hang by a hair of a promiſe, (if I may be allowed the expreſſion) not without fears of falling into the lake of fire; but now Chriſt gives the word for their admiſſion: they are brought in, and put beyond all hazard. Laſtly, thus he ſpeaks to them, as the perſon introducing them into the kingdom, into the preſence chamber of the great king, and unto the throne. Jeſus Chriſt is the great Secretary of heaven, whoſe it is to bring the ſaints into the gracious preſence of God, and to whom alone it belongs to bring them into the glorious preſence of God in heaven. Truly heaven would be a ſtrange place to them, if Jeſus was not there: but the Son will introduce his brethren into his Father's kingdom; they ſhall go in with him to the marriage, Matth. xxv. 10.

II. Let us conſider in what quality they are introduced by him.

Firſt, He brings them in as the bleſſed of his Father; ſo runs the call from the throne, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, &c. It is Chriſt's Father's houſe they are to come into: therefore he puts them in mind, that they are bleſſed of his Father; dear to the Father, as well as to himſelf. This is it that makes heaven home to them, namely, that it is Chriſt's father's houſe, where they may be aſſured of welcome, being married to the Son, and being his Father's choice for that very end. He brings them in for his Father's ſake, as well as for his own: they are the bleſſed of his Father; who as he is the fountain of the Deity, is alſo the fountain of all bleſſings conferred on the children of men. They are theſe to whom God deſigned well from eternity. They were bleſſed in the eternal purpoſe of God, being elected to everlaſting life. At the opening of the book of life, their names were found written therein: ſo that, bringing them to the kingdom, he doth but bring them to what the Father, from all eternity, deſigned for them: being ſaved by the Son, they are ſaved according to his (i. e. the Father's) purpoſe, 2 Tim. i. 9. They are theſe to whom the Father has ſpoken well. He ſpoke well to them in his word, which muſt now receive its full accompliſhment. They had his promiſe of the kingdom, lived aud died in the faith of it; and now they come to receive the thing promiſed. Unto them he has done well. A gift is often in ſcripture called a bleſſing; and God's bleſſing is ever real, like Iſaac's bleſſing, by which Jacob became his heir: they were all by his grace juſtified, ſanctified, and made to perſevere to the end; now they are raiſed up in glory, and being tried, ſtand in the judgment: what remains then, but that God crown his own work of grace in them, in giving them their kingdom in the full enjoyment of himſelf for ever? Finally they are theſe whom God has conſecrated; the which alſo is a ſcripture notion of bleſſing, 1 Cor. x. 16. God ſet them apart for himſelf, to be kings and prieſts unto him; and the Mediator introduceth them as ſuch to their kingdom and prieſthood.

Secondly, Chriſt introduceth them, as heirs of the kingdom, to the actual poſſeſſion of it. Come ye bleſſed, inherit the kingdom. They are children of God, by regeneration and adoption. And if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17. Now is the general aſſembly of the firſt-born before the throne: their minority is overpaſt, and the time appointed of the Father for receiving of their inheritance is come. The Mediator purchaſed the inheritance for them with his own blood; their rights and evidences were drawn long ago, and regiſtered in the Bible: nay, they had infeftment of their inheritance in the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, as their proxy, when he aſcended into heaven, whither the forerunner is for us entered, Heb. vi. 20. Nothing remaineth, but that they enter into perſonal poſſeſſion thereof, which, begun at death, is perfected at the laſt day; when the ſaints, in their bodies as well as their ſouls, go into their kingdom.

Laſtly, They are introduced to it, as theſe it was prepared for, from the foundation of the world. The kingdom was prepared for them in the eternal purpoſe of God, before they, or any of them, had a being; which ſhews it to be a gift of free grace to them. It was from eternity the divine purpoſe, that there ſhould be ſuch a kingdom for the elect; and that all impediments which might mar their acceſs to it, ſhould be removed out of the way: and withal, by the ſame eternal decree, every one's place in it was determined and ſet apart, to be reſerved for him, that each of the children coming at length into their Father's houſe, might find his own place awaiting him, and ready for him: as at Saul's table, David's place was empty, when he was not there to occupy it himſelf, 1 Sam. xx. 25. And now that the appointed time is come, they are brought in to take their ſeveral places in glory, ſet apart and reſerved for them, till they ſhould come at them.

USE. I ſhall ſhut up my diſcourſe on this ſubject, with a word of application. (1.) To all who claim a right to this kingdom. (2.) To theſe who have indeed a right to it. (3.) To theſe who have not a right thereto.

Firſt, Since it is evident, there is no promiſcuous admiſſion into the kingdom of heaven, and none do obtain it, but theſe whoſe claim to it is ſolemnly tried by the great Judge, and, after trial, ſuſtained as good and valid; it is neceſſary that all of us impartially try and examine, whether, according to the laws of the kingdom, contained in the holy ſcriptures, we can verify and make good our claim to this kingdom? The hopes of heaven, which moſt men have, are built on ſuch ſandy foundations, as can never abide the trial; having no ground in the world, but in their own deluded fancy: ſuch hopes will leave thoſe, who entertain them, miſerably diſappointed at laſt. Wherefore it is not only our duty, but our intereſt, to put the matter to a fair trial, in time. If we find we have no right to heaven indeed, we are yet in the way; and what we have not, we may obtain: but if we find we have a right to it, we will then have the comfort of a happy proſpect into eternity; which is the greateſt comfort one is capable of in the world. If ye enquire, How ye may know whether ye have a right to heaven, or not? I anſwer, ye muſt know that by the ſtate ye are now in. If ye are yet in your natural ſtate, ye are children of wrath, and not children of this kingdom; for that ſtate, to them who live and die in it, iſſues in eternal miſery. If you be brought into the ſtate of grace, you have a juſt claim to the ſtate of glory; for grace will certainly iſſue in glory at length. This kingdom is an inheritance, which none but the children of God can juſtly claim. Now, we become the children of God by regeneration, and union with Chriſt his Son; And if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17. Theſe then are the great points, upon which one's evidences for the ſtate of glory do depend. And therefore I refer you to what is ſaid on the ſtate of grace, for clearing of you as to your right to glory.

If you be heirs of glory, the kingdom of God is within you, by virtue of your regeneration and union with Chriſt. (1.) The kingdom of heaven has the throne in thy heart, if thou haſt a right to that kingdom: Chriſt is in thee, and God is in thee: and having choſen him for thy portion, thy ſoul has taken up its everlaſting reſt in him, and gets no kindly reſt but in him; as the dove, until ſhe came into the ark. To him the ſoul habitually inclines, by virtue of the new nature, the divine nature, which the heirs of glory are partakers of, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? And there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. (2.) The laws of heaven are in thy heart, if thou art an heir of heaven, Heb. viii. 10. I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts. Thy mind is enlightened in the knowledge of the laws of the kingdom, by the Spirit of the Lord, the inſtructor of all the heirs of glory: for whoſoever may want inſtruction, ſure an heir to a crown ſhall not want it. It is written in the prophets, and they ſhall all be taught of God, John vi. 45. Therefore, though father and mother leave them early, or be in no concern about their Chriſtian education, and they be ſoon put to work for their daily bread; yet they ſhall not lack teaching. Withal thy heart is changed, and thou beareſt God's image, which conſiſts in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, Eph. iv. 24. Thy ſoul is reconciled to the whole law of God, and at war with all known ſin. In vain do they pretend to the holy kingdom, who are not holy in heart and life; for without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord, Heb. xii. 14. If heaven is a reſt, it is for ſpiritual labourers, and not for loiterers. If it is an eternal triumph, they are not in the way to it, who avoid the ſpiritual warfare, and are in no care to ſubduecorruption, reſiſt temptation, and to cut their way to it, through the oppoſition made by the devil, the world, and the fleſh. (3.) The treaſure in heaven is the chief in thy eſteem and deſire; for it is your treaſure, and where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo, Matth. vi. 21. If it is not the things that are ſeen, but the things that are not ſeen, which thy heart is in greateſt care and concern to obtain: if thou art driving a trade with heaven, and thy chief buſineſs lies there; it is a ſign thy treaſure is there, for thy heart is there. But if thou art of theſe, who wonder why ſo much ado about heaven and eternal life, as if leſs may ſerve the turn; thou art like to have nothing ado with it at all. Carnal men value themſelves moſt on their treaſures upon earth; with them the things that are not ſeen, are weighed down by the things that are ſeen, and no loſſes do ſo much affect them as earthly loſſes: but the heirs of the crown of glory will value themſelves moſt on their treaſures in heaven, and will not put their private eſtate in the balance with their kingdom; nor will the loſs of the former go ſo near their hearts, as the thoughts of the loſs of the latter. Where theſe firſt fruits of heaven are to be found, the eternal weight of glory will ſurely follow after; while the want of them muſt be admitted, according to the word, to be an unconteſtable evidence of an heir of wrath.

Secondly, Let the heirs of the kingdom behave themſelves ſuitable to their character and dignity. Live as having the faith and hope of this glorious kingdom: let your converſation be in heaven, Philip. iii. 20. Let your ſouls delight in communion with God, while ye are on earth, ſince you look for your happineſs in communion with him in heaven. Let your ſpeech and actions ſavour of heaven: and in your manner of life, look like the country to which ye are going; that it may be ſaid of you, as of Gideon's brethren, Judg. viii. 18. Each one reſembled the children of a king. Maintain a holy contempt of the world, and of the things of the world. Although others, whoſe earthly things are their beſt things do ſet their hearts upon them; yet it becomes you to ſet your feet on them, ſince your beſt things are above. This world is but the country, through which lies your road to Immanuel's land: therefore paſs through it as pilgrims and ſtrangers: and dip not into the incumbrances of it, ſo as to retard you in your journey; it is unworthy of one born to a palace, to ſet his heart on a cottage, to dwell there; and of one running for a prize of gold, to go off his way, to gather the ſtones of the brook: but much more is it unworthy of an heir of the kingdom of heaven to be hid among the ſtuff of this world, when he ſhould be going on to receive his crown. The prize ſet before you challengeth your utmoſt zeal, activity, and diligence: and holy courage, reſolution, and magnanimity, become thoſe who are to inherit the crown. Ye cannot come at it, without fighting your way to it, through difficulties from without, and from within: but the kingdom before you is ſufficient to balance them all, though ye ſhould be called to reſiſt even unto blood. Prefer Chriſt's croſs before the world's crown, and wants in the way of duty before eaſe and wealth in the way of ſin: Chuſe rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, Heb. xi. 25. In a common inn, ſtrangers (perhaps) fare better than the children: but here lies the difference, the children are to pay nothing for what they have got; but the ſtrangers get their bill, and muſt pay completely for all they have had. Did we conſider the wickeds after-reckoning for all the ſmiles of common providence they meet with in the world, we would not grudge them their good things here, nor take it amiſs that God keeps our beſt things laſt. Heaven will make up all the ſaints loſſes, and all tears ſhall be wiped away from their eyes there.

It is worth obſerving, that there is ſuch a variety of ſcripture notions of heaven's happineſs, as may ſuit every afflicted caſe of the ſaints. Are they oppreſſed? The day cometh, in which they ſhall have the dominion. Is their honour laid in the duſt? A throne to ſit upon, a crown on their head, and a ſcepter in their hand, will raiſe it up again. Are they reduced to poverty? Heaven is a treaſure. If they be forced to quite their own habitations, yet Chriſt's Father's houſe is ready for them. Are they driven to the wilderneſs? There is a city prepared for them. Are they baniſhed from their native country? they ſhall inherit a better country. If they are deprived of publick ordinances, the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple there whither they are going: a temple, the doors of which none can ſhut: if their life be full of bitterneſs, heaven is a paradiſe for pleaſure. If they groan under the remains of ſpiritual bondage, there is a glorious liberty abiding them. Do their defiled garments make them aſhamed? The day cometh, in which their robes ſhall be white, pure and ſpotleſs. The battle againſt fleſh and blood, principalities and powers, is indeed ſore; but a glorious triumph is awaiting them. If the toil and labours of the chriſtian life be great, there is an everlaſting reſt for them in heaven. Are they judged unworthy of ſociety in the world? They ſhall be admitted into the ſociety of angels in heaven. Do they complain of frequent interruptions of their communion with God? there they ſhall go no more out, but ſhall ſee his face for evermore. If they are in darkneſs here, eternal light is there. If they grapple with death, there they ſhall have everlaſting life. And to ſum up all in one word, He that overcometh ſhall inherit all things, Rev. xxi. 7. He ſhall have plenty, profit, and pleaſure, every thing deſirable; full ſatisfaction to his moſt enlarged deſires. Let the expectants of heaven, then, lift up their heads with joy, gird up their loins, and ſo run, as they may obtain; trampling on every thing that may hinder them in the way to the kingdom. Let them never account any duty too hard, nor any croſs too heavy, nor any pains too much, ſo as they may obtain the crown of glory.

Laſtly, Let thoſe who have no right to the kingdom of heaven, be ſtirred up to ſeek it with all diligence. Now is the time, wherein the children of wrath may become heirs of glory: and when the way to everlaſting happineſs is opened, it is no time to ſit ſtill and loiter. Raiſe up your hearts towards the glory that is to be revealed; and do not always ly along on this periſhing earth. What can all your worldly enjoyments avail you, while you have no ſolid ground to expect heaven, after this life is gone? Theſe riches and honours, profits, and pleaſures, that muſt be buried with us, and cannot accompany us into another world, are but a wretched portion, and will leave men comfortleſs at long run. Ah! why are men ſo fond, in their life time, to receive their good things! why are they not rather in care, to ſecure an intereſt in the kingdom of heaven, which would never be taken from them, but afford them a portion, to make them happy through the ages of eternity! if you deſire honour, there you may have the higheſt honours, which will laſte when the world's honours are laid in duſt; if riches, heaven will yield you treaſure; even pleaſures for evermore. O! be not deſpiſers of the pleaſant land, neither judge yourſelves unworthy of eternal life; but marry the heir, and heaven ſhall be your dowry; cloſe with Chriſt, as he is offered to you in the goſpel, and ye ſhall inherit all things. Walk in the way of holineſs, and it will lead you to the kingdom. Fight againſt ſin and Satan, and ye ſhall receive the crown. Forſake the world, and the doors of heaven will be open to receive you.

HEAD VI.

HELL.

MATTH. xxv. 41.

Then ſhall he ſay alſo unto them on the left Hand, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting Fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels.

WERE there no other place of eternal lodging but heaven, I ſhould here have cloſed my diſcourſe of man's eternal ſtate; but ſeeing in the other world, there is a priſon for the wicked, as well as a palace for the ſaints, we muſt alſo enquire into that ſtate of everlaſting miſery; the which the worſt of men may well bear with, without crying, Art thou come to torment us before the time? Since there is yet acceſs to fly from the wrath to come; and all that can be ſaid of it, comes ſhort of what the damned ſhall feel; for who knoweth the power of God's anger?

The laſt thing our Lord did before he left the earth, was, he lift up his hands, and bleſſed his diſciples, Luke xxiv. 50. 51. But the laſt thing he will do, before he leave the throne, is to curſe and condemn his enemies; as we learn from the text, which contains the dreadful ſentence, wherein the everlaſting miſery of the wicked is wrapt up. In which three things may be taken notice of. Firſt, The quality of the condemned, ye curſed. The Judge finds the curſe of the law upon them, as tranſgreſſors, and ſends them away with it, from his preſence into hell, there to be fully execute upon them. 2dly, The puniſhment which they are adjudged to; and to which they were always bound over, by virtue of the curſe. And it is twofold, the puniſhment of loſs, in ſeparation from God and Chriſt. Depart from me: and the puniſhment of ſenſe, in moſt exquiſite and extreme torments, Depart from me into fire. 3dly, The aggravation of their torments. (1.) They are ready for them, they are not to expect a moment's reſpite. The fire is prepared, and ready to catch hold of thoſe who are thrown into it. (2.) They will have the ſociety of devils in their torments, being ſhut up with them in hell. They muſt depart into the ſame fire prepared for Beelzebub the prince of devils, and his angels; namely, other reprobate angels who fell with him, and became devils. It is ſaid to be prepared for them; becauſe they ſinned, and were condemned to hell before man ſinned. This ſpeaks further terror to the damned, that they muſt go into the ſame torments, and place of torment, with the devil and his angels. They hearkened to his temptations, and they muſt partake in his torments; his works they would do, and they muſt receive the wages, which is death. In this life they joined with devils, in enmity againſt God and Chriſt, and the way of holineſs; and in the other they muſt lodge with them. Thus all the goats ſhall be ſhut up together; for that name is common to devils and wicked men, in ſcripture, Lev. xvii. 7. Where the word rendered devils, properly ſignifies hairy ones, or goats, in the ſhape of which creatures, devils delighted much to appear to their worſhippers. (3.) The laſt aggravation of their torment is the eternal duration thereof, they muſt depart into everlaſting fire. This is it that puts the cape-ſtone upon their miſery, namely, that it ſhall never have an end.

DOCTRINE.

The wicked ſhall be ſhut up under the curſe of God, in everlaſting Miſery, with the devils in Hell.

After having evinced that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the body, and a general judgment, I think it not needful to inſiſt to prove the truth of future puniſhments. The ſame conſcience there is in men of a future judgment, bears witneſs alſo of the truth of future puniſhment. (And that the puniſhment of the damned ſhall not be annihilation, or a reducing them to nothing, will be clear in the progreſs of our diſcourſe.) In treating of this awful ſubject, I ſhall enquire into theſe four things. (1.) The curſe under which the damned ſhall be ſhut up. (2.) Their miſery under that curſe. (3.) Their ſociety with devils in this miſerable ſtate. (4.) The eternity of the whole.

I. As to the curſe under which the damned ſhall be ſhut up in hell; it is the terrible ſentence of the law, by which they are bound over to the wrath of God, as tranſgreſſors. This curſe does not firſt ſeize them, when, ſtanding before the tribunal, they receive their ſentence: but they were born under it, they led their life under it in this world, they died under it, roſe with it out of their graves; and the Judge finding it upon them, ſends them away with it into the pit; where it ſhall ly on them through all the ages of eternity. By nature all men are under the curſe; but it is removed from the elect, by virtue of their union with Chriſt. It abides on the reſt of ſinful mankind, and by it they are devoted to deſtruction, ſeparated to evil, as one may deſcribe the curſe, from Deut. xxix. 21. And the Lord ſhall ſeparate him unto evil. Thus ſhall the damned, for ever be perſons devoted to deſtruction: ſeparate and ſet apart from the reſt of mankind, unto evil, as veſſels of wrath, ſet up for marks to the arrows of divine wrath; and made the common receptacle and ſhore of vengeance.

The curſe hath its firſt fruits on earth, which are a pledge of the whole lump that is to follow. And hence it is, that as temporal and eternal benefits are bound up together, under the ſame expreſſions of the promiſe to the Lord's people, as Iſa. xxxv. 10. And the ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return, and come to Zion, &c. relating both to the return from Babylon, and to the ſaints going to their eternal reſt in heaven: even ſo temporal and eternal miſeries, on the enemies of God, are ſometimes wrapt up under one and the ſame expreſſion in the threatning, as Iſa. xxx. 33. For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared, he hath made it deep and large; the pile thereof is fire and much wood, the breath of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone, doth kindle it. Which relates both to the temporal and eternal deſtruction of the Aſſyrians, who fell by the hand of the angel before Jeruſalem. See alſo Iſa. lxvi. 24. What is that judicial blindneſs to which many are given up, in whom the God of this world hath blinded their eyes, 2 Cor. iv. 4. but the firſt fruits of hell and of the curſe; Their ſun is going down at noon day: their darkneſs is increaſing as if it would not ſtop, till it iſſue in utter darkneſs. Many a laſh, in the dark, doth conſcience give the wicked, which the world doth not hear of: and what is that, but that the never-dying worm is already begun to gnaw them? And there is not one of theſe, but they may call it Joſeph, for the Lord ſhall add another; or rather Gad, for a troop cometh. Theſe drops of wrath are terrible forebodings of the full ſhower which is to follow. Sometimes they are given over to their vile affections, that they have no more command over them, Rom. i. 26. So their luſts grow up more and more towards perfection, if I may ſo ſpeak. As in heaven grace comes to its perfection, ſo in hell ſin arrives at its higheſt pitch; and as ſin is thus advancing upon the man, he is the nearer and the liker to hell. There are three things that have a fearful aſpect here. Firſt, When every thing that might do good to mens ſouls, is blaſted to them! ſo that their bleſſings are curſed, (Mal. ii. 2.) ſermons, prayers, admonitions, and reproofs, which are powerful towards others, are quite inefficacious to them. 2dly, When men go on ſinning ſtill, in the face of plain rebukes from the Lord, in ordinances and providences: God meets them with rods in the way of their ſin, as it were ſtriking them back; yet they ruſh forward. What can be more like hell, where the Lord is always ſmiting, and the damned always ſinning againſt him? Laſtly, When every thing in one's lot is turned into fuel to one's luſts. Thus adverſity and proſperity, poverty and wealth, the want of ordinances, and the enjoyment of them, do all but nouriſh the corruptions of many. Their vicious ſtomachs corrupt whatſoever they receive, and all does but increaſe noxious humours.

But the full harveſt follows in that miſery which they ſhall for ever ly under in hell; that wrath, which, by virtue of the curſe, ſhall come upon them to the uttermoſt; the which is the curſe fully executed. This black cloud opens upon them, and the terrible thunder-bolt ſtrikes them, by that dreadful voice from the throne, Depart from me, ye curſed, &c. Which will give the whole wicked world a diſmal view of what is in the boſom of the curſe. It is, (1.) A voice of extreme indignation and wrath, a furious rebuke from the lion of the tribe of Judah. His looks will be moſt terrible to them; his eyes will caſt flames of fire on them; and his words will pierce their hearts, like envenomed arrows. When he will thus ſpeak them out of his preſence for ever, and by his word chace them away from before the throne, they will ſee how keenly wrath burns in his heart againſt them for their ſins. (2.) It is a voice of extreme diſdain and contempt from the Lord. Time was when they were pitied, beſought to pity themſelves, and to be the Lord's: but they deſpiſed him, they would have none of him: but now they ſhall be buried out of his ſight, under everlaſting contempt. (3.) It is a voice of extreme hatred. Hereby the Lord ſhuts them out of his bowels of love and mercy: Depart, ye curſed: q. d. I cannot endure to look at you: there is not one purpoſe of good to you in mine heart; nor ſhall ye ever hear one word more of hope from me. Laſtly, It is a voice of eternal rejection from the Lord. He commands them to be gone, and ſo caſts them off for ever. Thus the doors of heaven are ſhut againſt them; the gulf is fixed between them and it, and they are driven to the pit. Now ſhould they cry with all poſſible earneſtneſs, Lord, Lord, open to us, they will hear nothing, but, Depart, depart, ye curſed. Thus ſhall the damned be ſhut up under the curſe.

USE Firſt. Let all theſe who, being yet in their natural ſtate, are under the curſe, conſider this, and flee to Jeſus Chriſt betimes, that they may be delivered from it. How can ye ſleep in that ſtate, being wrapt up in the curſe! Jeſus Chriſt is now ſaying unto you, Come, ye curſed, I will take the curſe from off you, and give you the bleſſing. The waters of the ſanctuary are now running to heal the curſed ground; take heed to improve them for that end to your own ſouls, and fear it as hell, to get no ſpiritual advantage thereby. Remember that the miry places, (which are neither ſea nor dry land, a fit emblem of hypocrites,) and the marſhes, (that neither breed fiſhes, nor bear trees, but the waters of the ſanctuary leave them, as they find them, in their barrenneſs,) ſhall not be healed; (ſeeing they ſpurn the only remedy,) they ſhall be given to ſalt, (left under eternal barrenneſs, ſet up for monuments of the wrath of God, and concluded for ever under the curſe,) Ezek. xlvii. 11. 2dly, Let all curſers conſider this, whoſe mouths are filled with curſing themſelves and others. He who clothes himſelf with curſing, ſhall find the curſe, come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones, (Pſal. cix. 18.) if repentance prevent it not. He ſhall get all his imprecations againſt himſelf fully anſwered, in that day wherein he ſtands before the tribunal of God; and ſhall find the killing weight of the curſe of God, which he makes light of now.

II. I proceed to ſpeak of the miſery of the damned, under that curſe; a miſery which the tongues of men and angels cannot ſufficiently expreſs. God always acts like himſelf: no favours can be equal to his, and his wrath and terrors are without a parallel. As the ſaints in heaven are advanced to the higheſt pitch of happineſs, ſo the damned in hell arrive at the height of miſery. Two things here I ſhall ſoberly enquire into, the puniſhment of loſs, and the puniſhment of ſenſe, in hell. But ſince theſe alſo are ſuch things as eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, we muſt (as geographers do) leave a large void for the unknown land, which the day will diſcover.

Firſt, The puniſhment of loſs which the damned ſhall undergo, is ſeparation from the Lord, as we learn from the text, Depart from me, ye curſed. This will be a ſtone upon their grave's mouth, as the talent of lead, Zech. v. 7. 8. that will hold them down for ever. They ſhall be eternally ſeparated from God and Chriſt. Chriſt is the way to the Father: but the way, as to them, ſhall be everlaſtingly blocked up, the bridge ſhall be drawn, and the great gulf fixed; ſo ſhall they be ſhut up in a ſtate of eternal ſeparation from God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. They will be locally ſeparated from the man Chriſt, and ſhall never come into the ſeat of the Bleſſed, where he appears in his glory, but be caſt out into utter darkneſs, Matth. xxii. 13. They cannot indeed be locally ſeparated from God, they cannot be in a place where he is not; ſince he is, and will be preſent every where; If I make my bed in hell, ſays the Pſalmiſt, behold thou art there, Pſal. cxxxix. 8. But they ſhall be miſerable beyond expreſſion, in a relative ſeparation from God. Though he will be preſent in the very centre of their ſouls, (if I may ſo expreſs it,) while they are wrapt up in fiery flames, in utter darkneſs; it ſhall not only be to feed them with the vinegar of his wrath, to entertain them with the emanations of his revenging juſtice; but they ſhall never taſte more of his goodneſs and bounty, nor have the leaſt glimpſe of hope from him: They will ſee his heart to be abſolutely alienated from them, and that it cannot be towards them: but that they are the party againſt whom the Lord will have an indignation for ever. They ſhall be deprived of the glorious preſence and enjoyment of God: they ſhall have no part in the beatific viſion; nor ſee any thing in God towards them, but one wave of wrath rolling at the back of another. This will bring upon them overwhelming floods of ſorrow for evermore. They ſhall never taſte of the rivers of pleaſure the ſaints in heaven enjoy; but ſhall have an everlaſting winter, and a perpetual night, becauſe the Sun of righteouſneſs has departed from them, and ſo they are left in utter darkneſs. So great as heaven's happineſs is, ſo great will their loſs be; for they can have none of it for ever.

This ſeparation of the wicked from God will be, (1.) An involuntary ſeparation. Now they depart from him, they will not come to him, though they are called, intreated, and obteſted to come: but then they ſhall be driven away from him, when they would gladly abide with him. Although the queſtion, What is thy beloved more than another beloved? is frequent now amongſt the deſpiſers of the goſpel, there will be no ſuch queſtion among all the damned crew; for then they will ſee that man's happineſs is only to be found in the enjoyment of God, and that the loſs of him is a loſs that can never be balanced. (2.) It will alſo be a total and utter ſeparation. Albeit the wicked are in this life ſeparated from God, yet there is a kind of intercourſe betwixt them: he gives them many good gifts, and they give him, at leaſt, ſome good words; ſo that the peace is not altogether hopeleſs. But then there ſhall be a total ſeparation, the damned being caſt into utter darkneſs, where there will not be the leaſt gleam of light or favour from the Lord: the which will put an end unto all their fair words to him. Laſtly, It ſhall be a final ſeparation; they will part with him, never more to meet, being ſhut up under everlaſting horror and deſpair. The match betwixt Jeſus Chriſt, and unbelievers, which has ſo often been carried forward, and put back again, ſhall then be broken up for ever: and never ſhall one meſſage of favour or good-will go betwixt the parties any more.

This puniſhment of loſs, in a total and final ſeparation from God, is a miſery beyond what mortals can conceive, and which the dreadful experience of the damned can only ſufficiently unfold. But that we may have ſome conception of the horror of it, let theſe following things be conſidered.

1ſt, God is the chief good, and therefore to be ſeparated from him muſt be the chief evil. Our native country, our relations, and our life, are good; and therefore to be deprived of them we reckon a great evil: and the better any thing is, ſo much the greater evil is the loſs of it. Wherefore, God being the chief good, and no good comparable to him, there can be no loſs ſo great as the loſs of God. The full enjoyment of him is the higheſt pinnacle of happineſs the creature is capable of arriving at; to be fully and finally ſeparated from him, muſt then be the loweſt ſtep of miſery which the rational creature can be reduced to. To be caſt off by men, by good men, by the beſt of men, is heavy: what muſt it then be, to be rejected of God, of goodneſs itſelf! 2dly, God is the fountain of all goodneſs, from which all goodneſs flows unto the creatures, and by which it is continued in them, and to them. Whatſoever goodneſs or perfection, natural as well as moral, is in any creature, it is from God, and depends upon him, as the light is from, and depends on the ſun: for every created being, as ſuch, is a dependent one. Wherefore a total ſeparation from God, wherein all comfortable communication betwixt God and a rational creature is abſolutely blocked up, muſt of neceſſity bring along with it a total eclipſe of all light of comfort and eaſe whatſoever. If there is but one window, or open place, in a houſe, and that be quite ſhut up; it is evident there can be nothing but darkneſs in that houſe. Our Lord tells us, (Matth. xix. 17.) There is none good but one, that is God. Nothing good or comfortable is originally from the creature: whatever good or comfortable thing one finds in one's ſelf, as health of body, peace of mind: whatever ſweetneſs, reſt, pleaſure, or delight, one finds in other creatures, as in meat, drink, arts, and ſciences: all theſe are but ſome faint rays of the divine perfections, communicate from God unto the creature, and depending on a conſtant influence from him, for their conſervation, which failing, they would immediately be gone; for it is impoſſible that any created thing can be to us more or better than what God makes it to be. All the rivulets of comfort we drink of, within or without ourſelves, come from God as their ſpring-head: the courſe of which toward us being ſtopt, of neceſſity they muſt all dry up. So that when God goes, all that is good and comfortable goes with them: all eaſe and quiet of body or mind, Hoſ. ix. 12. Wo alſo to them, when I depart from them. When the wicked are totally and finally ſeparate from him, all that is comfortable in them, or about them, returns to its fountain, as the light goes away with the ſun, and darkneſs ſucceeds in the room thereof. Thus, in their ſeparation from God, all peace is removed far away from them, and pain in body and anguiſh of ſoul ſucceed to it: all joy goes, and unmixed ſorrow ſettles in them: all quiet and reſt ſeparate from them, and they are filled with horror and rage: hope flees away, and deſpair ſeizeth them, common operations of the Spirit, which now reſtrain them, are withdrawn for ever, and ſin comes to its utmoſt height. And thus we have a diſmal view of the horrible ſpectacle of ſin and miſery, which a creature proves, when totally ſeparated from God, and left to itſelf; and one may ſee this ſeparation to be the very hell of hell.

Being ſeparated from God, they are deprived of all good. The good things, which they ſet their hearts upon in this world, are beyond their reach there. The covetous man cannot enjoy his wealth there, nor the ambitious man his honours, nor the ſenſual man his pleaſures, no not a drop of water to cool his tongue, Luke xxi. 23. 25. No meat nor drink there to ſtrengthen the faint; no ſleep to refreſh the weary; and no muſick, nor pleaſant company to comfort and chear up the ſorrowful. And as for theſe good things they deſpiſed in the world, they ſhall never more hear of them, nor ſee them. No offers of Chriſt there, no pardons, no peace: no wells of ſalvation in the pit of deſtruction. In one word, they ſhall be deprived of whatſoever might comfort them, being totally and finally ſeparated from God, the fountain of all goodneſs.

3dly, Man naturally deſires to be happy, being withal conſcious to himſelf that he is not ſelf-ſufficient; and therefore has ever a deſire of ſomething, without himſelf, to make him happy: and the ſoul being, by its natural make and conſtitution, capable of enjoying God, and nothing elſe being commenſurable to its deſires; it can never have true and ſolid reſt, till it reſt in the enjoyment of God. This deſire of happineſs the rational creature can never lay aſide, no not in hell. Now while the wicked are on earth, they ſeek their ſatisfaction in the creature; and when one fails, they go to another: thus they put off their time in the world, deceiving their own ſouls, and luring them on with vain hopes. But in the other world, all comfort in the creatures having failed together at once: and the ſhadows they are now purſuing, having all of them evaniſhed in a moment; they ſhall be totally and finally ſeparated from God, and ſee they have thus loſt him. So the doors of earth and heaven both are ſhut againſt them at once. This will create them unſpeakable anguiſh, while they ſhall live under an eternal gnawing hunger after happineſs, which they certainly know ſhall never be in the leaſt meaſure ſatisfied, all doors being cloſed on them. Who then can imagine how this ſeparation from God ſhall cut the damned to the heart! How will they rore and rage under it, and how will it ſting them and gnaw them through the ages of eternity!

4thly, The damned ſhall know that ſome are perfectly happy in the enjoyment of that God, from whom they themſelves are ſeparate: and this will aggravate the ſenſe of their loſs, that they can never have any ſhare with theſe happy ones. Being ſeparated from God, they are ſeparated from the ſociety of the glorified ſaints and angels. They may ſee Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his boſom, (Luke xvi. 23.) but can never come into their company; being as unclean lepers, thruſt out without the camp, and excommunicated from the preſence of the Lord, and of all his holy ones. It is the opinion of ſome, that every perſon, in heaven or hell, ſhall hear and ſee all that paſſeth in either ſtate. Whatever is to be ſaid of this, we have ground from the word to conclude, that the damned ſhall have a very exquiſite knowledge of the happineſs of the ſaints in heaven; for what elſe can be meant by the rich man in hell his ſeeing Lazarus in Abraham's boſom? One thing is plain in this caſe, that their own torments will give them ſuch notions of the happineſs of the ſaints, as a ſick man has of health, or a priſoner has of liberty. And as they cannot fail of reflecting on the happineſs of thoſe in heaven, more than they can attain to contentment with their own lot; ſo every thought of that happineſs will aggravate their loſs. It would be a mighty torment to a hungry man, to ſee others liberally feaſting, while he is ſo chained up, as he cannot have one crumb to ſtay his gnawing appetite. To bring muſick and dancing before a man labouring under extreme pains, would but encreaſe his anguiſh: how then will the ſongs of the bleſſed, in their enjoyment of God, make the damned rore under their ſeparation from him!

5thly, They will remember that time was, when they might have been made partakers of the bleſſed ſtate of the ſaints, in their enjoyment of God: and this will aggravate their ſenſe of the loſs. All may remember, there was once a poſſibility of it: that ſometime they were in the world, in ſome corners of which the way of ſalvation was laid open to mens view; and may wiſh they had gone round the world, till they had found it out. Deſpiſers of the goſpel will remember with bitterneſs, that Jeſus Chriſt, with all his benefits, was offered to them, that they were exhorted, intreated, and preſſed to accept, but would not; and they were warned of the miſery they feel, and obteſted to flee from the wrath to come, but they would not hearken. The goſpel-offer ſlighted will make a hot hell, and the loſs of an offered heaven will be a ſinking weight on the ſpirits of unbelievers in the pit. Some will remember that there was a probability of their being eternally happy; that ſometime they ſeemed to ſtand fair for it, and were not far from the kingdom of God; that they had once almoſt conſented to the bleſſed bargain, the pen was in their hand (as it were) to ſign the marriage contract betwixt Chriſt and their ſouls: but unhappily they dropped it, and turned back from the Lord to their luſts again. And others will remember that they thought themſelves ſure of heaven, but, being blinded with pride and ſelf conceit, they were above ordinances, and beyond inſtruction, and would not examine their ſtate, which was their ruin; but then they ſhall in vain wiſh, they had reputed themſelves the worſt of the congregation in which they lived, and curſe the fond conceit they had of themſelves, and that others had of them too. Thus it will ſting the damned, that they might have eſcaped this loſs.

Laſtly, They will ſee the loſs to be irrecoverable; that they muſt eternally ly under it, never, never, to be repaid. Might the damned, after millions of ages in hell, regain what they have loſt, it would be ſome ground of hope; but the prize is gone, and can never be recovered. And there are alſo two things here, which will pierce them to the heart. (1.) That they never knew the worth of it, till it was irrecoverably loſt. Should a man give away an earthen pot full of gold for a trifle, never knowing what was in it till it were quite gone from him, and paſt recovery; how would this fooliſh action gall him, upon the diſcovery of the riches in it! Such a one's caſe may be a faint reſemb'ance of the caſe of deſpiſers of the goſpel, when in hell they lift up their eyes, and behold that, to their torment, which they will not ſee now, to their ſalvation. (2.) That they have loſt it for loſs and dung: ſold their part of heaven, and not enriched themſelves with the price. They have loſt heaven for earthly profits and pleaſures, and now both are gone together from them. The drunkards cups are gone, the covetous man's gain, the voluptuous man's carnal delights, and the ſluggard's eaſe: nothing is left to comfort them now. The happineſs they loſt remains indeed, but they can have no part in it for ever.

USE. Sinners, be perſuaded to come to God through Jeſus Chriſt, uniting with him through a Mediator; that ye may be preſerved from this fearful ſeparation from him. O be afraid to live in a ſtate of ſeparation from God, leſt that which you now make your choice, become your eternal puniſhment hereafter. Do not reject communion with God, caſt not off the communion of ſaints: for it will be the miſery of the damned to be driven out from that communion. Ceaſe to build up the wall of ſeparation betwixt God and you, by continuing in your ſinful courſes: repent rather in time, and ſo pull it down: leſt the capeſtone be laid upon it, and it ſtand for ever between you and happineſs. Tremble at the thoughts of rejection and ſeparation from God. By whomſoever men are rejected upon earth, they ordinarily find ſome to pity them: but, if ye be thus ſeparated from God, ye will find all doors ſhut againſt you. Ye will find no pity from any in heaven: neither ſaints nor angels will pity them whom God has utterly caſt off: none will pity you in hell, where there is no love but loathing; all being loathed of God, loathing him, and loathing one another. This is a day of loſſes and fears. I ſhew you a loſs; ye would do well to fear in time; be afraid leſt you loſe God, if ye do, a long eternity will be ſpent in roaring out lamentations for this loſs. O horrid ſtupidity! men are in a mighty care and concern to prevent worldly loſſes: but they are in hazard of loſing the enjoyment of God for ever and ever: in hazard of loſing heaven, the communion of the bleſſed, and all good things for ſoul and body in another world; yet as careleſs in that matter, as if they were uncapable of thought. O! compare this day with the day our text aims at. This day heaven is opened to them who hitherto have rejected Chriſt, and yet there is room, if they will come; but that day the doors ſhall be ſhut. Now, Chriſt is ſaying unto you, Come: then he will ſay, Depart; ſeeing ye would not come when ye were bidden. Now pity is ſhown; the Lord pities you, his ſervants pity you, and tell you that the pit is before you, and cry to you, that ye do yourſelves no harm: but then ſhall ye have no pity from God nor man.

Secondly, The damned ſhall be puniſhed in hell with the puniſhment of ſenſe; they muſt depart from God into everlaſting fire. I am not in a mind to diſpute, what kind of fire it is which they ſhall depart into, and be tormented by for ever, whether a material fire, or not? Experience will more than ſatisfy the curioſity of thoſe who are diſpoſed rather to diſpute about it, than to ſeek how to eſcape it. Neither will I meddle with that queſtion, Where it is? It is enough, that the worm which never dieth, and the fire that is never quenched, will be found ſomewhere by impenitent ſinners. But, (1.) I ſhall evince that, whatever kind of fire it is, it is more vehement and terrible than any fire we on earth are acquainted with. (2.) I ſhall condeſcend on ſome properties of theſe fiery torments.

As to the firſt of theſe; burning is the moſt terrible puniſhment, and brings the moſt exquiſite pain and torment with it. By what reward could a man be induced to hold but his hand in the flame of a candle for one hour? All imaginable pleaſures on earth would never prevail with the moſt voluptuous man, to venture to lodge but one half hour in a burning fiery furnace; nor would all the wealth in the world prevail with the moſt covetous to do it: yet, on much lower terms, do moſt men, in effect, expoſe themſelves to everlaſting fire in hell, which is more vehement and terrible than any fire we on earth are acquainted with; as will appear by the following conſiderations.

1. As, in heaven, grace being brought to its perfection, profit and pleaſure do alſo arrive at their height there; ſo ſin being come to its height in hell, the evil of puniſhment doth alſo arrive at its perfection there. Wherefore, as the joys in heaven are far greater than any joys which the ſaints obtain on earth, ſo the puniſhments of hell muſt be greater than any earthly torments whatſoever; not only in reſpect of the continuance of them, but alſo in reſpect of vehemency and exquiſiteneſs.

2. Why are things of the other world repreſented to us, in an earthly dreſs, in the word; but that the weakneſs of our capacities in ſuch matters (which the Lord is pleaſed to condeſcend unto) does require it; it being always ſuppoſed, that theſe things of the other world are in their kind more perfect than that by which they are repreſented? When heaven is repreſented to us under the notion of a city, with gates of pearl, and the ſtreet of gold; we look not to find gold and pearls there, which are ſo mightily prized on earth, but ſomething more excellent than theſe fineſt and moſt precious things in the world: when therefore we hear of hell-fire, it is neceſſary we underſtand by it ſomething more vehement, piercing and tormenting, than any fire ever ſeen by our eyes. And here it is worth conſidering, that the torments of hell are held forth under ſeveral other notions than that of fire ſimply: and the reaſon of it is plain; namely, that hereby what of horror is wanting in one notion of hell, is ſupplied by another. Why is heaven's happineſs repreſented under the various notions of a treaſure, a paradiſe, a feaſt, a reſt, &c. but that there is not one of theſe things ſufficient to expreſs it? Even ſo hell-torments are repreſented under the notion of fire, which the damned are caſt into. A dreadful repreſentation indeed! yet not ſufficient to expreſs the miſery of the ſtate of ſinners in them. Wherefore we hear alſo of the ſecond death, (Rev. xxi. 6.) for the damned in hell ſhall be ever dying: of the wine preſs of the wrath of God, (chap. xiv. 16.) wherein they will be troden in anger, trampled in the Lord's fury, (Iſa. lxiii. 3.) preſſed, broken, and bruiſed, without end: the worm that dieth not, (Mark ix. 44.) which ſhall eternally gnaw them: a bottomleſs pit, where they will be ever ſinking, Rev. xx. 3. It is not ſimply called a fire, but the lake of fire and brimſtone, (ver. 19.) a lake of fire burning with brimſtone, (chap. xix. 20.) than which one can imagine nothing more dreadful. Yet, becauſe fire gives light, and light (as Solomon obſerves, Eccleſ. xi. 7.) is ſweet, there is no light there, but darkneſs, utter darkneſs, Matth. xxv. 30. For they muſt have an everlaſting night, ſince nothing can be there which is in any meaſure comfortable or refreſhing.

3. Our fire cannot affect a ſpirit, but by way of ſympathy with the body to which it is united: but hell-fire will not only pierce into the bodies, but directly into the ſouls of the damned: for it is prepared for the devil and his angels, theſe wicked ſpirits whom no fire on earth can hurt. Job complains heavily under the chaſtiſements of God's fatherly hand, ſaying, The arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poiſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit, Job vi. 4. But how will the ſpirits of the damned be pierced with the arrows of revenging juſtice; how will they be drunk up with the poiſon of the curſe on theſe arrows? how vehement muſt that fire be that pierceth directly into the ſoul, and makes an everlaſting burning in the ſpirit, the moſt lively and tender part of a man, wherein wounds or pain are moſt intolerable!

Laſtly, The preparation of this fire evinceth the inexpreſſible vehemency and dreadfulneſs of it. The text calls it prepared fire, yea, the prepared fire by way of eminency. As the three children were not caſt into an ordinary fire, but a fire prepared on a particular deſign, which therefore was exceeding hot, the furnace being heated ſeven times more than ordinary, Dan. ii. 22. So the damned ſhall find in hell a prepared fire, the like to which was never prepared by human art; it is a fire of God's own preparing, the product of infinite wiſdom on a particular deſign, to demonſtrate the moſt ſtrict and ſevere divine juſtice againſt ſin; which may ſufficiently evidence to us the unconceivable exquiſiteneſs thereof. God always acts in a peculiar way becoming his own infinite greatneſs, whether for, or againſt the creature: and therefore as the things he hath prepared for them that love him, are great and good beyond expreſſion, or conception: ſo one may conclude, that the things he hath prepared againſt thoſe who hate him, are great and terrible beyond what men can either ſay, or think of them. The pile of Tophet is fire and much wood, (the coals of fire are coals of juniper, a kind of wood, which ſet on fire burns moſt fiercely, Pſal. cxx. 4.) and the breath of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone doth kindle it, Iſa. xxx. 33. Fire is more or leſs violent, according to the matter of it, and the breath by which it is blown; what heart then can fully conceive the horror of coals of juniper, blown up with the breath of the Lord? Nay, God himſelf will be a conſuming fire, (Deut. iv. 24.) to the damned; intimately preſent, as a devouring fire, in their ſouls and bodies. It is a fearful thing to fall into a fire, or to be ſhut up in a fiery furnace, on earth: but the terror of theſe evaniſheth, when one conſiders, how fearful it is to fall into the hands of the living God, which is the lot of the damned; for who ſhall dwell with the devouring fire? Who ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings? Iſa xxxiii. 14.

As to the ſecond point propoſed, namely, the properties of the fiery torments in hell.

1. They will be univerſal torments, every part of the creature being tormented in that flame. When one is caſt into a burning fiery furnace, the fire makes its way into the very bowels, and leaves no member untouched; what part then can have eaſe, when the damned ſwim in a lake of fire burning with brimſtone? There will their bodies be tormented, and ſcorched for ever. And as they ſinned, ſo ſhall they be tormented, in all the parts thereof: that they ſhall have no ſound ſide to turn them to; for what ſoundneſs or eaſe can be to any part of that body, which being ſeparated from God, and all refreſhment from him, is ſtill in the pangs of the ſecond death, ever dying, but never dead? But as the ſoul was chief in ſinning, it will be chief in ſuffering too; being brimful of the wrath of a ſin revenging God. The damned ſhall ever be under deepeſt impreſſions of God's vindictive juſtice againſt them: and this fire will melt their ſouls, within them, like wax. Who knows the power of that wrath which had ſuch an effect on the Mediator, ſtanding in the room of ſinners, Pſal. xxii. 14. My heart is like wax, it is melted in the midſt of my bowels? Their minds ſhall be filled with the terrible apprehenſions of God's implacable wrath: and whatever they can think upon, paſt, preſent, or to come, will aggravate their torment and anguiſh. Their will ſhall be croſſed in all things for evermore; as their will was ever contrary to the will of God's precepts; ſo God in his dealings with them, in the other world, ſhall have war with their will for ever. What they would have, they ſhall not in the leaſt obtain; but what they would not, ſhall be bound upon them, without remedy. Hence no pleaſant affection ſhall ever ſpring up in their hearts any more: their love of complacency, joy, and delight, in any object whatſoever, ſhall be pluckt up by the root: and they will be filled with hatred, fury, and rage, againſt God, themſelves, and their fellow creatures, whether happy in heaven, or miſerable in hell, as they themſelves are. They will be ſunk in ſorrow, racked with anxiety, filled with horror, galled to the heart with fretting, and continually darted with deſpair; which will make them weep, gnaſh their teeth, and blaſpheme for ever. Matth. xxii. 13. Bind them hand and foot, and take him away, and caſt him into utter darkneſs; there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, Rev. xvi. 21. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every ſtone about the weight of a talent: and men blaſphemed God becauſe of the hail, for the plague thereof was exceeding great. Conſcience will be a worm to gnaw and prey upon them; remorſe for their ſins ſhall ſeize them and torment them for ever, and they ſhall not be able to ſhake it off, as ſometimes they did; for in hell—their worm dieth not, Mark. ix. 45. 46. Their memory will ſerve but to aggravate their torment, and every new reflection will bring another pang of anguiſh, Luke xvi. 25. But Abraham ſaid, viz. to the rich man in hell, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedſt thy good things.

2. The torments in hell are manifold. Put the caſe that a man were, at one and the ſame time, under the violence of the gout, gravel, and whatſoever diſeaſes and pains have ever met together in one body; the torment of ſuch a one would be but light in compariſon with the torments of the damned. For as in hell there is an abſence of all that is good and deſirable, ſo there is the confluence of all evils there: ſince all the effects of ſin and of the curſe take their place in it, after the laſt judgment, Rev. xx. 14. And death and hell were caſt into the lake of fire. There they will find a priſon they can never eſcape out of; a lake of fire, wherein they will be ever ſwimming and burning; a pit whereof they will never find a bottom. The worm that dieth not ſhall feed on them, as on bodies which are interred: the fire that is not quenched ſhall devour them, as dead bodies which are burned. Their eyes ſhall be kept in blackneſs of darkneſs, without the leaſt comfortable gleam of light: their ears filled with the frightful yellings of the infernal crew. They ſhall taſte nothing but the vinegar of God's wrath, the dregs of the cup of his fury. The ſtench of the burning lake of brimſtone will be the ſmell there; and they ſhall feel extreme pains for evermore.

3. They will be moſt exquiſite and vehement torments, cauſing weeping, and wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth, Matth. xiii. 42. and xxii. 13. They are repreſented to us under the notion of pangs in travail, which are very ſharp and exquiſite. So ſays the rich man in hell, Luke xvi. 24. I am tormented, (to wit, as one in the pangs of child-bearing) in this flame. Ah! dreadful pangs; horrible travail, in which both ſoul and body are in pangs together; helpleſs travail, hopeleſs and endleſs! The word uſed for hell, Matth. v. 22. and in divers other places of the New Teſtament properly denotes the valley of Hinnom; the name being taken from the valley of the children of Hinnom, in which was Tophet, (2 Kings xx. 10.) where idolaters offered their children to Moloch. This is ſaid to have been a great braſen idol, with arms like a man's: the which being heated by fire within it, the child was ſet in the burning arms of the idol; and, that the parents might not hear the ſhrieks of the child burning to death, they beat drums in the time of the horrible ſacrifice; whence the place had the name of Tophet. Thus the exquiſiteneſs of the torments in hell are pointed out to us. Some have endured grievous tortures on earth, with a ſurpriſing obſtinacy and undaunted courage: but mens courage will fail them there, when they find themſelves fallen into the hands of the living God; and no out gate to be expected for ever. It is true, there will be degrees of torment in hell: It ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, than for Chorazin and Bethſaida, Matth. xi. 21. 22. But the leaſt load of wrath there will be unſupportable; for how can the heart of the creature endure, or his hands be ſtrong, when God himſelf is a conſuming fire to him? When the tares are bound up in bundles for the fire, there will be bundles of covetous perſons, of drunkards, prophane ſwearers, unclean perſons, formal hypocrites, unbelievers, and deſpiſers of the goſpel, and the like: the ſeveral bundles being caſt into hell-fire, ſome will burn more keenly than others, according as their ſins have been more heinous than theſe of others: a fiercer flame will ſeize the bundles of the prophane than the bundles of the unſanctified moraliſts; the furnace will be hotter to thoſe who ſinned againſt light, than to theſe who lived in darkneſs, Luke vii. 37. 38. That ſervant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himſelf, neither did according to his will, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of ſtripes, ſhall be beaten with few ſtripes. But the ſentence common to them all, Matth. xiii. 30. Bind them in bundles to burn them, ſpeaks the greateſt vehemency and exquiſiteneſs of the loweſt degree of torment in hell.

4. They will be uninterrupted: there is no intermiſſion there; no eaſe, no not for a moment. They ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever, Rev. xx. 10. Few are ſo toſſed in this world, but ſometimes they get reſt; but the damned ſhall get none; they took their reſt in the time appointed of God for labour. No ſtorms are readily ſeen, but there is ſome ſpace between ſhowers: but no intermiſſion in the ſtorm that falls on the wicked in hell. There deep will be calling unto deep, and the waves of wrath continually rolling over them. There the heavens will be always black to them, and they ſhall have a perpetual night, but no reſt, Rev. xiv. 11. They ſhall have no reſt day nor night.

5. They will be unpitied. The puniſhments inflicted on the greateſt malefactors on earth, do draw forth ſome compaſſion from them who behold them in their torments: but the damned ſhall have none to pity them. God will not pity them, but laugh at their calamity, Prov. i. 26. The bleſſed company in heaven ſhall rejoice in the execution of God's righteous judgment, and ſing while their ſmoke riſeth up for ever, Rev. xix. 3. And again they ſaid, Allelujah; and her ſmoke roſe up for ever and ever. No compaſſion can be expected from the devil and his angels, who delight in the ruin of the children of men, and are and will be for ever void of pity. Neither will one pity another there, where every one is weeping and gnaſhing his teeth, under his own inſupportable anguiſh and pain. There, natural affection will be extinguiſhed: the parents will not love their children, nor children their parents; the mother will not pity the daughter in theſe flames, nor will the daughter pity the mother: the ſon will ſhew no regard to his father there, nor the ſervant to his maſter, where every one will be roaring under his own torment.

Laſtly, To complete their miſery, their torments ſhall be eternal, Rev. xiv. 11. And the ſmoke of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever. Ah! what a frightful caſe is this, to be tormented in the whole body and ſoul, and that not with one kind of torment, but many; all of theſe moſt exquiſite, and all this without any intermiſſion, and without pity from any! What heart can conceive thoſe things without horror! Nevertheleſs, if this moſt miſerable caſe were at length to have an end, that would afford ſome comfort: but the torments of the damned will have no end; of the which more afterwards.

USE. Learn from this, (1.) The evil of ſin. It is a ſtream that will carry down the ſinner, till he be ſwallowed up in an ocean of wrath. The pleaſures of ſin are bought too dear at the rate of everlaſting burnings. What availed the rich man's purple clothing and ſumptuous fare, when in hell he was wrapt up in purple flames, and could not have a drop of water to cool his tongue? Alas! that men ſhould indulge themſelves in ſin, which will be ſuch bitterneſs in the end! that they ſhould drink ſo greedily of the poiſonous cup, and hug that ſerpent in their boſom, that will ſting them to the heart, and gnaw out their bowels at length? (2.) What a God he is, with whom we have to do; what a hatred he bears to ſin, and how ſeverely he puniſheth it. Know the Lord to be moſt juſt, as well as moſt merciful, and think not that he is ſuch an one as you are: away with that fatal miſtake, ere it be too late, Pſal. l. 21. 22. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thyſelf; but I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes. Now conſider this, ye that forget God, leſt I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver. The fire prepared for the devil and his angels, as dark as it is, will ſerve to diſcover God to be a ſevere revenger of ſin. Laſtly, The abſolute neceſſity of fleeing to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt by faith; the ſame neceſſity of repentance, and holineſs of heart and life. The avenger of blood is purſuing thee, O ſinner! haſte and eſcape to the city of refuge. Waſh now in the fountain of the Mediator's blood, that you may not periſh in the lake of fire. Open thy heart to him, leſt the pit cloſe its mouth on thee. Leave thy ſins, elſe they will ruin thee: kill them, elſe they will be thy death for ever.

Let not the terror of hell-fire put thee upon hardening thy heart more, as it may do, if thou entertain that wicked thought, viz. There is no hope, Jer. ii. 25. Which perhaps is more riſe among the hearers of the goſpel, than many are aware of. But there is hope for the worſt of ſinners, who will come unto Jeſus Chriſt. If there are no good qualifications in thee, (as certainly, there can be none in a natural man, none in any man, but what are received from Chriſt in him,) know, that he has not ſuſpended thy welcome on any good qualifications; do thou take himſelf and his ſalvation, freely offered unto all to whom the goſpel comes. Whoſoever will, let him take of the water of life freely, Rev. xxii. 17. Him that cometh to me, I will in no ways caſt out, John vi. 37. It is true, thou art a ſinful creature, and canſt not repent; thou art unholy, and canſt not make thyſelf holy: nay, thou haſt eſſayed to repent, to forſake ſin, and to be holy, but ſtill miſſed of repentance, reformation, and holineſs; and therefore, Thou ſaideſt, There is no hope. No, for I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go. Truly, no marvel that the ſucceſs has not anſwered thy expectation, ſince thou haſt always begun thy work amiſs. But do thou, firſt of all, honour God, by believing the teſtimony he has given of his Son, namely, that eternal life is in him: and honour the Son of God, by believing on him, that is, embracing and falling in with the free offer of Chriſt, and of his ſalvation from ſin and from wrath, made to thee in the goſpel; truſting in him confidently for righteouſneſs to thy juſtification, and alſo for ſanctification; ſeeing of God he is made unto us both righteouſneſs and ſanctification, 1 Cor. i. 30. Then, if thou haſt as much credit to give to the word of God, as thou wouldſt allow to the word of an honeſt man, offering thee a gift, and ſaying, Take it, and it is thine; thou mayeſt believe, that God is thy God, Chriſt is thine, his ſalvation is thine, thy ſins are pardoned, thou haſt ſtrength in him for repentance and for holineſs; for all theſe are made over to thee in the free offer of the goſpel. Believing on the Son of God, thou art juſtified, the curſe is removed. And while it lies upon thee, how is it poſſible thou ſhouldeſt bring forth the fruits of holineſs? But, the curſe removed, that death which ſeized on thee with the firſt Adam, (according to the threatening, Gen. ii. 17.) is taken away. In conſequence of which, thou ſhalt find the bands of wickedneſs (now holding thee faſt in impenitency) broken aſunder, as the bands of that death; ſo as thou wilt be able to repent indeed from the heart: thou ſhalt find the Spirit of life, by whoſe departure that death enſued, returned to thy ſoul; ſo as thenceforth thou ſhalt be enabled to live unto righteouſneſs. No man's caſe is ſo bad, but it may be mended this way, in time, to be perfectly right in eternity: and no man's caſe is ſo good, but, another way being taken, it will be marred for time and eternity too.

III. The damned ſhall have the ſociety of devils in their miſerable ſtate in hell; for they muſt depart into fire prepared for the devil and his angels. O horrible company! O frightful aſſociation! who would chuſe to dwell in a palace haunted by devils? To be confined to the moſt pleaſant ſpot of earth, with the devil, and his infernal furies, would be a moſt terrible confinement. How would mens heart fail them, and their hair ſtand up, finding themſelves environed with the helliſh crew, in that caſe! But ah! how much more terrible muſt it be, to be caſt with the devils into one fire, locked up with them in one dungeon, ſhut up with them in one pit! To be cloſed up in a den of roaring lions, girded about with ſerpents, ſurrounded with venomous aſps, and to have the bowels eaten out by vipers, altogether, and at once, is a compariſon too low, to ſhew the miſery of the damned, ſhut up in hell with the devil and his angels. They go about now, as roaring lions, ſeeking whom they may devour: but then ſhall they be confined in their den with their prey. They ſhall be filled to the brim with the wrath of God, and receive the full torment, (Matth. viii. 29.) which they tremble in expectation of, (Jam. ii. 19,) being caſt into the fire prepared for them. How will theſe lions roar and tear! how will theſe ſerpents hiſs! theſe dragons vomit out fire! what horrible anguiſh will ſeize the damned, finding themſelves in the lake of fire, with the devil who deceived them; drawn thither with the ſilken cords of temptation, by theſe wicked ſpirits; and bound with them in everlaſting chains under darkneſs! Rev. xx. 10. And the devil that deceived them was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and the falſe prophet are, and ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

O! that men would conſider this in time, renounce the devil and his luſts, and join themſelves to the Lord in faith and holineſs. Why ſhould men chuſe that company in this world, and delight in that ſociety, they would not deſire to aſſociate with in the other world? Thoſe who like not the company of the ſaints on earth, will get none of it in eternity: but as godleſs company is their delight now, they will afterwards get enough of it: when they have an eternity to paſs in the roaring and blaſpheming ſociety of devils and reprobates in hell. Let thoſe who uſe to invocate the devil to take them, ſoberly conſider, that the company, ſo often invited, will be terrible at laſt, when come.

IV. And laſtly, Let us conſider the eternity of the whole, the everlaſting continuance of the miſerable ſtate of the damned in hell.

Firſt, If I could, I ſhould ſhew what eternity is, I mean the creature's eternity. But who can meaſure the waters of the ocean, or who can tell you the days, years, and ages of eternity, which are infinitely more than the drops of the ocean? None can comprehend eternity, but the eternal God. Eternity is an ocean, whereof we will never ſee the ſhore: it is a deep, where we can find no bottom; a labyrinth, from whence we cannot extricate ourſelves, and where we ſhall ever loſe the door. There are two things one may ſay of it. (1.) It has a beginning. God's eternity has no beginning, but the creature's eternity has. Sometime there was no lake of fire; and thoſe who have been there, for ſome thouſand years, were once, in time, as we now are. But, (2.) It ſhall never have an end. The firſt who entered into the eternity of wo, is as far from the end of it, as the laſt, who ſhall go thither, will be at his entry. They who have launched out furtheſt into that ocean, are as far from land, as they were in the firſt moment they went into it: and thouſands of ages after this, they will be as far from it as ever. Wherefore, eternity, which is before us, is a duration that hath a beginning, but no end. It is a beginning without a middle, a beginning without an end. After millions of years paſt in it, ſtill it is a beginning. God's wrath, in hell, will ever be the wrath to come. But there is no middle in eternity. When millions of ages are paſt in eternity, what is paſt bears no proportion to what is to come; no not ſo much as one drop of water, falling from the tip of one's finger, bears to all the waters of the ocean. There is no end of it: while God, is, it ſhall be. It is an entry without an out-gate, a continual ſucceſſion of ages, a glaſs always running, which ſhall never run out.

Obſerve the continual ſucceſſion of hours, days, months and years, how one ſtill follows upon another: and think of eternity, wherein there is a continual ſucceſſion without end. When you go out in the night, and behold the ſtars of heaven, how they cannot be numbered for multitude, think of the ages of eternity; conſidering withal, there is a certain definite number of the ſtars, but no number of the ages of eternity. When you ſee a water running, think how vain a thing it would be, to ſit down by it, and wait till it ſhould run out, that you may paſs over; look how new water ſucceeds to that which paſſeth by you: and therein you will have an image of eternity, which is a river that never dries up. They who wear rings have an image of eternity on their fingers; and they who handle the wheel have an emblem of eternity before them: for to which part ſoever of the ring or wheel one looks, one will ſtill ſee another part beyond it: and on whatſoever moment of eternity you condeſcend, there is ſtill another beyond it. When you are abroad in the fields, and behold the piles of the graſs on the earth, which no man can reckon; think with yourſelves, that, were there as many thouſand years to come, as there are piles of graſs on the ground, even thoſe would have an end at length, but eternity will have none. When you look to a mountain, imagine in your hearts, how long it would be, ere that mountain ſhould be removed, by a little bird coming but once every thouſand years, and carrying away but one grain of the duſt thereof at once; the mountain would at length be removed that way, and brought to an end; but eternity will never end. Suppoſe this with reſpect to all the mountains of the earth! nay, with reſpect to the whole globe of the earth; the grains of duſt, whereof the whole earth is made up, are not infinite, and therefore the laſt grain would, at long-run, come to be carried away, in the way ſuppoſed: but when that ſloweſt work would be brought to an end, eternity would be, in effect, but beginning.

Theſe are ſome rude draughts of eternity: and now add miſery and woe to this eternity, what tongue can expreſs it? What heart can conceive it? In what balance can that miſery and that woe be weighed?

Secondly, Let us take a view of what is eternal in the ſtate of the damned in hell. Whatſoever is included in the fearful ſentence, determining their eternal ſtate, is everlaſting: therefore all the doleful ingredients of their miſerable ſtate will be everlaſting: they will never end. The text expreſly declares the fire, into which they muſt depart, to be everlaſting fire. And our Lord elſewhere tells us, that in hell the fire ſhall never be quenched, (Mark ix. 43.) with an eye to the valley of Hinnom, in which, beſides the already mentioned fire, for the burning of the children to Moloch, there was alſo another fire burning continually, to conſume the dead carcaſes, and filth of Jeruſalem: ſo the ſcripture repreſenting hell fire by the fire of that valley, ſpeaks it not only to be moſt exquiſite, but alſo everlaſting. Seeing then the damned muſt depart, as curſed ones, into everlaſting fire, it is evident that 1ſt, The damned themſelves ſhall be eternal: they will have a being for ever, and will never be ſubſtantially deſtroyed, or annihilated. To what end is the fire eternal; if theſe who are caſt into it, be not eternally in it! It is plain, the everlaſting continuance of the fire is, an aggravation of the miſery of the damned; but ſurely, if they be annihilated, or ſubſtantially deſtroyed, it is all a caſe to them, whether the fire be everlaſting or not. Nay, but they depart into everlaſting fire, to be everlaſtingly puniſhed in it; Matth. xxv. 46. They ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment. Thus the execution of the ſentence, is a certain diſcovery of the meaning of it. The worm that dieth not, muſt have a ſubject to live in; they, who ſhall have no reſt day nor night, Rev. xiv. 11. but ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever, chap. xx. 10. will certainly have a being for ever and ever, and not be brought into a ſtate of eternal reſt in annihilation. Deſtroyed indeed they ſhall be; but their deſtruction ſhall be an everlaſting deſtruction, (2 Theſſ. i. 9.) a deſtruction of their well being, but not of their being. What is deſtroyed, is not therefore annihilated; Art thou come to deſtroy us? ſaid the devil unto Jeſus Chriſt, Luke iv. 34. Howbeit the devils are afraid of torment, not of annihilation, Matth. viii. 29. Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? The ſtate of the damned is indeed a ſtate of death: but ſuch a death it is, as is oppoſite only to a happy life; as is clear from other notions of their ſtate, which neceſſarily include an eternal exiſtence; of which before. As they who are dead in ſin, are dead to God and holineſs, yet live to ſin: ſo dying in hell, they live, but ſeparated from God and his favour, in which life lies, Pſal. xxx. 5. They ſhall ever be under the pangs of death: ever dying, but never dead, or abſolutely void of life. How deſirable would ſuch a death be to them; but it will fly from them for ever. Could each one kill another there, or could they, with their own hands, rent themſelves into lifeleſs pieces, their miſery would quickly be at an end: but there they muſt live, who chuſed death, and refuſed life; for there death lives, and the end ever begins.

2dly, The curſe ſhall lie upon them eternally, as the everlaſting chain, to hold them in the everlaſting fire; a chain that ſhall never be looſed, being fixed for ever about them, by the dreadful ſentence of the eternal judgment. This chain, which ſpurns the united force of devils held faſt by it, is too ſtrong to be broken by men, who being ſolemnly anathematized, and devoted to deſtruction, can never be recovered to any other uſe.

3dly, Their puniſhment ſhall be eternal; Matth. xxv. 46. Theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment. They will be for ever ſeparated from God and Chriſt, and from the ſociety of the holy angels and ſaints; between whom and them an impaſſable gulf will be fixed, Luke xvi. 26. Between us and you, (ſays Abraham in the parable, to the rich man in hell,) there is a great gulf fixed: ſo that they which would paſs from hence to you cannot: neither can they paſs to us, that would come from thence. They ſhall for ever have the horrible ſociety of the devil and his angels. There will be no change of company for evermore, in that region of darkneſs. Their torment in the fire will be everlaſting: they muſt live for ever in it. Several authors, both ancient and modern, tell us of earth-flax, or ſalamander's hairs, that cloth made of it, being caſt into the fire, is ſo far from being burnt or conſumed, that it is only made clean thereby, as other things are by waſhing. But, however that is, it is certain, the damned ſhall be tormented for ever and ever in hell-fire, and not ſubſtantially deſtroyed, Rev. xx. 10. And indeed nothing is annihilated by fire, but only diſſolved. Of what nature ſoever hell fire is, no queſtion, the ſame God, who kept the bodies of the three children from burning in Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace, can alſo keep the bodies of the damned from any ſuch diſſolution by hell-fire, as may infer privation of life.

Laſtly, Their knowledge and ſenſe of their miſery ſhall be eternal; and they ſhall aſſuredly know that it will be eternal. How deſirable would it be to them, to have their ſenſes for ever locked up, and to loſe the conſciouſneſs of their own miſery! as one may rationally ſuppoſe it to fare at length with ſome, in the puniſhment of death inflicted on them on earth; and as it is with ſome mad people in their miſerable caſe: but that agrees not with the notion of torment for ever and ever, nor the worm that dieth not. Nay, they will ever have a lively feeling of their miſery, and ſtrongeſt impreſſions of the wrath of God againſt them. And the dreadful intimation of the eternity of their puniſhment, made to them by the Judge, in their ſentence, will fix ſuch impreſſions of the eternity of their miſerable ſtate upon their minds, as they will never be able to lay aſide, but will continue with them for evermore, to complete their miſery. This will fill them with everlaſting deſpair; a moſt tormenting paſſion, which will continually rent their hearts, as it were, in a thouſand pieces: To ſee floods of wrath ever coming, and never to ceaſe; to be ever in torment, and withal to know there ſhall never never be a releaſe, will be the capeſtone put on the miſery of the damned. If hope deferred maketh the heart ſick, (Prov. xiii. 12.) how killing will it be, hope rooted up, ſlain outright, and buried for ever out of the creature's ſight! this will fill them with hatred and rage againſt God, their known irreconcileable enemy; and under it, they will roar for ever like wild bulls in a net, and fill the pit with blaſphemies for evermore.

Laſtly, I might here ſhew the reaſonableneſs of the eternity of the puniſhment of the damned; but having already ſpoke of it in vindicating the juſtice of God, in his ſubjecting men in their natural ſtate to eternal wrath, I only remind you of three things. (1.) The infinite dignity of the party offended by ſin, requires an infinite puniſhment to be inflicted for the vindication of his honour; ſince the demerit of ſin riſeth according to the dignity and excellency of the perſon againſt whom it is committed. The party offended is the great God, the chief good: the offender a vile worm; in reſpect of perfection infinitely diſtant from God, to whom he is indebted for all that ever he had, implying any good, or perfection whatſoever. This then requires an infinite puniſhment to be inflicted on the ſinner: the which ſince it cannot, in him, be infinite in value, muſt needs be infinite in duration, that is to ſay, eternal. Sin is a kind of infinite evil, as it wrongs an infinite God; and the guilt and defilement thereof is never taken away, but endures for ever, unleſs the Lord himſelf in mercy do remove it. God, who is offended, is eternal, his being never comes to an end: the ſinful ſoul is immortal, and the man ſhall live for ever: the ſinner being without ſtrength, Rom. v. 6. to expiate his guilt, can never put away the offence; therefore it ever remains, unleſs the Lord do put it away himſelf, as in the elect, by his ſon's blood. Wherefore the party offended, the offender, and the offence, ever remaining, the puniſhment cannot but be eternal. (2.) The ſinner would have continued the courſe of his provocations againſt God, for ever without end, if God had not put a check to it by death. As long as they were capable to act againſt him, in this world, they did it; and therefore juſtly will he act againſt them, while he is; that is for ever. God who judgeth of the will, intents, and inclinations of the heart, may juſtly do againſt ſinners, in puniſhing, as they would have done againſt him, in ſinning. Laſtly, (though I put not the ſtreſs of the matter here, yet) it is juſt and reaſonable the damned ſuffer eternally, ſince they will ſin eternally in hell, gnaſhing their teeth, (Matth. viii. 12.) under their pain, in rage, envy, and grudge, (compare Acts vii. 54. Pſal. cxii. 10. Luke xiii. 28.) and blaſpheming God there, (Rev. xvi. 21.) whither they are driven away in their wickedneſs, Prov. xiv. 32. That the wicked be puniſhed for their wickedneſs, is juſt; and it is no ways inconſiſtent with juſtice, that the being of the creature be continued for ever: wherefore, it is juſt, that the damned, continuing wicked eternally, do ſuffer eternally for their wickedneſs. The miſery, under which they ſin, can neither free them from the debt of obedience, nor excuſe their ſinning, and make it blameleſs. The creature, as a creature, is bound unto obedience to his Creator, and no puniſhment, inflicted on him can free him from it, more than the malefactor's priſons, irons, whipping, and the like, do ſet him at liberty, to commit anew the crimes for which he is impriſoned, or whipt. Neither can the torments of the damned excuſe or make blameleſs their horrible ſinning under them, more than exquiſite pains, inflicted upon men on earth, can excuſe their murmuring, fretting, and blaſpheming againſt God under them: for it is not the wrath of God, but their own wicked nature, that is the true cauſe of their ſinning under it: and ſo the holy Jeſus bore the wrath of God, without ſo much as one unbecoming thought of God, and far leſs any one unbecoming word.

USE I. Here is a meaſuring reed: O! that men would apply it. 1ſt, Apply it to your time in this world, and you will find your time to be very ſhort. A proſpect of much time to come proves the ruin of many ſouls. Men will be reckoning their time by years, (like that rich man, (Luke xii. 19. 20.) when, it may be, there are not many hours of it to run. But reckon as you will, laying your time to the meaſuring reed of eternity, you will ſee your age is as nothing. What a ſmall and inconſiderable point is ſixty, eighty, or a hundred years, in reſpect of eternity? Compared with eternity, there is a greater diſproportion, than between a hair's breadth and the circumference of the whole earth. Why do we ſleep then in ſuch a ſhort day, while we are in hazard of loſing reſt through the long night of eternity? 2dly, Apply it to your endeavours for ſalvation, and they will be found very ſcanty. When men are preſſed to diligence in their ſalvation-work, they are ready to ſay, To what purpoſe is this waſte? Alas! if it were to be judged by our diligence, what it is that we have in view; as to the moſt part of us, no man could thereby conjecture, that we have an eternity in view. If we duly conſidered eternity, we could not but conclude, that, to leave no means appointed of God uneſſayed, till we get our ſalvation ſecured; to refuſe reſt or comfort in any thing, till we are ſheltered under the wings of the Mediator; to purſue our great intereſt with the utmoſt vigour, to cut off luſts dear as right hands and right eyes; to ſet our faces reſolutely againſt all difficulties, and fight our way through all the oppoſition made by the devil, the world, and the fleſh; are, all of them together, little enough for eternity.

USE II. Here is balance of the ſanctuary, by which one may underſtand the lightneſs of what is falſely thought weighty; and the weight of ſome things, by many reckoned to be very light.

Firſt, Some things ſeem very weighty, which, weighed in this balance, will be found very light. (1.) Weigh the world, and all that is in it, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, and the whole will be found light in the balance of eternity. Weigh herein all worldly profits, gains, and advantages; and you will quickly ſee, that a thouſand worlds will not quit the coſt of the eternity of woe. For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? Matth. xvi. 26. Weigh the pleaſures of ſin, which are but for a ſeaſon, with the fire that is everlaſting, and you muſt account yourſelves fools and madmen, to run the hazard of the one for the other. (2.) Weigh your afflictions in this balance, and you will find the heavieſt of them very light, in reſpect of the weight of eternal anguiſh. Impatience under affliction, eſpecially when worldly troubles do ſo embitter mens ſpirits, that they cannot reliſh the glad tidings of the goſpel, ſpeaks great regardleſſneſs of eternity. As a ſmall and inconſiderable loſs will be very little at heart with him, who ſees himſelf in hazard of loſing his whole eſtate: ſo troubles in the world will appear but light to him who has a lively view of eternity. Such a one will ſtoop, and take up his croſs, whatever it be, thinking it enough to eſcape eternal wrath. (3.) Weigh the moſt difficult and uneaſy duties of religion here, and you will no more reckon the yoke of Chriſt unſupportable. Repentance, and bitter mourning for ſin, on earth, are very light in compariſon of eternal weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth in hell. To wreſtle with God in prayer, weeping and making ſupplication for the bleſſing in time, is far eaſier than to ly under the curſe through all eternity. Mortification of the moſt beloved luſt is a light thing, in compariſon with the ſecond death in hell. Laſtly, Weigh your convictions in this balance. O! how heavy do theſe ly upon many, till they get them ſhaken off! They are not diſpoſed to fall in with them, but ſtrive to get clear of them, as of a mighty burden. But the worm of an ill conſcience will neither die nor ſleep in hell, though one may now lull it aſleep for a time. And certainly it is eaſier to entertain the ſharpeſt convictions in this life, ſo as they may lead one to Chriſt, than to have them fixed for ever in the conſcience, while in hell one is totally and finally ſeparated from him.

Secondly, But, on the other hand, (1.) Weigh ſin in this balance; and, though it now ſeems but a light thing to you, ye will find it a weight ſufficient to turn up an eternal weight of wrath upon you. Even idle words, vain thoughts, and unprofitable actions, weighed in this balance, and conſidered as following the ſinner into an eternity, will each of them be heavier than the ſand of the ſea: time idly ſpent will make a weary eternity. Now is your ſeed-time; thoughts, words, and actions are the feed ſown: eternity is the harveſt. Though the ſeed now lies under the clod unregarded by moſt men, every the leaſt grain ſhall ſpring up at length: and the fruit will be according to the ſeed, Gal. vi. 8. For he that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption, (i. e. deſtruction;) but he that ſoweth to the Spirit, ſhall of the Spirit reap life everlaſting. (2.) Weigh in this balance your time and opportunities of grace and ſalvation, and you will find them very weighty. Precious time, and ſeaſons of grace, Sabbaths, communions, prayers, ſermons, and the like, are by many now-a-days made light of: but the day is coming, when one of theſe will be reckoned more valuable than a thouſand worlds, by thoſe who now have the leaſt value for them. When they are gone for ever, and the loſs cannot be retrieved; theſe will ſee the worth of them, who will not now ſee it.

USE III. and laſt. Be warned and ſtirred up to flee from the wrath to come. Mind eternity, and cloſely ply the work of your ſalvation. What are you doing, while you are not ſo doing? Is heaven a fable, or hell a mere ſcarecrow? Muſt we live eternally, and will we be at no more pains to eſcape everlaſting miſery? Will faint wiſhes take the kingdom of heaven by force? And will ſuch drowſy endeavours, as moſt men ſatisfy themſelves with, be accounted flying from the wrath to come? Ye who have already fled to Chriſt, up and be doing: ye have begun the work: go on, loiter not, but work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling, Phil. ii. 12. Fear him which is able to deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell, Matth. x. 28. Remember, ye are not yet aſcended into heaven: ye are but in your middle ſtate. The everlaſting arms have drawn you out of the gulf of wrath ye were plunged into, in your natural ſtate; they are ſtill underneath you, that ye can never fall down into it again; nevertheleſs, ye have not yet got up to the top of the rock: the deep below you is frightful; look at it, and haſten your aſcent. Ye who are yet in your natural ſtate, lift up your eyes, and take a view of the eternal ſtate. Ariſe, ye prophane perſons, ye ignorant ones, ye formal hypocrites, ſtrangers to the power of godlineſs, flee from the wrath to come. Let not the young adventure to delay a moment longer, nor the old put off this work any more: To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts; leſt he ſwear in his wrath, that ye ſhall never enter into his reſt. It is no time to linger in a ſtate of ſin, as in Sodom, when fire and brimſtone are coming down on it from the Lord. Take warning in time. They who are in hell, are not troubled with ſuch warnings; but are enraged againſt themſelves, for that they ſlighted the warning when they had it.

Conſider, I pray you, (1.) How uneaſy it is to ly one whole night on a ſoft bed, in perfect health, when one very fain would have ſleep, but cannot get it; ſleep being departed from him. How often will one in that caſe wiſh for reſt! How full of toſſings to and fro! But ah! how dreadful muſt it then be to ly in ſorrow, wrapt up in ſcorching flames through long eternity, in that place where they have no reſt day nor night! (2.) How terrible would it be to live under violent pains of the cholic or gravel, for forty or ſixty years together, without any intermiſſion! yet, that is but a very ſmall thing in compariſon of eternal ſeparation from God, the worm that never dieth, and the fire that is never quenched. (3.) Eternity is an awful thought: O long, long, endleſs eternity! But will not every moment, in eternity of woe, ſeem a month, and every hour a year, in that moſt wretched and deſperate condition? Hence ever and ever, as it were a double eternity. The ſick man in the night, toſſing to and fro on his bed, ſays, it will never be day: complains that his pain ever continues, never, never, abates. Are theſe petty time-eternities, which men form to themſelves, in their own imaginations, ſo very grievous? Alas! then how grievous, how utterly unſupportable muſt real eternity of woe, and all manner of miſeries be! Laſtly, There will be ſpace enough there, to reflect on all the ills of one's heart and life, which one cannot get time to think of now; and to ſee that all that was ſaid of the impenitent ſinner's hazard, was true, and that the half was not told. There will be ſpace enough in eternity to think on delayed repentance, to rue one's follies, when it is too late; and in a ſtate paſt remedy, to ſpeak forth the fruitleſs wiſhes: 'O that I had never been born; that the womb had been my grave, and I had never ſeen the ſun! O that I had taken warning in time, and fled from his wrath, while the door of mercy was ſtanding open to me! O that I had never heard the goſpel, that I had lived in ſome corner of the world, where a Saviour and the great ſalvation were not once named!' But all in vain. What is done cannot be undone; the opportunity is loſt, and can never be retrieved; time is gone, and cannot be recalled. Wherefore improve time, while you have it, and do not wilfully ruin yourſelves, by ſtopping your ear to the goſpel call.

And now, if you would be ſaved from the wrath to come, and never go into this place of torment, take no reſt in your natural ſtate; believe the ſinfulneſs and miſery of it, and labour to get out of it quickly, fleeing unto Jeſus Chriſt by faith. Sin in you is the ſeed of hell: and if the guilt and reigning power of it be not removed in time, they will bring you to the ſecond death in eternity. There is no way to get them removed, but by receiving of Chriſt, as he is offered in the goſpel, for juſtification and ſanctification: and he is now offered to you with all his ſalvation. Rev. xxii. 12. 17. And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works ſhall be. And the Spirit and the Bride ſay, Come. And let him that heareth, ſay, Come. And let him that is a thirſt, Come. And whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely. Jeſus Chriſt is the Mediator of peace, and the Fountain of holineſs: he it is who delivereth us from the wrath to come. There is no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit, Rom. viii. 1. And the terrors of hell, as well as the joys of heaven, are ſet before you, to ſtir you up to a cordial receiving of him with all his ſalvation; and to determine you unto the way of faith and holineſs, in which alone you can eſcape the everlaſting fire. May the Lord himſelf make them effectual to that end.

Thus far of man's eternal ſtate: the which, becauſe it is eternal, admits no ſucceeding one for ever.

Psal. lxxxix. 3.

I have made a covenant with my choſen.

1 Cor. xv. 45.

The laſt Adam was made a quickening Spirit.

As man's ruin was originally owing to the breaking of the covenant of works, ſo his recovery, from the firſt to the laſt ſtep thereof, is owing purely to the fulfilling of the covenant of grace; which covenant, being that wherein the whole myſtery of our ſalvation lies, I am to eſſay the opening of, as the Lord ſhall be pleaſed to aſſiſt. And there is the more need of humble dependence on the Father of lights, through Jeſus Chriſt his Son, for the manifeſtation of his Spirit in this manner, that whereas the firſt covenant is known in part by the light of nature, the knowledge of this ſecond is owing entirely to revelation.

It was from this covenant the Pſalmiſt, in the verſe immediately preceding the firſt text, took a comfortable view of a glorious building, infallibly going up in the midſt of ruins; even a building of mercy: For I have ſaid, Mercy ſhall be built up for ever; the ground of which confident aſſertion is, in our text, pointed out to be God's covenant with his choſen. From the type of the covenant of grace, namely, the covenant of royalty made to David, he ſaw a building up of mercy for the royal family of Judah, when they were brought exceeding low. From the ſubſtance of it, he ſaw a building of mercy for ſinners of mankind, who were laid in ruins by the breach of the firſt covenant. This is that new building free grace ſet on foot for us; into which they that believe are inſtantly thereupon received, and, where once received, they ſhall dwell for ever: a building of mercy, in which every ſtone, from the bottom to the top, from the foundation ſtone to the capeſtone, is pure mercy, rich and free mercy to us.

Of this building of mercy I ſhall drop a few words.

And, 1. The plan of it was drawn from all eternity, in the council of the Trinity: for it is according to the eternal purpoſe purpoſed in Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. iii. 11. The objects of mercy, the time, and place, the way and means of conferring it on them, were deſigned particularly, before man was miſerable; yea before he was at all. 2. The builder is God himſelf, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. iii. 9. Ye are God's building. All hands of the glorious Trinity are at work in this building. The Father choſe the objects of mercy, and gave them to the Son to be redeemed; the Son purchaſed redemption for them; and the Holy Ghoſt applies the purchaſed redemption unto them. But it is ſpecially attributed to the Son, on the account of his ſingular agency in the work: Zech. vi. 12. Behold the man whoſe name is the BRANCH——HE ſhall build the temple of the Lord: verſ. 13. Even HE ſhall build the temple of the Lord, and HE ſhall bear the glory. 3. The foundation was laid deep in the eternal counſel; beyond the reach of the eyes of men or angels. Paul conſidering it, cries out, O the depth! Rom. xi. 33. For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counſellor? verſ. 34. 4. It is more than five thouſand years ſince this building roſe above ground. And the firſt ſtone of it that appeared, was a promiſe of a Saviour, made in paradiſe after the fall, Gen. iii. 15. namely, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the head of the ſerpent. Here was mercy. And mercy was laid upon mercy. Upon promiſing mercy was laid quickening mercy, whereby our loſt firſt parents were enabled to believe the promiſe: and upon quickning mercy was laid pardoning mercy to them; and upon that again ſanctifying and eſtabliſhing mercy: and at length glorifying mercy. 5. The cement is blood; the blood of Jeſus Chriſt the Mediator, which is the blood of God, Acts xx. 28. No ſaving mercy for ſinners could conſiſt, nor could one mercy lie firm upon another in the building, without being cemented with that precious blood: but by it the whole building conſiſts, and ſtands firm for ever, Heb. ix. 22. 23. vii. 24. 25. 6. Ever ſince the time it appeared above ground, it has been going on. And many hands have been employed, to ſerve in carrying on the work. In the firſt ages of the world, patriarchs were employed in it, ſuch as Adam, Enoch, and Noah; in the middle ages, prophets, prieſts, and Levites, in theſe laſt ages, the apoſtles, and other extraordinary officers and ordinary miniſters of the goſpel. Great has been the oppoſition made to the building from the beginning, by Satan and his agents, both in the way of violence and deceit; yet has it all along been going on ſtill. And now it is come far above mid-height; it is drawing towards the top, and the time when the laſt ſtone ſhall be laid thereon; for it is evident, we are far advanced in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, wherein the myſtery of God is to be finiſhed, Rev. x. 7. 7. The copeſtone will be laid on it at the laſt day: at what time the promiſe will receive its accompliſhment, in the complete ſalvation of all the objects of mercy, then to be advanced unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, Eph. iv. 13. In that day our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the great builder, ſhall bring forth the headſtone thereof with ſhoutings, even the laſt and crowning mercy, ſaying, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. And then ſhall they dwell in the building of mercy perfected, and ſing of mercies for ever and ever. 8. Laſtly. The foundation on which it ſtands, is a firm one. It is neceſſary that it be ſo: for a building of mercy to ſinners, from a holy juſt God, is a building of huge weight, more weighty than the whole fabric of heaven and earth: and if it ſhould fall, all is ruined a ſecond time, without any more hope of relief. But it is a ſure foundation, being God's everlaſting covenant: I have made a covenant with my choſen.

In which words, together with the ſecond text, there are four things to be conſidered. 1. The foundation on which the building of mercy ſtands; to wit, A covenant. 2. The parties-contractors in that covenant. 3. The making of it. And, 4. The nature of it.

I. The foundation on which the building of mercy ſtands, is a covenant, a divine covenant, a ſure one. The firſt building for man's happineſs, was a building of bounty and goodneſs, but not of mercy; for man was not in miſery, when it was a rearing up. And it was founded on a covenant too; namely, on the covenant of works made with the firſt Adam: but he broke the covenant, and the whole building tumbled down in an inſtant. But this is another covenant, and of another nature. In the type indeed, and ſhadow, it is the covenant of royalty with David, 2 Sam. vii. 11.---17. which was a foundation of mercy to his family, ſecuring the continuance of it, and that as a royal family. Howbeit, in the antitype and truth, it is the covenant of grace, the covenant of eternal life and ſalvation to ſinners, the ſpiritual ſeed of the head thereof, to be given them in the way of free grace and mercy, Pſal. lxxxix. 24. 29. 36. and in which they are freed from the curſe, ſo that it cannot reach them, notwithſtanding of their failures; but the Lord deals with them as his children ſtill, though offending children, verſe 30.——33. and all by the means of Jeſus Chriſt the Saviour, the mighty One, verſe 19. This is the foundation of the whole building of mercy to ſinners in their low eſtate, into which they were brought by Adam's fall. The revelation, promulgation, and offer made unto the ſons of men, of this covenant which lay hid in the depths of the eternal counſel, is called the goſpel; the glad tidings of a new covenant for life and ſalvation to ſinners.

II. The parties-contractors in this covenant are, GOD, and his Choſen, the laſt Adam: for it is evident from the nature of the things here ſpoken of, verſe 3, 4. and from 2 Sam. viii. 8. that theſe words, I have made a covenant with my choſen, are the Lord's own words. Both heaven and earth were concerned in this covenant; for it was a covenant of peace between them: and accordingly the intereſts of both are ſeen to by the parties-contractors. 1. On Heaven's ſide is God himſelf, the party-propoſer of the covenant, I have made a covenant with my choſen. He was the offended party, yet the motion for a covenant of peace comes from him; a certain indication of the good-will of the whole glorious Trinity towards the recovery of loſt ſinners. The God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of mercies, beholding a loſt world, his mercy ſeeks a vent, that it may be ſhown to the miſerable; but juſtice ſtands in the way of the egreſs and building of mercy, without there be a covenant whereby it may be ſatisfied. Then ſaith the Father, 'The firſt covenant will not ſerve the purpoſe of mercy; there muſt be a new bargain: but the loſt creatures have nothing left, to contract for themſelves; unleſs another take the burden upon him for them, there is no remedy in the caſe: they cannot chuſe ſuch an one for themſelves; I will make a choice for them, and make the covenant with my choſen.' 2. On man's ſide, then, is God's choſen, or choſen one; for the word is ſingular. This choſen one, in the type, the covenant of royalty, is David; but in the antitype, the covenant of grace, it is the ſon of God, the laſt Adam, even Chriſt the choſen of God, Luke xxiii. 35. The truth is, ſuch great things are ſaid of this party with whom this covenant was made, of his ſeed, and of the efficacy of this covenant, as can fully agree to none but Chriſt and his ſpiritual ſeed, verſ. 4. 27. 29. 36. 37. The royal family of Judah, the houſe of David, never recovered their ancient ſplendor, after the Babyloniſh captivity; with a view to which time, this pſalm ſeems to have been penned. Their kingdom is extinct many ages ago; and the grandeur of that family, according to the fleſh, is quite ſunk. But the promiſe made to David in the covenant of royalty, ſtill flouriſheth, and will flouriſh for ever in Jeſus Chriſt, the top-branch of the family of David. How then can it be, but that, in the perpetual building of mercy, mentioned verſ. 2. and the eſtabliſhing of David's ſeed, and building up his throne to all generations, verſe 4, Chriſt himſelf is chiefly aimed at? And indeed he only was the mighty One, fit for the vaſt undertaking in this covenant, verſ. 19. and him the Father points out to us, as his elect, or choſen One, Iſ. xlii. 1.

III. As to the making of this covenant between the contracting parties: the Father made it with his own Son, I have made a covenant with my choſen, and that before the world began, Tit. i. 2. By their mutual agreement thereto, this covenant was completely made from eternity, even as the covenant of works with the firſt Adam was before we were in being. The original text calls it cutting off a covenant; which phraſe is taken from that ancient uſage of cutting off a beaſt, by cutting it aſunder, at the making of a covenant, Jer. xxxiv. 18. It intimates this covenant to be a covenant by ſacrifice; wherein the party-contractor on man's ſide was the ſacrifice, and divine juſtice the ſword that cut it aſunder, according to Zech. xiii. 8. Awake, O ſword, againſt my ſhepherd, and againſt the man that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of hoſts: ſmite the ſhepherd. And withal it imports the inviolableneſs and perpetuity of the covenant made; no more for ever to be diſſolved, than the parts of the beaſt cut off one from the other, to be joined together as formerly.

IV. For the nature of this covenant: there are five things belonging thereto that appear from the texts, namely, 1. The being of a repreſentation in it. 2. The deſign for which it was ſet on foot. 3. That there are in it a condition; and 4. A promiſe: and 5. Into whoſe hands the adminiſtration of it is put.

1. There is a repreſentation taking place in this covenant. As it was in the firſt covenant, ſo it was likewiſe in the ſecond; the party-contractor and undertaker on man's ſide, was a repreſentative, repreſenting and ſuſtaining the perſons of others. This appears, in that the choſen One with whom the covenant was made, is called the laſt Adam: for it is plain, he is ſo called in relation to the firſt Adam, who was the figure (or type) of him, Rom. v. 14. namely, in that likeas the firſt Adam repreſenting his ſeed in the covenant of works, brought ſin and death on them; ſo he repreſenting his, brings righteouſneſs and life to them; as the apoſtle teacheth at large in that chapter.

2. The deſign of this covenant was life, the moſt valuable intereſt of mankind. The laſt Adam was made a quickening ſpirit, to wit, to give life to his ſeed. So it is a covenant of life, as the covenant of Levi, a type thereof, is expreſly called, Mal. ii. 5. The firſt covenant was a covenant of life too; but there is this difference, to wit, that the firſt was for life in perfection to upright man having life before; the ſecond, for life in perfection to ſinful man legally and morally dead. The parties contracted for in this ſecond covenant, were conſidered as under the bands of death, abſolutely void of life; and therefore utterly incapable to act for helping themſelves. They lay like dry bones ſcattered about the grave's mouth before the parties-contractors; juſtice forbidding to give them life, but upon terms conſiſtent with, and becoming its honour.

3. The condition of the covenant, the terms of that life, agreed to by the repreſentative, is implied in that he was the laſt Adam, namely, to go through with what the firſt Adam had ſtuck in. Adam, in the covenant of works, ſtumbled in the courſe of his obedience, and fell; and by his fall was quite diſabled to begin it anew: he thereby came under the penalty of that covenant alſo, but was utterly unable to diſcharge it. So the laſt Adam comes in the room of the firſt, not as the firſt Adam ſtood in his integrity; for in that caſe there was no place for a ſecond Adam; but as he lay a broken man under the firſt bargain. And coming in his room in this caſe, his buſineſs was to ſatisfy the demands of the firſt covenant, in behalf of his ſeed. Theſe demands were now run up high, quite beyond what they were to innocent Adam: the penalty was become payable, as well as the principal ſum. Wherefore the firſt covenant being ingroſſed in the ſecond, is declared broken; and the principal and penalty being ſummed up together, the clearing of the whole is laid upon the laſt or ſecond Adam, as the condition of the ſecond covenant.

4. The promiſe of the covenant to be that on condition, performed by the party-contractor on Heaven's ſide, is implied in theſe words, I have made a covenant with (in the original, to) my choſen; that is, 'I have made a covenant, binding and obliging myſelf by ſolemn promiſe to my choſen One, for ſuch and ſuch benefits, upon the condition therein ſtated and agreed to.' Compare the following clauſe, I have ſworn unto David my ſervant. The nature of this promiſe will be enquired into in the due place.

5. Laſtly, The adminiſtration of this covenant is put into the hands of the party-contractor on man's ſide: The laſt Adam was made a quickening ſpirit. Each of the contracting parties being God, it was not poſſible that either party ſhould fail, or that the laſt Adam ſhould break, as the firſt had done. Whereupon the time of Chriſt's fulfilling of the condition of the covenant being prefixed by the Father, God took Chriſt's ſingle bond for ſufficient ſecurity, and thereupon conſtituted him adminiſtrator of the covenant. Thoſe whom he repreſented, were conſidered as being under death, which, in the language of the covenant, is a very extenſive term: the Spirit and life were to be purchaſed by him, and did belong to the promiſe of the covenant. So, upon the credit of his fulfilling the condition of the covenant in due time, the fulneſs of the Spirit, and eternal life, were lodged in him, to be communicated by him, Rev. iii. 1. Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God. 1 John v. 11. God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son. John xvii. 2. As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life. Thus was he made a quickening ſpirit.

Now the Doctrine of theſe texts thus compared and explained, is,

That the covenant of grace for life and ſalvation to loſt ſinners of mankind, was made with JESUS CHRIST the LAST ADAM; and he conſtituted adminiſtrator of it.

In handling of this weighty ſubject, I deem it not neceſſary to inſiſt, to prove that there is a covenant of grace; the being of which is obvious from the texts, and many other ſcriptures, ſuch as, Iſa. xlii. 6. xlix. 8. and liv. 10. Heb. viii. 6. and xiii. 20. But the following account of it ſhall be ranged under theſe ſix heads; namely,

1. The parties in the covenant of grace.
2. The making of that covenant.
3. The parts of it.
4. The adminiſtration of it.
5. The trial of a ſaving perſonal inbeing in it.
6. The way of inſtating ſinners perſonally and ſavingly in it.

HEAD I.

The PARTIES in the Covenant of Grace.

IN all covenants, of whatſoever nature they be, whether covenants of abſolute promiſe, or conditional ones, there muſt needs be diſtinct parties: for howbeit one may decree, reſolve, or purpoſe with himſelf, without another party; yet one's covenanting or bargaining, vowing or promiſing, ſpeaks an obligation thence ariſing to another diſtinct party. Accordingly, in the covenant of grace there are three parties to be conſidered; 1. The party-contractor on Heaven's ſide; 2. The party-contractor on man's ſide; and, 3. The party contracted and undertaken for. Of which in order. And,

I. Of the party contractor on heaven's ſide.

AS it was in the covenant of works in this point, ſo it is likewiſe in the covenant of grace; the party upon the one ſide is GOD himſelf, and he only. There was no need of any other to ſee to the intereſts of Heaven in this covenant; and there was no other when it was made, being made from eternity, before the world began, Tit. i. 2. This is plain from the words of the covenant, I will be their God, Jer. xxxi. 33.

But whether God is herein to be conſidered perſonally or eſſentially, is not quite ſo clear. Some divines think, that the Father, perſonally conſidered, namely, as the firſt perſon of the glorious Trinity, is the party-contractor on Heaven's ſide; others, that God, eſſentially conſidered, that is, as Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, is that party-contractor. But however we conceive of that matter, we are aſſured from the holy oracles, that theſe three are one God; and judge, that, according to the ſcripture, it may be ſafely ſaid, that God eſſentially conſidered, was the party-contractor in the perſon of the Father. Hereby it is owned, that the Son and the Holy Ghoſt have their part in the covenant, on Heaven's ſide; as the party offended by man's ſin: and, in the mean time, a peculiar agency in this great work of power and authority, on that ſide, is attributed to the Father; as there is unto the Son, on man's ſide.

And that of the party-contractor on Heaven's ſide we may conceive aright in this matter, theſe two things are, in the firſt place, to be taken notice of. 1. He from all eternity decreed the creation of man after his own image, and the making of the covenant of works with him, in time. All things brought forth in time, lay from eternity in the womb of God's decree; in virtue whereof they have their being in time: for which cauſe the decree is ſaid to bring forth, as a woman doth a child, Zeph. ii. 2. And the creation of angels and men, with the providence about them, made many lines in the volume of the ſealed book of the decrees. God ſelf-ſufficient needed neither man nor angel: but, for the manifeſtation of his own glory, he purpoſed from eternity to create them; and moreover, to enter into ſuch a covenant with man, as one ſhould therein repreſent the whole family; ſovereign pleaſure mean while taking another method with the angelic tribe; but withal purpoſing to give both the one and the other a ſufficient ability to ſtand in their integrity, if they would. Thus, from eternity, the covenant of works, in all the parts and appurtenances thereof, was before the eternal mind; though being made with a mere man, it could not actually be entered into, till once man was created. But, Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world, Acts xv. 18. 2. He decreed alſo from eternity, to permit the firſt man, the repreſentative of the whole family, to fall, and ſo to break the covenant, and involve himſelf, and all his poſterity, in ruins. It is evident from the ſpotleſs holineſs of God, and the nature of the thing, that the divine permiſſion was not the cauſe of man's fall; and from the neceſſary dependence of the creature upon the Creator, that without it, he could not have fallen. But the ſovereign Lord of the creatures permitted the fall of man, for his own holy ends, purpoſing to bring about good from it.

Now, God, the party-contractor on Heaven's ſide in the covenant of grace, is to be conſidered in that matter in a threefold view.

1. He is to be conſidered in it as an offended God; offended with all the ſins of all mankind, original and actual. Looking upon the children of men the whole maſs of mankind appeared in the eyes of his glory corrupt and loathſome, the very reverſe of his holineſs: he ſaw them all gone aſide, together become filthy, none doing good, no not one, Pſal. xiv. 2. 3. In the firſt covenant, God contracted with man himſelf as a friend, without the interpoſition of a Mediator: but in the ſecond covenant it was not ſo, and it could not be ſo; for in it man was conſidered as a fallen creature, a tranſgreſſor of the law, and an enemy to God; and it is a covenant of reconciliation, a covenant of peace for thoſe who had been at war with Heaven.

2. But withal God is to be conſidered herein as a God purpoſing and decreeing from eternity to manifeſt the glory of his free grace, love, and mercy, in the ſalvation of ſome of mankind loſt. Accordingly, we are ſaid to be ſaved in time, according to his own purpoſe and grace given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. Without ſuch a purpoſe of grace in God, there could not have been a covenant of grace. But the ſovereign Lord of the creatures overlooking the fallen angels as to any purpoſe of mercy, entertained thoughts of love and peace towards fallen mankind, purpoſing in himſelf to make ſome of them everlaſting monuments of his free grace and mercy, partakers of life and ſalvation; and ſo ſet on foot the covenant of grace.

3. Laſtly, Yet we are to conſider him alſo in this matter as a juſt God, who cannot but do right, give ſin a juſt recompenſe, and magnify his holy law, and make it honourable, Gen. xviii. 25. Heb. ii. 2. Iſ. xlii. 21. Upon the motion for extending mercy to ſinners of mankind, the juſtice of God interpoſeth, pleading that mercy cannot be ſhewn them, but upon terms agreeable to law and juſtice. And indeed it was neither agreeable to the nature of God, nor to his truth in his word, to erect a throne of grace on the ruins of his exact juſtice, nor to ſhew mercy in prejudice of it. Now, the juſtice of God required, that the law which was violated, ſhould be fully ſatisfied, and the honour thereof repaired by ſuffering and obedience: the former ſuch as might ſatisfy the penal ſanction of the law, and the latter, the commanding part of it. The which being quite beyond the reach of ſinners themſelves, they behoved to die without mercy, unleſs another, who could be accepted as a ſufficient ſurety, ſhould undertake for them, as a ſecond Adam, coming in their room and ſtead, as they lay ruined by the breach of the covenant of works.

Thus ſtood the impediments in the way of mercy to fallen man, quite inſuperable to him, or any of his fellow creatures; and the covenant of grace was made, for removing thoſe impediments out of the way, and that it might be the channel wherein the whole rich flood of ſaving mercy might flow freely, for the quickening, purging, ſanctifying, and perfecting of loſt ſinners of mankind, who were under the bands of death and the curſe, through the breach of the firſt covenant by the firſt Adam.

From what is ſaid on this point, we may draw this inference, to wit, That the redemption of the ſoul is precious. The ſalvation of loſt ſinners was a greater work than the making of the world: the powerful word commanded, and this laſt was done; but the former was not to be compaſſed, but with more ado.

II. Of the party-contractor on man's ſide.

WE have ſeen, that, upon the one ſide, in the covenant of grace, is God himſelf. Now, upon the other ſide is Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, with his ſpiritual ſeed, Heb. ii. 13. Behold, I and the children which God hath given me, the former, as the party-contractor, and undertaker; the latter, as the party contracted and undertaken for: a good reaſon for his name Immanuel, which being interpreted, is, God with us, Mat. i. 23.

The party-contractor then with God, in the covenant of grace, is our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. He alone managed the intereſts of men in this eternal bargain: for at the making of it none of them were in being; nor, if they had been, would they have been capable of affording any help.

Now, Jeſus Chriſt, the party-contractor on man's ſide, in the covenant of grace, is, according to our texts, to be conſidered in that matter as the laſt or ſecond Adam, head and repreſentative of a ſeed; loſt ſinners of mankind, the party contracted for. And thus he ſiſted himſelf Mediator between an offended juſt God, and offending men guilty before him. In which point lay one main difference betwixt the firſt Adam and the laſt Adam: for there is one Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus: who gave himſelf a ranſom, 1 Tim. ii. 5. 6. And ſo the covenant of grace, which could not be made immediately with ſinners, was made with Chriſt the laſt Adam, their head and repreſentative, mediating between God and them; therefore called Jeſus the Mediator of the new covenant, to whom we come by believing, Heb. xii. 22. 24.

The term Mediator is not, to my obſervation, applied in the holy ſcripture to any other except Moſes, Gal. iii. 19. The law—was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. And of him, a typical mediator, it is worth obſerving, that he was not only an inter-meſſenger between God and Iſrael; but, in God's renewing his covenant, in a way of reconciliation, after the breaking of the tables, the covenant was made with him, as their head and repreſentative, Exod. xxxiv. 27. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Write thou theſe words: for after the tenor of theſe words I have made a covenant with thee and with Iſrael. This refers unto the gracious anſwer made to Moſes's prayer, ver. 9. Pardon our iniquity and our ſin, and take us for thine inheritance. Ver. 10. And he (namely, the Lord) ſaid, Behold, I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, &c. Ver. 28. And he wrote upon the tables (to wit, the new ones) the words of the covenant, the ten commandments. Now, Moſes was alone on the mount with God during the whole time of this tranſaction; and in it the Lord ſpeaks of him and the people as one, all along.

For clearing of this purpoſe anent the party-contractor on man's ſide, I ſhall, 1. Evince, that the covenant of grace was made with Chriſt as the laſt Adam, head and repreſentative of a ſeed; and, 2. Shew why it was ſo made.

Firſt, That the covenant of grace, the ſecond covenant, was made with Chriſt as the laſt or ſecond Adam, head and repreſentative of a ſeed, to wit, his ſpiritual ſeed, appears from the following conſiderations.

1. Covenants typical of the covenant of grace were made or eſtabliſhed with perſons repreſenting their reſpective ſeed. Thus it was in the typical covenant in our text, the covenant of royalty made with David, an undoubted type of the covenant of grace. In it David was God's ſervant, having a ſeed comprehended with him therein, Pſal. lxxxix. 3. 4. He was an eminent type of Chriſt; who is therefore called David, Hoſ. iii. 5. Afterwards ſhall the children of Iſrael return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king. And the benefits of the covenant of grace are called the ſure mercies of David, Iſa. lv. 3. Thus was it alſo in the covenant of the day and night, (Jer. xxxiii. 20.) eſtabliſhed with Noah and his ſons, repreſentatives of their ſeed, the new world, Gen. ix. 9. Behold, I eſtabliſh my covenant with you, and with your ſeed after you. And that this covenant was a type of the covenant of grace, appears from its being made upon a ſacrifice, chap. viii. 20. 21. 22.; and from the ſign and token of it, the rainbow, chap. ix. 13. appearing round about the throne, Rev. iv. 3.; but eſpecially from the nature and import of it, to wit, that there ſhould not be another deluge, Gen. ix. 11.; the ſubſtance of which is plainly declared, Iſa. liv. 9. As I have ſworn that the waters of Noah ſhall no more go over the earth; ſo have I ſworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. Ver. 10. For the mountains ſhall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee. And ſuch alſo was the covenant of the land of Canaan, made with Abraham, repreſenting his ſeed, Gen. xv. 18. and afterwards confirmed by oath, chap. xxii. 16, 17. In all which he was an eminent type of Chriſt, the true Abraham, father of the multitude of the faithful, who, upon God's call, left heaven, his native country, and came and ſojourned among the curſed race of mankind, and there offered up his own fleſh and blood a ſacrifice unto God, and ſo became the true heir of the world, and received the promiſes for his ſpiritual ſeed; the ſum whereof is given by Zacharias, in his account of the covenant with Abraham, Luke i. 72. To remember his holy covenant, ver. 73. the oath which he ſware to our father Abraham, ver. 74. that he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear, ver. 75. in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him, all the days of our life. And finally, thus it was in the covenant of everlaſting prieſthood made with Phinehas, another type of the covenant of grace. In it Phinehas ſtood a repreſentative of his ſeed, Numb. xxv. 13. And he ſhall have it, and his ſeed after him, even the covenant of an everlaſting prieſthood; becauſe he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Iſrael. And therein he typified Jeſus Chriſt, repreſenting his ſpiritual ſeed in the covenant of grace; for it is evident, that as in Chriſt, who made the great atonement for ſinners, the everlaſting prieſthood promiſed to Phinehas, hath its full accompliſhment, his ſpiritual ſeed partaking of the ſame in him; according to Pſal. cx. 4. Thou art a prieſt for ever. Rev. i. 6. And hath made us kings and prieſts unto God and his Father.

Now, foraſmuch as theſe typical covenants were made or eſtabliſhed with parties ſtanding therein as public perſons, heads, and repreſentatives of their ſeed; it natively follows, that the covenant of grace typified by them, was made with Chriſt as the head and repreſentative of his ſpiritual ſeed: for whatſoever is attributed to any perſon or thing as a type, hath its accompliſhment really and chiefly in the perſon or thing typified.

2. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt being, in the phraſeology of the Holy Ghoſt, the laſt Adam, the reaſon hereof cannot be taken from the nature common to the firſt Adam and him; for all mankind partake of that; but from their common office of federal headſhip and repreſentation, in the reſpective covenants, touching man's eternal happineſs; the which is peculiar unto Adam, and the man Chriſt. Accordingly, Adam is called the firſt man, and Chriſt the ſecond man, 1 Cor. xv. 47.; but Chriſt is no otherwiſe the ſecond man, than as he is the ſecond federal head, or the repreſentative in the ſecond covenant; as Adam was the firſt federal head, or the repreſentative in the firſt covenant. Agreeable to which, the Apoſtle repreſents Adam as the head of the earthly men, and Chriſt as the head of the heavenly men, ver. 48.; the former being thoſe who bear Adam's image, namely, all his natural ſeed; the latter, thoſe who partake of the image of Chriſt, namely, his ſpiritual ſeed, ver. 49. All this is confirmed from Adam's being a figure or type of Chriſt, which the Apoſtle expreſly aſſerts, Rom. v. 14. and from the parallel he draws betwixt them two, namely, that as by Adam's covenant-breaking, ſin and death came on all that were his, ſo by Chriſt's covenant-keeping, righteouſneſs and life came to all that are his, ver. 17, 18, 19. Wherefore, as the firſt covenant was made with Adam as the head and repreſentative of his natural ſeed, ſo the ſecond covenant was made with Chriſt as the head and repreſentative of his ſpiritual ſeed.

3. As the firſt man was called Adam, that is to ſay, man; he being the head and repreſentative of mankind, the Perſon in whom God treated with all men, his natural ſeed, in the firſt covenant; and on the other hand, all men therein repreſented by him, do in the language of the Holy Ghoſt, go under the name of Adam, Pſal. xxxix. 5, 11. Surely every man (in the original it is, all Adam) is vanity: ſo Chriſt bears the name of his ſpiritual ſeed, and they, on the other hand, bear his name; a plain evidence of their being one in the eye of the law, and of God's treating with him as their repreſentative in the ſecond covenant. Iſrael is the name of the ſpiritual ſeed, Rom. ix. 6.; and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is called by the ſame name, Iſa. xlix. 3. Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified: as ſeveral learned and judicious commentators do underſtand it; and it is evident from the whole context, ver. 1, 2, 4,—9. The truth is, Chriſt is here ſo called with a peculiar ſolemnity; for the original text ſtands preciſely thus: Thou art my ſervant: Iſrael, in whom I will glorify myſelf: that is, thou art Iſrael's repreſentative, in whom I will glorify myſelf, and make all mine attributes illuſtrious; as I was diſhonoured, and they darkened, by Iſrael, the collective body of the ſpiritual ſeed. And this leads us to a natural and unreſtrained interpretation of that paſſage, Pſal. xxiv. 6. This is the generation of them that ſeek him, that ſeek thy face, O Jacob: that is, in other words, that long for the appearing (Prov. vii. 15. Gen. xxxiii. 39.) of the Meſſias, the Lord whom the Old Teſtament church did ſo ſeek; a pledge of whoſe coming to his temple, (Mal. iii. 1.) was the bringing in of the ark into the tabernacle that David had erected for it, on which occaſion that Pſalm was penned. Accordingly it follows immediately, ver. 7. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlaſting doors, and the King of glory ſhall come in. And in another Pſalm, penned on the ſame occaſion, and expreſly ſaid to have been delivered on that very day in the hand of Aſaph, 1 Chron xvi. 1, 7. is that expreſſion found, ver. 11. Seek his face continually; juſtly to be interpreted, agreeable to the circumſtances of the main thing which David through the Spirit had in view that day, namely, the coming of the Meſſias. Thus, Chriſt bears the name of his ſpiritual ſeed; and they, on the other hand, bear his name too: 1. Cor. xii. 12. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: ſo alſo is Chriſt.

4. The promiſes were made to Chriſt as the ſecond Adam, the head and repreſentative of his ſeed: Gal. iii. 6. Now to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, And to ſeeds, as of many; but as of one; And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt. I own, that here, even as in the text immediately before cited, is meant, Chriſt myſtical, the head and members. It is to them that the promiſes are here ſaid to be made; but primarily to the head, ſecondarily to the members in him; even as the promiſe of life in the firſt covenant, was primarily made to Adam as the head, and ſecondarily to all his natural ſeed in him. Thus, in the typical covenant with Abraham, the promiſes of the earthly inheritance were primarily made to Abraham himſelf, and ſecondarily to his ſeed according to the fleſh. And even ſo the promiſe of the eternal inheritance plainly ſtands made to Chriſt, Tit. i. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promiſed before the world began: when there was none but Chriſt to whom that promiſe could be made perſonally. Accordingly the covenant is ſaid to be made with the houſe of Iſrael, namely, the ſpiritual Iſrael; yet are the promiſes of it directed, not to them, but to another perſon, Heb. viii. 10. I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people. The reaſon of which plainly appears, in the promiſes being made to Chriſt as their head and repreſentative. Now, foraſmuch as theſe promiſes belong to the covenant of grace, which is therefore called the covenants of promiſe, Eph. ii. 12. it is manifeſt, that if they were made to Chriſt as the head and repreſentative of a ſeed, the covenant of grace was made with him as ſuch; and he to whom they were primarily made, was ſurely the party-contractor therein.

5. Laſtly, This federal headſhip of Chriſt, and his repreſenting his ſpiritual ſeed in the covenant of grace appears from his ſuretiſhip in that covenant, the better teſtament whereof Jeſus was made a ſurety, Heb. vii. 22. Now, he became ſurety for them in the way of ſatisfaction for the debt of puniſhment and obedience; and that taking the whole burden on himſelf, as for perſons utterly unable to anſwer for themſelves. This will afterwards fall in to be cleared. Mean while ſuch a ſurety is a true repreſentative of the party he is ſurety for, and one perſon with them in the eye of the law. Hence, not only is Chriſt ſaid to have been made ſin for us, 2 Cor. v. 21. to have had the iniquity of us all laid on him, Iſa. liii. 6. and to have died for us, Rom. v. 8.; but alſo we are ſaid to have been crucified with Chriſt, Gal. ii. 20. to be made the righteouſneſs of God in him, 2 Cor. v. 21. yea, to be raiſed up together, and glorified, being made to ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. ii. 6. and to be made alive in Chriſt, as we die in Adam, 1 Cor. xv. 22. All which neceſſarily requires this his headſhip and repreſentation in the covenant.

And thus it appears, that the ſecond covenant was made with Chriſt as the laſt or ſecond Adam, head and repreſentative of his ſpiritual ſeed.

Secondly, We are to enquire, wherefore the ſecond covenant, the covenant of grace, was ſo made? And this ſhall be accounted for in the following particulars.

1. The covenant of grace was made with Chriſt as the laſt Adam, head and repreſentative of his ſpiritual ſeed, that infinite love might have an early vent, even from eternity. The ſpecial love of God to the ſpiritual ſeed took vent in the covenant of grace. And that love and that covenant are of the ſame eternal date: as the love was everlaſting or eternal, Jeremiah xxxi. 3. ſo was the covenant, Heb. xiii. 20. Tit. i. 2. But ſince the ſeed are but of yeſterday, the covenant of grace behoved to be like the covenant of works, a yeſterday's covenant, a time-covenant, if it was not made with Chriſt as their repreſentative; it could not otherwiſe have been an eternal covenant. The promiſe of eternal life, which is undoubtedly a promiſe of the covenant of grace, could not otherwiſe have been of ſo ancient a date, as before the world began, as the apoſtle ſays it is, Tit. i. 2. How could an eternal covenant be originally made with creatures of time, but in their eternal head and repreſentative? Or how could an eternal covenant be perſonally made with them, by way of perſonal application to them, had it not been from eternity made with another as their head and repreſentative? But in this method of infinite wiſdom, free love took an early vent; not waiting the ſlow motion of its objects creeping out of the womb of time, in which many of them lie wrapt up, even to this day. But as princes ſometimes do, by proxy, marry young princeſſes, before they are marriageable, or capable to give their conſent; ſo God, in his infinite love, married to himſelf all the ſpiritual ſeed, in and by Jeſus Chriſt as their repreſentative, not only before they were capable of conſenting, but before they were at all. The which they do afterwards, in their effectual calling, approve of by faith, and give their conſent perſonally to; and ſo they enjoy God as their God, and God hath them as his people: John xx. 17. I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.

2. Otherwiſe it could not have been made at all a conditional covenant anſwering the deſign of it. This covenant taking place only upon the breach of the firſt covenant, the great deſign of it was, that dead ſinners might have life, as was before obſerved. Now, in order to this, a holy juſt God ſtood upon conditions, without performing of which that life was not to be given: and they were high conditions, Pſal. xl. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire. 1 Theſſ. v. 9. 10. Jeſus Chriſt who died for us, that-----we ſhould live. But how could an effectual conditional covenant for life be made with dead ſinners, otherwiſe than in a repreſentative? Dead ſouls cannot perform any condition for life at all, which can be pleaſing to God. They muſt needs have life before they can do any thing of that nature, be it ever ſo ſmall a condition: therefore a conditional covenant for life, could not be made with ſinners in their own perſons; eſpecially conſidering, that the conditions for life were ſo high, that man at his beſt ſtate was not able to perform them. Wherefore, if ſuch a covenant was made at all, it behoved to be made with Chriſt as their repreſentative, Rom. viii. 3. 4.

3. It was ſo ordered, to the end it might be unto us poor ſinners a covenant of grace indeed. It is evident from the holy ſcriptures, that this covenant was deſigned for exalting the free grace of God; and that it is ſo framed, as to be a covenant of pure grace, and not of works, in reſpect of us, whatever it was in reſpect of Chriſt: Rom. iv. 16. Therefore it is of faith: that it might be by grace. Eph. ii. 9. Not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt. And at this rate, indeed, it is a covenant of pure grace; and all ground of boaſting is taken away from us; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, as repreſentative, being ſole undertaker and performer of the conditions thereof. But it is not ſo, if it is made with the ſinner himſelf, ſtanding as principal party, contracting with God, and undertaking and performing the conditions of the covenant for life: for how low ſoever theſe conditions undertaken and wrought by the ſinner in his own perſon, are ſuppoſed to be, the promiſe of the covenant is made to them; and ſo, according to the ſcripture-reckoning, it is a covenant of works, Rom. iv. 4. Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt; and betwixt Adam's covenant and ſuch a covenant there is no difference, but in degree, which leaves it ſtill of the ſame kind.

4. This method was taken, that the communication of righteouſneſs and life might be in as compendious a way, as the communication of ſin and death was: As by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous, Rom. v. 19. The covenant of works having been made with Adam, as a repreſentative of his natural ſeed, upon the breaking thereof, ſin and death are communicate to them all from him as a deadly head. This being ſo, it was not agreeable to the method of divine procedure with men, to treat with theſe predeſtinated unto ſalvation ſeverally, as principal parties, each contracting for himſelf in the new covenant for life; but to treat for them all as one public perſon, who, through his fulfilling of the covenant ſhould be a quickening head to them, from whence life might be derived to them in as compendious a way, as death was from the firſt Adam. For his mercies are above all his other works.

5. Laſtly, The covenant of grace was ſo made, that it might be a ſure covenant; even to the end the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed, Rom. iv. 16. The firſt covenant was made with a mere creature, as a principal party and contractor: and though he was a holy and righteous man, yet was he ſo fickle and unſtable, that he failed of performing the condition he undertook; and ſo the benefit of the promiſe was loſt: wherefore fallen men were not at all fit to be principal parties, or parties-contractors in the new covenant, wherein the promiſe was to be ſure, and not to miſs of an accompliſhment. They being then wholly a broken company, not to be truſted in the matter, Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God was conſtituted head of the new covenant, to act for, and in the name of the ſpiritual ſeed: and that to the end, the covenant being in this manner ſure in point of the fulfilling of the condition, might be alſo ſure in point of the accompliſhment of the promiſe. And this is the very hinge of the ſtability of the covenant of grace, according to the ſcripture: Pſal. lxxxix. 28. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him. Verſe 22. The enemy ſhall not exact upon him, or, as others read it, and I think juſtly, The enemy ſhall not beguile him, namely, as he did the firſt Adam. The original phraſe is elliptical, q. d. The enemy ſhall not beguile (his ſoul, Jer. xxxvii. 9.) in him. Before I leave this point, I offer the following inferences from it.

Inf. 1. The covenant of redemption and the covenant of grace, are not two diſtinct covenants, but one and the ſame covenant. I know that many divines do expreſs themſelves otherwiſe in this matter; and that upon very different views, ſome of which are no ways injurious to the doctrine of free grace. But this I take to be ſcripture-truth, and a native conſequent of the account given of the covenant of grace in our Larger Catechiſm, to wit, 'That the covenant of grace was made with Chriſt 'as the ſecond Adam, and in him with all the elect as 'his ſeed. Gal. iii. 16. Now to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, And to ſeeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt, Rom. v. 15. to the end——Iſ. liii. 10. 11.———When thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. He ſhall ſee the travel of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied, &c. So the covenant of redemption and the covenant of grace are but two names of one and the ſame ſecond covenant, under different conſiderations. By a covenant of redemption, is meant a bargain of buying and ſelling: and ſuch a covenant it was to Chriſt only; for as much as he alone engaged to pay the price of our redemption, 1 Pet. i. 18. 19. By a covenant of grace, is meant a bargain whereby all is to be had freely: and ſuch a covenant it is to us only, to whom the whole of it is of free grace; God himſelf having provided the ranſom, and thereupon made over life and ſalvation to us, by free promiſe, without reſpect to any work of ours, as the ground of our right thereto.

To confirm this, conſider, (1.) That, in ſcripture reckoning, the covenants for life and happineſs to man are but two in number, whereof the covenant of works is one: Gal. iv. 24. Theſe are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, namely, generating bond-children, excluded from the inheritance, verſe 30. This is a diſtinguiſhing character of the covenant of works; for ſuch are indeed the children of that covenant, but not the children of the covenant of grace under any diſpenſation thereof. Theſe two covenants are called, the old covenant, and the new covenant; and the old is called the firſt, which ſpeaks the new to be the ſecond: Heb. viii. 13. In that he ſaith, A new covenant, he hath made the firſt old. This is agreeable to the two ways unto life, revealed in the ſcripture; the one by works, the other by grace, Rom. xi. 6. The one is called the law, the other grace, chap. vi. 14. The former is the law-covenant with the firſt Adam repreſenting all his natural ſeed; made firſt in paradiſe, and afterward repeated on mount Sinai, with the covenant of grace: the latter is the covenant of grace, made with the ſecond Adam repreſenting his ſpiritual ſeed: 1 Cor. xv. 47. 48. (2.) It is evident that the ſalvation of ſinners is by the blood of the covenant, which is the blood of Chriſt, Heb. x. 29. 1 Cor. xi. 25. And the ſcripture mentions the blood of the covenant four times; but never the blood of the covenants; therefore the covenant, the blood whereof the ſcripture mentions, and our ſalvation depends upon, is but one covenant, and not two. Now, that covenant is Chriſt's covenant, or the covenant of redemption: for it was through the blood of it he was brought again from the dead; namely, in virtue of the promiſe made therein to be fulfilled to him upon his performing of the condition thereof, Heb. xiii. 20. And it is alſo his people's covenant, or the covenant of grace, Exod. xxiv. 8. Behold, the blood of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you. It is expreſsly called their covenant, Zech. ix. 11. As for thee alſo, by the blood of thy covenant, I have ſent forth thy priſoners out of the pit, wherein is no water. The words expreſſing the party here ſpoke of, being of the feminine gender in the firſt language, make it evident, that this is not directed to Chriſt, but to the church: ſo the covenant is propoſed as their covenant. And the ſpiritual priſoners are delivered, in virtue of this their covenant, which certainly muſt be the covenant of grace. By all which it appears, that the covenant of grace is the very ſame covenant that was made with Chriſt, in reſpect of whom it is called the covenant of redemption.

Inf. 2. Likeas all mankind ſinned in Adam, ſo believers obeyed and ſuffered in Chriſt the ſecond Adam. For as the covenant of works was made with Adam as a public perſon and repreſentative, all ſinned in him, when he broke that covenant! ſo the covenant of grace being made with Chriſt, as a public perſon and repreſentative, all believers obeyed and ſuffered in him, when he ſo fulfilled this covenant. This is the doctrine of the apoſtle, Rom. v. 19. As by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous. Chap. viii. 3. God ſending his own Son, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh: verſ. 4. That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us. 2 Cor. v. 21. That we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt. And it affords a ſolid anſwer for believers, unto the laws demand of obedience and ſuffering for life and ſalvation.

3. Believers are juſtified immediately, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, without any righteouſneſs of their own intervening; even as all men are condemned, upon Adam's ſin, before they have done any good or evil in their own perſons: Rom. v. 18. As by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation: even ſo by the righteouſneſs of one, the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life. And thus believers are righteous before God with the ſelf ſame righteouſneſs which was wrought by Jeſus Chriſt, in his fulfilling of the covenant. The which righteouſneſs is not imputed to them in its effects only; ſo as their faith, repentance and ſincere obedience, are therefore accepted as their evangelical righteouſneſs, on which they are juſtified: but it is imputed to them in itſelf, even as Adam's ſin was.

4. The covenant of grace is abſolute, and not conditional to us. For being made with Chriſt, as repreſentative of his ſeed, all the conditions of it were laid on him, and fulfilled by him. Wherefore all that remains of it to be accompliſhed, is, the fulfilling of the promiſes unto him and his ſpiritual ſeed; even as it would have been in the caſe of the firſt covenant, if once the firſt Adam had fulfilled the condition thereof.

5. The covenant of grace is a contrivance of infinite wiſdom and love, worthy to be embraced by poor ſinners as well ordered in all things and ſure, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. O admirable contrivance of help for a deſperate caſe! Wonderful contrivance of a covenant of God, with them who were incapable of ſtanding in the preſence of his holineſs, or of performing the leaſt condition for life and ſalvation! A new bargain for the relief of loſt ſinners made on the higheſt terms with thoſe who were not able to come up to the loweſt terms! Infinite wiſdom found out the way, to wit, by a repreſentative. The love of the Father engaged him to propoſe the repreſentation; and the love of the Son engaged him to accept of it. Thus God had one, with whom he might contract with the ſafety of his honour; and who was able to fulfil the covenant, to the reparation of the injuries done to his glory: and ſinners alſo had one able to act for them and to purchaſe ſalvation for them at the hand of a holy juſt God. So a ſure covenant was made, and a firm foundation laid, upon which God laid the weight of his honour, and on which ſinners may ſafely lay their whole weight: Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion——a ſure foundation: he that believeth, ſhall not make haſte, Iſ. xxviii. 16. ſhall not be aſhamed, Rom. ix. 33.

6. Laſtly, The way to enter perſonally into the covenant of grace, ſo as to partake of the benefits thereof, unto ſalvation, is, to unite with Chriſt the head of the covenant by faith. Being thus ingrafted into him, ye ſhall partake of all that happineſs which is ſecured to Chriſt myſtical, in the everlaſting covenant: even as, through your becoming children of Adam, by natural generation, ye are perſonally entered into the firſt covenant, ſo as to fall under that ſin and death which paſſed upon all men, by the breach thereof, Rom. v. 12.

III. Of the party contracted and undertaken for.

AS the party contractor and undertaker on man's ſide, in the covenant of grace, was a repreſentative; ſo the party contracted and undertaken for, was repreſented by him. And that theſe two, namely, the repreſented, and thoſe contracted for, are of equal latitude is plain from the nature of the thing: for theſe whom one repreſents in a covenant, he contracts for in that covenant; and thoſe for whom one contracts in a covenant made with him as repreſentative, are repreſented by him in that covenant. Thus it was in the covenant of the firſt Adam, who was a figure of Chriſt the head of the ſecond covenant. In it, thoſe whom Adam contracted for, he repreſented; and thoſe whom he repreſented, he contracted for: he repreſented his natural ſeed only, and for them alone he contracted: therefore thoſe whom the ſecond Adam contracted for, he repreſented; and whom he repreſented, he contracted for.

Now, the party repreſented and contracted for, by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the covenant of grace, was the elect of mankind; being a certain number of mankind, choſen from eternity to everlaſting life; children partakers of fleſh and blood, which God gave to Chriſt, Heb. ii. 13. 14. In their perſon he ſtood, making this covenant with his Father: in their name he acted, ſtriking this bargain with him, as a ſurety to obey the law, and ſatisfy juſtice.

And this I ſhall, in the firſt place, confirm; and then ſhall enquire how the elect were conſidered in this covenant and federal repreſentation.

Firſt, That the elect were the party repreſented, or contracted and undertaken for, in the covenant of grace appears from the following grounds.

1. The party with whom the covenant was made, is in the text called God's choſen; as repreſenting and contracting for all the choſen or elect: even as the firſt man was called Adam or man, as repreſenting and contracting for all mankind, in his covenant. For as the apoſtle teacheth, Heb. ii. 11. He—and they—are all of one; not only of one nature, but alſo of one body, to wit, the election: Chriſt is the head elect, Iſ. xlii. 1. they the body elect, Eph. v. 23. Therefore they go under one name, principally belonging to him, and then to them by participation with him. Thus he is alſo called Abraham's ſeed, as repreſenting all the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, that is, the elect, Gal. iii. 16. And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt; and the ſeed of the woman, as oppoſed to the ſerpent's ſeed: and under that name alſo the elect are comprehended; they and they only, being the party betwixt whom and the ſerpent with his ſeed, God puts the enmity, according to the promiſe, Gen. iii. 15.

2. Thoſe whom Chriſt repreſented and contracted for in the covenant of grace, are the heavenly men: 1 Cor. xv. 47. 48. The firſt man is of the earth, earthly: the ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, ſuch are they alſo that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, ſuch are they alſo that are heavenly. Now, the heavenly men, belonging to Chriſt the ſecond man, are none other but the elect. For they are contra-diſtinguiſhed to the earthy men, belonging to the firſt man; to wit, all mankind taken into the firſt covenant in Adam: and therefore they are the elect men, taken into the ſecond covenant, in the ſecond Adam. Again, the heavenly men are thoſe who ſhall bear the image of the heavenly man, Chriſt, verſ. 49. and ſuch are the elect, and they alone. And, finally, they are thoſe to whom Chriſt is, in reſpect of efficacy, a quickening ſpirit: for as is the heavenly ſuch are they alſo that are heavenly. As Adam's deadly efficacy goes as wide as his repreſentation did in the firſt covenant, reaching all mankind his natural ſeed, and them only: ſo Chriſt's quickening efficacy goes as wide as his repreſentation did in the ſecond covenant, reaching all the elect, his ſpiritual ſeed, and them only: and if it did not, ſome would be deprived of the benefit, which was purchaſed and paid for, by the ſurety, in their name: the which is not conſiſtent with the juſtice of God.

3. They whom Chriſt repreſented and contracted for in the covenant, are his ſeed, his ſpiritual ſeed: Gal. iii. 16. Now to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made. He ſaith---And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt. Pſal, lxxxix. 3. 4. I have ſworn unto David my ſervant. Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever. In the covenants typical of the covenant of grace, the parties repreſented were the ſeed of the repreſentatives they were made with, as was cleared before: and in the firſt Adam's covenant, his natural ſeed were the repreſented. Wherefore, in the ſecond Adam's covenant, his ſpiritual ſeed are the repreſented. Now, Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed are the elect, and none other; for they are thoſe whom he begets with the word of truth, Jam. i. 18. and are born again (1 Pet. i. 23.) unto him in their regeneration; whom therefore he ſees as his ſeed, with his own image on them, Iſ. liii. 10. They are the travail of his ſoul, who, ſooner or latter, are all of them, juſtified, ver. 11. They are the ſeed that ſhall ſerve him, Pſal. xxii. 30. which ſhall be eſtabliſhed and endure for ever, namely, in a ſtate of happineſs, Pſalm xxxix. 4. 29. 36.

4. Laſtly, Chriſt was in the covenant of grace Iſrael's repreſentative, according to that text, Iſ. xlix. 3. Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified. Now, Iſrael the collective body, is the elect, Rom. ix. 6. They are not all Iſrael which are of Iſrael: therefore the elect were the party repreſented and contracted for in the covenant. So thoſe whom Chriſt took with him into the bond of his covenant, are deſcribed to be the ſeed of Abraham, Heb. ii. 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham: or rather, as it is read in the margin of our Bibles, more agreeable to the original, He taketh not hold of angels, but of the ſeed of Abraham he taketh hold. The original word ſignifies, to take hold of a thing running away or falling down; and, in the ſame manner of conſtruction, it is uſed of Chriſt's catching hold of Peter ſinking in the water, Matth. xiv. 31. Fallen angels and men were both run away from God, and ſinking in the ſea of his wrath: and Chriſt with the bond of the covenant, takes hold of men; but not of the fallen angels: them he leaves to ſink unto the bottom. All the ſeed of Adam was ſinking, as well as the ſeed of Abraham, which is but a part of the ſeed of Adam, even ſome of all mankind: but Chriſt is not ſaid to have taken hold of the ſeed of Adam, that is, all mankind; but of the ſeed of Abraham, that is, all the elect, or the ſpiritual Iſrael, called the houſe of Jacob, Luke i. 33.

Accordingly it is obſervable, that the firſt time the covenant of grace was heard of in the world, the diſcourſe was directed to the ſerpent, by way of narration, Gen. iii. 14, 15.; not to Adam, as the firſt covenant was, chap. ii. 16, 17. that Adam might know, he was to come in here as a private perſon only, and not as a public perſon with his ſeed. And for this cauſe alſo, our Lord Jeſus is not ſimply called Adam, or Man; but the laſt Adam, and the ſecond Man, whoſe ſeed differs from that of the firſt man, as Abraham's ſeed from Adam's ſeed; but he is ſimply called Iſrael, without any epithet at all: and his ſeed is plainly determined to be the elect, Iſa. xlv. 25. In the Lord ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified: even as in the firſt man all the ſeed of Adam was condemned, Rom. v. 18. For the firſt man was ſimply called Adam or Man, becauſe, in the firſt covenant, he was a compend of all mankind; he was all man in law reckoning, they being all repreſented by him: ſo Jeſus Chriſt was a compend of all Iſrael; that is, all the elect; he was all Iſrael in law-reckoning, they being all repreſented by him. And thus we have the true ground of the univerſality of that expreſſion, Iſa. liii. 6. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all; i. e. of all Iſrael, that is to ſay, all the elect. The which is confirmed by a parallel text, bearing the type, whereof this hath the antitype, viz. Lev. xvi. 21. And Aaron ſhall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins, putting them upon the head of the goat. For as Iſrael was a people entertained with types, ſo they themſelves were indeed a typical people.

Secondly, We are to enquire, how the elect were conſidered in this covenant and federal repreſentation. And therein they came under a threefold conſideration.

1. They were conſidered as ſinners, loſt, ruined, and undone in Adam; loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, Matth. xv. 24. In the firſt covenant, the whole flock of mankind was put under the hand of one ſhepherd, to wit, Adam; but he loſing himſelf, loſt all the flock, and was never able to recover ſo much as one of them again. God had, from all eternity, put a ſecret mark on ſome of them, whereby he diſtinguiſhed them from the reſt, 2 Tim. 19. Having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And them alſo he ſaw among others, gone away from their paſture, wandering as waifs and ſtrays, a prey to every devourer; but, in order to their being ſought out, and returned, and kept in ſafety for ever, the new covenant was entered into with another ſhepherd, even our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and they are put under his hand, as the ſhepherd of Iſrael. In Adam's repreſentation in the covenant of works, the party repreſented was conſidered as an upright ſeed, Eccleſ. vii. 29.: but in Chriſt's repreſentation in the covenant of grace, the party repreſented was conſidered as a corrupt ſinful maſs, laden with guilt, under the wrath of God and curſe of the law. And who would have repreſented ſuch a company, putting himſelf in their room and ſtead? But free love engaged our Lord Jeſus to it. So the holy One of God repreſented wretched ſinners: the beloved of the Father repreſented the curſed company.

2. They were conſidered alſo as utterly unable to help themſelves, in whole or in part; as being without ſtrength, Rom, v. 6. They were debtors, but quite unable to pay off one farthing of the debt: they were criminals, but unable to bear their own puniſhment, to the ſatisfaction of juſtice: had it lain on them to have paid the debt, or borne the puniſhment, they behoved to have ſunk under the load for ever. So it was neceſſary they ſhould have one to repreſent them, taking burden on him for them all.

3. Laſtly. They were conſidered withal as the objects of eternal, ſovereign, and free love, given to Chriſt by his Father. The Father loved them, John xvii. 23. and therefore gave them to Chriſt, verſ. 6. The Son loved them, Eph. v. 2. and accepting of the gift, repreſented them in the covenant, as a father his own children, Iſ. ix. 6. His name ſhall be called-----The everlaſting Father. Compare Heb. ii. 13. Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me. It was owing to his free love, and mere good pleaſure, that they, and not others in the ſame condemnation, by the breach of the firſt covenant, were repreſented and contracted for by Jeſus Chriſt, in the ſecond; that their names were put in the eternal contract, while the names of others were loſt out. They were his Father's choice, and his own choice; ſo he became their repreſentative.

From what is ſaid concerning the party repreſented and contracted for, we make the following inferences.

Inf. 1. There is a ſovereign freedom of the love of God appearing in the ſecond covenant, the covenant of grace. And it appears eſpecially in two things. (1.) In that there was a love towards fallen man, and not towards fallen angels, Tit. iii. 4. whereby it came to paſs that men, and not devils, were taken hold of, repreſented and contracted for by Jeſus Chriſt, in the covenant, Heb. ii. 16. Doubtleſs he could have contracted for the one, as well as for the other: but ſovereignty paſſed by fallen angels, and caught hold of men; howbeit the former were, in their own nature, the more worthy and excellent creatures. But in all the diſpenſation of grace, there is no reſpect to creature worth; all is owing to the mere good pleaſure of God, who hath mercy on whom he will have mercy. (2.) It appears in that there was an electing love of men; whereby it came to paſs, that ſome men, and not all men, were repreſented and contracted for in the covenant. All men were alike by nature; and there was nothing in one more than in another, to recommend him: but free love pitched on objects altogether unlovely; and ſovereign love pitches on ſome ſuch objects, paſſing by others of the ſame condition: Even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemeth good in thy ſight, Matth. xi. 26. The veſſels of honour, and the veſſels of diſhonour, are both made of the ſame ſinful lump: a myſtery that muſt be reſolved into ſovereign will and pleaſure, Rom. ix. 21. Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour? But ſay not, that this diſparageth the federal repreſentation of the ſecond Adam, that he repreſented only ſome of mankind, whereas the firſt Adam repreſented all mankind. For as it is more to be ſurety for a vaſt ſum, for one man who neither hath, nor can have any thing at all wherewithal to pay his debt, than to be ſurety for a hundred ſuch as have abundance of their own; ſo it was more for Jeſus Chriſt to contract and undertake for one ſinner, than for Adam to contract for a righteous world. And ſtill it holds true, that where ſin abounded, grace did much more abound, Rom. v. 20. for it is more by far to ſave one, than to ruin many. Mean while, thoſe repreſented by Chriſt in the ſecond covenant, are a great multitude, which no man can number, Rev. vii. 9. even as the ſtars of heaven, Gen. xv. 5. Rom. iv. 18.

Inf. 2. There is no univerſal redemption, nor univerſal atonement. Jeſus Chriſt died not for all and every individual perſon of mankind; but for the elect only. The contrary doctrine may conſiſt with the opinion which holds the covenant of redemption, and the covenant of grace, to be two diſtinct covenants; the former made with Chriſt, and the latter with believers; the condition of the one undertaken and performed by him, the condition of the other undertaken and performed by us. Accordingly that opinion concerning the covenant, is readily embraced by Univerſaliſts of different denominations. But that doctrine is utterly inconſiſtent with this account of the covenant, which doth at once overthrow univerſal redemption or atonement, together with the federal conditionality of our holineſs and good works in the covenant of grace. For if the covenant of grace was made with Chriſt as a repreſentative, and the elect only were the party repreſented by him in it: then ſurely the conditions of the covenant, his doing and dying, were accompliſhed for them only; and he died for no other: as when one hath entered into a bond of ſuretyſhip, his payment of that bond can never be reckoned a payment of their debt, whoſe names were not in the bond, and whom he was not ſurety for.

Inf. 3. and laſt, Whoever they be that reject the covenant of grace offered to them in the goſpel, and ſo periſh; all God's elect ſhall infallibly be entered perſonally into it, and be ſaved. Like as all thoſe whom Adam repreſented in the covenant of works, have been, are, or ſhall be brought perſonally into that covenant, and ſin and death paſs upon them, Rom. v. 12. even ſo all thoſe whom Chriſt repreſented in the covenant of grace, have been, are, or ſhall be brought perſonally into this covenant and partake of righteouſneſs and life. Our Lord Jeſus has fulfilled the conditions of the covenant for them whom he repreſented; and it would neither be ſuitable to the juſtice of God, nor to the wiſdom of Chriſt, the party contracting with him, that he ſhould repreſent, contract, and fulfil the conditions, for any who ſhall never enjoy the benefit of the contract. Wherefore, ſince there are who, by a purpoſe of God that cannot be fruſtrated, ſhall without peradventure, be brought perſonally into this covenant; and ye who hear the goſpel, having the means for compaſſing that end uſed towards you, do ſtand as fair for it as any: this may encourage you to come to Chriſt, and take hold of the covenant. Beſtir yourſelves therefore, O ſinners, to take hold of the covenant of grace, which is offered to you in the goſpel; and come ye to Chriſt by faith, thereby winding yourſelves perſonally into the bond of this covenant, and the communion thereof.

Objection. 'But I fear I am none of thoſe whom 'Chriſt repreſented in the covenant of grace: how 'then can I take hold of it by believing? Anſwer. Though your name were the firſt name that the Lamb wrote down in his book of life; yet you nor no man can know, that it is there at all, until that you have by believing taken hold of the covenant. 2 Pet. i. 10. Make your calling and election ſure; but firſt your calling and then your election. And, on the other hand, though you were a monſter of all manner of wickedneſs, and had all the deſperate marks of a caſt-away about you, except that one only, the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, you nor no man can know that you were not repreſented in the covenant: Matth. xii. 31. All manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven unto men: but the blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt ſhall not be forgiven unto men. Wherefore that matter is an abſolute ſecret unto you, which, in this caſe, you are not to meddle to determine in: for the ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God: but thoſe things which are revealed, belong unto us, Deut. xxix. 29. Neither does your warrant to believe, and to lay hold on the covenant, any manner of way depend on it: for the reprobate have as good and fair a revealed warrant to believe and take hold of the covenant as the elect have, elſe they could not be condemned for unbelief, and not taking hold of the covenant. Be what you will, ſince you are certainly a ſinner of mankind, your warrant is uncontestable, according to the word: For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. John iii. 16. This is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, 1 John iii. 23. Wherefore believe ye, and take hold of the covenant for yourſelves; ſo ſhall ye know your election, and your repreſentation in the covenant, by the effects thereof.

This difficulty caſt in the way of a ſinner ſenſible of his need of Chriſt, to beat him off from believing on Chriſt, is a dangerous device and temptation of the devil. But do thou repel it, ſaying, O enemy of my ſalvation, it is true, I do not know whether Chriſt repreſented me or not, in the eternal covenant; neither am I obliged nor concerned to know it, in order to my taking hold of that covenant: but one thing I know aſſuredly, namely, that the covenant, in the free promiſe of life and ſalvation upon the ground of Chriſt's obedience and death allenarly, is held out to me, even to me, to be believed, truſted to, and reſted upon, by me, even by me: and therefore I will believe, and lay hold on it; and, upon the infallible ground of the faithfulneſs of God in the promiſe, Whoſoever believeth ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life, I will aſſuredly conclude, that it ſhall be made out to me.

QUESTION. But are there no marks or ſigns whereby a poor ſinner may know himſelf to be one of thoſe who were repreſented by Chriſt in the ſecond covenant, and whoſe names be put in the bond of ſuretyſhip that he gave to his Father from eternity? ANSWER. Yea, there are; but then they are ſuch, as although the having of them will prove a man to have been repreſented by Jeſus Chriſt in the eternal covenant; yet the want of them will not prove a man not to have been repreſented therein, foraſmuch as what one has not now, he may come to have afterwards. And, under this limitation, I offer theſe two marks of the thing in queſtion.

Mark 1. A deliberate and cordial complacency in the covenant. As it was with the repreſentative from eternity; ſo it is in time, in that matter, with the repreſented, when once by grace they become capable of perſonal conſenting: there is a deliberate and cordial complacency in the covenant being propoſed, Pſalm. xl. 7. Then ſaid I—ver. 8.—thy law is within my heart. The children of men diſcover themſelves to be Adam's natural ſeed, repreſented by him in the covenant of works, by the inclination and bent of their hearts towards that covenant. There is ſuch a bias to that covenant hung upon the minds of men naturally, that Do and live, or Work and win, is the religion of all natural men, ſo far as they have any practical religion at all; and they cannot be brought off from it, but by the power of renewing grace. Even ſo the elect of God diſcover themſelves to be Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, repreſented by him in the covenant of grace, by their deliberate and cordial complacency in this covenant. The heart touched with divine grace, ſays of it, This is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. The new bias hung on their minds by renewing grace, carries them to a hearty approbation, reliſh, and liking of the new covenant held forth in the goſpel: they are well pleaſed with the parties-contractors, repreſentative and repreſentation in it; the conditions and promiſes of it; the adminiſtrator, the adminiſtration, and order thereof. In a word, the covenant is in their eyes a faultleſs contrivance: there is nothing in it they would have out, and there is nothing out of it they would have in. So there they caſt anchor for their own ſouls. But it is not ſo with others: 1 Pet. ii. 7. Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious: but unto them which be diſobedient, the ſtone which the builders diſallowed, the ſame is made the head of the corner; verſ. 8. and a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which ſtumble at the word, being diſobedient, whereunto alſo they were appointed.

Mark 2. The image of Chriſt begun to be drawn on the ſoul, together with a longing for the perfection thereof: 1 Cor. xv. 48. As is the heavenly, ſuch are they alſo that are heavenly. verſe 49. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly. Likeas all whom Adam repreſented, when he entered into the covenant of works in paradiſe, do afterwards, every one in his time, perſonate Adam, looking as like him as ever child was like a father, acting even as he acted, as I ſhewed elſewhere: ſo all whom Chriſt repreſented in the covenant of grace from eternity, do in time put on Chriſt, Gal. iii. 27. perſonating him, and repreſenting him in another ſenſe, namely, bearing his image, and walking even as he walked, 1 John ii. 6. It is a promiſe of the covenant to our Lord Jeſus, Iſ. liii. 10. He ſhall ſee his ſeed, to wit, as one ſees a new-born babe. But do not others ſee them too? Yea indeed they do. Satan and wicked men ſee them, as rebels and traitors do with grudge and hatred ſee a new-born prince heir to the crown. The godly ſee them, as in that caſe the princeſſes do with a particular ſatisfaction ſee their new-born brother. But our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf ſees them, as the king, the father of the babe, does with a peculiar ſatisfaction ſee him as his own ſon and his own picture. Mean while, as Adam's children do not open out all at once what of old Adam is in them, but by degrees as they grow up; but they are ſtill longing for the perfection thereof, when they ſhall be grown men: ſo Chriſt's children are but imperfect in this life, as in the ſtate of childhood: but they are longing to arrive at perfection, at the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, the principle of which they have in them, Eph. iv. 13.

Thus far of the firſt head, the Parties in the covenant of grace.

HEAD II.

The MAKING of the Covenant of Grace.

HAving conſidered the parties in the covenant of grace, we come now to take a view of the making of that covenant betwixt the parties contracting therein. And here we find ourſelves at the fountain-head of the ſalvation of loſt ſinners, the origin and riſe of the glorious plan, laid from eternity in the ſecret council of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, for remedy of man's miſery. And this is a manifold myſtery, the ſeveral folds of which we are not able fully to diſcover. With God it was all one piece, if I may ſo phraſe it; for with him all things are together and at once; and not one thing before, and another after, as with us. Howbeit, we cannot conceive of it but in parcels; firſt one piece of the myſtery, and then another: and that becauſe of the weakneſs of our capacity, as we are creatures: and much more, as we are creatures under much ſpiritual darkneſs. Wherefore we muſt of neceſſity addreſs ourſelves to the conſideration of it in parcels; but ſtill remembering, we are in the eternal myſtery, tranſacted in the eternal decree of the Holy Trinity all at once, by one eternal act of the divine will; in which, nevertheleſs, we are allowed to conceive a certain order, ſince otherwiſe we cannot take up the myſtery.

We have already ſeen, that the Father, the party-contractor on Heaven's ſide, is in that matter to be conſidered as an offended God; but purpoſing to manifeſt the glory of his mercy in the ſalvation of ſome of mankind loſt; yet withal as a juſt God, who cannot but give ſin a juſt recompence: and alſo, that Jeſus Chriſt, the party-contractor on man's ſide, is to be conſidered therein as the laſt or ſecond Adam, repreſentative of a ſeed. Wherefore, firſt of all, we are to enquire, How Chriſt the Son of God became the ſecond Adam? and then, How the covenant was made with him as ſuch? the former being as it were preliminary to the latter.

Firſt, How Chriſt the Son of God became ſecond Adam? This we may take up in two things.

1. The Father willed and deſigned, that his own Son the eternal Word, ſhould, for the purpoſe of mercy towards mankind loſt, take on their nature, and become man. He ſaw that ſacrifice and offering would not anſwer the caſe; the debt was greater than to be paid at that rate; the redemption of ſouls could not be managed but by a perſon of infinite dignity: wherefore, having purpoſed that the darling attribute of mercy ſhould be illuſtrated in the caſe of loſt mankind, he willed the human nature to be united in time to the divine nature, in the perſon of the Son.

And hereunto the ſon, as the eternal Word, the ſecond Perſon of the glorious Trinity, having no nearer relation to man than as his Sovereign Lord Creator, readily agreed: Heb. x. 5. Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me.——Ver. 7. Then ſaid I, Lo, I come (in the volume of thy book it is written of me) to do thy will, O my God. The eternal Word conſented to be made fleſh, that all fleſh might not periſh: he conſented to become man, to take into a perſonal union with himſelf a human nature, to wit, a true body and a reaſonable ſoul, according to the eternal deſtination of his Father. This was an inſtance of amazing condeſcenſion. The higheſt monarch's conſent to lay aſide his robes of majeſty, to clothe himſelf with rags, and become a beggar, is not to be compared with it. Nay the higheſt angel's conſent to become a worm, is not to be named in one day with the eternal Son of God, the Father's Equal, his conſenting to become man: for the diſtance between the divine nature and the human is infinite; whereas the diſtance between the angelic nature, and the nature of worms of the earth, is but finite.

Now the effect of this was, that hereby the Son of God was conſtituted ſubſtantial Mediator, or Mediator in reſpect of nature, between God and man. Being from eternity God equal with the Father, he ſo ſtood related to heaven, and having from eternity conſented to become man, he ſo ſtood related to earth: for though he did not actually take on him the nature of man untill the fulneſs of time appointed by the Father; yet foraſmuch as he had from eternity conſented to take it on, and it was impoſſible that his conſent ſhould miſs to take effect, he was reckoned in law, to all intents and purpoſes thereof, as if he had actually been incarnate. A type of this his ſubſtantial mediation was Jacob's ladder, which was ſet upon the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven, Gen. xxviii. 12. A clear emblem of the divine and human nature in Chriſt, through whom, as ſubſtantial Mediator, there was a way opened towards a communication for peace between heaven and earth. Accordingly our Lord Jeſus applies it to himſelf; John i. 51. Hereafter you ſhall ſee heaven open, and the angels of God aſcending and deſcending upon the ſon of man; to wit, as on Jacob's ladder, Gen. xxviii. 12.

2. The Father choſe him to be the head of the election; to be the laſt Adam, federal head and repreſentative of ſuch as ſovereign pleaſure ſhould pitch upon to be veſſels of mercy, and enrolled in the book of life; a head and repreſentative with whom he might make the new covenant for life and ſalvation to them.

And to this alſo he readily agreed, conſenting to be the laſt or ſecond Adam, head and repreſentative of the election; to ſuſtain their perſons, and tranſact in their name: Iſa. xlii. 1. Behold---mine elect in, whom my ſoul delighteth. Pſalm lxxxix. 19. I have exalted one choſen out of the people, 1 Cor. xv. 47. The ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. The breach between God and man was greater than to be done away by a mere intermeſſenger, who travelling between parties at variance, reconciles them with bare words. There could be no covenant of peace betwixt God and ſinners without reparation of damages done to the honour of God through ſin, and without honouring of the holy law by an exact obedience: but theſe things being quite beyond their reach, Chriſt the Son of God, ſaith "Lo, I come; I am content to take their place, and put myſelf in their room as a ſecond Adam."

Now, the effect of this was, that hereby he was conſtituted laſt Adam, or the ſecond Man, 1 Cor. xv. 47.; and official Mediator, or Mediator in reſpect of office, between God and man, 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6. There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Chriſt Jeſus: who gave himſelf a ranſom for all. Being called of his Father unto that office, and having embraced the call thereto, he was inveſted with the office, and treated with as ſuch, before the world began, Tit. i. 2. And indeed he, and he only, was fit for it. The two families of heaven and earth being at war, there could be no peace between them but through a Mediator. But where could a mediator be found to interpoſe between ſuch parties, who could not either have been too high, or elſe too low, in reſpect of one of the parties at variance? Men or angels would have been too low, in reſpect of God; and an unvailed God would have been too high, in reſpect of ſinful men, unable to bear intercourſe with ſuch heavenly majeſty. Wherefore the Son of God, that he might be fit to mediate; as he being God equal with the Father, was high enough in reſpect of the party offended: ſo he conſented to become low enough, in reſpect of the party offending, by his becoming man.

Secondly, It is to be enquired, How the covenant was made with Chriſt as the ſecond Adam? And this alſo may be taken up in two things.

1. The Father deſigned a certain number of loſt mankind, as it were by name, to be conſtituent members of that body choſen to life, of which body Chriſt was the deſigned head; and he gave them to him for that end: Philip. iv. 3. My fellow-labourers, whoſe names are in the book of life. John xvii. 6. Thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me. Theſe were a choſen company, whom ſovereign free grace picked out from among the reſt of mankind, on a purpoſe of love, and gave to the ſecond Adam for a ſeed; on which account they are ſaid to have been choſen in him, Eph. i. 4.; being in the decree of election laid upon him as the foundation ſtone, to be built upon him, and obtain ſalvation by him, 1 Theſſ. v. 9.; which decree, as it relates to the members-elect, is therefore called the book of life; being as it were the roll which the Father gave to the ſecond Adam, the head-elect, containing the names of thoſe deſigned to be his ſeed, to receive life by him.

Now, our Lord Jeſus ſtanding as the ſecond Adam, head of the election, to wit, ſuch as ſovereign pleaſure ſhould pitch upon to be veſſels of mercy, did accept of the gift of the particular perſons elected or choſen by his Father: John xvii. 6. Thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me. Ver. 10. And thine are mine. Likeas the firſt Adam, in the making of the firſt covenant, ſtood alone without actual iſſue, yet had deſtinated for him a numerous iſſue, to be comprehended with him in that covenant, to wit, all mankind; the which Adam did at leaſt virtually accept: ſo a certain number of loſt mankind being elected to life, God, as their original proprietor, gave them to Chriſt the appointed head, to be his members, and comprehended with him in the ſecond covenant, though as yet none of them were in being; and he accepted of the gift of them, being well pleaſed to take them in particular for his body myſtical, for which he ſhould covenant with his Father. And, in token thereof, he, as it were, received and kept as his own the book of life, containing their names, which is therefore called, the Lamb's book of life, Rev. xxi. 27.

2. The Father propoſed to him as the ſecond Adam, the new covenant for life and ſalvation to them, in the full tenor, promiſes, and condition thereof; treating in him with all thoſe particular perſons of loſt mankind, elected unto life, and given to him, even as he treated with all mankind in Adam in the firſt covenant. The promiſes therein propoſed, were indeed great and glorious: but withal the condition, or terms on which they were propoſed, were exceeding high

Howbeit, as the firſt Adam, ſtanding as head and repreſentative of all his natural ſeed, entered into the firſt covenant with God, accepting the promiſe thereof, upon the terms and condition therein propoſed, which he engaged to fulfill; ſo our Lord Jeſus, ſtanding as the ſecond Adam, head and repreſentative of the particular perſons of loſt mankind, by name elected to life, and given to him as his ſpiritual ſeed, entered into the ſecond covenant with his Father; accepting the promiſes thereof, upon the terms and condition therein propoſed; conſenting and engaging to fulfill the ſame, for them. And thus the covenant of grace was made, and concluded, betwixt the Father and Chriſt the ſecond Adam, from all eternity; being the ſecond covenant, in reſpect of order and manifeſtation to the world, though it was firſt in being: 1 Cor. xv. 47. The ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. Iſa. liii. 10. When thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed. Tit. ii. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promiſed before the world began. Pſalm xl. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire, mine ears haſt thou opened.--7. Then ſaid I, Lo, I come.—8. I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart.

Now, Chriſt the ſecond Adam, giving this conſent, took upon him a threefold character of unparallelled weight and importance; ſiſting himſelf, (1.) The kinſman-redeemer in the covenant, (2.) The ſurety of the covenant, and, (3.) The prieſt of the covenant. The mediation of Chriſt doth indeed run through the whole of the covenant. And there are ſeveral other parts of that mediation, which reſpecting the promiſes of the covenant, do belong to the adminiſtration thereof. But theſe I have now mentioned, do reſpect the condition of the covenant, and ſo belong to the making thereof; under which head we ſhall conſider them in order.

I. Chriſt the Kinſman-redeemer in the covenant.

OUR Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, giving his conſent to the covenant, as propoſed to him by the Father, ſiſted himſelf Kinſman-redeemer in the covenant: Job xix. 25. I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth.

Under the law, when a man was not able to act for himſelf, to aſſert and uſe his own right, one that was akin to him, had a right to act for him, coming in his room, and ſtanding up in his right. And ſuch a one was called his Goel; which properly ſignifies a Kinſman-redeemer. Hence that word is ſometimes rendered a kinſman; as Numb. v. 8. If the man have no (Goel) kinſman to recompenſe the treſpaſs unto. Ruth iii. 12. I am thy (Goel) near kinſman: howbeit there is a (Goel) kinſman nearer than I. Sometimes it is rendered a Redeemer; as Prov. xxiii. 11. Their (Goel) Redeemer is mighty. Iſ. xlvii. 4. As for our (Goel) Redeemer the Lord of hoſts is his name. One's acting in that capacity, is called doing the kinſman's part, or redeeming, to wit, by right of kin, Ruth iii. 13. and iv. 6. Howbeit, ſuch a one might refuſe to do the kinſman's part; as Ruth's kinſman-redeemer did, who reſigned his right to Boaz, and in token thereof drew off his own ſhoe, and gave it him, Ruth iv. 6. 7. 8.

Now, Chriſt the ſecond Adam ſaw ſinners, his ruined kinſmen, quite unable to act for themſelves. Not one of them all was able to redeem himſelf, and far leſs his brother. Withal, the angels, near akin to them in the rational world, durſt not meddle with the redemption; being ſure they could not have miſſed to mar their own inheritance thereby, nor have delivered their poor kinſmen neither. If he ſhould have declined it, and drawn off his ſhoe to them, or to any other of the whole creation, there was none who durſt have ventured to receive it, or put his foot in it. I looked, ſaith he, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought ſalvation. Iſ. lxiii. 5. He took on himſelf the character of their Kinſman-redeemer; and of him as ſuch Job ſpeaks in the forecited paſſage, which I conceive to be thus expreſſed in the original: I know my Kinſman redeemer liveth; and the latter one he ſhall ſtand up upon the duſt. In which words Job comforts himſelf with a view of Chriſt as his Kinſman-redeemer living, even in his day, in reſpect of his divine nature; and as the latter or ſecond one, (in oppoſition to the former or firſt, Exod. iv. 8. 9. Deut. xxiv. 3. 4.) namely, the latter or ſecond Adam Redeemer, in oppoſition to the former or firſt Adam Deſtroyer; firmly believing, that the one, uniting to himſelf a human nature, ſhould as ſurely ſtand up upon the duſt of the earth, and do the Kinſman's part for him; as the other, having the breath of life breathed into his noſtrils, ſtood up upon it and ruined all.

Now, there were four things the kinſman-redeemer was to do for his kinſmen, unable to act for himſelf; all which Chriſt the ſecond Adam undertook in the covenant.

1. He was to marry the widow of his deceaſed kinſman, to raiſe up ſeed to his brother. Hereof Boaz was put in mind by Ruth, chap. iii. 9. I am Ruth thine handmaid; ſpread therefore thy ſkirt over thine handmaid, for thou art a near kinſman. Compare verſ. 10.—13. chap. iv. 10. and Ezek. xvi. 8. I ſpread my ſkirt over thee—and thou becameſt mine. Our nature was in a comfortable and fruitful condition, while the image of God, impreſſed thereupon in Adam, remained with it; but that image being removed, in the ſpiritual death cauſed by his ſin, there enſued an abſolute barrenneſs, as to the fruits of holineſs, in our nature thus left. But our Kinſman-redeemer conſented to marry the widow. Being to take to himſelf a human nature, he undertook to take on our human nature in particular, taking his fleſh of Adam's family. Thus was it provided, that his body ſhould not be made of nothing, nor of any thing whatſoever that was not derived from Adam as its original. It was a low match indeed for him; and would have been ſo, even if the family of Adam had been in its primitive ſtate and ſplendor; but now it was conſidered as in the depth of poverty and diſgrace. Yet being neceſſary for our redemption, he conſented thereto, as our Kinſman-redeemer. Accordingly, in the fulneſs of time, he was made of a woman, a daughter of Adam's family, Gal. iv. 4. and ſo was a ſon of Adam, Luke iii. 23.——38. Thus was a foundation laid for the myſtical marriage of believers with him, which myſtical marriage doth not belong to the condition and making of the covenant properly ſo called, but to the promiſe and adminiſtration of it, being a ſinner's perſonal entrance thereinto. And the great end, in ſubordination to the glory of God, for which this more intimate union and match with our nature was gone into by our Kinſman-redeemer, was to render it yet again fruitful in the fruits of true holineſs; and without it our nature had for ever remained under abſolute barrenneſs in that point, even as the nature of fallen angels doth.

2. He was to redeem the mortgaged inheritance of his poor kinſman: Lev. xxv. 25. If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath ſold away ſome of his poſſeſſion, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then ſhall he redeem that which his brother ſold: or rather, then ſhall come in his kinſman redeemer, that is near unto him; and he ſhall redeem that which his brother ſold. Our father Adam waxing poor through the deceitful dealing of the tempter with him, quite ſold away the inheritance of eternal life for a morſel of forbidden fruit: and his children waxen poorer ſtill, thro' their own perſonal fault, had ſet themſelves farther and farther from it. They could not have raiſed, amongſt them all, what would have redeemed ſo much as one man's part of it. Howbeit, without it was redeemed, they could never have had acceſs to it. Wherefore the ſecond Adam, as Kinſman-redeemer, took the burden of the redemption on himſelf, and agreed to pay the price of that purchaſe; dying for us, that we might live together with him, 1 Theſſ. v. 10.

3. He was to ranſom his poor kinſman in bondage, pay the price of his redemption: Lev. xxv. 47. If--thy brother---wax poor, and ſell himſelf,---verſ. 48. After that he is ſold, he may be redeemed again: one of his brethren may redeem him. Verſ. 52.---- according unto his years ſhall he give him again the price of his redemption. Being ſold in the loins of our firſt father, we were brought into bondage, under the curſe of the law; ſo we are by nature the law's bond men, and conſequently ſlaves to ſin and Satan, never to have been releaſed without a ranſom, the full worth of ſo many ſouls. This ranſom was ſtated in the covenant; to wit, That the Kinſman-redeemer ſhould give himſelf a ranſom for his poor kinſmen; and he agreed to it, for purchaſing their liberty, 1 Tim. ii. 5. 6. The ranſom was great, ſoul for ſoul, body for body; a perſon of infinite dignity, for his poor kinſmen in bondage. But he conſented to take on him the form of a ſervant, that they might be ſet free; to have his ear bored at the law's door-poſt, that they might be delivered out of their bondage.

4. Laſtly, He was to avenge the blood of his ſlain kinſman on the ſlayer: Deut. xix. 12. The elders of his city ſhall ſend and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the (Goel) avenger of blood, that he may die. Our Kinſman-redeemer ſaw all his poor kindred ſlain men. And the devil was the murderer, John viii. 44. He had miniſtered poiſon to them in the loins of our firſt parent; yea, he had ſmitten them to death, killed them with an arrow ſhot through the eye. But no avenger of their blood could be found, till the ſecond Adam, as their Kinſman-redeemer, did, in the ſecond covenant, undertake the avenging of it. Mean while, the murderer had the power of death, Heb. ii. 14. and the ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law, 1 Cor. xv. 56. Wherefore there was no diſarming and deſtroying of the murderer, without taking the ſting out of death which he had the power of. And that was not to be done, but by removing the guilt of ſin, whereby ſinners were bound over to death: neither was this to be done, but by ſatiſfying the law, whoſe awful ſanction of death ſtrongly kept faſt the guilt of death on the ſinners. Theſe were the iron gates to be broke through, ere the Kinſman-redeemer, the avenger of blood, could get at the murderer. But the mighty redeemer undertook, by his own death and ſufferings, to ſatiſfy the law; and by that means to remove the ſtrength of ſin: and by this means again, to take away the ſting of death; and ſo by his own death to deſtroy the murderer that had the power of death; and thus to avenge the blood of his ſlain kinſmen upon him, Heb. ii. 14. So did Samſon, a type of our Kinſman-redeemer, avenge Iſrael of the Philiſtines their oppreſſors, pulling down the houſe on the Philiſtines, and dying himſelf to deſtroy them, Judg. xvi.

II. Chriſt the Surety of the covenant.

CHriſt the ſecond Adam conſenting to the covenant, ſiſted himſelf alſo Surety of it; Heb. vii. 22. By ſo much was Jeſus made a ſurety for a better Teſtament; or rather, as others read it, of a better covenant. A ſurety is one who undertakes for another, obliging himſelf whether for paying his debt, civil or criminal, or for his performing a deed. That we may then rightly underſtand Chriſt's ſuretiſhip, it is neceſſary we conſider, 1. For whom, 2. For what he became ſurety in the covenant.

Firſt, For whom Chriſt became ſurety in the covenant. I find two things advanced on this head, namely, (1.) That he became ſurety for God to ſinners; and 2. Surety for ſinners to God. To the firſt of theſe, the Socinians reſtrain Chriſt's ſuretiſhip, denying the ſecond; and ſo overthrow the foundation of our ſalvation. But all orthodox divines agree, in that the ſecond of theſe is the main thing in it. Some of them indeed make no difficulty of admitting, that Chriſt became ſurety for God to ſinners, as well as ſurety for ſinners to God, undertaking, on God's part, that all the promiſes ſhall be made good to the ſeed, even to all that believe.

There is no queſtion, but God's promiſes are in reſpect of his infallible truth and veracity, moſt firm and ſure in themſelves, and cannot miſs to be performed; but we, being guilty creatures, are ſlow of heart to believe; and therefore do need what may make them more ſure to us, or aſſure our hearts they ſhall be performed to us. And for this cauſe he hath given us his word of promiſe under his hand, in the holy ſcriptures, and an earneſt of the promiſed inheritance, Eph. i. 14. the ſeal of the Spirit, verſ. 13. 2 Cor. i. 22. the ſacramental ſeals, Rom. iv. 11. yea, and his ſolemn oath too, in the matter, to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, Heb. vi. 17. And if Jeſus Chriſt is ſurety for God to us, it is no doubt for the ſame end.

But I doubt if the holy Scriptures calls Chriſt a ſurety in that ſenſe at all. In the forecited paſſage, Heb. vii. 22. the only text wherein Chriſt is expreſly called a Surety, it is evident, that his ſuretyſhip therein mentioned, reſpects his prieſtly office, wherein he deals with God for us: Ver. 20. And in as much as not without an oath he was made prieſt. Ver. 21. (——by him that ſaid unto him, The Lord ſware, and will not repent, Thou art a prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedeck) Ver. 22. By ſo much was Jeſus made a ſurety of a better teſtament. But his ſuretyſhip for God to us, cannot relate to his prieſtly office, but to his kingly office, in reſpect of which all power is given to him in heaven and in earth; and conſequently a power to ſee that all the promiſes be performed to his people. And therefore his ſuretyſhip mentioned in that text, is for us to God, and not for God to us. It is but in other two texts only as far as I have obſerved, that we read of ſuretiſhip relative to the caſe between God and a ſinner: and in both of them, the ſuretyſhip is not to the ſinner, but for him. They are Pſalm cxix. 122. Be ſurety for thy ſervant for good; and Job xvii. 3. Put me in a ſurety with thee. The original phraſeology or expreſſion is the ſame in the latter text as in the former; and the ſame in them both, as in the caſe of Judah's ſuretyſhip, for Benjamin, to his father, Gen. xliii. 9. and xliv. 32. Now, unleſs the ſacred oracles go before us, in propoſing Chriſt as a ſurety for God to us, I ſee no reaſon, why the being of ſuch a thing at all ſhould be yielded to the adverſaries, who make ſuch a pernicious uſe of it. As for the comfort that might ariſe from it to us, the ſame is fully ſecured, in that the whole adminiſtration of the covenant is committed into the hand of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and he is the Truſtee and Teſtator of the covenant or covenant-benefits; as ſhall be ſhown in the due place.

But, without all peradventure, Chriſt the Mediator and ſecond Adam, became ſurety in the covenant, for ſinners to God; as the ſcriptures do abundantly declare. Pſal. lxxxix. 19. I have laid help upon one that is mighty. 1 Tim. ii. 5. One Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus; verſ. 6. Who gave himſelf a ranſom for all. 2 Cor. v. 21. He hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin. Iſ. liii. 6. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. Gal. iii. 13. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us. Iſ. liii. 5. He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities. The covenant of grace was made with the ſpiritual ſeed in Chriſt the ſecond Adam, taking burden for them upon himſelf as their ſurety. And without a ſurety it could not have been made with them. For they were a company of broken men, owing a thouſand times more than they were all worth: and their word in a new bargain for life and ſalvation was worth nothing; there could be no regard had to it in heaven. There was neither truth nor ability left them after the firſt covenant was broken. Behold their character, in the point of truth or veracity, Rom. iii. 5. Let God be true, but every man a liar: and in point of ability, chap. v. 6. When we were yet without ſtrength, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly. The demands in this covenant were high, and quite above their ability to anſwer: and, beſides, they themſelves were falſe and fickle. They brake their word in the firſt covenant when able to have kept it; how could they be truſted in this new bargain, when their ability was gone? So there was an abſolute neceſſity of a ſurety for them in it. And Jeſus Chriſt became ſurety for them: ſo the new covenant, on which depends all their ſalvation, was made and made ſure.

Solomon tells us, That he that is ſurety for a ſtranger, ſhall ſmart for it: and he that hateth ſuretiſhip, is ſure, Prov. xi. 15. Our Lord Jeſus knew very well, the burden he took on himſelf in his ſuretyſhip for ſinners; the character of thoſe whom he became ſurety for; and that he could have no relief from them; but his love to his Father's glory, and the ſalvation of ſinners, engaged him in it, being perfectly ſure to ſmart for it, as will appear from conſidering,

Secondly, For what he became ſurety in the covenant. Suretiſhip, in reſpect of the ſubject-matter of it, is of two ſorts. 1. There is a ſuretiſhip for paying one's debt: Prov. xxii. 26. Be not thou one of them that ſtrike hands, or of them that are ſureties for debts. 2. A ſuretiſhip for one's performing of a deed: chap. xx. 16. Take his garment that is ſurety for a ſtranger: and take a pledge of him for a ſtrange woman: that is, of him who is ſurety for her good behaviour; for ſhe will leave him in the lurch.

Now, our Lord's ſuretiſhip for ſinners was of the firſt ſort. Chriſt as the ſecond Adam, conſenting to the covenant, ſiſted himſelf ſurety for the debt of the ſeed repreſented by him. Their debt was, by God's eternal fore-knowledge, ſtated from the broken covenant of works, in the whole latitude of the demands it had on them: and he became ſurety for it, ſtriking hands with his Father to pay it completely, And,

1. He became ſurety for their debt of puniſhment, which they as ſinners were liable in payment of, as the original phraſeth it, 2 Theſſ. i. 9. That was the debt owing to the divine juſtice, for all and every one of their ſins, original or actual. The demerit of their ſins, as offences againſt an infinite God, was an infinite puniſhment. They were liable to bear the pains of death, in the full latitude thereof; to ſuffer the force of revenging wrath, to the complete ſatisfaction of infinite juſtice, and full reparation of God's injured honour. This was their debt of puniſhment: a debt which they themſelves could never have cleared, though paying to the utmoſt of their power, through the ages of eternity. But this their debt Chriſt became ſurety for, obliging himſelf to lay down his life for theirs which was loſt in law: Pſal. xl. 6. 7. Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire, mine ears haſt thou opened——Then ſaid I, Lo, I come. John x. 15. I lay down my life for the ſheep. Verſ. 18. I lay it down of myſelf: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father. Here is a ſuretiſhip that never had a match! David, in a tranſport of grief for the death of his ſon Abſalom, wiſhes he had died for him, 2 Sam. xviii. 33. Reuben will venture the life of his two ſons for Benjamin. Gen. xlii. 37. and Judah will venture his own for him, chap. xliii. 9. while yet there was hope that all would be ſafe: but our Lord Jeſus deliberately pledgeth his own life for ſinners, when it was beyond all peradventure, the precious pledge would be loſt in the cauſe, and that the death he would ſuffer, would be a thouſand deaths in one. Some have offered themſelves ſureties in capital caſes, and embraced death for their country or friends: and peradventure for a good man ſome would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet ſinners, (and enemies,) Chriſt died for us, Rom. v. 7. 8. 10.

Now, in the ſecond Adam's ſuretyſhip for the criminal debt of his ſpiritual ſeed, there was not an enſuring of the payment thereof one way or other, only; as in ſimple cautionry: but there was an exchange of perſons in law; Chriſt ſubſtituting himſelf in their room, and taking the whole obligation on himſelf. This the free grace of God the creditor did admit, when he might have inſiſted, that the ſoul that ſinned ſhould die: and, a delay being withal granted as to the time of the payment, God thus manifeſted his forbearance, celebrated by the apoſtle, Rom. iii. 25. And, in virtue of that ſubſtitution, Chriſt became debtor in law, bound to pay that debt which he contracted not; to reſtore that which he took not away, Pſalm lxix. 4. For, becoming ſurety for them, to the end there might be laid a foundation, in law and juſtice, for exacting their debt of puniſhment from him, their guilt was transferred on him, Iſa. liii. 6. The Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all. This was pointed at, in the laying of the hand on the head of the ſacrifices under the law, eſpecially on the head of the ſcape-goat, Lev. xvi. 21. And Aaron ſhall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins, putting them upon the head of the goat. All the ſins of all the elect were at once imputed to the ſurety, and ſo became his, as his righteouſneſs becomes ours, namely, in law-reckoning, 2 Cor. v. 21. For he hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin; that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. And he himſelf ſpeaks ſo of them, Pſalm. xl. 12. Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me; as ſeveral interpreters do underſtand it, according as the apoſtle gives us direction, determining Chriſt himſelf to be the ſpeaker in this pſalm, Heb. x. 5, 6, 7. He was indeed without ſin inherent in him; but not without ſin imputed to him, till in his reſurrection he got up his diſcharge, having cleared the debt by his death and ſuffering. Then was he juſtified in the Spirit, 1 Tim. iii. 16. and ſo ſhall appear the ſecond time, without ſin, Heb. ix. 28.; the ſin which was upon him, by imputation, the firſt time he appeared, being done away at his reſurrection. This relation of our ſin to Chriſt, is neceſſary from the nature of ſuretyſhip for debts; in which caſe, nobody doubts but the debt becomes the ſurety's when once he hath ſtricken hands for it. And how elſe could the law have juſtly proceeded againſt Chriſt? How could our puniſhment have been, in juſtice, inflicted on him, if he had not had ſuch a relation to our ſin? If the law could not charge our ſin on him, in virtue of his own voluntary undertaking, it could have no ground in juſtice to inflict our puniſhment on him.

2. He became ſurety for their debt of duty or obedience; the which alſo is a debt, according to the ſtyle of the holy ſcripture, Gal. v. 3. A debtor to do the whole law. The law as a covenant of works, though it was broken by them, and they had incurred the penalty thereof, yet had neither loſt its right, nor ceaſed to exact of them the obedience which at firſt it required of man, as the condition of life. They were ſtill bound to perfect obedience, and on no lower terms could have eternal life, as our Lord taught the lawyer for his humiliation, Luke x. 28. Thou haſt anſwered right: this do, and thou ſhalt live. The paying of the debt of puniſhment might ſatiſfy as to the penalty of the bond; but there is yet more behind, for him who will meddle in the affairs of the broken company. How ſhall the principal ſum therein contained, be paid; namely the debt of obedience to the law, for life and ſalvation? The honour of God would not allow the quitting of it: and they were abſolutely unable to pay one mite of it, that would have been current in heaven; foraſmuch as they were without ſtrength, Rom. v. 6. and dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, Eph. ii. 1. quite as unfit for the doing part, as for the ſuffering part. But Chriſt became ſurety for this debt of theirs too, namely, the debt of obedience to the law as a covenant, which was, and is the only obedience to it for life; obliging himſelf to clear it by obeying in their room and ſtead, and fulfilling what the law could demand of them in this kind: Pſalm xl. 7, 8. Then ſaid I, Lo, I come——I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart. Matth. iii. 15. Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs. Chap. v. 17. Think not that I am come to deſtroy the law.—I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfil.

And here alſo there was an exchange of perſons in law, Chriſt ſubſtituting himſelf in their room, and taking their obligation on himſelf: in virtue of which he became the law's debtor, for that obedience owing by them: and this he himſelf ſolemnly owned, by his being circumciſed, Luke ii. 21. according to that of the apoſtle, Gal. v. 3. I teſtify again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor to the whole law. For becoming ſurety for them in this point alſo, he transferred on himſelf their ſtate of ſervitude, whereby the law had a right to exact that debt of him, which they, upon the breach of the covenant of works, were liable in payment of.

For clearing of this, it it to be conſidered, that all mankind was by the firſt covenant, the covenant of works conſtitute God's hired ſervants; and actually entered to that their ſervice, in their head the firſt Adam. And in token hereof, we are all naturally inclined in that character to deal with God; though by the fall we are rendered incapable to perform the duty of it, Luke xv. 19. Make me as one of thy hired ſervants. The work they were to work, was perfect obedience to the holy law; the hire they were to have for their work, was life, Rom. x. 5. The man that doth thoſe things ſhall live by them. The penalty of breaking away from their maſter, was bondage under the curſe, Gal. iii. 10. Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But violating that covenant of hired ſervice, they brake away from their Lord and maſter: ſo they not only loſt all plea for the hire, but they became bond-men under the curſe; ſtill obliged to make out their ſervice, and that furthermore in the miſery of a ſtate of ſervitude or bondage, Gal iv. 24. Theſe are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage. Their falling under the curſe inferred the loſs of their liberty, and conſtituted them bond-men: as appears from the nature of the thing, and inſtances of the curſed in other caſes, as Gen. ix. 25. Curſed be Canaan; a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be. Joſh. ix. 23. Now therefore ye (namely, the Gibeonites) are curſed, and there ſhall none of you be freed from being bond-men. The very ground being curſed, (Gen. iii. 17.) falls under bondage, according to the ſcripture, Rom. viii. 21.

Now, Chriſt ſaw all his ſpiritual ſeed in this ſtate of ſervitude: but unable to bear the miſery of it, or to fulfil the ſervice: and he put himſelf in their room, as they were bond men; transferring their ſtate of ſervitude on himſelf, and ſo ſiſting himſelf a bond-ſervant for them.

The holy ſcripture ſets this matter in a clear light. That is a plain teſtimony unto it, Phil. ii. 6. 7. 8. Who being in the form of God—took upon him the form of a ſervant—and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. The form of a ſervant which he took upon him, was the form of a bond-ſervant. For ſo the word in the original properly ſignifies; being the ſame word that is conſtantly uſed in that New Teſtament phraſe, which we read bond or free, or bond and free, 1 Cor. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. Eph. vi. 8. Col. iii. 11. Rev. xiii. 16. and xix. 18. And the apoſtle leads us to underſtand it ſo here, telling us, that this great ſurety-ſervant became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. The which kind of death was a Roman puniſhment, called by them, the ſervile puniſhment, or puniſhment of bond-ſervants: becauſe it was the death that bond-men malefactors were ordinarily doomed unto; freemen ſeldom, if ever, according to law. And foraſmuch as his being in the form of God, denotes his being very God, having the very nature and eſſence of God; for the form is that which eſſentially diſtinguiſheth things, and makes a thing to be preciſely what it is: and this form is, according to the apoſtle, the foundation of his equality with God his Father, which nothing really different from the divine eſſence, can be: therefore his taking upon him the form of a bond-ſervant, muſt neceſſarily denote his becoming really a bond-ſervant as really as ever man did, who was brought into bondage, or a ſtate of ſervitude.

The Father ſolemnly declares the transferring of our ſtate of ſervitude on Chriſt, ſpeaking to him under the name of Iſrael, as was cleared before, Iſa. xlix. 3. Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified. As if the Father had ſaid to him, 'Son, be it known, it is 'agreed, that I take thee in the room and place of Iſrael, 'the ſpiritual ſeed, to perform the ſervice due in virtue 'of the broken original contract: Thou in their ſtead 'art my ſervant; my bond-ſervant (as the word is rendered, Lev. xxv. 32. and elſewhere): it is from thy 'hand I will look for that ſervice.' Agreeable hereunto is the account we have of our redemption from the curſe, Gal. iii. 13. namely, that it was by Jeſus Chriſt being made a curſe for us; for it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree; the which Chriſt did, dying on a croſs, the capital puniſhment of bond-men.

Behold the ſolemnity of the tranſlation, Pſalm xl. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire, mine ears haſt thou opened. The word here rendered opened, properly ſignifies digged, as may be ſeen in the margin of our Bibles; and ſo the words are, Mine ears thou diggeſt through; that is boredſt, as it is expreſſed in our paraphraſe of the Pſalms in metre, Mine ears thou bor'd. This has a manifeſt view to that law concerning the bond-ſervant, Exod. xxi. 6. Then his maſter ſhall bring him unto the judges: he ſhall alſo bring him to the door, or unto the door poſt: and his maſter ſhall bore his ear through with an aul; and he ſhall ſerve him for ever; that is, in the language of the law, till death. This is confirmed from Hoſea iii. 2. So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of ſilver; which was the half of the ſtated price of a bond woman, Exod. xxi. 32. In the original it is, So I digged her through to me; the ſame word being here uſed by the Holy Ghoſt, as Pſalm xl. 6. It is a pregnant word, which is virtually two in ſignification: and the ſenſe is, I bought her, and bored her ear to my door-poſt, to be my bond woman; according to the law, Deut. xv. 17. Thou ſhalt take an aul; and thruſt it through his ear unto the door, and he ſhall be thy ſervant for ever: and alſo unto thy maid-ſervant thou ſhalt do likewiſe. That the boring of her ear as a bond-woman, was no wiſe inconſiſtent with the prophet's betrothing of her to himſelf, Hoſea iii. 3. appears from Exod. xxi. 8.

Joſeph was an eminent type of Chriſt as the Father's ſervant. And it is obſervable, that he was firſt a bond ſervant, and then an honorary ſervant. In the former ſtate, being ſold for a ſervant, Pſalm cv. 17. he was a type of Chriſt, a bond-ſervant in his ſtate of humiliation; whoſe moſt precious life was accordingly ſold by Judas for thirty pieces of ſilver, the ſtated price of the life of a bond-ſervant: Exod. xxi. 32. If the ox ſhall puſh a man-ſervant, or maid-ſervant: he ſhall give unto their maſter thirty ſhekels of ſilver, and the ox ſhall be ſtoned. In the latter ſtate, being made ruler over all the land of Egypt, Pſalm cv. 21, 22. Gen. xli. 40. he was a type of Chriſt, in that moſt honourable and glorious ſervice or miniſtry, which was conferred on him in his ſtate of exaltation, wherein he was conſtituted a ſervant, for whoſe law the iſles ſhall wait, Iſa. xlii. 1, 4.; God having given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, Philip. ii. 9, 10. This latter ſervice of Chriſt belongs to the promiſe of the covenant; but the former, to wit, the bond ſervice, being his ſurety ſervice, belongs to the condition of the covenant. Wherefore, riſing from the dead, having fulfilled the condition of the covenant, paid the debt for which he became ſurety, and got up the diſcharge, he put off for ever the form and character of a bond-ſervant, and roſe and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living, Rom. xiv. 9.

And hence it clearly appears, how the obedience of the man Chriſt comes, in virtue of the covenant, to be imputed to believers for righteouſneſs, as well as his ſatisfaction by ſuffering: for that kind of obedience which he performed as our ſurety, was no more due by him, antecedently to his contract of ſuretiſhip, than his ſatisfaction by ſuffering. It is true, the human nature of Chriſt, being a creature, owed obedience to God in virtue of its creation; and muſt owe it for ever, forasmuch as the creature, as a creature, is ſubject to the natural law, the eternal rule of righteouſneſs: but Chriſt's putting himſelf in a ſtate of ſervitude, taking on him the form of a bond-ſervant, and in the capacity of a bond ſervant performing obedience to the law, as it was ſtated in the covenant, for life and ſalvation, was entirely voluntary. Obedience to the natural law was due by the man Chriſt, by a natural tie; but obedience to the poſitive law, binding to be circumciſed, baptized, and the like, which ſuppoſed guilt on the party ſubjected thereto, was not due but by his own voluntary engagement. And the obedience of a ſon to the natural law, he owed naturally: but obedience to that or any other law, in the character of a bond ſervant, and thereby to gain eternal life and ſalvation, he owed not but by compact. The human nature of Chriſt had a complete right to eternal life, and was actually poſſeſſed thereof, in virtue of its union with the divine nature; ſo that there was no occaſion for him to gain life to himſelf by his obedience. Wherefore Chriſt's taking on him the form of a bond-ſervant, and in that character obeying the law for life and ſalvation, were a mere voluntary work of his, as ſurety for ſinners; wherein he did that which he was no otherwiſe bound to, than by his own voluntary undertaking. Now, forasmuch as the obedience of Chriſt imputed to believers for righteouſneſs, is his obedience of this kind only; there is a clear ground for its imputation to them, according to the covenant.

And thus have we ſeen Chriſt's ſuretiſhip in the covenant to be of the nature of a ſuretiſhip for paying one's debt; and what the debt was which he became ſurety for.

If it be enquired, Whether or not Chriſt's ſuretiſhip is alſo of the nature of ſuretiſhip for one's performing of a deed? or, Whether Chriſt became ſurety in the way of caution to his Father, that the elect ſhould believe, repent, and perform ſincere obedience? I anſwer, Tho' the elect's believing, repenting, and ſincere obedience, are infallibly ſecured in the covenant; ſo that whoſoever, being ſubjects capable of theſe things, do live and die without them, ſhall undoubtedly periſh, and are none of God's elect: yet I judge, that Chriſt did not become Surety in the covenant, in way of caution to his Father, that the elect ſhould perform theſe deeds, or any other; and that that way of ſpeaking doth not ſo well agree with the ſcripture-account of the covenant. Becauſe,

1. It doth ſomewhat obſcure the grace, the free grace of the covenant; whereas the covenant is purpoſedly ſo ordered, as to manifeſt it moſt illuſtriouſly, being of faith, that it might be by grace, Rom. iv. 16. For ſuch a ſuretiſhip, or cautionary for the elects performing of theſe things, muſt needs belong to the condition of the covenant, properly ſo called; as being a deed of the Mediator, whereby he promiſeth ſomething to God, and engageth that it ſhall be performed by them; and ſo theſe things performed by them accordingly, muſt be a part of the condition of the covenant. But that ſinners themſelves perform any part of the condition of the covenant, properly ſo called, cannot be admitted, without prejudice to the grace of the covenant; for ſo far as we perform, in our own perſons, any part of the condition, the reward is not of grace, but of debt; for to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt, Rom. iv. 4. But the reward is wholly of grace to us, tho' it is of debt unto Chriſt: for to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs, verſ. 5. Chap. xi. 6. And if by grace, then it is no more of works; otherwiſe grace is no more grace. Suppoſe a man is ſurety for a thouſand pounds for his neighbour, who is thereupon to have a right to a certain valuable benefit; and that this man abſolutely becomes ſurety for the whole ſum, excepting only an hundred pence; for which hundred pence alſo he is cautioner, that it ſhall be paid by the principal: it is evident, that the condition of this bargain is divided between the ſurety and the principal, though indeed their ſhares are very unequal: but however unequal they are, as far as the hundred pence which the principal pays in his own perſon, do reach, ſo far the benefit is of debt to him. Or put the caſe, A ſurety engageth for the whole of the ſum payable; and, beſides, is ſurety for the principal's good behaviour; it is evident, that in this caſe, the good behaviour of the principal is a part of the condition of the bargain, as well as the payment of the money; ſince caution for it is required by him who is to communicate the benefit. At this rate, the condition is ſtill divided between the ſurety and principal; and the latter performs a part of it as well as the former: and ſo the reward is, in part, of debt unto him, as well as to the ſurety. The application hereof to the caſe in hand is obvious. The ſum of the matter lies here: If Chriſt did in the covenant become Surety in way of caution for his people's performing ſome deed; the performing of the condition of the covenant, properly ſo called, is divided betwixt CHRIST and them, however unequal their ſhares are: and if the performing of the condition is divided betwixt Chriſt and them, ſo far as their part of the performance goes, the reward is of debt to them, which obſcures the grace of the covenant.

2. According to the ſcripture, the elect's believing, repenting, and ſincere obedience, do belong to the promiſſory part of the covenant. If we conſider them in their original ſituation, they are benefits promiſed in the covenant by God unto Chriſt the Surety, as a reward of his fulfilling the condition of the covenant. And ſo they are, by the unchangeable truth of God, and his exact juſtice, inſured beyond all poſſibility of failure: Pſal. xxii. 27. All the ends of the world ſhall remember and turn unto the Lord. Verſ. 30. A ſeed ſhall ſerve him. Verſe 31. They ſhall come, and ſhall declare his righteouſneſs unto a people that ſhall be born. Pſal. cx. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power. See Iſ. liii. 10. with verſ. 1. Ezek. xxxiv. 26, 27. 31. Heb. viii. 10, 11. If it be aſked, To whom are theſe promiſes made, and the promiſes of the like nature through the Bible? It is evident, that ſeveral of them are made to Chriſt expreſsly; and the apoſtle anſwers as to them all, Gal. iii. 16. To Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made.--To thy ſeed, which is Chriſt. And whereas there are found promiſes wherein Chriſt himſelf is the undertaker, as John vi. 37. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me; they are not to be taken for Chriſt's engaging to his Father, as cautioner for a deed to be done by the ſeed: but therein he ſpeaks to men, as adminiſtrator of the covenant, intruſted with the conferring on ſinners the benefits purchaſed by his obedience and death, and made over to him by the promiſe of the Father, Matth. xi. 27. All things are delivered unto me of my Father. Verſ. 28. Come unto me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. Luke xxii. 29. And I appoint (or diſpone) unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed (or diſponed) unto me.

Thus far of Chriſt's ſuretiſhip in the covenant.

III. Chriſt the Prieſt of the Covenant.

AS it was neceſſary for Chriſt the ſecond Adam his doing the part of a Kinſman redeemer, that he ſhould become Surety in the covenant; ſo it was neceſſary to his performing of what he became ſurety for, that he ſhould be a Prieſt. And accordingly, conſenting to the covenant, he became the prieſt of the covenant, Heb. ix. 11. Chriſt being come, an high prieſt of good things to come. A prieſt is a public perſon, who deals with an offended God in the name of the guilty, for reconciliation, by ſacrifice, which he offereth to God upon the altar, being thereto called of God, that he may be accepted. So a prieſt ſpeaks a relation to an altar, an altar to a ſacrifice, and a ſacrifice to ſin.

Thoſe whom Chriſt repreſented in the covenant, being ſinners, he became their prieſt, their high-prieſt, appearing before God in their name, to make atonement and reconciliation for them: and this was the great thing that the whole prieſthood under the law, and eſpecially the high prieſthood, did typify and point at. Their nature was the prieſt's garment he put on, to exerciſe his prieſtly office in; the ſame being pure and undefiled in him; and in their nature he ſuſtained their perſons, repreſenting them before God, as their great high-prieſt. A lively type hereof was Aaron's bearing before the Lord, the names of the children of Iſrael, the twelve tribes, upon his two ſhoulders, in the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod; theſe names being engraven on two onyx-ſtones ſet therein by divine appointment, Exod. xxviii. 9, 10, 12.: as alſo his bearing them in the breaſt-plate, being engraven on twelve ſtones ſet therein, ver. 15,——29. Thus Aaron the high-prieſt was all Iſrael repreſentatively; an illuſtrious type of Chriſt the Prieſt of the covenant, the ſpiritual Iſrael repreſentative, Iſa. xlix. 3.

The neceſſity of Chriſt the ſecond Adam his becoming a prieſt, appears in theſe following things jointly conſidered.

1. Thoſe whom he repreſented, were ſinners: and there could not be a new covenant without proviſion made for removing of their ſin; and that required a prieſt. The firſt covenant was made without a prieſt, becauſe then there was no ſin to take away; the parties therein repreſented, as well as the repreſentative, were conſidered as innocent perſons. But the ſecond covenant was a covenant of peace and reconciliation between an offended God and ſinners, not to be made but by the mediation of a prieſt; who ſhould be able to remove ſin, and repair the injured honour of God: Zech. vi. 13. He ſhall be a prieſt upon his throne, and the counſel of peace ſhall be between them both. And there was none fit to bear that character but Chriſt himſelf. No man was fit to bear it; becauſe all men were ſinners themſelves, and ſuch an high-prieſt became us, as was undefiled, ſeparated from ſinners, Heb. vii. 26. It is true, the elect angels were indeed undefiled; but yet none of them could be a prieſt of the covenant; becauſe,

2. Sin could not be removed without a ſacrifice of ſufficient value, which they were not able to afford. The new covenant behoved to be a covenant by ſacrifice, a covenant written in blood, and without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion, Heb. ix. 22. Therefore the typical covenant with Abraham was not made without the ſolemnity of ſacrifice, Gen. xv. 9.: that he might know the covenant to be a covenant of reconciliation, in which a juſt God did not ſhew his mercy, but in a way conſiſtent with the honour of his juſtice. Now, the ſacrifices of beaſts, yea, and whatſoever the creatures could afford for ſacrifice in this caſe, were infinitely below the value. But Jeſus Chriſt becoming a prieſt, gave himſelf a ſacrifice to God, for eſtabliſhing the covenant; and that ſacrifice was for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, Eph. v. 2. or, as the Old Teſtament phraſe is, a ſavour of reſt, Gen. viii. 21. marg. The repreſented being ſinners, were corrupt and abominable before God; and he as it were ſmelled a ſavour of diſquiet from them, they being a ſmoke in his noſe, Iſa. lxv. 5. their ſin ſet his revenging juſtice and wrath aſtir. But the ſacrifice of Chriſt himſelf, was fit to ſend forth ſuch a ſweet ſmelling ſavour unto God, as ſhould quite overcome the abominable ſavour ariſing from them, and lay his revenging juſtice and wrath to the moſt calm and profoundeſt reſt.

The neceſſity of a ſacrifice in the ſecond covenant, aroſe from the juſtice of God requiring the execution of the curſe of the broken firſt covenant; whereby the ſinner ſhould fall a ſacrifice for his ſin, according to that, Pſal. xciv. 23. He ſhall bring upon them their own iniquity, and ſhall cut them off in their own wickedneſs. It was an ancient cuſtom in making of covenants, to cut a beaſt in twain, and to paſs between the parts of it: and that paſſing between the parts, reſpected the falling of the curſe of the covenant upon the breaker; Jer. xxxiv. 18. And I will give the men that have tranſgreſſed the covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and paſſed between the parts thereof: or rather, more agreeable to the original, I will make the men that have tranſgreſſed my covenant—the calf which they cut in twain, and paſſed between the parts thereof: that is, I will make them as that calf which they cut in twain; I will execute the curſes on them, cutting them aſunder as covenant-breakers, Matth. xxiv. 51. Now the covenant of works being broken, juſtice required this execution of the curſe of it, in order to the eſtabliſhing of a new covenant, the covenant of grace and peace. But had it been execute on the ſinners themſelves, the fire of wrath would have burnt continually on them; but never would ſuch a ſacrifice have ſent forth a ſavour ſmelling ſo ſweet, as to be a ſavour of reſt to revenging juſtice; foraſmuch as they were not only mere creatures, whoſe moſt exquiſite ſufferings could not be a ſufficient compenſation for the injured honour of an infinite God; but they were ſinful creatures too, who ſhould ſtill have remained ſinful under their ſufferings. Wherefore Jeſus Chriſt, being both ſeparate from ſinners, and equal with God, conſented in the covenant to be the ſacrifice, on which the curſe of the firſt covenant might be execute, in their room and ſtead.

This is lively repreſented in the covenant made with Abraham, in which he was a type of Chriſt, Gen. xv. In that covenant, God promiſed the deliverance of Abraham's ſeed out of the Egyptian bondage, and to give them the land of Canaan; a type of the deliverance of Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed from the bondage of ſin and Satan, and of putting them in poſſeſſion of heaven, ver. 13, 14. 16. 18. Awful was the ſolemnity uſed at the making of this covenant. There were taken a heifer, a ſhe-goat, and a ram, each of them of three years old; typifying Chriſt, who was about three years in his public miniſtry, ver. 9. Theſe were, each of them, divided in the midſt, hacked aſunder by the middle; which typified the execution of the curſe of the broken firſt covenant on Chriſt our ſurety, and ſacrifice for us, ver. 10. Abraham's driving away the fowls that came down upon the carcaſes, typified Chriſt's victory over the devils all along during the ſtate of his humiliation, and eſpecially his triumphing over them on the croſs, ver. 11. And finally, there was, a ſmoking furnace, and a burning lamp that paſſed between the pieces; which ſignified the revenging wrath of God ſeizing on Chriſt the ſacrifice, and juſtice therewith ſatisfied, ver. 17.

3. No ſacrifice could be accepted, but on ſuch an altar as ſhould ſanctify the gift to its neceſſary value and deſigned effect, Matth. xxiii. 19. And who could furniſh that but Chriſt himſelf, whoſe divine nature was the altar, from whence the ſacrifice of his human nature derived its value and efficacy as infinite? Heb. ix. 14. How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered up himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works? His bleſſed body ſuffering and bleeding to death on the croſs, and his holy ſoul ſcorched and melted within him with the fire of divine wrath, both in the mean time united to his divine nature, were the ſacrifice burning on the altar, from the which God ſmelled a ſweet ſavour, to the appeaſing of his wrath, and the ſatisfying of his juſtice fully. Not that Chriſt was a ſacrifice only while on the croſs; but that his offering of himſelf a ſacrifice, which was begun from his incarnation in the womb, the ſacrifice being laid on the altar in the firſt moment thereof; and was continued through his whole life; was completed on the croſs, and in the grave: Heb. x. 5. 'Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he ſaith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldeſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me:' ver. 7. 'Then ſaid I, Lo, I come.' Iſ. liii. 2. 'When we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him.' ver. 3. 'He is a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief,' 2 Cor. v. 21. 'He hath made him to be ſin for us.'

4. Laſtly, There behoved to be a prieſt to offer this ſacrifice, this valuable ſacrifice, unto God upon that altar; elſe there could have been no ſacrifice to be accepted, and ſo no removal of ſin, and conſequently no new covenant. And ſince Chriſt himſelf was the ſacrifice, and the altar too, he himſelf alone could be the Prieſt. And foraſmuch as the weight of the ſalvation of ſinners lay upon his call to that office, he was made Prieſt of the covenant by the oath of God, Heb. vii. 20. 21. As he had full power over his own life, to make himſelf a ſacrifice for others; ſo his Father's ſolemn inveſting of him with this office by an oath, gave him acceſs to offer himſelf effectually; even in ſuch ſort as thereby to fulfil the condition of the covenant, and to purchaſe eternal life for them.

INFERENCES from the ſecond head.

I ſhall ſhut up this head, of the making of the covenant of grace, with two inferences from the whole.

Inf. 1. What remains for ſinners, that they may be perſonally and ſavingly in covenant with God, is not, as parties contractors and undertakers, to make a covenant with him, for life and ſalvation; but only, to take hold of God's covenant already made from eternity, between the Father and Chriſt the ſecond Adam, and revealed and offered to us in the goſpel, Iſ. lvi. 4. 6. I have no deſign hereby to diſparage our covenants made for national reformation by our godly progenitors, and commonly called the national covenant, and ſolemn league and covenant, on which God ſet the ſeal of his good will in the experience of many. Theſe and the like are covenants of duties, conſequential enough to the taking hold of God's covenant of grace. Neither would I diſcourage any ſerious ſouls, from taking hold of God's covenant of grace, for eternal life and ſalvation to themſelves, with all the awful ſolemnity of the moſt expreſs words, yea, and of writing and ſubſcribing it with their hands; which is commonly called perſonal covenanting. But I would have all to beware of a practical corrupting of the covenant of grace, by making covenants of their own, upon ſuch and ſuch terms, which they will fulfil for life and ſalvation. The carnal Jews miſtaking the deſign of the giving of the law, did ſo corrupt the covenant of grace; looking for life and ſalvation, not for the ſake of the promiſed ſeed alone, but for their obedience, ſuch as it was, to the moral and ceremonial laws. And thus many, thinking that eternal ſalvation is propoſed to them in the word, upon the condition of faith, repentance, and ſincere obedience to God's law, do conſent to theſe terms, and ſolemnly undertake to perform them: juſt binding themſelves to ſuch and ſuch duties, that God may ſave their ſouls: and ſo they make their covenant. And while they can perſuade themſelves, that they perform their part of the covenant, they look for life and ſalvation thereupon. This doth quite overturn the nature of the covenant of grace: for to him that worketh, the reward is not reckoned of grace, but of debt, Rom. iv. 4. and if it be of works, then it is no more grace, chap. xi. 6. The ſinfulneſs of this practice is great, as overlooking Chriſt, the great undertaker and party-contractor by the appointment of the Father; and putting themſelves in his room, to do and work for themſelves for life. And the danger of it muſt needs be great, as laying a foundation to bear the weight of their ſalvation, which divine wiſdom ſaw to be quite unable to bear it. The iſſue whereof muſt be, that ſuch covenanters ſhall ly down in ſorrow. So the apoſtle determines, Gal. v. 4. Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.

Our part then, in this caſe, is only to take hold of God's covenant made already, and offered and exhibited to us in the goſpel. This hold is taken by faith; which is, in ſcripture-account, the hand of the ſoul, John i. 12. So the original expreſſion plainly carries it, Iſ. lvi. 46. That faſten in my covenant. In which phraſeology, the correlate word hand (expreſſed Gen. xxi. 18.) is underſtood; q. d. That faſten [their hand] in my covenant; that is to ſay, 'Who by the hand of faith take faſt hold of my covenant;' as Adonijah did of the horns of the altar, 1 Kings i. 50. wherein the ſame manner of expreſſion is uſed. And this you do, by taking hold of Chriſt in the free promiſe of the goſpel; believing that he is held forth to you in particular, confiding and truſting in him as your Saviour, for your ſalvation from ſin and wrath, upon the ground of God's faithfulneſs in the promiſe, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life, for he is given for a covenant to you, Iſ. xlix. 8. and to receive him, is to believe on his name, John i. 12.

This is our making a covenant with God by ſacrifice, which is mentioned, Pſal. l. 5. The original expreſſion is, That cut my covenant upon a ſacrifice; namely, by laying their hands in faith on the head of the ſacrifice, thereupon cut down in their ſtead: and ſo ceremonially transferring their guilt on the ſacrifice; but really and ſpiritually, approving of the device of ſalvation by a crucified Saviour, and falling in with it as the method of ſalvation for them. In this way of covenanting, the free grace of the covenant is preſerved pure and entire: for to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs, Rom. iv. 5. Here the honour of ſole undertaker and party-contractor in the covenant, is, according to the Father's appointment, left to Chriſt, the one that is mighty, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. Here the ſecond Adam builds the temple, without our laying one ſtone therein in our own perſons; even as the firſt Adam laid it in ruins, without our pulling down one ſtone of it in our own perſons: and Chriſt bears the perſonal glory of the reparation, even as Adam the perſonal blame of the ruin, Zech. vi. 13. And at this rate the ſoul doth in time, for her own part, give her ſolemn approbation of the covenant made from eternity, and a perſonal conſent to what Chriſt from everlaſting conſented to in her name: even as the princeſs married by proxy in her childhood, ratifies all when ſhe is come to age, by receiving her huſband. Likeas all Adam's children, as ſuch, taking ſalvation to heart, and therefore covenanting with God, do in effect repeat the covenant of works made with Adam their repreſentative; ſo all the ſecond Adam's ſeed, as ſuch, taking ſalvation to heart, and therefore covenanting with God, do in effect repeat the covenant of grace made with Chriſt their repreſentative. In the making of the covenant before the world began, the Father propoſed to Chriſt as ſecond Adam, their head and repreſentative, that he ſhould take burden upon him for them, and be their Kinſman-redeemer, their ſurety for their debt of puniſhment and duty, and their Prieſt; and Chriſt conſented thereto from eternity. Amen, for my part, ſays the elect ſoul in time, in the covenanting day: it is infinitely well ordered; I am a loſt ſinner, a debtor to divine juſtice, a guilty creature; he is, with my whole heart and ſoul, MY Kinſman-redeemer, MY Surety, MY Prieſt: my part of the puniſhment incurred, and of the duty owing, is a vaſt and exceeding great part of that debt, but my ſoul is well content of, and reſts in that method of paying it: 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. He hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, (Heb. he hath put to me an everlaſting covenant) ——This is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire. The father ſaid to Chriſt as their repreſentative, For thy ſo doing and ſuffering, I will be their God, and they ſhall be MY people. Amen, ſaid Chriſt from eternity; All mine are thine, John xvii. 10. Amen, for my part, ſays the elect ſoul in the time of perſonal covenanting. This heart of mine muſt have ſome God, I muſt belong to one or other; and too long have I been for another: but now, the timber of the houſe, and ſtones of the wall bear witneſs, my ſoul is content with, conſents to, and reſts in this method of diſpoſing of me; namely that the God and father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be my God in Chriſt, and I one of his people from henceforth and for ever.

This manner of covenanting is inconſiſtent with a purpoſe or deſire of continuing in ſin; even as one's committing himſelf into the hands of a Phyſician who cures infallibly, is inconſiſtent with a deſire to keep his diſeaſe hanging about him. Chriſt being made of God unto us wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. i. 33. it neceſſarily carries along with it, a taking of Chriſt for a Prophet, and a King, and Lord unto us; as ſuch a one doth neceſſarily yield himſelf to the Phyſician's management. In it one joins himſelf to Chriſt as his covenant head, who alſo was the Adminiſtrator of the covenant; and ſo ſubjects himſelf to his teaching and government. And it is ſuch a way of covenanting as no profane perſon, nor hypocrite, continuing ſo, ever did or can fall in with. For, (1.) It ſpeaks a heart content to part with all ſin, well pleaſed with Chriſt's whole ſalvation, whereof the principal part is to ſave his people from their ſins, Matth. i. 21. whereas unſound covenanters are always offended with ſome one thing or other in Chriſt, chap. xi. 6. (2.) It ſpeaks a ſoul carried out of all confidence in itſelf, its own working and doing for life and ſalvation, and bottomed only upon Chriſt's doing and ſuffering for that end. And thus, ſuch a covenanter, being poor in ſpirit, Matth. v. 3. and rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus, and having no confidence in the fleſh, Phil. iii. 3. is diſtinguiſhed from the preſumptuous hypocrite, whoſe confidence for life and ſalvation is ever upon his own doing and working, either in whole or in part; as alſo from the deſpairing unbeliever, who hath no confidence, neither in Chriſt, nor in himſelf, that he ſhall have life and ſalvation, however he may believe firmly that others ſhall. So this faith, this covenanting, is quite another thing, than either the falſe faith of the preſumptuous profane, and preſumptuous hypocrite, or the no-faith of the deſperate, or the wavering doubter, who can never fix in greater or leſſer meaſure of confidence in Chriſt, for ſalvation to himſelf: Jam. i. 6. But let him aſk in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth, is like a wave of the ſea, driven with the wind, and toſſed. Verſ. 7. For let not that man think that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord.

If any think this to be an eaſy way of believing or covenanting, either they miſtake it, or they try it not. To believe upon ſome ground we ſee in ourſelves, is very natural; but to believe merely upon a ground in another, namely righteouſneſs in Chriſt, and faithfulneſs in God, while all in ourſelves tends to make us deſpair, is above the reach of nature. A conſcience thoroughly awakened will convince a ſinner, that it is a matter of greateſt difficulty.

Inf. 2. Juſtifying faith, though it receives Chriſt in all his offices, as Prophet, Prieſt, and King; yet as it enters us perſonally into the covenant, and juſtifies, it eyes him in his prieſtly office particularly; namely, as the great High Prieſt, who hath made atonement for ſin, by the ſacrifice of himſelf; as the Surety, who undertook and completed the payment of the debt of puniſhment and duty; and as the Kinſman-redeemer, who having married our nature to the divine nature in himſelf, redeemed the mortgaged inheritance with his own blood, gave himſelf a ranſom for us, to deliver us from our ſpiritual bondage, and by his death, deſtroyed him that had the power of death; Rom. iii. 25. Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood. Chap. v. 11. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have now received the atonement. The comfort for a wounded conſcience, ſick with the guilt of ſin, lies here. This is that office of Chriſt to which the convinced ſinner, ſtanding trembling before the juſt Judge of the world, lifts his eyes, and make his recourſe for ſafety: for there, and only there, can one ſee a ranſom, a righteouſneſs, an atonement. In his prophetical and kingly office, he adminiſtrates the covenant; but in his prieſtly office, he performed the condition of it. So it is the foundation of the other two. It was by the ſacrifice of himſelf, that the word and ſpirit of the covenant, whereby he teacheth ſinners, were purchaſed: and thereby alſo he obtained his kingdom. And his interceſſion is founded upon his oblation. So his prieſtly office, and that conſidered particularly in point of his offering his ſacrifice, doth, as the foundation ſtone, bear the weight of the ſalvation of ſinners, and of the honour of God and the Mediator therein. Wherefore it is not ſtrange, that his inveſtiture with the prieſtly office was confirmed by the oath of God; a ſolemnity not uſed in the caſe of his prophetical and kingly offices.

And thus far of the making of the covenant.

HEAD III.

The PARTS of the Covenant of Grace.

THE parts of the covenant of grace, being the things therein agreed upon betwixt God and Chriſt the ſecond Adam, are two, to wit, the conditionary part, and the promiſſory part. Theſe comprehend the whole of the covenant, and of them we ſhall treat in order.

The firſt part of the covenant, namely, the conditionary part.

THE condition of a covenant or bargain, properly and commonly ſo called, is, That part of a covenant or bargain, upon the performing of which one's right to the benefit promiſed is founded, and his plea for it is ſtated, as becoming due to him for that his performance, according to, and in virtue of the agreement between the parties. This is a federal condition, a covenant condition, or the condition of a covenant; and what all men, in common converſation, underſtand by condition of a covenant or bargain. As for inſtance, the paying of ſuch a ſum of money for ſuch a commodity, according to the agreement between the parties, is the condition of a covenant of commerce, ſale, or traffic: the working of ſuch a piece of work, or doing of ſuch a deed, for ſuch a reward agreed upon by the parties, is the condition of a covenant of ſervice or hire.

Beſides this, there is alſo what is called a condition of connection or order in a covenant; whereby one thing neceſſarily goes before another, in the order of the covenant, without being the ground upon which one's right and title to that other thing is founded. As in the former inſtances, the buyer's receiving of the commodity, and the hireling's receiving of the reward, covenanted or bargained for, muſt needs go before their poſſeſſion or enjoyment of them; but it is evident, that that receiving is not the thing upon which the buyer's right and title to the commodity, or the hireling's right and title to the reward, is founded: therefore though it may be called a condition of connection in the reſpective covenants, yet it cannot, in any propriety of ſpeech, be called the condition of them.

Now to apply theſe things to our purpoſe: in the order of the covenant of grace, foraſmuch as the having of the Spirit muſt go before faith, faith before juſtification, juſtification before ſanctification, holineſs before heaven's happineſs; theſe may be called conditions in the covenant of grace, to wit, conditions of certain connection; and this belongs to the eſtabliſhed order of the promiſes of the covenant, which are contra-diſtinguiſhed to the condition of the covenant. Howbeit ſuch conditions can in no proper ſenſe be called the condition or conditions of the covenant of grace, more than the buyer's receiving of the commodity can be called the condition of the covenant, or bargain of ſale. But the condition of the covenant of grace, properly ſo called, is, Chriſt in the form of a bond-ſervant, as laſt Adam, Repreſentative, Kinſman-redeemer, Surety, and Prieſt, his fulfilling all righteouſneſs owing, in virtue of the broken covenant of works, unto God by his ſpiritual ſeed: Matth. iii. 15. Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs.

For clearing of this purpoſe, I ſhall, (1.) Evince this to be the condition of the covenant; (2.) Explain and unfold that righteouſneſs, the fulfilling whereof was made the condition of the covenant.

Firſt, to evince that this is the condition of the covenant of grace, conſider,

1. Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs as ſecond Adam is what the Father propoſed unto him, as the terms on which his ſeed ſhould be ſaved, and upon which he founded his promiſe of eternal life to be given them; and not any work or deed of theirs: Iſ. liii. 10. When thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed. Ver. 11. He ſhall ſee of the travel of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied: by his knowledge ſhall my righteous ſervant juſtify many; for he ſhall bear their iniquities. Luke xxii. 20. This cup is the new teſtament in my blood, which is ſhed for you. And the ſame is that which Chriſt as the ſecond Adam did from eternity conſent unto, undertake and bind himſelf for: and which he did in time, according to agreement, perform. Thus he himſelf repreſents it, Matth. iii. 15. Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs; namely, as it becometh a perſon of honour and credit to fulfil his bargain. Luke xxiv. 26. Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things? to wit, as one ought to perform the condition of a covenant or bargain he has agreed to.

2. This is the only ground of a ſinner's right and title to eternal life; and upon nothing elſe can he ſafely found his plea before the Lord for life and ſalvation: Eph. i. 7. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace. Philip. iii 8. 9. That I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs——but —the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith. Surely upon the condition of the covenant fulfilled, one may found his plea before the Lord for the benefits promiſed in the covenant: but no man may found his plea before the Lord for theſe on any work or deed of his own whatſoever, no not on faith itſelf, but only Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs: therefore no work or deed of ours whatſoever, no not faith itſelf can be the condition of the covenant of grace properly ſo called; but only on Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs. The ſinner ſtanding in the court of conſcience, trembling before the Lord, flees in under the covert of that righteouſneſs fulfilled by the Mediator, and dare oppoſe nothing but it to the condemning ſentence of the law, giving up with all other pleas for life and ſalvation. Believing in Chriſt is the pleading upon that ground, not the ground of the ſinner's plea; it ſaith, my Lord and my God in the promiſe, upon the ground of Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs allenarly, as the condition of the covenant. If any will make it the ground of their plea, they muſt needs produce it as a work of a law, that is, as a deed done by them, whereby they have fulfilled and anſwered a law, and whereupon they crave the benefit promiſed: the which will, according to the ſcripture, be found a dangerous adventure, Rom. iii. 20. Gal. ii. 16. and v. 4.

3. It is by this, and this alone, the ſalvation of ſinners becomes a debt: therefore this alone is the condition of the covenant. For the reward is of debt to him, and him only, who fulfils the condition of a covenant: to him that worketh, not to him that worketh not, but believeth, Rom. iv. 4. 5. And ſo it is of debt to Chriſt alone, not to us: and therefore it was he that fulfilled the condition of the covenant; we fulfil no part of it. This is confirmed from the primitive ſituation of mankind with reference to eternal life, in the firſt Adam's covenant, duly conſidered. The condition thereof was perfect active obedience. And according to the nature of that covenant, if this obedience had been fulfilled by Adam, eternal life to him and his would thereupon have become a debt to him. And the plea of his poſterity for life, in that caſe, would not have been founded on their perſonal obedience coming after that fulfilment; ſince it would not have been the performance of the condition, but the fruit of the promiſe of the covenant; but it would have been founded on that performance of Adam their repreſentative; foraſmuch as, in the caſe ſuppoſed, it would have been the only obedience whereby the condition of that covenant was fulfilled; and ſo they would have obtained life, not for any perſonal work or deed of theirs, but for the obedience of the firſt Adam their repreſentative, to which God did graciouſly make the promiſe of life, in the firſt covenant.

4. Faith and obedience are benefits promiſed in the covenant, upon the condition of it, as hath been already evinced; and in virtue of the promiſes of the covenant, they are produced in the elect: therefore they cannot be the condition of the covenant. And elect infants are ſaved, though they are neither capable of believing nor of obeying: howbeit, the condition of the covenant muſt needs be performed, either by themſelves who are ſaved, or elſe by another in their ſtead. Therefore Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs, which is the only obedience performed in their ſtead, muſt be the alone proper condition of the covenant.

5. Laſtly, The covenant of grace doth ſo exclude our boaſting, as the covenant of works did not. This is clear from Rom. iii. 27. Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith. But if any deed or work of ours be the condition of the covenant of grace, in whole or in part, our boaſting is not excluded, but hath place therein, as in the covenant of works; the difference being at moſt but in point of degrees: for, according to the ſcripture, it is working, or fulfilling the condition of a covenant, that gives the ground of boaſting; foraſmuch as to him that worketh, the reward is reckoned of debt: and life being of or by works in the covenant of works, though not in the way of proper merit, but in way of paction or compact only, this gave men the ground of boaſting in that covenant, according to the ſcripture. Therefore, ſo far as life and ſalvation are of or by any work or deed of ours, as fulfilling the condition of the covenant of grace, our boaſting is not excluded, but hath place therein, as in the covenant of works. Wherefore, ſince the covenant of grace is ſo framed, as to leave no ground for our boaſting, no work or deed of ours, but Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs, even that alone is the condition of the covenant of grace: and our life and ſalvation are neither of works, nor by works, as fulfilling the condition of the covenant: Tit. iii. 5. Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us: Eph. ii. 9. Not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt.

God forbid we ſhould go about to juſtle faith and obedience out of the covenant of grace! Thoſe who do ſo in principle or practice, will thereby juſtle themſelves out of the kingdom of heaven: Matth. v. 19. Whoſoever ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven; that is, he ſhall be treated as he treated that one of theſe commandments, he ſhall be judged unworthy of the fellowſhip of that kingdom.

Faith is neceſſary ſavingly to intereſt us in Jeſus Chriſt the head of the covenant; and none can attain to eternal happineſs, without actual believing, who are ſubjects capable of it; nor can any attain it without the Spirit of faith indwelling in them. Obedience is neceſſary, as the chief ſubordinate end of the covenant, being that whereby God hath his glory he deſigned therein: and without obedience begun here, none who are ſubjects capable of it, can ſee heaven. But withal it is neceſſary, that they be kept in the place and ſtation aſſigned them in the covenant by the Father and the Son from eternity. By faith we perſonally embrace the covenant, conſent to, and reſt in the condition of the covenant fulfilled by Chriſt; and ſo are juſtified and brought into a ſtate of ſalvation: John x. 9. I am the door, by me if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaved. Compare John i. 12. and iii. 16. and xiv. 6. By evangelical repentance and goſpel-obedience, we teſtify our thankfulneſs to God, and evidence the truth of our faith, and our being within the covenant; 1 Pet. ii. 9. ‘ Ye are a choſen generation, ‘ a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people: ‘ that ye ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him who hath ‘ called you out of darkneſs into his marvelous light:’ verſ. 10. ‘ Which in time paſt were not a people, but ‘ are now the people of God: which had not obtained ‘ mercy, but now have obtained mercy.’ Compare Rom. vi. 13. and xii. 1, 2. 1 Cor. vi. 20.

This the Prophet taught the Jewiſh church of old, Mic. vi. 8. ‘ He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, ‘ and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſt‘ ly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy ‘ God?’ In the 6th verſe, a moſt important queſtion is put, concerning the acceptance of a ſinner with God, how it may be obtained, Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord? and ſeveral coſtly expedients for that purpoſe are propoſed by the ſinner, even to the giving of the fruit of his body for the ſin of his ſoul, ver. 6. 7. But the prophet anſwers that queſtion in a word, tacitly upbraiding them with groſs ſtupidity, in their groping for the wall in broad day-light, even as in the night; He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; that is what is goodly, valuable, and acceptable, in the ſight of God, for that purpoſe, even for a ſinner's obtaining pardon and acceptance with God; namely, the Meſſias, Jeſus Chriſt ſacrificed for ſinners. This was God had all along, by his prophets, and by the whole ceremonial law, pointed out to them, and ſet before them, as the good for that purpoſe, that they might by faith look thereunto, and be ſaved, Iſa. xlv. 22. And, in the ſtile of the Holy Ghoſt, Chriſt crucified is elſewhere ſpoken of under the ſame notion; 2 Chron. xxx. 18. ‘ The good Lord pardon e‘ very one that prepareth his heart to ſeek God.’ Orig. Jehovah the good make atonement for, &c. Pſal. lxxxv. 12. ‘ The Lord ſhall give that which is good;’ or, ſhall give the good. Compare John iv. 10. ‘ If thou knew‘ eſt the gift of God, and who it is.’ Iſa. lv. 2. ‘ Eat ‘ ye that which is good.’ Compare John vi. 55. ‘ My ‘ fleſh is meat indeed.’ Job xxxiv. 4. ‘ Let us know ‘ among ourſelves what is good.’ Ver. 5. For Job hath ‘ ſaid, I am righteous.’ Now, being thus accepted of God, what doth he require of thee in point of gratitude, but to do juſtly, as one accepted not without a righteouſneſs anſwering the demands of juſtice and judgment; and to love mercy, as one who hath obtained mercy; and to walk humbly with thy God, as one who is free grace's debtor? In the ſame manner of expreſſion doth Moſes addreſs himſelf to the people ſecured of the poſſeſſion of Canaan by the oath of God, and being juſt to enter upon it, Deut. x. 11, 12. ‘ And now, Iſrael, what doth ‘ the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord ‘ thy God,’ &c.? namely, in point of gratitude, for his giving thee that good land.

Infer. From what is ſaid it appears, that your life and ſalvation entirely depend on your ſpecial intereſt in Chriſt's righteouſneſs. If ye are poſſeſſed of it, your ſalvation is ſecure; if not, ſalvation is far from you. If you were never ſo full of your own righteouſneſs, works, doings, and ſufferings, all is but filthy rags in this caſe, and cannot give you a right or title to life; and although you can ſee nothing of your own in yourſelves, which you can lean to before the Lord, yet if the righteouſneſs of Chriſt is yours in poſſeſſion, by faith, your life and ſalvation are firm as a rock.

Caſe. How then ſhall I know that Chriſt's righteouſneſs is indeed mine in poſſeſſion? Anſw. The Lord himſelf gives a diſtinguiſhing character of ſuch happy poſſeſſors, Iſa. li. 7. Hearken unto me, ye that know righteouſneſs, the people in whoſe heart is my law. They that know righteouſneſs, are, in the ſtile of the ſcripture, thoſe whoſe it is, agreeable to the phraſe, Matth. xxv. 12. I know you not, q. d. Ye are none of mine, I acknowledge you not as mine. So this character conſiſts of two parts. (1.) They are ſuch as acknowledge Chriſt's righteouſneſs as their only righteouſneſs in the ſight of God, and look to it alone for life and ſalvation, renouncing all their own righteouſneſs: Iſa. liii. 11. ‘ By his knowledge ‘ ſhall my righteous ſervant juſtify many;’ that is, by the knowledge or the acknowledgement of him, which is by faith. (2.) They have the law of God in their hearts. The righteous people, righteous by faith, are a holy people. They make conſcience of internal obedience; for the holy law rules within them, even there whither no eye reacheth, but the eyes of God and their own conſciences. So they are diſtinguiſhed from hypocrites, who are like unto whited ſepulchres, beautiful outward, but within full of all uncleanneſs. They make conſcience of external obedience too; for as the candle burning within the lanthorn will ſhine through it, ſo the law of God ruling in the heart, cannot miſs to rule in the life and converſation too: Matth. vi. 22. ‘ If ‘ therefore thine eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be ‘ full of light.’ And ſo they are diſtinguiſhed from the profane, whoſe unholy lives declare them to have neither part nor lot in this righteouſneſs: Pſal. xxiv. 3. 4. ‘ Who ‘ ſhall ſtand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands.’ And the law is not only in their minds by its light, to drive them to obedience; as in the caſe of legaliſts, who work like ſlaves; but it is in their hearts and affections, diſcovering to their ſouls the beauty of holineſs, and ſo drawing them to all obedience, and cauſing them to work like ſons to a father. Their hearts are reconciled to the purity of the holy law, and they delight in it after the inward man, Rom. ii. 22. and would fain reach a full conformity unto it, ſaying from the heart, ‘ O ‘ that my ways were directed to keep thy ſtatutes!’ Pſal. cxix. 5.

Secondly, To unfold that righteouſneſs, the fulfilling of which was made the condition of the covenant of grace, we ſhall view it in the ſeveral parts thereof. That righteouſneſs, foraſmuch as it was to be fulfilled in the room and ſtead of ſinners, was and muſt be ſtated from the law, or broken covenant of works, which they were lying under: for the law, or broken covenant of works, was ſo far from being neglected in the new bargain, that whatſoever it had to charge upon, or demand of the parties contracted for in the new covenant, was ſummed up, and ſet down therein, to be fully cleared by Chriſt their Surety contracting for them. Now, ſtating that righteouſneſs from thence, it will be found to conſiſt of three parts, making ſo many conditionary articles of the covenant of grace: to wit, holineſs of nature, righteouſneſs of life, and ſatisfaction for ſin. Of the which in order.

ARTICLE I.

Holineſs of nature.

THE law required holineſs of nature as a condition of life, inaſmuch as condemning original ſin, ſaying, Thou ſhalt not covet, it concluded all men to be by nature children of wrath. For God being eſſentially holy, holy by neceſſity of nature, nothing can be ſo contrary to God as an unholy nature is, becauſe, howbeit perſons or things of a like nature may be contrary in ſome points, yet they can never be ſo contrary one to another, as thoſe of quite oppoſite natures. But the parties contracted for in the covenant of grace, having their nature wholly corrupted, and being incapable to purify it, or make their heart clean, Prov. xx. 9; it is evident, they could by no means anſwer this demand of the law by themſelves. Wherefore, for the ſatisfaction of the law in this point, it was ſettled as a conditionary article of the covenant of grace, "That Chriſt the ſecond "Adam, repreſenting them, ſhould be a man of a per"fectly holy, pure, and untainted nature, fully anſwer"ing for them the holineſs and perfection of nature re"quired by the law." 'For ſuch an high prieſt be'came us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate 'from ſinners,' Heb. vii. 26. And this article contains two clauſes.

1. "That he, as the ſecond Adam, ſhould be con"ceived and born holy, for and inſtead of them corrupt"ed in their nature, conceived and born in ſin." There was a holy nature given to Adam as the root of mankind, to be by him kept and tranſmitted to his poſterity, in the way of natural generation. And upon this ground, the law requires all men to be born holy, pronouncing them unclean and children of wrath, in the contrary event, Job xiv. 4. Eph. ii. 3. But how could this demand be anſwered by ſinners? They are born in ſin: they cannot enter again into their mother's womb, and be born a ſecond time, without ſin. No, they cannot: yet the law will not bate of that demand for life. Wherefore it was provided, that Chriſt, as a public perſon, repreſenting his ſpiritual ſeed, ſhould be born perfectly holy; that, whereas they brought a ſinful corrupt nature into the world with them, he ſhould bring a holy human nature into the world with him. And ſo he was the laſt Adam, 1 Cor. xv. 45. holy and undefiled, Heb. vii. 26. that holy thing born, Luke i. 35. And the effect thereof with reſpect to that law-demand for life is, that all believers are, in law-reckoning, born holy in the ſecond Adam, even as they were created holy in the firſt Adam. Hence they are expreſsly ſaid to be circumciſed in him, Col. ii. 11. which plainly preſuppoſeth their being born in him. And it is is in virtue of their being legally born holy in Chriſt, when he was born, that, being united to him in the time of loves, they are really born again, and at length perfected; even as in virtue of their being legally defiled in Adam, when he ſinned, they are actually and really defiled in their own perſons, coming into the world; the holy nature being actually communicated to them from Chriſt their ſpiritual head, in whom they were legally born holy; even as the corruption of nature is actually conveyed to them from Adam their natural head, in whom they ſinned in law-reckoning.

2. The other clauſe is, "That Chriſt, as the ſecond "Adam, ſhould retain the holineſs of nature inviolate "unto the end, for them and in their name." The law, or covenant of works, required, as a condition of life, that the holineſs of nature given to mankind in Adam, ſhould be preſerved pure and uncorrupt. But it was loſt: and put the caſe, that it had been reſtored, they could not have retained it, in their own perſons, unſtained amidſt ſo many ſnares. Wherefore, to ſatiſfy the law-demand in this point, it was provided, that in the man Chriſt, as a public perſon repreſentative of his ſeed, their nature ſhould be kept perfectly holy, unto the end, without the leaſt ſtain or defilement: Iſa. xliii. 4. He ſhall not fail; or, he ſhall not wax dim, or wrinkle, as the ſkin doth when the moiſture is exhauſted. Therein the firſt Adam failed. He ſhone in purity of nature, as he came from the Creator's hand; but he failed, he waxed dim; the holineſs of his nature being exhauſted by ſin, all mankind in him loſt their ſpiritual beauty, and wrinkled. But now that the ſecond Adam failed not, but preſerved the holineſs of human nature in him unſtained, not in the leaſt darkened, even to the end of his life; the remains of the corruption of nature in believers are not imputed to them, Rom. iv. 8; but as defiled as they are in themſelves, through thoſe remains cleaving to them, yet in Chriſt their beauty is freſh, and not marred in the leaſt, according to that, Cant. iv. 7. 'Thou art all fair, my love, there is no ſpot in thee.'

ARTICLE II.

Righteouſneſs of life.

THIS alſo the law inſiſted upon as a condition of life, and juſtly: for God gave to Adam, and all mankind in him, a law to be obeyed in all points, not only in virtue of the tie of natural duty, but in virtue of the bond of a covenant for life; but it was never fulfilled by them. The firſt Adam began indeed the courſe of obedience; but he quickly fell off from it, with all his natural ſeed in him. Now, it being inconſiſtent with the honour of the law, that the prize, to wit, eternal life, ſhould be obtained, without the race was run; it ſtill inſiſted, ſaying, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments, Matth. xix. 17. Howbeit, we are weak, moveleſs, without ſtrength for running that race. Wherefore it was ſettled as another conditionary article of the covenant, "That Chriſt as a public perſon, repre"ſenting thoſe he contracted for, ſhould begin and "perfect the courſe of obedience to the law, in righte"ouſneſs of life." And accordingly, he became obedient unto death, Philip. ii. 8.

The law, which was the rule of this obedience, exacted of him, was the ſame law of the ten commands, that was given to Adam, and binding on us as under it: for he was made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, Gal. iv. 4. 5. It extended to all divine inſtitutions which the ſecond Adam found in being, whether obliging men as men, or as members of the church of God on earth: even as the rule of the firſt Adam's obedience, extended to the poſitive law touching the forbidden fruit, which was in being when he was ſet to fulfill his covenant-obedience.

That we may the more diſtinctly comprehend this article, it may be obſerved to bear theſe three things following.

1. "That he as the ſecond Adam, ſhould obey the "whole law, in the name of thoſe he repreſented." This was a debt owing by them all; and was required of them by the law, as a condition of life: Gal. iii. 10. 'Cur'ſed is every one that continueth not in ALL things 'which are written in the book of the law to do them.' But the anſwering of this demand was quite beyond their reach. Man, by the fall, having loſt much of his knowledge of the law, had loſt ſight of many of the duties required therein: howbeit, ignorance of the law excuſeth no man. His heart was averſe to, and enmity againſt the law, Rom. viii. 7. And he was without ſtrength to perform the duties therein required of him, chap. v. 6. So that by reaſon of ignorance, averſion, and impotency in that matter, the obedience of the whole law was not to be had from them. Wherefore it was provided, that Chriſt, as their repreſentative, ſhould give obedience to the whole law for them; that both tables of the law, and each command of each table, ſhould have their due obedience from him; that the law being laid before him in its ſpirituality and full extent, he ſhould fully anſwer it, in internal and external obedience, in his mind, will, and affections, in thought, word, and deed; that he ſhould conform himſelf to the whole natural law, and to all divine inſtitutions, ceremonial or political, ſo as to be circumciſed, keep the paſſover, to be baptized, to be a ſervant of or ſubject to rulers, pay tribute to whom it was due, and the like: in one word, that he ſhould perform the whole will of God, ſignified in his law; ſo that with the ſafety of the law's honour, his people might have life. What the firſt Adam failed

In, the ſecond Adam was to do. And this I take to be repreſented unto us, in the caſe of the firſt and ſecond king of Iſrael, to wit, Saul and David, Acts xiii. 22. I have found David the ſon of Jeſſe, a man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfill all my will; Gr. all my wills. In which there is a plain view to Saul, who was partial in his obedience to the will of God, (1 Sam. xv.) and upon that ſcore loſt the kingdom for him and his.

2. "That every part of that obedience ſhould be car-"ried to the higheſt pitch and degree." This the law required of them, as a condition of life; as our Lord himſelf ſhewed unto the lawyer, Luke x. 27. 'Thou 'ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with 'all thy ſoul, and with all thy ſtrength, and with all thy 'mind; and thy neighbour as thyſelf.' Verſ. 28.—'This, do, and thou ſhalt live.' But it was a demand they could never have anſwered, ſince Adam had ſquandered away their ſtock of ability, and left them without ſtrength. They might as ſoon have reached up their hand to the ſun in the firmament, ſo far above them, as have attained to the perfection of obedience demanded of them by the law. Wherefore it was agreed, that Chriſt ſhould in their name obey the law in that perfection, being made under the law, as they were under it, Gal. iv. 4. 5, that every action of his, ſhould bear, not only a goodneſs of the matter, but of the manner too, and that in perfection; that love to God and man ſhould flame in his holy human ſoul, to the utmoſt pitch required by the law; and ſo that debt owing by his ſeed, might be cleared by him, acting as a public man in their name."

3. Laſtly, "That all this ſhould be continued to the "the end, without the leaſt failure in one jot of parts, "or degrees of obedience." This alſo was a condition of life ſtated in the firſt covenant: Gal. iii. 10. 'Curſ'ed is every one that continueth not in all things which 'are written in the book of the law to do them.' But it was a demand they could by no means anſwer; man's nature being ſo vitiated by the fall, that if a thouſand hells were lying upon it, the beſt on earth could not keep perfectly right one hour. Wherefore it was agreed, that the ſecond Adam ſhould, in the name of thoſe he repreſented, continue in all things written in the law to do them, even to the end; that he ſhould not fail in his begun courſe of obedience, but run to the end of the race ſet before him; that from the womb to the grave, his heart and life ſhould ſhine in perfection of holineſs. All which he did accordingly fulfil, being obedient unto death, Philip. ii. 8.

ARTICLE III.

Satisfaction for ſin.

THE former two were in the condition of Adam's covenant: but this was not in it; for while there was no ſin, there was no place for ſatisfaction for ſin. But the new covenant behoved to be ſettled on the condition of a ſatisfaction for ſin; becauſe the broken law or covenant of works, inſiſted for it as a condition of life to ſinners, in virtue of its penalty by them incurred. Howbeit, it was quite beyond their power to anſwer this demand of the law. If then the mediator will have a ſeed brought from the ſtate of death, into a ſtate of life and ſalvation, he muſt buy them from the hand of juſtice, telling down a price for every ſoul of them, 1 Cor. vi. 20. Accordingly, all the ſins of every one of them, from the firſt ſin they ſhould be conceived and born in, to the laſt ſin they ſhould expire with, being foreſeen of God from eternity, were ſummed up as ſo many breaches of the law or covenant of works: and it was made another conditionary article of the covenant, "That Chriſt, as "a public perſon, ſhould ſatisfy fully and completely for "them all:" Iſ. liii. 6. 'The Lord hath laid on him 'the iniquity of us all;' compared with Lev. xvi. 21. 'All the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their 'tranſgreſſions in all their ſins.'

Now, in this article there were three things eſtabliſhed. Firſt, "That Chriſt, as a public perſon, ſhould ſatiſ"fy for them by ſuffering:" Luke xxiv. 26. 'Ought 'not Chriſt to have ſuffered?' Sinners were liable to ſuffer for the ſatiſfaction of juſtice: and nothing but ſuffering could be accepted, as a compenſation of the injury done by ſin, to the honour of God, in the violating of his holy law. Thouſands of rams, and ten thouſands of rivers of oil, were at the Mediator's command; all the ſilver and gold, and the precious things of the earth and ſeas, were at his diſpoſal: but none of theſe could be of uſe in this bargain; they were all of no value, in a treaty for the redemption of the ſoul, Mic. vi. 6, 7, 8. 1 Pet. i. 18. His own ſuffering could only avail here. That the ſon of God ſhould ſuffer, was indeed an amazing propoſal; but it was neceſſary, in order to ſatisfy for our ſin.

Secondly, "That he ſhould ſuffer the ſame pu"niſhment they ſhould have ſuffered in virtue of the "penalty of the broken covenant of works:" and that was death in its full latitude and extent. This appears from the penalty of that covenant, from which the debt of ſatisfaction was ſtated, 'In the day thou eateſt there'of, thou ſhalt ſurely die, Gen. ii. 17. compared with Chriſt's dying for, that is, in the room and ſtead of ſinners, ſo often mentioned in the ſcriptures, Rom. v. 6. 8. 2 Cor. v. 14. 15. 1 Theſſ. v. 10. And it is confirmed from that the ſcripture teacheth, that the all for whom Chriſt died, died in him, 2 Cor. v. 14. 'If one died 'for all, then were all dead;' or, then the all died, to wit, in him; even as they ſinned, and became liable to death, in Adam. So ſaith the apoſtle, 'I am crucified with 'Chriſt.' Gal. ii. 20.

For clearing of this purpoſe, two things are to be diſtinguiſhed in that death which was the penalty of the covenant of works. 1. What was eſſential to it, wrapt up in the very nature of the thing itſelf called death in the ſtile of that covenant. And that may be compriſed in theſe two; (1.) The curſe, (2.) Infinite execution; the former maketh the death legal, the latter making it real and ſatiſfactory. 2. What was accidental to it, ariſing, not from the nature of the thing in itſelf, but from the nature of the party dying that death. And this is of two ſorts. (1.) There is ſomething ariſing from the nature of the dying party, as he is a mere creature; ſuch as the eternity of the puniſhment, and deſpair of life. (2.) Something ariſing from the nature of the dying party, as he is a ſinful creature, or ſubject of inherent ſin; ſuch as the extinction of the ſaving relation betwixt God and the ſoul, the diveſting it of God's image, and the corruption and diſſolution of the body.

Now, the eſſentials of that death we ſhould have ſuffered in virtue of the penalty of the broken covenant of works, were laid, as part of the condition of the covenant of grace, on Jeſus Chriſt, to be ſuffered by him, for us. For he was 'made a curſe for us', Gal. iii. 13. and 'gave himſelf for us, a ſacrifice for a ſweet-ſmelling 'ſavour,' Eph. v. 2. that is, a ſacrifice equalling the infinite offence ariſing from our ſin; whence he is ſaid, 'by one offering' to have 'perfected for ever them that 'are ſanctified,' Heb. x. 14. But the accidentals of that death were no part of the condition of the covenant laid on him; nor could they at all have place in him; ſince he was neither a ſubject of inherent ſin, nor yet a mere creature. Nevertheleſs, it was ſtill the ſame death that we ſhould have ſuffered; foraſmuch as the eſſentials were the ſame. Thus the bodies of the ſaints, which are now weak and corruptible, ſhall at the reſurrection be powerful and incorruptible, yet ſtill the ſame bodies; ſince theſe qualities are but accidental to a human body. So in the caſe of clearing of debt, though the borrower could not pay it, but in a great quantity of copper-money, and that advanced by little and little for a long time; which would ruin him: yet if his rich cautioner ſhould pay all at once, in a little gold; it is evident, it would be the payment of the ſame debt, providing only that it fully equalled the ſum borrowed. Nay, confining our view to death itſelf, which is the general proper notion of the thing in queſtion, let us put the caſe, that two men, equally guilty of the ſame crime, are laid under one and the ſame ſentence of death; and it is execute on them both; but the one is by a miracle raiſed to life again, the other lies and rots in the grave. It is evident in this caſe, that the death they died, is the ſame death, anſwering the very ſame eſtimate which the law made of the crime; and that therefore the death of the former ſatisfies the law, as well as the death of the latter, ſo that it cannot reach his life again for that crime: howbeit, it is no leſs evident, that there is a huge difference between the death of the one and of the other, in accidentals, particularly in the duration or continuance of it. Wherefore, we conclude, that as Chriſt gave the ſame active obedience to the law which we ſhould have given in virtue of the condition of the covenant of works; ſo he ſuffered the ſame puniſhment of death that we ſhould have ſuffered in virtue of the penalty of that broken covenant: foraſmuch as, whatever difference there was in accidentals, the eſſentials were the ſame; it being laid on him, in the new covenant, to ſuffer death for us, equalling the infinite offence ariſing from our ſins, being fully proportionate to the eſtimate the law and juſtice of God had made of our crime.

And thus, according to what is ſaid, two grand points were eſtabliſhed in the conditionary part of the covenant.

1. “That the curſe of the law due to us for our ſin, ſhould be transferred on him as the ſecond Adam, our repreſentative; whereby he ſhould inſtantly be a man dead in law for his ſeed.” Either he or they behoved to bear the curſe: for it is written, ‘Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the law.’ Since God had annexed the threatening of death to his firſt covenant, ſaying, ‘In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die; the truth of God ſecured the curſe its taking place, as ſoon as ſin ſhould enter. Now, they were not able to bear it, without being ruined thereby. But that it might be borne, and they withal ſaved, it was provided, that he ſhould be laid under it, in their room and ſtead; that as he was made ſin for them, ſo he ſhould alſo in conſequence thereof, be made a curſe for them, Gal. iii. 13.

The curſe is the ſentence of the broken law paſſed upon a perſon, binding him over to the revenging wrath of God, to the full ſatisfaction of juſtice. So that awful and tremenduous myſtery lies here. Chriſt muſt ſtand before the tribunal of the holy law, as a ſinner; anſwerable for all the ſins of all the elect, by virtue of his bond of ſuretiſhip, regiſtrate in the records of heaven: and ſentence muſt paſs upon him, adjudging and binding him over to ſuffer all that revenging wrath which theſe ſins deſerved. The Lamb of God ſaid, Lo, I come: ſo it was done, he was made a curſe for us. In token hereof, being convened before the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, he was judged a blaſphemer, and worthy of death; and compearing before Pilate the Roman governour, he was by him ſentenced to die, and that upon the croſs.

Behold the ſtupendous reſult of this awful tranſaction, the transfering of the curſe on Chriſt the ſecond Adam! 1. Hereby he was made the ſeparated one of the elect ſociety, ſeparated unto evil, as the immediate effect of the curſe is deſcribed, Deut. xxix. 21. He was made the devoted head, devoted to pay for all the reſt. He was ſet up as the mark againſt which all the arrows of revenging wrath ſhould be aimed. He was appointed to be the common receptacle of all the floods of vengeance, iſſuing from incenſed juſtice towards the whole body of the elect, to ſwallow them up: here the current of all theſe was turned, that they ſhould together flow in upon him. Hence he cries, Pſal. lxix. 2. ‘I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me.’ 2. Hereby he became the reſting-place of revenging juſtice, where it was to prey, till it ſhould be ſatisfied to the full: Iſ. liii. 10. ‘Thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin.’ In token hereof, when the officers came to apprehend him, he ſaid, If ye ſeek me, let theſe go their way. Juſtice leaves the chaſe of the rebel multitude, ſeeks him, and him only; ſince he was made a curſe for them. Thus was he deſigned to be the ſacrifice for all his ſeed, which the fire of revenging wrath ſhould burn up, till it ſent forth a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, a ſavour of reſt to the incenſed juſtice of an offended God.

2. Another grand point eſtabliſhed here, was, “That the curſe transferred on him, ſhould be infinitely execute upon him as the ſecond Adam, our repreſentative; whereby he ſhould die really for his ſeed, to the full compenſation of all the injuries done to the honour of an infinite God, by all their ſins.” Vain is that curſe which takes not effect: but as the curſe of the holy law was not cauſeleſs, ſo it could not miſs of coming on, in its infinite weight, for the ſatisfaction of juſtice. Now, had it come ſo on them, they would have been eternally ſatisfying, but could never have ended their ſatisfaction. But, coming on him, the church of God was purchaſed with his own blood, Acts xx. 28. and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin, 1 John i. 7. the infinite dignity of the perſon dying, making the execution of the curſe on him unto death to be infinite in value, fully compenſating the infinite wrong, according to the eſtimate made of it by law and juſtice.

And here it was ſettled and agreed, “That the curſe ſhould be execute on the whole man;” that being their due: and therefore that he ſhould become poor, and not have where to lay his head; that he ſhould ſuffer hunger, for want of meat; thirſt for want of drink: that his name and reputation ſhould be ſunk, loaded with vile reproaches and ſlanders; his very friends going about to lay hands on him as a mad-man; that he ſhould be accounted a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people: his whole lot in the world afflicted, perſecuted, and exceeding low: and that in the end, being ſtripped of his garments, he ſhould be hung up naked before the ſun, between two malefactors, as if the worſt of the three.

More particularly, here it was ſtipulate, and agreed to, 1ſt, “That the curſe ſhould be execute on his bleſſed body;” foraſmuch as their bodies were liable to it, as being inſtruments of ſin and diſhonour to God: that it ſhould be hanged on a tree, that all the world might therein read the anger of God againſt the breaking of the firſt covenant, by eating of the forbidden tree; and his being made a curſe for us, ſince it is written, ‘Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree,’ that the curſe ſhould go over, and death paſs through, every part of that bleſſed body: that his head ſhould be diſgracefully wounded with a crown of thorns put upon it; his viſage marred more than any man; his back given to the ſmiters; his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; his face not hid from ſhame and ſpitting; his tongue made to cleave to his jaws; his hands and feet pierced and nailed to a croſs; all his bones drawn out of joint; his heart, like wax, melted in the midſt of his bowels; his blood ſhed; his ſtrength dried up; and that in the end it ſhould expire and die, be ſeparated from his ſoul, pierced with a ſpear, and laid in the duſt of death.

2dly, “That it ſhould be execute on his holy ſoul, in a ſpecial manner;” forasmuch as their ſouls were the principal actors in ſin: that he ſhould undergo the wrath of God in it, being all along his life a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief: and that towards the latter end, there ſhould be an hour and power of darkneſs, wherein the malice of men, the power and rage of devils, ſhould be jointly engaged againſt him, making their utmoſt efforts on him; and then the full floods of heaven's revenging wrath ſhould come rolling in upon his ſoul: that they ſhould ſo overflow it, as to ſtrike him with ſore amazement, fill him with trouble, load him with heavineſs, and overwhelm him with exceeding ſorrow: that there ſhould be ſuch a preſſure of divine wrath on his holy ſoul, as ſhould put him into an agony, even to his ſweating great drops of blood; and ſhould bring over it a total eclipſe of comfort, and as it were melt it within him; that ſo, while he was dying a bodily death on the croſs, he might alſo die a ſpiritual death, ſuch as a moſt pure and holy ſoul was capable of.

Here was the death determined in the covenant, for the ſecond Adam our repreſentative; a death in virtue of the curſe transferred on him, long-laſting and exquiſite, for the full ſatisfaction of revenging juſtice. (1.) It was a long-laſting death. He was a dying, in the ſtyle of the covenant of works, not only upon the croſs, but all along the time of his life; the death that was the penalty of the covenant, working in him from the womb, till it laid him in the grave. Wherefore he behoved to be conceived of a woman of low eſtate; and born in the ſtable of an inn, no room for him in the inn itſelf; laid in a manger, no cradle to receive him; his infant-blood ſhed in his circumciſion, as if he had been a ſinner; yea, his infant-life ſought by a cruel perſecutor, and his mother obliged to run her country with him, and go to Egypt. Returning, he behoved to live an obſcure life in an obſcure place, from which nothing great nor good was expected, John i. 46. and coming out of his obſcurity, to be ſet up as the object of the world's ill-will and ſpite, obloquy and maltreatment, till by the hands of Jew and Gentile he was put to death on the croſs. (2.) It was an exquiſite death. No pity, no ſparing in it: but the curſe carried it to the higheſt pitch. No ſparing from an angry God, Rom. viii. 32. No ſparing from wicked men let looſe on him, puſhing him like bulls, roaring on him and devouring him like lions, and renting him like dogs, when once their hour and power of darkneſs was come, Pſalm. xxii. 12. 13. 16. Not a good word ſpoken to him in the midſt of his torments, by thoſe that ſtood by: but he cruelly mocked and inſulted in them. Much leſs a good deed done him. Not a drink of water allowed him, but vinegar offered him, in his thirſt cauſed through the fire of divine wrath drinking up his ſpirits and moiſture. Nay, the very face of the heavens was lowring on him: the ſun muſt not give its light, but wrap up itſelf from him in darkneſs; becauſe 'light is ſweet, and it is a pleaſant thing to behold 'the ſun.'

Laſtly, In this article it was eſtabliſhed, "That he "ſhould ſuffer all this voluntarily, ſubmiſſively, and re"ſignedly, out of regard to the wronged honour of God." Accordingly, ſpeaking of his life, he ſaith, 'No man 'taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myſelf,' John x. 18. compare Pſal. xl. 6. 7. 8. This the law demanded of them whom he ſuffered for, condemning all murmuring and impatience, and binding them to obedience and ſuffering conjunctly. But how could they have ſo borne the load of revenging wrath, who cannot bear a ſharp fit of the gout or gravel, without ſome degree of impatience in the eye of the holy law? Wherefore it was provided, that Chriſt, as their repreſentative, ſhould bear their puniſhment voluntarily, and with perfect patience and reſignation: that he ſhould go as a lamb to the ſlaughter, quietly reſigning his human will to the divine will; and make his obedience in his ſufferings, as conſpicuous as his ſufferings themſelves: that, in midſt of the extremity of his torments, he ſhould not entertain the leaſt unbecoming thought of God, but acknowledge him holy in them all, Pſal. xxii. 3.; nor yet the leaſt grudge againſt his murderers; in token of which, he prayed for them while he was on the croſs, ſaying, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do, Luke xxiii. 34.

Thus far of the conditionary articles.

INFERENCES from the conditionary part of the covenant.

Thus, as we have ſhown, ſtood the important condition of the covenant of grace; and from thence the following inferences are fairly deducible.

Infer. 1. The redemption of the ſoul is precious. Is it not? Look to the price of the purchaſe, the ranſom of ſouls, as ſtated in the covenant: the holy birth, righteous life, and ſatisfactory death of the Son of God; and ye muſt conclude it to be a coſtly redemption. Turn hither your eyes, (1.) Ye who value not your own ſouls. See here the worth of thoſe ſouls ye ſell for a thing of nought, for ſatisfying a corrupt paſſion, a pang of luſt of one ſort or another. Coſtly was the gathering of what ye thus throw away. Ye let them go at a very low price; but Chriſt could not have one of them at the hand of juſtice, but at the price of his precious blood. Ye cannot forego the vanities of a preſent world for them, nor ſpend a ſerious day or hour about them; but he, after a lifetime of ſorrows, underwent a moſt bitter death for them. What think ye? Was he inconſiderate and too liberal in his making ſuch a bargain for the redemption of ſouls? He was infinitely juſt, who propoſed the condition; and he was infinitely wiſe, who went into it. He was a Father that exacted this ranſom for ſouls; and he was his own Son that paid it. Be aſhamed and bluſh, to make ſo low an eſtimate of thoſe ſouls, which Heaven ſet ſuch a high price on. (2.) Ye who have cheap thoughts of the pardon of ſin, and of ſalvation, correct your miſtake here. You fearleſsly run on in ſin, thinking all may ſoon be ſet to rights again, with a God forgive me, have mercy on my ſoul; ſo as you may leap out of Delilah's lap into Abraham's boſom. O fearful infatuation! Is the mean and low birth, the ſorrowful life, and the bitter death of Jeſus the Son of God, not ſufficient to give men a juſt and honourable notion of the pardon of ſin? Look into the condition of the covenant for pardon, written in the blood of the Lamb of God, and learn the value a juſt God puts upon his pardons and ſalvation. See, O ſinner, that it is not words, but deeds; not promiſes and reſolves to do better, but perfection of holineſs and obedience; not drawing of ſighs and ſhedding of tears, but ſhedding of blood; and not thy blood neither, but blood of infinite value, that could procure the pardon of ſin, and ſalvation. And if thou have not upon thee by faith all that righteouſneſs Chriſt fulfilled, to be preſented unto God for a pardon, thou ſhalt never obtain it. Particularly, ye are apt to think light of the ſin ye were born in, and the corruption cleaving to your nature; but know, that God does not think light of theſe. It behoved to be an article of the covenant, that Chriſt ſhould be born holy, and retain the holineſs of human nature in him to the end; elſe the unholy birth and corrupt nature we derived from Adam, would have ſtaked us all down eternally under the curſe. (3.) Ye that have mean thoughts of the holy law, rectify your dangerous miſtake by the help of this glaſs. Ye make no bonds of tranſgreſſing its commands; ye neglect and deſpiſe its curſe: as it is a law, ye ſhew not ſo much regard to it as to the laws of men; and as it is a covenant, ye look upon it as out of date, being in no concern how it may be ſatisfied for you. And ſhall the honour of the holy law lie in the duſt, in your caſe? Rather than it ſhould ſo lie in the caſe of Sodom and Gomorrah, God would have them laid in aſhes with fire and brimſtone. Yea, for vindicating the honour of the law, this whole world ſhall be burnt to aſhes, and all the unholy caſt out from the preſence of the Lord for ever. And in the caſe of them that are ſaved, God would have the curſe of the law executed upon his own Son as their Surety, and the commands of it perfectly obeyed in all points by him in their name. Sure, if you are poſſeſſed of any ſhare herein, it will be great and honourable in your ſight, as it is in the ſight of God.

Infer. 2. The law is no loſer, in that life and ſalvation are beſtowed on believers in Chriſt. It is ſo far from being made void through faith, that it is eſtabliſhed thereby, as the apoſtle witneſſeth, Rom. iii. 31. God would never diſpenſe his pardons at the expence of the honour of his law; nor declare one righteous, without the righteouſneſs of the law being fulfilled, either by him, or in him by another, Rom. viii. 4. Wherefore, life and ſalvation being deſigned for the elect, the law's whole accounts of all it had to charge on them for life, were taken in; and an infallible method was laid down for clearing them, the burden of the payment being transferred on Chriſt their Surety. By this exchange of perſons the law had no loſs. Nay, it was more for the honour of the law, that he was made under it, and ſatisfied it, in virtue of the claim it had upon him by the ſecond covenant, than if they, being mere creatures, had ſatisfied it in all points. But the truth is, they being ſinners, could never by any means have fully ſatisfied it; though it had eternally purſued them, and exacted of them, it would never have had enough from them; whereas now, by Chriſt's taking their debt on him, it was paid to the utmoſt farthing.

Inf. 3. Faith hath a broad and firm bottom to ſtand on before the Lord. The believer hath a ſtrong plea for life and ſalvation, which cannot miſcarry; namely, the condition of the covenant fulfilled by Jeſus Chriſt, even all righteouſneſs; ‘ Having therefore, brethren, boldneſs to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus; let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of the faith,’ Heb. x. 19—22. The broken boards of uncovenanted mercy, and mens own works, which preſumption fixeth upon, cannot but fail, ſince the law admits no life for a ſinner on theſe grounds. But foraſmuch as there is a gift of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs proclaimed in the goſpel by the authority of heaven, he who by faith receiveth that gift, and makes the ſame his only plea before the Lord, cannot miſs of ſalvation: Rom. v. 17. ‘ They which receive (Gr. the) abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt;’ where the abundance mentioned, relates not to different degrees of the grace or gift, but to the offence, as appears from ver. 20.; As if he had ſaid, “ Who receive the grace and gift of righteouſneſs which abound beyond Adam's offence, ſaving them out of the gulph of ruin it plunged them into”. Faith uniting a ſinner to Chriſt the head of the ſecond covenant, makes him partaker of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, as really as ever his covenant-relation to Adam made him partaker of his guilt. So having all that Chriſt was, did, or ſuffered, for fulfilling the condition of the ſecond covenant, to plead for life and ſalvation; it is not poſſible the claim can miſcarry, juſtice as well as mercy befriending the plea of faith, as a righteous thing with God, 2 Theſſ. i. 6. 7.

Infer. 4. Laſtly, All who are in Chriſt the head of the covenant of grace, and ſo brought into it perſonally, are inherently righteous, or holy. For likeas though Adam alone did perſonally break the firſt covenant by the all-ruining offence, yet they to whom his guilt is imputed, do thereupon become inherently ſinful, through the corruption of nature conveyed to them from him; ſo, howbeit Chriſt alone did perform the condition of the ſecond covenant, yet thoſe to whom his righteouſneſs is imputed, do thereupon become inherently righteous, through inherent grace communicate to them from him by the Spirit. So teacheth the apoſtle in the forecited paſſage, Rom. v. 17. ‘ For if by one man's offence, death reigned by one; much more they which receive the abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt.” How did death reign by Adam's offence? Not only in point of guilt, whereby his poſterity were bound over to deſtruction; but alſo in point of their being dead to all good, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins: therefore the receivers of the gift of righteouſneſs muſt thereby be brought to reign in life, not only legally in juſtification, but alſo morally in ſanctification, begun here, and perfected hereafter.

Accordingly, anſwerable to the three parts of the condition of the covenant of grace, undertaken and performed by the ſecond Adam, to wit, holineſs of nature, righteouſneſs of life, and ſatisfaction for ſin; there are three characters to be found in all capable ſubjects, who being perſonally brought into the covenant, have the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon them, and imputed to them.

Char. 1. They are all born again, and ſo made partakers of a new and holy nature: 2 Cor. v. 17. ‘ Therefore,’ (namely, ſince he died for all, verſe 15.) ‘ if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature.’ Chriſt's being born holy, ſecured a holy new birth to them in him: ſo they are all new creatures, ‘ created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works,’ Eph. ii. 10. new made in Chriſt, as ſure as they were marred in Adam. And how can it be otherwiſe? Can a man be ingrafted in the true vine, and not partake of the ſap and juice of the ſtock, that is, the Spirit and grace of Chriſt? No, ſure; ‘ If any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his,” Rom. viii. 9. Or, can the Spirit and grace of Chriſt be in any, and yet no change made on their nature, but it ſtill remain unrenewed? No, indeed: ‘ If Chriſt be in you, the body is dead, becauſe of ſin: but the ſpirit is life, becauſe of righteouſneſs,’ verſ. 10. Conſider this, ye who pretend to rely on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, but are very eaſy in this point, whether ye are born again, or not; whether there is a holy nature derived from Chriſt to you, or not. Believe it, Sirs, if it be not ſo, ye have no ſaving intereſt, part, nor lot in Chriſt's righteouſneſs. Ye may on as good grounds pretend, that howbeit the guilt of Adam's ſin was imputed to you, yet there was no corrupt nature derived from him to you; as pretend, that Chriſt's righteouſneſs is imputed to you, while ye are not born again, your nature is not changed, by the communication of ſanctifying grace from Chriſt, unto you. Deceive not yourſelves; ye muſt be regenerate, elſe ye will periſh: for ‘ except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God,’ 1 John iii. 3.

Char. 2. They are all righteous and holy in their lives: Iſ. lx. 21. ‘ Thy people alſo ſhall be all righteous.’ Chap. lxii. 12. ‘ And they ſhall call them the holy people.’ How did ungodlineſs, unrighteouſneſs, and profanity, enter into the world, the which are now overflowing all banks? Was it not by one man, by Adam's ſin, which is imputed to all mankind? Rom. v. 12. Then be ſure, if the ſecond Adam's righteouſneſs be imputed to you, holineſs of life will come along with it: 1 Cor. vi. 11. ‘ But ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified.’ Does ſanctification then go before juſtification? No: but it hath a neceſſary dependance on juſtification, and evidenceth it to the world, and to one's own conſcience. Unjuſtified, unſanctified; and unſanctified, unjuſtified. Did our bleſſed Saviour come into the world, and in our nature lead a holy righteous life, that men might live as they liſt? Nay, quite the contrary; even ‘ that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him, all the days of our life,’ Luke i. 74. 75. If then Chriſt lived for you, aſſuredly ye ſhall live for him. Conſider this, ye who are far from righteouſneſs of life, living in the neglect of the duties either of the firſt or ſecond table, or both. Your ungodly and unrighteous life declares you to be yet in your ſins, under the curſe, and far from righteouſneſs imputed. There is indeed a righteouſneſs of Chriſt; but alas it is not upon you: ye are naked for all it, and ſtand expoſed to revenging wrath.

Char. 3. The old man is crucified in them all: Gal. v. 24. ‘ They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts.’ Therefore I ſay to you in the words of the apoſtle, Rom. viii. 13. ‘ If ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.’ When our Saviour hung on the croſs, he hung there as repreſentative of all that are his, with all their ſins on him by imputation, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed in his ſufferings for it, Rom. vi. 6. He hung there as the efficient meritorious cauſe of their mortification, that by his death he might deſtroy the power of death in them; which appears not in any thing more, than in living luſts preying on their ſouls: Hoſ. xiii. 14. 'I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues.' See Tit. ii. 14. Rom. vi. 6. 7. Eph. v. 25. 26. And he hung there as the exemplary cauſe of their mortification; ſo that all who are his, and have ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, are likewiſe crucified, and die to ſin, after his crucifixion and death; being crucified with him, Gal. ii. 20. planted together (with him) in the likeneſs of his death, Rom. vi. 5. the fellowſhip of his ſufferings making them conformable unto his death, Philip. iii. 10. Will ye then live after the fleſh, not wreſtling againſt, but fulfilling the luſts thereof; living in ſin and to ſin, inſtead of being mortified to it; and yet pretend that the ſatisfaction of Chriſt is imputed to you for righteouſneſs? Truly you may on as good grounds ſay, that the blood of Chriſt ſhed for you hath proven ineffectual; and that he hath ſo far miſſed of his aim and deſign in ſuffering for you: or that he died for you, that you might live in your ſin without danger. Theſe would make a blaſphemous profeſſion. Accordingly, your preſumptuous ſinful life and practice, is a courſe of practical blaſphemy againſt the Son of God, making him the miniſter of ſin; and evidenceth your pretenſions to the imputation of his ſatisfaction to be altogether vain. Nay of a truth, if ye have any ſaving intereſt in the death of Chriſt, your old man is crucified with him, Rom. vi. 6. and ye are dead with him, verſ. 8. dead with him to ſin, to the world and to the law.

(1.) If ye have a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt's death, ye are dead with him to ſin: Rom. vi. 10. 'In that he died, he died unto ſin once.' Verſe 11. 'Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves to be dead indeed unto ſin.' While our Lord Jeſus lived in the world, the ſins of all the elect, as to the guilt of them, hung about him, and made him a man of ſorrows all along; when he was upon the croſs, they wrought upon him moſt furiouſly, ſtinging him to the very ſoul, till they killed him, and got him laid in the grave. Then they had done their utmoſt againſt him, they could do no more. So dying for ſin, he died unto it, he was delivered from it; and in his reſurrection he ſhook them all off, as Paul ſhook the viper off his hand into the fire, and felt no harm; riſing out of the grave, even as he will appear the ſecond time, without ſin. Wherefore, if ye do indeed know the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, if you really have fellowſhip with him in them, death will have made its way from Chriſt the head unto you as his members; his death unto ſin cannot miſs to work your death unto it alſo. If you are dead indeed with Chriſt, as ingrafted into him, ſin hath got its death's wounds in you; the bond that knit your hearts and your luſts together, is looſed; and ye will be ſhaking off the viperous brood of them into the fire, in the daily practice of mortification. But if ye are not dead, but ſtill living unto ſin, it is an infallible evidence ye are none of the members of Chriſt: Rom. vi. 2. 'How ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein?' Ver. 3. 'Know ye not, that ſo many of us as were baptized into Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into his death?'

(2.) If ye have a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt's death, ye are dead with him to the world: Col. iii. 1. 'If ye then be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek thoſe things which are above.'. Verſ. 3. 'For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Chriſt in God.' The world hated him, and uſed him very unkindly while he was in it; and when he died he parted with it for good and all, John xvii. 11. 'Now I am no more in the world—I come to thee.' The quieteſt lodging that ever the world allowed him in it, was a grave: and coming out from thence, he never ſlept another night in it. He tarried indeed forty days in it after that: as many days as the Iſraelites years in the wilderneſs: the former an exemplar, the latter a type of the Chriſtian life, from converſion till the removal into the other world; nevertheleſs he was dead to the world ſtill: he converſed now and then with his own, but no more with the world. Now, if ye are his, ye are dead with him unto the world too, in virtue of his death; being crucified unto it, Gal. vi. 14. Union with Chriſt by faith lays ſinners down in death, in Chriſt's grave; and ſo ſeparates between them and the world for ever: and withal, it raiſeth them up again with Chriſt into a quite new manner of life; no more that manner of life which they lived before their union with him, than that which Chriſt lived after his reſurrection, was the manner of life he lived before his death: Rom. vi. 4. 'We are buried with him by baptiſm unto death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.' If your title to heaven is indeed ſettled, by your receiving the atonement, now is your forty days before your aſcenſion into it; now are ye no more of the world, although ye be in it: your treaſure and heart are no more there. Ye are no more indwellers in it, as natives: but travellers through it, as ſtrangers, coming up from the wilderneſs, leaning on the beloved, Cant. iii. 5.

(3.) If ye have a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt's death, ye are dead with him to the law alſo: Gal. ii. 19. 'I through the law am dead to the law.' Verſ. 20. 'I am crucified with Chriſt.' Our Lord Jeſus took on our nature to ſatisfy the law therein: the whole courſe of his life was a courſe of his obedience to it, for life and ſalvation to us; and he ſuffered to ſatisfy it in what of that kind it had to demand, for that effect: in a word, he was born to the law, he lived to the law, and he died to the law: namely, for to clear accounts with it, to ſatisfy it fully, and get life and ſalvation for us with its good leave. He was made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, Gal. iv. 4. 5. And when once it fell upon him, it never left exacting of him, till it had got the utmoſt farthing, and he was quite free with it, as dead to it, Rom. vii. 4. In token whereof he got up the bond, blotted it out, yea, rent it in pieces, nailing it to his croſs, Col. ii. 14.

Now, Chriſt became dead to it, dying to it in his death on the croſs; ſo that the holineſs and righteouſneſs of the man Chriſt did thereafter no more run in the channel in which it had run before, namely, from the womb to his grave; that is to ſay, it was no more, and ſhall be no more for ever, obedience performed to the law for life and ſalvation; theſe having been completely gained and ſecured by the obedience he gave it from the womb to the grave. Wherefore, my brethren, if ye are his, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body of Chriſt, which became dead to it on the croſs, Rom. vii. 4. As ye will not be libertines in your life and practice, being dead to ſin and the world with Chriſt; ſo ye will not be legaliſts in your life and practice neither, being alſo dead with him to the law as a covenant of works. Your obedience will run in another channel than it did before your union with Chriſt, even in the channel of the goſpel. Ye will ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, in faith and love. The frowns of a merciful Father will be a terror to you to fright you from ſin; love and gratitude will prompt you to obedience. The grieving of the Spirit of a Saviour will be a ſpring of ſorrow to you; and his atoning blood and perfect righteouſneſs will be the ſpring-head of all your comfort before the Lord; your good works but ſtreams thereof, as they evidence your ſaving intereſt in theſe, are accepted through them, and glorify God your Saviour. Ye will not continue to ſerve in the oldneſs of the letter, as before; at what time the law was the ſpring of all the obedience ye performed; fear of the puniſhment of hell for your ſins, and hope of the reward of heaven's happineſs for your duties; being the weights that made you go, tho' for them you often ſtopped: your ſorrows ſpringing from your ill works, under the influence of the law allenarly; and your comforts from your good works under the ſame influence; ye being alive to the law, and dead to Chriſt, Rom. vii. 6. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the latter. If by faith you wholly rely on Chriſt's righteouſneſs, the holineſs of his nature, the righteouſneſs of his life, and his ſatisfaction for ſin; how is it poſſible but ye muſt be dead to the law? for the law is not of faith, Gal. iii. 12. But if you perform your obedience for life and ſalvation, looking for acceptance with God on the account of your works, you go in a way directly oppoſite to the way of faith, and either altogether reject Chriſt's ſatisfying of the law, or elſe impute imperfection unto his payment of the bond. 'And Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, whoſoever of 'of you are juſtified by the law; ye are fallen from grace,' Gal. v. 4.

Thus far of the firſt part of the covenant, namely, the conditionary part.

The Second Part of the Covenant, namely, the PROMISSORY Part.

IN every covenant, whether it be a proper, or improper covenant, there is a promiſe. And in a proper covenant, the promiſſory part anſwers to the conditionary part, being an obligation which the party-covenanter to whom the condition is performed, comes under, for ſome benefit to be beſtowed in view of the performance of the condition. This is the promiſe of a proper covenant, binding on him who makes it, providing the party contracting with him do his part. In every ſuch caſe, where the thing is lawful and poſſible, it binds in point of truth and faithfulneſs, by virtue of the compact: in ſome caſes it binds alſo, in point of remunerative juſtice: to wit, where the condition performed is properly equivalent to the benefit promiſed.

The covenant of grace, made between God and Chriſt as the head and repreſentative of his ſpiritual ſeed, is a proper covenant. And in it there is a promiſſory part, anſwering to the conditionary part already explained: and it is God's part of the covenant, as the other was the Mediator's. Thereby God hath obliged himſelf, to make the benefits therein condeſcended on forthcoming, upon the conſideration of the performing of the condition. And forasmuch as the condition performed by Chriſt, was ſtrictly meritorious of the benefit promiſed; the promiſes are binding and firm, not only in reſpect of the truth and faithfulneſs, but alſo in reſpect of the juſtice of God.

Of what weight and importance the promiſſory part of the covenant is, will appear by the following conſiderations.

1. The covenant hath its name from this part of it, being called the covenants of promiſe, Eph. ii. 12. Covenants, becauſe, though ſtill in itſelf but one covenant, yet from its firſt promulgation in paradiſe, it was often renewed, as to Abraham, Jacob, the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and to David; and as oft as it was renewed, it was renewed in a promiſe. The firſt covenant had a promiſe of life; yet it is not called a covenant of promiſe: on the contrary, the law, or that covenant, is oppoſed to the promiſe: though not in its uſe, yet in its nature, Gal. iii. 18. 'If the inheritance be of the law, 'it is no more of promiſe.' For the law's promiſe of life was ſuſpended on the condition of works, to be performed by men themſelves; whereas in the ſecond covenant, life and ſalvation are promiſed to ſinners freely, for Chriſt's ſake, without reſpect to any work of theirs as the condition thereof.'

2. The covenant is deſcribed to us, by the Holy Ghoſt, as a cluſter of free promiſes of grace and glory to poor ſinners, in which no mention is made of any condition: Heb. viii. 10. 'This is the covenant--I will 'put my laws into their mind, and write them in their 'hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they ſhall 'be to me a people.' Verſe 11. 'And they ſhall not 'teach every man his neighbour, and every man his 'brother, ſaying, Know the Lord; for all ſhall know 'me, from the leaſt to the greateſt.' Verſe 12. 'For I 'will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins 'and their iniquities will I remember no more.' Theſe promiſes with their condition, having been propoſed to, and accepted by Chriſt as ſecond Adam, and the condition performed by him; the covenant comes natively, in the goſpel, to be ſet before us in them, to be by us received and embraced in and through Chriſt, by faith. Thus the promiſes are the covenant, by way of eminency; even God's covenant, wherein he hath bound himſelf to perform his part, as the Mediator hath already performed his. And in this ſenſe, indeed, the covenant of grace is not conditional, but conſiſts of abſolute promiſes; that is, promiſes become abſolute, through the condition thereof actually performed already; but being conſidered in its full latitude, and in reſpect of Chriſt the covenant, and all the promiſes thereof, are properly and ſtrictly conditional.

3. The promiſes of the covenant are the purchaſe of the blood of Chriſt; the fruit of his fulfilling all righteouſneſs, in his birth, life, and death. As the curſe came by the demerit of Adam's ſin; ſo the promiſes are owing to the merit of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; they are the new teſtament in his blood, 1 Cor. xi. 25. From the promiſe of the bread and water, (Iſa. xxxiii. 16.) to the promiſe of a ſeat with him on his throne, (Rev. iii. 21.) they are all the purchaſe of his meritorious obedience to the death. Juſtly are they called exceeding precious promiſes, 2 Pet. i. 4. as being the price of his blood. Of what unſpeakable weight and importance muſt they be, that coſt ſuch a price, between the Father and his own Son!

4. The great deſign and end of the covenant is accompliſhed in the performing of the promiſſory part thereof; and that is, the glory of God, and the ſalvation of ſinners. The great glory to God, and grace to ſinners, ſpringing up from the whole of the covenant, meet together here, namely, in the accompliſhment of the promiſes, as all the rivers meet together in the ſea. The promiſes were the great thing the parties-contractors had in view, when they entered into the covenant: it was room for them the Father ſought by his propoſal of the covenant; and that was what the Son intended to purchaſe, by his fulfilling the condition. The condition of the covenant is the foundation of the promiſes; the promiſes the glorious ſuperſtructure reared upon that coſtly foundation. The adminiſtration of the covenant, is ſubſervient to the accompliſhment of the promiſes. The condition of the covenant was performed on earth, in the ſpace of about thirty-three years; the promiſes have been a-performing more than five thouſand years on earth, and will be a performing in heaven, through the ages of eternity.

5. The happineſs and comfort of all the elect, for time and eternity, depends upon the promiſes of the covenant. What keeps unconverted elect perſons from dying in that ſtate, and ſo dropping down to hell, but the promiſe of the covenant? What makes grace overtake them, when they are fleeing from it, but the promiſe? What preſerves grace in them, like a ſpark of fire in an ocean, that it is not extinguiſhed, but the promiſe? And what is their ſecurity and comfort in the face of death, but the ſame promiſe? 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

6. The glory of the man Chriſt, as Mediator, depends on the promiſe of the covenant. This was the ſecurity in the faith of which he lived on earth, about the ſpace of thirty-three years, in a very low condition; and in the end died an ignominious death: Pſal. xxii. 4. 'Our 'fathers truſted in thee: they truſted, and thou didſt de'liver them.' He paid the price of the redemption of ſinners, while as yet many of the redeemed were not born, nay nor as yet are: and ſeveral of them embrewed their hands in his blood: but he reſted on the promiſe of the covenant. He pleaded it when he was juſt entering into the ſwelling waves of death, where he was like Jonah, to be ſwallowed up. John xvii. 5. Now, O Father, glorify me with thyſelf. And in the faith of the accompliſhment of the promiſe, he completed his performance of the condition: for the joy that was yet before him in the promiſe, he endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, Heb xii. 2.

7. Laſtly, God hath ſworn the promiſe of the covenant; 'I have made a covenant with my choſen: I have ſworn unto David my ſervant.' The apoſtle tells us, that 'God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath,' Heb. vi. 17. A tender man will not ſwear a promiſe, but in a matter of weight. Of what unſpeakable weight and importance then muſt the promiſe of the covenant be, which the God of truth hath confirmed with his oath.

Now, for clearing of this part of the covenant, we ſhall, 1. Conſider the promiſes in general; and, 2. Take a more particular view of them.

Of the promiſes in general.

AS to the promiſes in general, two things are to be inquired into: 1. What are the general kinds of them? and, 2. To whom they are made?

I. As to the general kinds of the promiſes; conſidering the parties on whom the promiſes of the covenant of grace have their direct and immediate effect, they appear to be of two general kinds.

1. Some of them have their direct and immediate effect on Chriſt himſelf, the head of the covenant; ſuch as the promiſe of aſſiſtance in his work, and the promiſe of a name above every name. So in the firſt covenant, there were promiſes which were to have their direct and immediate effect on Adam himſelf, and looked not, but mediately and indirectly, to his poſterity; ſuch of them, at leaſt, as ſhould have lived after the complete fulfilling of the condition of that covenant; namely, the promiſes of natural life continued in vigour and comfort, and of ſpiritual life continued in favour and fellowſhip with God, during the courſe of his probationary obedience.

2. Others of them have their direct and immediate effect on Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, comprehended with him in the covenant; ſuch as the promiſes of regeneration, of the new heart, and cleanſing from the defilement of ſin. So in the firſt Adam's covenant, the promiſe of life contained a promiſe of the holy conception and birth of his natural ſeed: in reſpect of which, the promiſe would have had its direct and immediate effect, not on Adam himſelf, but on his poſterity.

II. The next thing to be conſidered is, To whom they were made? And we may take up this point in two things.

Firſt, The promiſes of the firſt ſort, namely, thoſe having their direct and immediate effect on the perſon of Chriſt, were made to Chriſt himſelf. Of this no doubt can be moved. And they were made to him as the head of the covenant, the ſecond Adam, the repreſentative of his ſeed. This appears from our text, wherein he is called the Choſen, the head-elect, and repreſentative of the election, David, God's ſervant; in which capacity the covenant was cut off or made, to him, by the Father. It is evident, that all the promiſes of aſſiſtance in his work, and of his ſubſequent reward, were made to him in view of his performance of the condition; and therefore, ſince he performed the condition, as head of the covenant, ſecond Adam, and repreſentative of his ſeed, theſe promiſes were made to him in that capacity.

The promiſes of this kind then were made to Chriſt only. And that was the peculiar honour put upon the head of the covenant, in the promiſſory part; as it was his peculiar burden to fulfil the conditionary part. So he hath the name which is above every name, and is anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows. In the election, whereof he is the head, he ſhines above the reſt, as the ſun in his meridian brightneſs, above the twinkling ſtars. He is the Benjamin at God's table with his brethren, whoſe meſs of promiſes in the covenant is five times ſo much as any of theirs; the Joſeph who was ſeparate from his brethren, in fulfilling the condition of the covenant, and hath a double portion in the promiſed land made over to him, as the firſt born amongſt many brethren.

Nevertheleſs, as the honour and proſperity of the head redound to the members, their intereſt, in reſpect of their union and communion, being a joint intereſt; ſo the glory and honour ſettled on Chriſt by promiſe, are a ſpring of grace and glory to his members, an enriching treaſure, their glory and crown. He is that head of gold, which puts a glory on the body: and the ointment poured upon the head, cannot miſs to go down to the ſkirts of his garments. And hence is, (1.) The continual cry of prayer by the whole company of the faithful, for the accompliſhing of the promiſes made to the Mediator, Pſal. lxxii. 15. 'Prayer alſo ſhall be made for him continually.' It is evident that Pſalm concerns the Meſſias. But prayer made continually for Chriſt! how can that be? Why, till the world's end, that cry in prayer ſhall never ceaſe among the faithful, Thy kingdom come, Matth. vi. 10. It began with Adam's embracing the promiſe by faith, was carried on all along the time of the Old Teſtament: and now it hath been ſounding in the New Teſtament church more than ſixteen hundred years, and ſhall not ceaſe until the conſummation of all things. (2.) Hence alſo the joyful acclamations of praiſe, by the ſame company, for the accompliſhment of promiſes to the Mediator. Whenſoever there appears any ſuch accompliſhment made, it is matter of joy to the church; and the more there appears of it, the joy is the more increaſed. Thus the church hath a ſong upon the fulfilling of the promiſe of the gathering of the nations unto him, Iſa. xii. 1.; of his victory over Antichriſt, Rev. xix. 1.; of the calling of the Jews, verſe 6. And when, the end being come, all the promiſes made to him ſhall be accompliſhed, that will afford them an everlaſting ſong of praiſe.

Secondly, The promiſes of the other ſort, namely, thoſe having their direct immediate effect on the elect, are made to Chriſt primarily, and then to them ſecondarily: firſt, to the head; then, to the members, through him.

1. The promiſes having their immediate effect on the elect, are made to Chriſt immediately, primarily, and chiefly. God hath in the covenant promiſed grace and glory, all that pertains to life and godlineſs, unto a ſelect company of mankind: but the promiſe of all theſe was firſt and chiefly made to Chriſt their head; ſo that he hath not only an intereſt in theſe promiſes, but the chief intereſt in them. This appears by ſeveral documents from the word of God.

1ſt, The Apoſtle teſtifies, that the promiſes were made to the ſeed, which is Chriſt, Gal. iii. 16. And the promiſes he ſpeaks of, are the promiſe of the bleſſing, of the Spirit, ver. 14.; of the inheritance, ver. 18.; the promiſes received through faith, ver. 14. Even theſe are made to Chriſt the head of the body. This is confirmed by thoſe paſſages which ſhew God's covenant to be made with Chriſt, and in the mean time explain it by a promiſe of the happineſs of his ſeed, Pſal. lxxxix. 3. with 4. ver. 28. and 29. ver. 35. and 36. And what is more natural, than to make a promiſe to a father in favour of his children?

2dly, Our Lord Jeſus is conſtitute the heir of all things, (Heb. i. 2.) in virtue of the promiſe of the covenant, 'I will make him my firſt-born,' Pſal. lxxxix. 27. Now, if Chriſt, as the ſecond Adam be heir of all things, by his Father's promiſe, the promiſes of all things are made to him; and, conſequently, the promiſe of eternal life, comprehending all happineſs to his people, is made to him in the firſt place. So Chriſt is the firſt and chief heir; and they are ſecondary heirs in and through him. Hence, in view of the great promiſe of the covenant, 'I ‘ will be their God,’ our Saviour hath that endearing expreſſion, “ I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, ‘ and to my God and your God,’ John xx. 17. Compare Rom. viii. 17. ‘ And if children, then heirs; heirs ‘ of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt.’

3dly, As in the covenant of works, God promiſed life to Adam's natural ſeed, upon condition of his perfect obedience; which is evident from death's coming on them by his diſobedience: ſo in the covenant of grace, he hath promiſed life to Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, upon condition of his obedience; for ‘ as in Adam all die, even ſo in ‘ Chriſt ſhall all be made alive,’ 1 Cor. xv. 22. But that promiſe of life for Adam's natural ſeed, was primarily made to Adam himſelf, while as yet none of them were in being; and they were to partake of it only through him, to whom it was made as their repreſentative. Therefore the promiſe of life to Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, was made chiefly to Chriſt himſelf; and to them only in and through him. Accordingly we are told, that promiſe of eternal life, upon which the hope of believers is built, was made before the world began, Tit. i. 2. And to whom could it be then made immediately and primarily, but to Chriſt the head of the covenant?

Laſtly, Theſe promiſes contain a part of the reward made over in the covenant to Jeſus Chriſt, ‘ who for the ‘ joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, Heb. xii. 2. A great part of which joy lay here; ‘ He ſhall ‘ ſee his ſeed—the travel of his ſoul,’ Iſa. liii. 10. 11. All of theſe promiſes were the price of his blood to him, the purchaſe of his obedience and death: therefore called the new teſtament in his blood. To whom could the reward be chiefly promiſed, but to him who performed the condition, wrought the work? Unto him therefore it was of debt, namely, in virtue of the promiſe, which made it due to him upon his performing of the condition. The bleſſings of the covenant which came on the elect, are certainly to be conſidered as a reward to Chriſt, as well as a free gift to them. And conſidering them in the firſt of theſe views, there is no more abſurdity in the promiſe of the new hearts being made to Chriſt, than in a phyſician's making a promiſe to a father to cure his lame child, when he hath given him ſecurity for his fees; in which caſe the child cannot look on the promiſes made to himſelf at all, but ſecondarily through his father, who was the party-contractor.

This is a point of conſiderable weight, and ſerves both to inform our mind, and direct our practice; for the following inferences from it are native.

(1.) The promiſes of the covenant are not made to the believer's good works; but to Chriſt's works, and to the working believer in him. Unto the believer they are abſolutely free, and not of debt; and therefore are not made to his works; for ‘ to him that worketh is the ‘ reward not reckoned of grace but of debt, Rom. vi. 4. There is indeed a comely order of the promiſes, whereby the promiſes of purity of heart to the elect, goes before the promiſe of their ſeeing God in heaven; the promiſe of humiliation, before that of lifting up: whereupon it is declared in the adminiſtration of the covenant, that, the pure in heart ſhall ſee God: that they who humble themſelves, ſhall be lifted up: and thus godlineſs hath promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. iv. 8. But the foundation of all theſe promiſes, whether of things that are our duty, or our privilege, what they all depend upon as their proper condition, is the obedience of Chriſt allenarly; they being all made to him in the firſt place, the latter as well as the former.

(2.) The firſt grace whereby the dead elect are quickened, and made to believe and unite with Chriſt, is conveyed to them in the channel of a promiſe, as well as the grace following faith; Ezek. xxxvi. 27. ‘ I will put ‘ my ſpirit within you.’ For although in their natural eſtate they are not capable of a believing pleading of the promiſe; nor have they, at that time, a perſonal ſaving intereſt in the promiſes: yet the Lord Jeſus knoweth them that are his, and for whom the promiſes were made to him: and having the adminiſtration of the covenant in his own hand, he cannot fail of ſeeing to the accompliſhing of them, in the appointed time. Howbeit they, being dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, cannot conſult their own intereſt; yet he having the chief intereſt in the promiſes, will not neglect his own cauſe, but will ſee them exactly accompliſhed.

(3.) The way to be perſonally and ſavingly intereſted in the promiſes, for time and eternity, is to unite with Chriſt by faith; ‘ for all the promiſes of God in him are ‘ yea, and in him amen,’ 2 Cor. i. 20. Would ye fain know how the great and precious promiſes may become yours? Why, they are all his; they are all made to him. Take him, and they are yours: even as he who marries the heireſs, hath a right to her portion, and all the bills and bonds wherein any of it is contained.

(4.) When through deadneſs and darkneſs of ſpirit, whether ariſing from ſome conſcience-waſting guilt, or otherwiſe, your faith of the promiſe is failed, and you cannot again faſten your gripe upon it, becauſe you can ſee no good in you; embrace Chriſt again, and the promiſe in him, notwithſtanding of your ſeen and felt ſinfulneſs and utter unworthineſs; and by no means ſtand off from the promiſe untill you be in better caſe; but ſay with the Pſalmiſt, ‘ Iniquities prevail againſt me: ‘ as for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them away,’ Pſal. lxv. 3. For as the goodneſs in you was not the ground of the promiſe; ſo the evil in you doth not overturn it, and make it of none effect. The foundation of the promiſe ſtands ſure in Chriſt, whatever alterations the frame and caſe of a believer's ſpirit do undergo. It is eſtabliſhed as the moon, (Pſal. lxxxix. 37.) which is ſtill the ſame in itſelf, notwithſtanding of the variety of its appearances to our ſight, one while waxing, at another time waning.

(5.) The true way to plead the promiſes, is to come to God in the name of Chriſt, and plead the fulfilling of them to us for his ſake: John xvi. 23. ‘ Whatſoever ‘ ye ſhall aſk the Father in my name, he will give it you.’ Matth. xxi. 22. ‘ Believing, ye ſhall receive.’ Dan. ix. 17. ‘ O our God, cauſe thy face to ſhine upon thy ſanctuary that is deſolate, for the Lord's ſake.’ To aſk in Chriſt's name, believing, is to preſent one's ſelf before the Lord, as a member of Chriſt, joined and cleaving to him offered to us in the goſpel; and for the ſake of the head, to implore the free favour of the promiſe, relying on his merit for obtaining it. This is the import of that paſſage, Gen. xii. 3. as it relates to Chriſt, ‘ In ‘ thee ſhall all families of the earth’ (to wit, that ſhall be bleſſed) ‘ be bleſſed;’ or rather, as the original word properly ſignifies, be made to kneel, namely, to receive the bleſſing; all that are bleſſed, being bleſſed in Chriſt, Eph. i. 3. compare Phil. ii. 10. This is the method in which God diſpenſeth the favours of his promiſe: 2 Sam. vii. 21. ‘ For thy word's ſake, and according to ‘ thine own heart, haſt thou done all theſe great things.’ Compare 1 Chron. xvii. 19. ‘ For thy ſervant's ſake, and ‘ according to thine own heart, haſt thou done all this ‘ greatneſs;’ i. e. for the ſake of the Word, thy Servant, the Meſſias: for as both theſe paſſages are a narration of the very ſame thing, there is no manner of difference at all between them in the original, ſave that where the one hath thy word, the other hath thy ſervant.

(6.) Believers may hereby ſtrengthen their faith of the accompliſhment of the promiſes to them. Whatever eaſy work ſome have, in maintaining their preſumptuous hopes of the mercy of God to eternal life; while, not ſeeing the heinous nature of their ſin, they build their hopes on ſomething in themſelves, rather than upon the free promiſe of the covenant in Chriſt Jeſus; yet unto the ſerious godly, no ſmall difficulty in believing doth ariſe, from the joint view of the greatneſs and preciouſneſs of the promiſes, and the greatneſs of their ſins and of their unworthineſs. Hence they are ready to ſay, Can ever ſuch promiſes be made out to ſuch an one as I am? And truly there is nothing in them that can furniſh an anſwer to this grave caſe. But here is a ſatisfying anſwer to it: The promiſes are all of them made to Chriſt chiefly, even to him who purchaſed them with his blood; and juſtice requires that they be performed to him; and being performed to him, they muſt needs have their effect on all his members, for whom, becauſe in themſelves unworthy, he merited them. So the ſoul may ſay, However unworthy I am, yet he is worthy for whom God ſhould do this.

2. The promiſes having their immediate effect on the elect, are made to themſelves ſecondarily, in and through Chriſt. As he hath the fundamental and chief intereſt in them, ſo they have a derived intereſt in them through him. There was from eternity a legal union between Chriſt and them in the covenant; whereby their debt became his, and the promiſes made to him became theirs. As upon the one hand, 'the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all,' Iſa. liii. 6.; ſo, on the other hand, 'grace was given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began,' 2 Tim. i. 9. In time there is a real myſtical union made between him and them, upon his taking poſſeſſion of them by his Spirit, and dwelling in them by faith. The former conſtituted a right for them unto the promiſes, in Chriſt the head; the latter veſts them with a right thereto, in their own perſons, through him; as being actual members of his body. In reſpect of the one, eternal life is ſaid to be promiſed, and grace ſaid to be given us, before the world began, Tit. i. 2. 2 Tim. i. 9.; in reſpect of the other, believers are called the heirs of promiſe, Heb. vi. 17.; partakers of his promiſe in Chriſt, Eph. iii. 6.; and the promiſe is given to them that believe, Gal. iii. 22.

Thus it appears, that theſe promiſes are made to Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, as well as to himſelf; though primarily to him as the repreſentative, on whom the fulfilling of the condition was laid; and but ſecondarily to them as the repreſented, who were to receive the benefit. And hence ariſeth another difference, namely, that, properly and ſtrictly ſpeaking, the promiſes were conditional to Chriſt, but they are abſolute and free to us: even as the promiſe of life in the firſt covenant, which was conditional to Adam, would have been abſolute to his natural ſeed, the condition once being fulfilled. Thus Chriſt's merit, and the free grace of God, meet together in the covenant: juſtice is fully ſatisfied, and grace runs freely, in that channel; the promiſes being all purchaſed at the full rate, but no part of the price advanced by us. Hence we obtain precious faith, with all other ſaving benefits, through the righteouſneſs of God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, (or rather, the righteouſneſs of our God and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt,) as the proper condition of them all, 2 Pet. i. 1. And in the mean time, God blotteth out our tranſgreſſions for his own ſake, Iſa. xliii. 25.; and all things that pertain unto life and godlineſs, are given (or gifted) unto us, 2 Pet. i. 3.

Of the promiſes peculiar to Chriſt.

Having ſpoken of the promiſes in general, we come now to take a more particular view of them; and firſt, of the promiſes peculiar to Chriſt himſelf. Theſe are many, but may all be reduced to three heads; to wit, the promiſe of aſſiſtance, of acceptance, and of reward of his work.

Firſt, Our Lord Jeſus had a promiſe of aſſiſtance in his work: Pſal. lxxxix. 21. 'Mine arm ſhall ſtrengthen 'him.' Having undertaken the work of our redemption, he had his Father's promiſe, that when it came to the ſetting to, he would ſtrengthen and uphold him in going through with it, Iſa. xlii. 1.—4. And in the faith of this covenanted aſſiſtance, he went through the hardeſt pieces thereof: chap. l. 6. 'I gave my back to 'the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the 'hair: I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting.' Ver. 7. 'For the Lord God will help me.' Accordingly, in his heavineſs in the garden, 'there appeared an angel 'unto him from heaven, ſtrengthening him,' Luke xxii. 43. And this promiſed aſſiſtance was the token of his Father's good pleaſure in, and liking of the work, while it was a-doing.

Secondly, He had a promiſe of acceptance of his work when once done; of the acceptance thereof as a full diſcharge and performance of the condition of the covenant, entitling him to the promiſed reward. Hence, in view of the ſure performance of his work, the acceptance thereof was, at his baptiſm, proclaimed by a voice from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, Matth. iii. 17. And it was renewed at his transfiguration, a little before his paſſion, Chap. xvii. 5. Unto this promiſe of acceptance thereof belongs the promiſe of his reſurrection, and of his juſtification.

1. The promiſe of his reſurrection from the dead: Pſal. xvi. 10. 'Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell; neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption', which is expounded of the reſurrection of Chriſt, Acts ii. 31. God, by raiſing Chriſt from the dead, did in effect declare his acceptance of the work by him performed. It evidenced the debt to be fully cleared, that he who laid him up in the priſon of the grave, did bring him out of it again: ſending his angel to roll away the ſtone from the door of it, and ſo to diſmiſs him legally. For thus it was agreed in the covenant, that as Chriſt ſhould give himſelf to the death, for the ſatisfaction of juſtice; ſo the Father ſhould bring him again from the dead, in reſpect of that ſatisfaction made by his blood, Heb. xiii. 20.

2. The promiſe of his juſtification: Iſa. l. 8. He is near that juſtifieth me. The accompliſhment of which is obſerved by the apoſtle, 1 Tim. iii. 16. God manifeſted in the fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt having no perſonal ſins to be pardoned, needed no perſonal juſtification: but as he was ſurety of the elect, and had the iniquities of them all laid on him, it was provided in the covenant as juſt, that the work he had undertaken being performed, he ſhould have an official juſtification. Having paid the debt, he had by promiſe a full and ample diſcharge thereof, under the hand and ſeal of Heaven. And here lies the great ſecurity of his people againſt the law's demand of ſatisfaction from them.

Laſtly, He had a promiſe of a glorious reward to be conferred on him, as the proper merit of his work done. There was a joy ſet before him in the promiſe, for which he endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, Heb. xii. 2. Never was there ſuch a work wrought: and never was there ſuch a reward promiſed. Unto it there belongs a fivefold promiſe.

1. The promiſe of a new kind of intereſt in God, as his God and Father, Pſal. lxxxix. 26. He ſhall cry unto me, Thou art my father, my God. Our Lord Jeſus had God to his father, by eternal birth-right; but there was a new relation conſtituted between God and Chriſt, as the ſecond Adam, head of the covenant, founded on his undertaking and fulfilling the covenant-condition; whereby he became heir of God as his heritage, according to that of the apoſtle, Rom. viii. 17. Heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt; namely, with Chriſt as the primary heir. For by his obedience unto death, he purchaſed the enjoyment of God, as a God and Father. I do not ſay, he purchaſed it for himſelf; the man Chriſt needed not to do that, foraſmuch as he had it, in virtue of the perſonal union of the two natures; but he purchaſed it for ſinners, who had loſt all ſaving intereſt in God, but could not be happy without it.

2. The promiſe of a glorious exaltation, to be the Father's honorary ſervant, prime Miniſter of heaven, as great adminiſtrator of the covenant: Iſa. lii. 13. 'Behold my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, he ſhall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.' Chap. xlix. 8. 'I will give thee for a covenant of the people.' In fulfilling the condition of the covenant, he took upon him the form of a bond-ſervant, and humbled himſelf even unto the death of the croſs; wherefore God alſo, according to the promiſe of the covenant, hath highly exalted him to the prime miniſtry of heaven, and given him a name as great adminiſtrator of the covenant, which is above every name; that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, Philip ii. 7. 8. 9. 10. The nature, vaſt extent, and importance of this promiſe, will afterwards be unfolded, when we come to treat of the adminiſtration of the covenant, in virtue thereof, put in the Mediator's hand.

3. The promiſe of a ſeed and offspring, numerous as the ſtars of heaven; Iſa. liii. 10. 'He ſhall ſee his ſeed.' Gen. xv. 5. 'So ſhall thy ſeed be, (namely,) as the ſtars 'of the ſky in multitude,' Heb. xi. 12. even the whole multitude of the elect, all of them to live by his death, and to bear his image, as a child doth that of his father. He conſented to ſuffer the pangs of death: but they were travailing pains, to iſſue in a numerous birth. He was as a corn of wheat to fall into the ground, and die; but the promiſe ſecured to him, on that condition, his bringing forth much fruit, John xii. 24. It is in purſuance of the accompliſhment of this promiſe the goſpel continues to be preached from age to age; foraſmuch as, in virtue thereof, as many as are ordained to eternal life, ſhall believe.

4. The promiſe of his inheriting all things, as primary heir; Pſalm lxxxix. 27. 'I will make him my firſt born.' So the apoſtle ſays, God hath appointed him heir of all things, Heb. i. 2. And Chriſt himſelf declares his being put in poſſeſſion accordingly, Matth. xi. 27. All things are delivered unto me of my Father. Thus he hath, by promiſe, ſuitable treaſures for the ſupporting of the dignity conferred on him. But of this alſo more afterwards.

5. Laſtly, The promiſe of victory and dominion over all his and his people's enemies: Pſalm lxxxix. 23. 'I 'will beat down his foes before his face.' He was to encounter with Satan, ſin, and death, in the quarrel of the deſigned heirs of glory; and no ſooner was he engaged againſt them, but the world of men begun a war with him too; but he had his Father's promiſe for victory and dominion over them all; that, howbeit he ſhould get the firſt fall, and die in the battle, yet his death ſhould be the deſtruction of Satan's dominion, ſin's power, and death's bands over his people; and that whoſoever ſhould go about to ſupport that tottering intereſt, ſhould fall under him; Pſalm. cx. 1. 'The Lord 'ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I 'make thine enemies thy footſtool.'

And thus far of the threefold promiſe peculiar to Chriſt himſelf, in the covenant.

Of the Promiſe of eternal life to the elect, conſidered in three Periods.

THE promiſes common to the elect, made in and through Chriſt unto them in the covenant, are alſo many. A particular enumeration of them I intend not, though every one of them is more precious than the gold of Ophir: but it would be profitable for ſerious Chriſtians, as they read through the Old and New Teſtament, to mark them in their Bibles, for their ſpiritual treaſure, ſtored with ſuch variety, as affords what is ſuitable for every caſe they can be in. They are all comprehended in, and may be reduced unto this one, to wit, the promiſe of eternal life: for which the two following texts may be viewed.

Tit. i. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promiſed before the world began.
1 John ii. 25. And this is the promiſe that he hath promiſed us, even eternal life.

In which words, three things for our purpoſe offer themſelves to be obſerved. 1. The great and comprehenſive promiſe of the covenant of grace, the ſum of all the promiſes therein, to ſinners; namely, the promiſe of life eternal: that is the order of the words in the original. The covenant is a covenant of life, deſigned for reſtoring dead ſinners to life: and ſo the promiſe of it is a promiſe of life. And that life is eternal. 2. The date of this promiſe, Before the world began. While as yet time was not, and the foundation of the world was not laid, it was made, and eternal life thereby ſecured to the elect. 3. The parties concerned in it. The maker of the promiſe was God that cannot lie; whoſe promiſe therefore muſt needs take effect. And, by ſpecial appropriation, it was the Father: it was he that made it: ver. 24. 'Ye alſo ſhall continue in the Son, and in 'the Father.' Ver. 25. 'And this is the promiſe that 'he hath promiſed us,' &c. The party it was made to, is, (1.) and chiefly, Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, head of the covenant: for there is no neceſſity to recede from the proper ſignification of the word here uſed, which is promiſing, to a catachreſtical one, to wit, purpoſing; ſince the promiſes were made to Chriſt, Gal. iii. 16. And he really was before the world began, and conſequently capable of having a promiſe made to him. (2.) The elect in him. He hath promiſed us, namely, us legally in him before the world began; that is, the elect who apply and plead the promiſe when they believe.

And hence ariſeth this truth, viz. The great and comprehenſive promiſe to Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, in the covenant, is the promiſe of life eternal, made from eternity to Chriſt, and then to them in him.

For opening of this promiſe of the covenant, we ſhall view it, (1.) More generally, (2.) More particularly.

I. In the general it ſpeaks two things, to wit, all true happineſs, and the everlaſtingneſs of that happineſs.

Firſt, It comprehends, as the matter thereof, all true happineſs. For life is uſed for happineſs in the holy language, 1 Sam. xxv. 6. So John iv. 50. And it is ſo uſed in the ſtile of both covenants: Rom. x. 5. 'The 'man which doth thoſe things, ſhall live' (i. e. be happy) 'by them.' Hab. ii. 4. 'The juſt ſhall live' (i. e. be 'happy) by his faith.' The damned have a life in hell that will laſte for ever: but, in the ſtile of the Holy Ghoſt, they never ſee life, they are deprived of eternal life; becauſe their life is not a happy life, but a miſerable one. It is evident from the writings of the prophets and apoſtles, that the death threatened in the covenant of works, comprehended all miſery in this world, and in the world to come; and, conſequently, that the life therein promiſed, comprehended all happineſs in time and eternity. Foraſmuch then as the life promiſed in the covenant of grace, was deſigned for retrieving the loſs ſinners ſuſtained by the fall; it muſt needs, in its comprehenſion, go as wide as the death which thereby they became liable unto. From all which we conclude, that God, in promiſing life to the elect in Chriſt, hath promiſed them all happineſs; which accordingly goes under the name of life ſimply in the ſcripture, 1 John v. 12. 'He that 'hath the Son, hath life.' And thus the covenant-life extends to all wolfare of the whole man, and to all the means by which it is compaſſed.

1. The covenant life extends to all welfare of the whole man, ſoul and body; the latter, as well as the former. And therefore from the covenant our Lord proves the reſurrection of the body againſt the Sadducees, Matth xxii. 31. 32. Though the ſoul is the principal part, it is not the only part, therein provided for. In virtue of the covenant, the body is for the Lord, and the Lord for the body: as well as the ſoul is for him, and he for it, 1 Cor. vi. 13. As the body had its ſhare in the death threatened in the firſt covenant, ſo it hath, and ſhall have its ſhare in the life promiſed in the ſecond. Since the price of the Redeemer's blood was paid for the bodies of his people, in his fulfilling the condition of the covenant: the life ſecured in the promiſe, muſt extend to them, as well as to their ſouls.

2. It extends to all the means by which that welfare is to be compaſſed, begun, advanced, and perfected, 'Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, 'or life, or death, or things preſent, or things to come; 'all are yours,' 1 Cor. iii. 22. For the ſecuring of the benefit itſelf by promiſe, ſecures all the means by which it is to be brought about. Hence the covenant deſcends even to the bread and the water, neceſſary for the ſupport of natural life, Iſa. xxxiii. 16.

Secondly, The promiſe comprehends the everlaſtingneſs of that happineſs. It is not only life that is promiſed, but life eternal, life for evermore, Pſalm cxxxiii. 3. which, from the moment it is given, ſhall never be extinguiſhed, through the ages of time and eternity. In the ſtyle of the ſcripture, eternal life is not reſtricted to the ſtate of glory in heaven. But the life communicated to a ſinner, in the firſt moment of his union with Chriſt, is eternal: it is the eternal life promiſed in the covenant, according to the ſcripture, John iii. 36. 'He 'that believeth on the Son, hath everlaſting life,' 1 John v. 11. 12. 13. Hence, from the promiſe of the covenant, The juſt ſhall live by faith, the apoſtle proves the perſeverance of the ſaints, Heb. x. 38. A plain evidence, that perſeverance in grace, in this our ſtate of imperfection, is a part of the eternal life promiſed in the covenant, as well as heaven's happineſs. And thus the covenant-life extends to that which now is, and that which is to come, 1 Tim. iv. 8.

1. It extends to the life that now is in this world. And this is that eternal life begun in the ſeveral parts thereof, with reſpect both to ſoul and body. If men meaſure happineſs by the ſmiles and frowns of common providence, no man indeed can be counted happy before death. But the ſacred oracles teach us to take our meaſures of it another way, to wit, by a perſonal ſaving intereſt in the covenant; and do pronounce them happy whoſe God is the Lord, whatever be between them and the grave, Pſal. cxliv. 15. So there is promiſed in the covenant, happineſs begun in this life, both as to ſoul and body: the happineſs of the way to the kingdom: ſalvation happily begun, and infallibly to be carried on.

2. It extends to the life that is to come in the other world. And that is the ſame eternal life conſummated and perfected, in reſpect both of ſoul and body, in heaven. There the promiſe of the covenant is to receive its full accompliſhment; of which believers now have the earneſt, which is not only a part of the things promiſed, but an aſſurance of the whole.

II. For a more particular view of the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, it may be conſidered in three periods: (1.) Before their union with Chriſt: (2.) From their union with Chriſt, untill death; and (3) From death, through eternity. Of the operation of the promiſes, in the firſt and laſt of theſe periods, we know but little; and indeed not much of it, in the middle period. For it is like a river iſſuing from a hidden ſpring, and running far under ground; then riſing above ground, and running on, till it go forth into the ocean. The hidden ſpring from whence the promiſe of eternal life to the elect iſſueth forth, is God's free grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. It runs under ground, undiſcernible even to the parties themſelves, till the moment of their union with Chriſt in effectual calling; then riſing, it runs on, as it were, above ground, in viſible ſtreams, untill death; and thereafter, it runs full and perſpicuous through the ages of eternity. We ſhall take a view of the great lines of the promiſe, in theſe its ſeveral periods.

PERIOD I.

Before union with Chriſt.

IF we conſider the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, as ſtanding in the covenant, and as accompliſhed to them, and having its effect on them, before their union with Chriſt, we may perceive two great lines in it; namely, a promiſe of their preſervation, and a promiſe of the Spirit. Of which in order.

I. The promiſe of PRESERVATION.

The promiſe of eternal life to the elect, in the covenant, comprehends a promiſe of their preſervation, till the happy moment of their ſpiritual marriage with Jeſus Chriſt, wherein they ſhall be ſettled in a ſtate of grace; Ezek. xvi. 6. 'And when I paſſed by thee, and ſaw thee 'polluted in thine own blood, I ſaid unto thee when 'thou waſt in thy blood, Live.' Heb. I ſaid to thee, live in thy blood; as ſeveral approven verſions do read it. In this illuſtrious paſſage of ſcripture is ſhewed, under the ſimilitude of an expoſed or outcaſt infant, the natural ſtate and wretched condition in which God found Iſrael, and finds all the elect; the former being a type of the latter. There is a twofold paſſing by this wretched outcaſt, and theſe at two very diſtant times, intimated by the Holy Ghoſt. The firſt, on the day ſhe was born and caſt out, ver. 4. 5. 6. The ſecond, after ſhe was grown, and become marriageable; at what time ſhe was actually married, ver. 7. 8. The former refers to the time of the elect's coming into the world in their natural ſtate, not only as born into it, but as beginning to act in it as rational creatures; the latter, to the time prefixed in the eternal purpoſe, when, by means of the law in the hands of the Spirit of bondage, their breaſts, as it were, are faſhioned, in the work of conviction; upon which enſues their ſpiritual marriage with Chriſt. But how is the out-caſt preſerved in the interval, that ſhe periſheth not in her wretched condition? Why, though no hand was laid upon her, yet a word was ſpoken, which ſecured her life in a caſe naturally deadly. At the firſt paſſing by her, in the day ſhe was born and caſt out, God ſaid to her, Live in thy blood: that is, "Notwithſtanding "that thou art lying in the open field, in thy blood, thy "navel not dreſſed, ſo that, according to the courſe of "nature, thy blood and ſpirits muſt quickly fail, and this "thy birth-day muſt be thy dying-day: yet I ſay unto "thee, Live; thou ſhalt not die in that condition, but "grow up in it, being preſerved till the happy moment of "the deſigned marriage." And this is the promiſe of the elect's preſervation in their natural ſtate. And it hath two great branches; one reſpecting their natural life; another reſpecting their ſpiritual death. The

Firſt is a promiſe of the continuation of their natural life, till ſuch time as they be made partakers of life in Chriſt Jeſus. God has ſaid it; they ſhall live, though in the blood of their natural ſtate. So it is not poſſible they ſhould die before that time, whatever dangers they are brought into; even though a thouſand ſhould fall at their ſide, and ten thouſand at their right hand; for, by the promiſe of the covenant, there is an unſeen guard about them, to defend them. It is in virtue hereof, that all along during the time they are in that ſtate, they are preſerved, whether in the womb, or coming out of it, or in all dangers of infancy, childhood, youth, or whatſoever age they arrive at therein. This is it that, ſo long as they are unconverted, doth ſo often bring them back from the gates of death; returning them into ſafety, when either by diſeaſes, or other accidents, they are paſt hope in their own eyes, and in the eyes of friends and phyſicians. Though the elect thief was, in his natural ſtate, nailed to the croſs; yet death had no power to come at him, ſo as to ſeparate his ſoul from his body, till ſuch time as he was once united to Chriſt by faith, and made partaker of a new life in him. The Second is a promiſe of keeping the grave-ſtone from off them in their ſpiritual death. The grave-ſtone is the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, the unpardonable ſin; which on whomſoever it is laid, makes their caſe, from that moment, irrecoverable, that henceforth they can never riſe from ſpiritual death to life: Mark iii. 29. He that ſhall blaſpheme againſt the Holy Ghoſt, hath NEVER forgiveneſs. But although the elect in their natural ſtate, being dead in ſin as well as others, may, through the activity of reigning and raging luſts, ſo rot in their graves, as to be moſt abominable in the eyes of God and all good men; yet becauſe of the promiſe of the covenant, it is not poſſible that that grave-ſtone ſhould be laid on them. There is an inviſible guard ſet on their ſouls, as well as on their bodies: and ſo it is infallibly prevented, as may be learned from that expreſſion of our Saviour, Matth xxiv. 24. ‘ Inſomuch that (if it were poſſible) they ſhall deceive the very elect.’ While they are Satan's captives, he may drive them to a prodigious pitch of wickedneſs. So did he with Manaſſeh, and Paul: but, as far as he had carried them, he could not carry them forward that ſtep.

This promiſe of the elect's preſervation, as it is with the reſt founded on the obedience and death of Chriſt; whereby eternal life was purchaſed for them, and conſequently theſe benefits in particular, failing which they will be ruined for ever: ſo it is akin to, and ſeems to be grafted upon the promiſe of aſſiſtance made to Chriſt in the covenant; by which a divine ſupport was inſured to him, during all the time the ſins of the elect, and the wrath of God for them, ſhould lie upon him. And at this rate, the caſe of the Head, and of the members, was jointly provided for in the covenant.

II. The promiſe of the SPIRIT.

The promiſe of eternal life to the elect, comprehends alſo a promiſe of the Spirit of life to be communicated to them, and each one of them, at the nick of time prefixed in their caſes reſpectively, in the eternal council; that is, the time appointed to be the time of love, the dawning of the day of grace to them, however long and dark their night may be. This promiſe is found, Iſ. xliv. 3. I will pour my Spirit upon thy ſeed. Ezek. xxxvi. 27. I will put my Spirit within you. The elect of God being even as the reſt of mankind, dead in ſin, through the breach of the firſt covenant, could not be recovered, but through a communication of the ſpirit of life to them; but that ſpirit they could not have from an un-atoned God. Wherefore, in the covenant, Chriſt undertook to fulfil all righteouſneſs in their name, thereby to purchaſe the Spirit for them; upon which was made the promiſe of the Spirit, the leading fruit of Chriſt's purchaſe; called therefore the Father's promiſe by way of eminency, Luke xxiv. 49. In token hereof the great outpouring of the Spirit was at Chriſt's aſcenſion; when he, as our great High Prieſt, carried in the blood of his ſacrifice into the moſt holy place not made with hands. Acts ii. For as the fire which was ſet to the incenſe on the golden altar, the altar of incenſe, was brought from off the brazen altar, the altar of burnt-offering, in the court of the temple; ſo the Spirit which cauſed dead ſinners to live, iſſueth from the croſs of Chriſt, who ſuffered without the gate.

Now, of the promiſe of the Spirit there are two chief branches; namely, the promiſe of ſpiritual moral life, and the promiſe of faith.

1. The promiſe of ſpiritual moral life, in virtue whereof the ſoul morally dead in ſin, is raiſed to life again, through the Spirit of life communicated unto it from heaven. This is the beginning, the very firſt of the eternal life itſelf promiſed in the covenant. It is the lighting of the ſacred lamp of ſpiritual life in the ſoul, which can never be extinguiſhed again, but burns for evermore thereafter. This promiſe we have, Iſa. xxvi. 19. ‘ Thy dead men ſhall live.’ And it belongs to the promiſe of the Spirit; as appears from Ezek. xxxvii. 14. ‘ And I ſhall put my Spirit in you, and ye ſhall live.’

The effect of it is the quickening of the dead ſoul, by the Spirit of Chriſt paſſively received: Eph. ii. 5. ‘ When we were dead in ſins (God, ver. 4.) hath quickened us.’ This is the ſame with the renewing in effectual calling, whereby we are enabled to embrace Jeſus Chriſt, mentioned in our Shorter Catechiſm on that queſtion. And it is fitly called by ſome divines, the firſt regeneration, agreeable to the ſtyle of the holy ſcripture: John i. 12. ‘ But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name:’ ver. 13. ‘ Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God.’ Sinners in their natural ſtate lie dead, lifeleſs, and moveleſs; they can no more believe in Chriſt, nor repent, than a dead man can ſpeak or walk: but, in virtue of the promiſe, the Spirit of life from Chriſt Jeſus, at the time appointed, enters into the dead ſoul, and quickens it; ſo that it is no more morally dead, but alive, having new ſpiritual powers put into it, that were loſt by Adam's fall.

2. The other chief branch of the promiſe of the Spirit, is the promiſe of faith; to wit, that Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed ſhall believe in him, come unto him, and receive him, by faith: Pſal. cx. 3. ‘ Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power;’ and Pſal. xxii. 31. ‘ They ſhall come.’ God hath promiſed, that, upon the ſhedding of the blood of his Son, for the ſatisfaction of juſtice, there ſhall ſpring up in the earth, after that coſtly watering, a plentiful ſeed, to the ſatisfying of his ſoul, Iſ. liii. 10. And therefore, whoever they be that believe not, all thoſe who were repreſented in the covenant, ſhall infallibly be brought to believe, as our Lord himſelf, upon the credit of his promiſe, doth declare, John vi. 37. ‘ All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me.’ Now, this alſo belongs to the promiſe of the Spirit; who is therefore called the Spirit of faith, 2 Cor. iv. 13. as being the principal efficient cauſe thereof, Zech. xii. 10.

The effect of this promiſe is actual believing, produced by the quickening ſpirit in the ſoul, immediately out of the ſpiritual life given to it by the communication of himſelf thereto; John v. 25. ‘ The dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God:’ compared with chap. i. 12, 13. 2 Cor. iv. 13. As receiving Chriſt paſſively, the ſinner that was ſpiritually dead, is quickened; ſo being quickened, he receives Chriſt actively. Chriſt comes into the dead ſoul by his ſpirit: and ſo he is paſſively received; even as one, having a power to raiſe the dead, coming into a houſe, where there is none but a dead man; none to open the door to him, none to deſire him to come in, nor to welcome him. But Chriſt being thus received, or come in, the dead ſoul is quickened, and by faith embraceth him; even as the reſtorer of the dead man to life, would immediately be embraced by him, and receive a thouſand welcomes from him, who had heard his voice, and lived. When Chriſt in the womb of his mother, entered into the houſe of Zacharias, and ſhe ſaluted Eliſabeth the mother of John the Baptiſt, he the babe in Eliſabeth's womb, leaped as at the entrance of life; ſo doth the ſoul, in actual believing, at Chriſt's coming into it by his ſpirit. As God breathed into the firſt man the breath of life, and he became a living ſoul, who was before but a lifeleſs piece of fair earth; that is, God put a ſpirit, a ſoul, into his body, which immediately ſhewed itſelf in the man's breathing at his noſtrils; ſo Jeſus Chriſt, in the time of love, puts his ſpirit into the dead ſoul, which immediately ſhews itſelf alive, by believing, receiving, and embracing him, known and diſcerned in his tranſcendent glory. And thus the union betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul is completed; Chriſt firſt apprehending the ſoul by his ſpirit; and then the ſoul thus apprehended and quickened, apprehending him again in the promiſe of the goſpel by faith.

Now, the promiſe of the Spirit, in both branches thereof, is grafted upon the promiſe of a reſurrection from the dead, made to Chriſt; and it is ſo interwoven therewith, that there is no ſeparating of them. The promiſe of his reſurrection, like the oil on Aaron's head, runs down to the ſkirts of his garments, in the promiſe of quickening his members too. Herein the ſcripture is very plain, Iſa. xxvi. 19. 'Thy dead men ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe.' Eph. ii. 5. 'Even when we were dead in ſins, hath quickened us ' together with Chriſt. Our Lord Jeſus, in the eternal covenant, became the head of a dead body, to wit, of the body of elect ſinners dead in ſin; and that to the end he might reſtore them to life. And being legally united with that body, that ſo death might have acceſs to ſpread itſelf from it unto him in due time, he had the promiſe of a reſurrection, both for himſelf and his members, made unto him. The appointed time being come, death drew together its whole forces, and made an attack upon the head of the body, which alone remained alive. It ſtung him to the heart upon the croſs, and laid him too in the duſt of death: and ſo it had them all dead together, head and members. Thus the condition of the covenant was fulfilled. Now, the promiſe comes next, in its turn, to be fulfilled; particularly, the promiſe of a reſurrection; namely, that, death having exhauſted all its force and vigour on the head, he ſhould be raiſed from the dead; and that as death had ſpread itſelf from the members into the head, ſo life in its turn ſhould ſpread itſelf from the head into the members, they, together with his dead body, ariſing. It was in virtue hereof, that the ſpirit or ſoul that animated Chriſt's body, and which he yielded up upon the croſs, (Matth. xxvii. 50.) ſhewed by his breathing out his laſt there, (Luke xxiii. 56. Gr.) was returned again into his bleſſed body; it is in virtue of the ſame, that the Spirit of life returns into the dead ſouls of the elect again; upon which they live and believe. The time of the return of the Spirit, both into the head, and into the members, was prefixed in the covenant, reſpectively; ſo that as it was not poſſible Chriſt ſhould be held in the grave after three days; even ſo it is not poſſible, that his elect ſhould be held in the bonds of ſpiritual death, after the time prefixed for their delivery: Hoſ. vi. 2. 'After two days ' will he revive us, in the third day he will raiſe us up, ' and we ſhall live in his ſight.'

And thus the promiſe of eternal life to the elect works in this dark period of their days; which dark period ends here. It appears now, and runs above ground ever after.

PERIOD II.

From union with Chriſt, untill death.

CONſidering the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, as it is accompliſhed to, and hath its effect on them, from their union with Chriſt, untill death; the great lines to be perceived therein, are the promiſes, 1. Of juſtification: 2. Of a new and ſaving covenant-relation to God: 3. Of ſanctification; 4. Of perſeverance; and 5. Of temporal benefits. Of the which in order.

I. The promiſe of JUSTIFICATION.

The promiſe of eternal life to the elect, comprehends the promiſe of juſtification, to be conferred on them, and each one of them, being united to Chriſt through the Spirit. This is found, Iſ. liii. 11. 'By his knowledge ' ſhall my righteous ſervant juſtify many.' Chap. xlv. 25. 'In the Lord ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified.' It is the leading promiſe of this period: and the effect of the accompliſhment thereof, is, that the ſoul legally dead under the ſentence of the law, or curſe of the broken covenant of works, is cauſed to live again accordingly: as it is written, 'The juſt ſhall live by faith,' Rom. i. 17. And this is the beginning of that life which is received from Chriſt by faith, and is mentioned, John v. 40. 'Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.' Chap. vi. 47. 'He that eateth me, even he ſhall live by ' me.' There is a life received from Chriſt before faith, whereby one is enabled to believe; of which we have already ſpoken: and there is a life received from Chriſt through faith, according to John xx. 31. 'That believing ' ye might have life through his name.' And this laſt is, according to the ſcripture, eternal life too: chap. v. 24. 'He that heareth my word, and believeth on him ' that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come ' into condemnation; but is paſſed from death unto ' life.'

The elect of God, lying under the breach of the firſt covenant, were dead in law, as being under the curſe. They could not be reſtored to life in the eye of the law, but upon the fulfilling of the righteouſneſs of the law; the which they not being able to do for themſelves, Chriſt in the covenant undertook to do it for them; and thereupon was made the promiſe of their juſtification. This promiſe taking effect upon their believing, the curſe is removed, and they are actually and perſonally juſtified. Thus they are reſtored to life in the eye of the law; which kind of life, received by faith, is everlaſting; foraſmuch as, according to the covenant, the curſe can never return upon them, for ſhorter or longer time: Iſa. liv. 9. 'As I have ſworn that the waters of Noah ſhould ' no more go over the earth; ſo have I ſworn that I ' would not be wroth with thee.'

Of the promiſe of juſtification there are two branches; namely, the promiſe of pardon, and of acceptance.

1. The promiſe of pardon of ſin, whereby the guilt of eternal wrath is done away: Heb. viii. 12. 'Their ' ſins and their iniquities will I remember no more.' The ſins of the elect being, in the eternal covenant, imputed to, and laid on Chriſt; who becoming legally one with them, transferred their debt on himſelf, and undertook to pay the ſame; a promiſe was thereupon made of pardon to them, and each one of them. Now, as ſoon as they are myſtically and really united to him by faith, by means of that union they have communion with him in his righteouſneſs; whereupon his perfect ſatisfaction is imputed to them; and, upon the account of it alone, and not any deed of theirs whatſoever, the free promiſe is accompliſhed, and the pardon actually beſtowed on them, according to the eternal agreement: Eph. i. 7. 'In whom we have redemption through his blood, the ' forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace.'

Here is life from the dead; a pardon put into the hand of the condemned man, diſarming the law of its condemning power, and death of its ſting, as to him; cauſing him to lift up his head from off the block, and go away with acclamations of praiſe of the King's mercy, and his Son's merit. And it is eternal life; for all his ſins paſt, preſent, and to come, are pardoned, as to the guilt of eternal wrath; a formal remiſſion of theſe of the two former kinds being granted, and a not-imputing of theſe of the latter ſort, as to that guilt, being ſecured; as the apoſtle teacheth, Rom. iv. 7. 'Bleſſed are they whoſe ' iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered.' Ver. 8. 'Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not ' impute ſin.' And God will never revoke his pardons, chap. xi. 29. 'For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.'

2. The other branch of the promiſe of juſtification, is the promiſe of acceptance of their perſons as righteous in the ſight of God; according to that, Iſa. xlii. 21. 'The Lord is well pleaſed for his righteouſneſs ſake.' Compared with Matth. iii. 17. 'This is my beloved Son, ' in whom I am well pleaſed;' and Eph. i. 6. 'He hath ' made us accepted in the beloved.' A holy righteous God, whoſe judgment is according to truth, cannot accept ſinners as righteous, without a righteouſneſs, even a perfect righteouſneſs. They that are not truly righteous in law, can never paſs for righteous, but for unrighteous ones, in the view of his piercing eye: 'For in thy ' ſight,' ſays the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxliii. 2. 'ſhall no man ' living be juſtified;' to wit, by the deeds of the law, or inherent righteouſneſs, which is imperfect, as the apoſtle expounds it, Rom. iii. 20. But our Lord Jeſus having in the covenant undertaken to fulfill all righteouſneſs for them, who of themſelves could fulfill no righteouſneſs; a promiſe was thereupon made, to accept them as righteous upon the account of his ſurety-righteouſneſs, which becomes truly theirs through faith, and that by a double right. (1.) By right of free gift received: inaſmuch as Chriſt's righteouſneſs being made over, in the goſpel, as heaven's free gift to ſinners, the gift is by faith actually claimed and received; whence it is called the gift of righteouſneſs, (Rom. v. 17.) revealed unto faith, (chap. i. 17.) namely, to be believed on, and ſo received. (2.) By right of communion with Chriſt: inaſmuch as ſinners being united with him by faith, have thereby communion, or a common intereſt with him in his righteouſneſs, Philip. iii. 9. ‘And be ſound in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt.’ Upon theſe grounds, the holineſs of Chriſt's nature, the righteouſneſs of his life, and the ſatisfaction made by his death and ſufferings, being the conſtituent parts of that righteouſneſs, are according to truth, imputed to the believer, or legally reckoned his; and, upon the account thereof preciſely, he is accepted of God as righteous, being made the righteouſneſs of God in him, 2 Cor. v. 21.; the righteouſneſs of God being upon all them that believe, Rom. iii. 22.

Here is life to the ſoul, righteouſneſs unto juſtification of life, chap. v. 18.; an everlaſting righteouſneſs, Dan. ix. 24.; a garment that never waxeth old, is never rent, nay nor ſullied; but always continues in its original luſtre, from the moment that it is put on. Wherefore the life muſt needs be eternal, grace muſt needs reign through that righteouſneſs unto eternal life, Rom. v. 21.; for being once put on, it is never put off again for one moment, in time nor eternity.

Now, the promiſe of juſtification, in both branches thereof, is grafted upon the promiſe of juſtification made to Chriſt. The condition of the covenant being fulfilled, the head is juſtified, according to the promiſe; and then the members in him. Firſt, the Mediator gets up his diſcharge for the whole debt; and then they pleading it by faith for their own behoof, are diſcharged in their own perſons.

II. The promiſe of a new and ſaving Covenant-relation to God.

The promiſe of eternal life to the elect, doth alſo comprehend the promiſe of a new and ſaving covenant-relation to God, which they, and each one of them, being juſtified, ſhall be brought into: Hoſ. ii. 23. ‘I will ſay to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they ſhall ſay, Thou art my God.’ Dying both morally and legally, through the breach of the firſt covenant, they fell under a relative death too; whereby the bleſſed relation between God and them was diſſolved: and it could not be conſtituted again, while they lay under the condemnatory ſentence of the law. But upon Chriſt's undertaking, in the covenant, to bring in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, the price of the redemption of all ſaving benefits, this promiſe was made. Wherefore they being come to Chriſt by faith, united with him, and juſtified through his righteouſneſs, which they partake of in him; God meets them there, even in Chriſt the appointed meeting-place; and there, with the ſafety of of his honour, he takes them by the hand and joins them again in a ſaving relation. Thus they have a relative life, according to that, Pſal. xxx. 5. In his favour is life. The which life is eternal: foraſmuch as the relation is for ever indiſſoluble; the bond of the ſecond covenant being ſo much ſurer than the bond of the firſt, as the ſecond Adam's undertaking was ſurer than the firſt Adam's.

Now, of this promiſe there are three chief branches; namely, the promiſe of reconciliation, of adoption, and of God's being their God.

1. The promiſe of reconciliation between God and them: Ezek. xxxvii. 26. ‘I will make a covenant of peace with them, it ſhall be an everlaſting covenant.’ They were by ſin in a ſtate of enmity with God; on their part, there was a real enmity againſt God; on God's part, a legal enmity againſt them, ſuch as a judge hath againſt a malefactor, whom notwithſtanding he may dearly love. But Jeſus Chriſt having undertaken, in the covenant, to expiate their guilt, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, the Father made a promiſe of peace and reconciliation with them thereupon. Hence we are ſaid to be reconciled to God by the death of his Son, Rom. v. 10.; inaſmuch as by his death and ſufferings he purchaſed our reconciliation, which was promiſed on theſe terms.

Now, this promiſe is accompliſhed to the juſtified ſinner: being pardoned, he is brought into a ſtate of peace with God, as ſaith the apoſtle, Rom. v. 1. ‘Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God.’ God lays down his legal enmity againſt him, never to be taken up again. And more than that, he takes him into a bond of friendſhip; ſo that he is not only at peace with God, but is the friend of God; Jam. ii. 23. ‘Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteouſneſs; and he was called the friend of God.’

This promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe of acceptance and juſtification made to Chriſt. For his ſacrifice being accepted as well pleaſing to God, and he diſcharged of the debt he became ſurety for; the reconciliation, as well as the pardon, of thoſe united to him by faith, natively follows thereupon: 2 Cor. v. 19. ‘God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.’ Eph. i. 6. ‘He hath made us accepted in the beloved.’ Verſe 7. ‘In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins.’

2. Another branch of this promiſe, is the promiſe of their adoption into the family of God: Hoſ. i. 10. ‘It ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye are the ſons of the living God.’ And this is more than the former; as it is more to be one's ſon, than to be his friend. We have before declared, how all mankind was, by the firſt covenant, conſtituted God's hired ſervants; and by the breach of that covenant, bond ſervants under the curſe; and how Chriſt transferred that ſtate of ſervitude of his ſpiritual ſeed on himſelf. Now, upon conſideration of his taking on him the form of a bond ſervant for them, the promiſe of their adoption into the family of God was made. He was ‘made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of ſons,’ Gal. iv. 4, 5.

And being juſtified by faith, and reconciled to God, it is accompliſhed to them: foraſmuch as then Chriſt's ſervice is imputed to them, and a way is opened withal for their admiſſion into the family of God, through their actual reconciliation to him: Rom. v. 1. ‘Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt,’ Ver. 2. ‘By whom alſo we have acceſs by faith into this grace wherein we ſtand.’ John i. 12. ‘As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God.’ Then are they taken as children into the family of heaven: God becomes their father in Chriſt; and they his ſons and daughters, to abide for ever in his houſe, John viii. 35. And ſo they have a right to all the privileges of that high relation.

Now, this promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe made to Chriſt of a new kind of intereſt in God as his Father: according to that, John xxi. 17. ‘I aſcend unto my Father, and your father.’ For by the Spirit of adoption we call God our Father, in the right of Jeſus Chriſt our elder brother, ſpiritual huſband and head.

3. The laſt branch is the promiſe of God's being their God: Heb. viii. 10. I will be their God. This is more than reconciliation and adoption: it is the height of the relation to God, which a ſinful creature could be advanced unto. They were by nature without God, Eph. ii. 12. but foraſmuch as the Son of God did, in the covenant, undertake to give himſelf for them, in their nature perfectly to ſatisfy the law, in his holy birth, righteous life, and exquiſite death; a ranſom of infinite value, quite beyond all created things whatſoever, graces pardons, heavens; there was made upon that conſideration, a promiſe of God's giving himſelf to them, as the adequate reward of that ſervice; which being performed by the Mediator, this reward was purchaſed for them. Hence God ſaid to Abraham, Gen. xv. 1. 'I am thy exceeding great reward.'

Now, to the believer being juſtified, reconciled, and adopted, into the family of God, this heritage falls, in accompliſhment of this promiſe, Rom. viii. 17. 'And if children, then heirs; heirs of God.' Gal. iv. 7. 'And if a ſon, then an heir of God through Chriſt;' God himſelf being the heritage. He becomes their God; they have a right to him, and are poſſeſſed of him, as their own property; a property which the thoughts of men and angels cannot fully reach the contents of. Not only are all the works and creatures of God in the heavens, earth, and ſeas, theirs, 1 Cor. iii. 22. All are yours: but himſelf is theirs; which is more than all that, as the bridegroom is more than all his marriage-robes, or his large poſſeſſions. All his attributes are theirs; his infinite wiſdom to direct them, his power to afford them protection, his juſtice to make all the benefits purchaſed by Chriſt for them forthcoming to them, his holineſs to transform them into the ſame image, his mercy to pity and ſuccour them, his grace to deal bountifully with them, his faithfulneſs to fulfil all the promiſes to them in their time, and his all-ſufficiency to render them completely happy. He is theirs in all his relations; their Shepherd, Proviſor, Protector, King, Huſband, Head, and whatſoever may contribute to their happineſs. All the perſons of the glorious Trinity are theirs; The Father is theirs, the Son is theirs, and the holy Spirit is theirs: Iſa. liv. 5. 'For thy Maker is thine huſband, (the Lord of hoſts is his name) Heb. Thy Makers are thy huſbands: Jehovah Sabaoth is his name.'

This rich promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe made to Chriſt of a new kind of intereſt in God as his God: John xx. 17. I aſcend to my God and your God. God being the Mediator's God by purchaſe, he becomes our God in him. Chriſt having performed the condition of the covenannt, falls heir to the great heritage; and we fall to it alſo in him, being heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17.

III. The promiſe of SANCTIFICATION.

In the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, is comprehended in like manner the promiſe of their ſanctification; Ezek. xi. 19. 'I will take the ſtony heart out of their fleſh, and will give them an heart of fleſh:' verſ. 20. 'That they may walk in my ſtatutes. See Joel iii. 17. 21. Heb. viii. 10. Through the breach of the firſt covenant, they loſt the image of God: their whole faculties were ſo depraved, that they could neither do, ſpeak, nor think any thing truly good, and acceptable to God: they were by nature altogether unholy; unclean, lothſome, and abominable, in their nature, heart and life. And it was quite beyond their power to make themſelves holy again; for mending of their nature could not effect it; it behoved to be renewed, Eph. iv. 23. And the curſe of the law lying upon them, extinguiſhed all ſaving relation between God and them; and ſo blocked up all ſaving communication with heaven; for it barred in point of juſtice, all ſanctifying influences from thence; theſe being the greateſt benefit they were capable of, as aſſimilating the creature unto God himſelf, or rendering it like him. The curſe fixed a gulph betwixt God and them, ſo that ſanctifying influences could not paſs from him unto them; more than their unholy deſires and prayers could paſs from them unto him. So the fallen angels always were, and the damned now are, beyond all poſſibility of ſanctification, or of receiving ſanctifying influences from heaven; there being no remedy to remove the curſe, neither from the one nor from the other. And in this caſe all Adam's poſterity had lain for ever, had not Jeſus Chriſt, as the head of the elect, undertaken in the ſecond covenant, to remove that bar, to fill up the gulph, and to found a new ſaving relation between God and them, thro' his own obedience and death. But upon that undertaking of the Mediator, the Father did by promiſe inſure their ſanctification; that Chriſt's people ſhould be willing in the day of his power, in the beauties of holineſs, Pſal. cx. 3. and that a ſeed ſhall ſerve him, Pſal. xxii. 30.

And this promiſe, the promiſe of ſanctification, is indeed the chief promiſe of the covenant made to Chriſt for them: among the reſt of that kind, it ſhines like the moon among the leſſer ſtars. Sanctification is the very chief ſubordinate end of the covenant of grace, ſtanding therein next to the glory of God, which is the chief and ultimate end thereof. The promiſe of it is the centre of all the reſt of theſe promiſes. All the foregoing promiſes, the promiſe of preſervation, the Spirit, the firſt regeneration or quickening of the dead ſoul, faith, juſtification, the new ſaving relation to God, reconciliation, adoption, and enjoyment of God as our God, do tend unto it as their common centre, and ſtand related to it, as means to their end. They are all accompliſhed to ſinners, on deſign to make them holy. And all the ſubſequent promiſes, even the promiſe of glorification itſelf, are but the ſame promiſe of ſanctification enlarged and extended: they are but as ſo many rays and beams of light, ſhooting forth from it as the centre of them all.

This appears from the ſcriptural deſcriptions of the covenant, in the promiſſory part thereof reſpecting the elect: Luke i. 73. 'The oath which he ſware to our father Abraham,' ver. 74. 'That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear,' ver. 75. 'In holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all the days of our life.' Here is the oath, or covenant ſworn to Abraham as a type of Chriſt; wherein his ſeed's ſerving the Lord in holineſs, is held forth as the chief thing ſworn unto the Mediator by the Father; and their deliverance from their enemies, as the means for that end. See Heb. viii. 10. 11. 12. where God's writing his law in their hearts, is ſet on the front, as the firſt thing in the divine intention, though the laſt in execution, as appears by comparing the 10th and 12th verſes. This matter is alſo evident from the nature of the thing. For the great thing Satan aimed at in ſeducing our firſt parents, was the ruin of the image of God in them, that ſo mankind might be no more like God, but like himſelf: and the myſtery of God, for the recovery of ſinners, is then finiſhed, when holineſs is brought in them to perfection in heaven, and not till then.

From all which, one may plainly perceive, that the ſanctification of all that ſhall ſee heaven, is ſecured in the covenant, upon infallible grounds, beyond all poſſibility of failure: and that the unholy have no ſaving part nor lot in the covenant; and that the leſs holy any man is, the leſs is the covenant-promiſe accompliſhed to him. For the ſanctification of ſinners is the great deſign of that contrivance: it is that which the Father and the Son, looking therein to them, had chiefly in their view: and the promiſe thereof is the capital promiſe of the covenant, reſpecting them; being as it were written in great letters.

Now, at the time appointed for every one in the eternal council, this promiſe is accompliſhed. The ſinner being juſtified by faith, and taken into a ſaving relation to God, being reconciled, adopted, and made an heir of God through Chriſt, is ſanctified. The bar being removed, the gulph filled up as to him, his ſaving intereſt in, and relation to a holy God being eſtabliſhed; the communication between heaven and the ſinner is opened, and ſanctifying influences flow amain, to the ſanctifying of him throughout.

This is, by ſome divines, called the ſecond regeneration, agreeable to the ſcripture; Tit. iii. 5. 'He ſaved 'us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of 'the Holy Ghoſt;' compared with Eph. v. 26. 'That 'he might ſanctify and cleanſe it with the waſhing of 'water.' 2 Cor. v. 17. 'If any man be in Chriſt, he is 'a new creature;' namely, being 'created in Chriſt 'Jeſus unto good works,' as the apoſtle himſelf explains it, Eph. ii. 10. And as in regeneration, taken ſtrictly for the quickening of the dead ſoul, and called the firſt regeneration, new vital powers are given; ſo in regeneration taken largely for the forming of the new creature in all its parts and diſtinct members, which is called the ſecond regeneration, there are new qualities and habits of grace infuſed; and it is the ſame with the ſecond renewing, mentioned in our Shorter Catechiſm, on the head of ſanctification, whereby we are renewed in the whole man, after the image of God.

The matter lies here. The ſinner being by faith united to Chriſt, through the communication of the quickening Spirit from Chriſt unto him, and thereupon juſtified, reconciled, adopted, and made an heir of God; there is a meaſure of every grace, even the ſeeds of all ſaving graces, derived from, and communicated out of the all-fulneſs of grace in the man Chriſt the head, unto the ſinner as a member of his, by the ſame Spirit dwelling in the head and members. Hereby the man is not only a ſpiritually living creature, but an all-new creature, ſanctified wholly or throughout, renewed in the whole man, after the image of God. For the immediate effect of that communication of grace from Chriſt, muſt be the ſealing of the perſon with the image of Chriſt; foraſmuch as he receives grace for grace in Chriſt, as the wax doth point for point in the ſeal. So that the reſtored image of God is expreſſed on us immediately from Chriſt the ſecond Adam, who is the image of the inviſible God; even as Eve was made after God's image, being made after Adam's, according to Gen. ii. 18. I will make him an help meet for him; marg. as before him, that is, in his own likeneſs, as if he ſat for the picture. Compare 1 Cor. xi. 7. 'He,' (to wit, the man) 'is the image and glory of God: but the 'woman is the glory of the man.' Verſe 8. 'For the 'man is not of the woman: but the woman of the 'man.' And 2 Cor. viii. 23. 'Our brethren are the 'meſſengers of the churches, and the glory of Chriſt.' And thus our uniting with Chriſt, through the Spirit, by faith, iſſues in our becoming one ſpirit, that is, of the ſame ſpiritual holy nature with him; as really as Eve was one fleſh with Adam, being formed of him, of his fleſh and of his bones, Gen. ii. 23. to which the apoſtle alludes, in the matter of the myſtical union between Chriſt and believers, Eph. v. 30. 'For we are members 'of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones.'

This is the ſcripture account of the matter; according to which, the ſanctification of a ſinner hath a ſpecial relation to Jeſus Chriſt and his Spirit; depends withal on our relative ſtate in the divine favour; and ſo is no leſs a myſtery than our juſtification. As the depravation of human nature hath always been ſo manifeſt, that it could not eſcape obſervation in the world: ſo in all ages, men have been aiming to diſcover and compaſs the cure thereof, in a right uſe they apprehend they could make of their rational faculties. The iſſue whereof hath always been, at beſt, but an outward ſhew and ſemblance of ſanctification, going under the name of moral virtue, having no ſpecial relation to Jeſus Chriſt, and his indwelling Spirit; but ſuch as it is, made the foundation of mens relative ſtate in the favour of God. And ſince the world by their wiſdom knew not God; it is not at all ſtrange, the produce of their wiſdom, in the matter of ſanctification, or aſſimilation to his image, lies ſo wide of the true ſanctification acceptable to him, diſcovered in his word. Truly it is there only we can learn the myſtery of the ſanctification of a ſinner. And there it is revealed, that that great work is wrought by the Spirit, on the ſouls of men in a ſtate of union with Jeſus Chriſt, and after believing, Eph. i. 13. 'In whom alſo 'after that ye believed, ye were ſealed with that holy 'Spirit of promiſe.' It neceſſarily depends on our union with Chriſt, in that we are ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus as members of his body, 1 Cor. i. 2. created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works. And faith is the inſtrumental cauſe of our ſanctification, being we are ſanctified by faith, Acts xxvi. 18.: for thereby it is, that of his fulneſs we receive grace for grace, (John i. 16.) the which is communicated to us by his Spirit, who glorifies him, by reforming us after his image, by means of that communication of grace from Chriſt unto us. John xvi. 14. 'He ſhall glorify me: for he ſhall receive of mine, and 'ſhall ſhew it unto you.' So 'beholding as in a glaſs the 'glory of the Lord (Chriſt,) we are changed into the 'ſame image, from glory, to glory, even as by the Spirit 'of the Lord,' 2 Cor. iii. 18. Thus one being in Chriſt is made a new creature; foraſmuch as he is ſuch a ſtock as changes the graft into its own nature; 'Therefore if 'any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature,' chap. v. 17. 'For as many of you as have been baptized into 'Chriſt, have put on Chriſt,' Gal. iii. 27. It dependeth alſo upon our juſtification, and reconciliation with God; inaſmuch as the blood of Chriſt, with which we are ſanctified, according to the ſcripture, Rev. i. 5. 1 Pet. i. 2. 1 John i. 7. is effective of our ſanctification, as it is the meritorious cauſe thereof: and ſo the ſanctifying virtue of that precious blood, proceeds from its atoning virtue; it ſanctifies us, becauſe it juſtifies and reconciles us to God: Heb. ix. 14. 'How much more 'ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who, through the eternal 'Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your 'conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God?' Wherefore, ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. 'And the 'very God of Peace ſanctify you.' In like manner, it preſuppoſeth our adoption; inaſmuch as it is upon our being adopted into the family of God, that we receive the Spirit of his Son, conforming us to his image as our elder brother, which is the very thing wherein our ſanctification doth conſiſt: 'For whom he did foreknow, 'he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image 'of his Son, that he might be the firſt-born among many 'brethren.' Rom. viii. 29. 'And becauſe ye are ſons, 'God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your 'hearts, crying, Abba, Father,' Gal. iv. 6. 'We are 'changed into the ſame image, even as by the Spirit of 'the Lord,' 2 Cor. iii. 18. And it ſtands in the ſame relation to God's becoming our God, Ezek. xvi. 8. 'I 'ſware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with 'thee, ſaith the Lord God, and thou becameſt mine.' Ver 9. 'Then waſhed I thee with water: yea, I throughly waſhed away thy blood from thee, and anointed 'thee with oil.'

But although in this work of ſanctification, there is communicated out of the all-fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, a meaſure, and that a predominant meaſure of every grace; yet it is not a full meaſure of any grace. Hence it comes to paſs, that howbeit we are thereby renewed in the whole man, yet we are ſtill unrenewed in the whole man too; to wit, in reſpect of two general parts, thence called the renewed part, and the unrenewed part. For this communication of grace, being of grace for grace in Chriſt, we are thereby renewed in every particular part indeed: but the meaſure of none of theſe graces being full in any ſoul while here, we are not wholly renewed in any ſuch part, but there are remains of corruption ſtill indwelling in every ſuch part, in the mind, will and affections, and in the body, by way of communication with the unrenewed part. Thus, two contrary principles, to wit, grace and corruption, are in the ſanctified; being together in ſuch ſort, that in every particular part where the one is, the other is there alſo by it: even as in the twilight, light and darkneſs are in every part of the hemiſphere. All which the ſcripture doth abundantly declare. For what we have of this gracious work upon us, while here, is but in part; it is not perfect, 1 Cor. xiii. 9. 10. Though there is a new man put on, there is an old man to be put off, Eph. iv. 22. 24. There is fleſh as well as ſpirit in the beſt, Gal. v. 17. who therefore do look forth but as the morning, Cant. vi. 10. or, as the word properly ſignifies, as the dawning; yet as the dawning differs from dark night, they differ thereby from the unſanctified, in whom there is no light, Iſ. viii. 20. Heb. no dawning. See Rom. vii. 14.——24. Philip iii. 21.

Howbeit, foraſmuch as it is a predominant meaſure of every grace that is thus communicated; this work of ſanctification doth iſſue, in a ſtate of death unto ſin, and a ſtate of life unto righteouſneſs.

1. It iſſueth in a ſtate of death unto ſin, or in mortification. For by means of that communication of grace from Chriſt the head, though it is not full, the old man of ſin gets his deadly wound. The reigning power of the whole body of ſins is deſtroyed: inaſmuch as a reigning principle of grace is thereby ſet up in the believer; and that his ſeed remaineth in him; and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God, 1 John iii. 9. ‘ Sin ſhall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.’ And the total pollution, or defilement, through ſin, is by the ſame means purged off; inaſmuch as the reſtored image of God makes one really and perſonally pure and clean in the ſight of God, as far as it goes: Tit. iii. 5. ‘ He ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.’ Compare Col. iii. 10. ‘ And have put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him.’ And thus one is put into a ſtate of death, in reſpect of his unrenewed part, Col. iii. 3. For ye are dead; Rom. vi. 11. dead indeed unto ſin. The which ſtate of death is ſuch as a crucified man is in, who being nailed to the croſs, ſhall never come down till he have breathed out his laſt: Gal. vi. 14. ‘ The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world, Rom. vi. 6. ‘ Our old man is crucified with him.’

2. It iſſueth alſo in a ſtate of life unto righteouſneſs, or in vivification. For by means of the ſame communication of grace from Chriſt the head, one is endued with infuſed habits of grace, the immediate principles of gracious actions: the law is written in his heart; and his heart is circumciſed to love the Lord. And thus he is put into a ſtate of life unto righteouſneſs, in reſpect of his renewed part; being dead indeed unto ſin, but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Rom. vi. 11. So ſaith the apoſtle of himſelf, Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt: Neverthele ſs I live. And this ſtate of life is ſuch, as a man is in for the common actions of life, who is not only quickened, but riſen and come forth of the grave: Col. ii. 12. ‘ Ye are riſen with him through the faith of the operation of God.’ Rom. vi. 4. ‘ That like as Chriſt was raiſed up by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.’ And it is an eternal life; for the grace communicated from Chriſt to the believer, for that effect, ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life, John iv. 14.

Now, this death unto ſin, and life unto righteouſneſs, ſpring from our communion with Chriſt in his death and reſurrection. Theſe laſt have in them a power and virtue to render his myſtical members conformable to him in them. They have a power and virtue, to cauſe in them a dying unto ſin, as Chriſt died for ſin, a violent death, lingering and painful, yet voluntary; and a riſing from ſin to a new manner of life, continued during their abode in this world, and perfected in glory; even as he roſe from the dead to a new manner of life, continued till his aſcenſion: Philip. iii. 10. ‘ That I may know him, and the power of his reſurrection, and the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, being made conformable unto his death.’ Rom. vi. 4. ‘ Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.’ Ver. 5. ‘ For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death; we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection.’ Since there is in Adam's ſin and death, a malignant virtue, conforming his natural offſpring unto him therein, to their defilement; why ſhould it be thought ſtrange, that there ſhould be ſuch a benign virtue in the death and reſurrection of Chriſt the ſecond Adam, conforming his myſtical members unto him therein, to their ſanctification? for ‘ as in Adam all die, even ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive,’ 1 Cor. xv. 22. The death and reſurrection of Chriſt have this virtue, inaſmuch as he died and roſe again as a public perſon, and merited this conformation of his myſtical members to his image, Rom. vi. 4.——12. Eph. ii. 5. 6. And they have this effect, as they are applied to us by the Spirit. For the caſe of our juſtification and ſanctification, is much like that of the delivering one who is a priſoner for debt. When the ſurety's payment of the debt is legally applied to the priſoner, by the judge ſuſtaining it as clearing his debt; in the moment of that application, the priſoner is legally free; he is no more a priſoner in point of right, though ſtill in the priſon, until that one ſent by the judge, apply it to him really by opening the priſon-doors to him, and ſetting him at liberty. Even ſo the death of Chriſt, and his reſurrection, conſidered as the evidence of his complete ſatisfaction, being legally applied by God the Judge, to a ſinner, upon his believing; they have an immediate effect on him, conſtituting him in a happy relative ſtate, in juſtification, and new relation to God as his Friend, Father, and God: ſo that he is thereby freed, even from the dominion and pollution of ſin, in point of right, as well as he is in fact freed from the guilt of it: he is by that application legally dead unto ſin, and alive unto God: Rom. vi. 10. ‘ For in that he (to wit, Chriſt) died, he died unto ſin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.’ Ver. 11. ‘ Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves to be dead indeed unto ſin: but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.’ Now, the curſe which ſtood as a legal bar, to ſanctifying influences, in reſpect whereof the ſtrength of ſin is the law, 1 Cor. xv. 56. being thus quite removed, by the legal application of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt to the believer; the Spirit doth really apply the ſame death and reſurrection to him, conforming him perſonally thereto, through the communication of grace to him, out of the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt the head; without which there cannot be any ſuch conformation, according to the ſtated method of grace revealed in the ſcripture. And thus they have a mediate effect on him, conſtituting him really and perſonally holy, in ſanctification: Rom. viii. 2. ‘ For the law of the Spirit of life, in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me free from the law of ſin and death.’ Col. ii. 12. ‘ Buried with him in baptiſm, wherein alſo ye are riſen with him.’ 1 Cor. xii. 13. ‘ For by one Spirit are we all baptiſed into one body.’ John xv. 4. ‘ As the branch cannot bear fruit of itſelf, except it abide in the vine: no more can ye, except ye abide in me.’ There was a double ſprinkling of the blood of the ſacrifices, called the blood of the covenant, Exod. xxiv. Firſt, it was ſprinkled on the altar, for atonement and reconciliation with God for Iſrael, ver. 6. And next, it was ſprinkled on the people, for their purification, ver. 8.; its purifying virtue flowing from its atoning virtue. Accordingly there is a double application or ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt, thereby ſignified: one, for our juſtification and reconciliation with God; mentioned Heb. xii. 22. ‘ Ye are come’——ver. 24.——‘ to the blood of ſprinkling, that ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel,’ namely, in that it ſpeaks for mercy and pardon, whereas Abel's ſpoke for vengeance; and then another, for our ſanctification; mentioned 1 Pet. i. 2. ‘ Through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt.' And this is the only true ſanctification of a ſinner, having a ſpecial relation to Jeſus Chriſt and his Spirit.

Now the branches of the promiſe of ſanctification are manifold; for it ſpreads as wide as the commandments of the holy law, which in the ſtation it hath in the goſpel covenant, are all turned into promiſes. Thus whereas the command is, 'Know the Lord;' the promiſe is, 'They ſhall all know me, ſaith the Lord,' Jer. xxxi. 34. The command is, 'Come unto me,' Matth. xi. 28. and it is promiſed, 'They ſhall come,' Pſal. xxii. 31. The command is, 'Love the Lord,' Pſal. xxxi. 23. it is promiſed, 'The Lord will circumciſe thine heart to love the Lord,' Deut. xxx. 6. It is the command, 'Fear God,' 1 Pet. ii. 17. and it is promiſed, 'I will put my fear in their hearts,' Jer. xxxii. 40. We are commanded to be meek, humble, and lowly, Matth. xi. 29. and it is promiſed, Iſ. xi. 6. 'The wolf ſhall dwell with the lamb,——and a little child ſhall lead them.' And thus it is in all other caſes, the whole commandments of the law in this ſtation being inlaid with the goſpel promiſes, as appears from Heb. viii. 10. 'I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people.'

But the chief branches are theſe two; to wit, the promiſe of repentance, and the promiſe of actual grace and ſtrength for all holy obedience.

1. One chief branch of the promiſe of ſanctification, is the promiſe of repentance. Not that legal repentance, which goes before ſaving faith, being common to the elect and reprobate; but that evangelical repentance, which is deſcribed in our catechiſms, the ſeeds of which are ſaid in the larger catechiſm, to be put into the heart in ſanctification; and ſo follows ſaving faith and juſtification, in the order of nature: Ezek. xxxvi. 31. 'Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall lothe yourſelves in your own ſight, for your iniquities.' Pſal. xxii. 27. 'All the ends of the world ſhall remember and turn unto the Lord.' Zech. xii. 10. 'They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for him.' The whole ſpiritual ſeed were, by means of the breach of the firſt covenant, loſt ſheep, even as others. Adam left them as ſo many waifs and ſtrays, wandering on the mountains of vanity, ready to become a prey to the roaring lion, who goes about there, ſeeking whom he may devour: Iſ. liii. 6. 'All we like ſheep have gone aſtray; we have turned every one to his own way.' All of them had loſt the way, and none of them could find it again. They had gone away from God, and could not return. They had turned to him the back, and not the face, and had become ſo inflexible, they could not turn about to him, and to their duty. They had loſt their eyes, and could not diſcern the way to return: 'to do good they had no knowledge,' Jer. iv. 22. They had loſt the power of their limbs, and could no more return, though they had known the way, than 'the Ethiopian can change his ſkin, or the leopard his ſpots,' chap. xiii. 23. And they had withal loſt heart to return: God being to them an unatoned God, his face ſet againſt them, they could not bear to approach him. So they never would have turned, although they had been able; but each of them would have ſaid, 'There is no hope. No, for I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go,' Jer. ii. 25. Wherefore had not the Mediator interpoſed, they had wandered endleſsly: had not Jeſus Chriſt taken the deſperate caſe in hand, there had never been a returning ſinner of Adam's family, a true penitent, a heart kindly ſoftened in ſorrow for ſin, nor turned in hatred againſt ſin as ſin, more than there is among the fallen angels. But upon conſideration of the ſecond Adam's walking with God, the whole way of obedience to the law, which they went off from; having withal laid on him the iniquities of them all; there was made a promiſe of giving them repentance, that 'he ſhould gather together in one, the children of God that were ſcattered abroad,' John xi. 52. In performance of which promiſe, after his aſcenſion into heaven, it was found, that 'God had alſo to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life,' Acts xi. 18.

Now when one is juſtified by faith, and new-related to God, as his Friend, Father, and God, he is ſanctified and brought to true evangelical repentance, according to this promiſe. Being come to Chriſt by faith, he comes back unto God by him in repentance, Heb. vii. 25. Whence it is called repentance toward God, which is the end whereunto faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the means, Acts xx. 21. Then, and not till then, it is, that the heart is ſet a-going in true goſpel repentance, pleaſing to God, and acceptable in his ſight; according to the ſcripture: Ezek xvi. 62. 'And I will eſtabliſh my covenant with thee:' verſ. 63. 'That thou mayeſt remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more becauſe of thy ſhame, when I am pacified toward thee.' Chap. xx. 42. 'And ye ſhall know that I am the Lord, when I ſhall bring you into the land of Iſrael.' verſe. 43. 'And there ſhall ye remember your ways,—and ye ſhall lothe yourſelves.' Chap. xxxvi. 25. 'Then will I ſprinkle clean water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean.'——Verſ. 26. 'A new heart alſo will I give you.'——Verſ. 28. 'And ye ſhall be my people, and I will be your God.' Verſ. 31. 'Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways,—and ſhall lothe yourſelves.' For then it is, that the love of God to the ſoul, which lay hid before, doth ſhine forth more or leſs clear; and being diſcerned by faith accordingly, warms the heart of the ſinner with love to God again, according to that, 1 John iv. 19. 'We love him, becauſe he firſt loved us.' And that love melts it into repentance for ſin, as in the woman, who, being forgiven much, loved much; and ſhewed her love, by waſhing our Saviour's feet with tears, Luke vii. 37. 38. 47. The hard heart is then laid on the ſoft bed of the love and free grace of God in Chriſt; and the word of the law inlaid with the goſpel, falls on it, ſaying, 'Break, for the Lord is gracious,' Joel ii. 13. 'Rent your heart,——and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful,—and of great kindneſs.' And this, like a hammer, breaketh the rock in pieces. The party being, as is before declared, renewed in the whole man, put into a ſtate of death unto ſin, and life unto righteouſneſs, the new nature vents itſelf in an ingenuous and thorough turning from ſin unto God, in heart and life. By believing the ſinner returns unto God as a portion, wherein to reſt: in repenting he returns unto God, as a Lord and Maſter, whom he is to obey. He turns from ſin unto God, coming back as a runaway ſervant to his maſter, returning to his place and duty in the family. And he returns with bluſhing and tears. He is filled with ſorrow and ſhame for offending a good and gracious God. His heart is turned againſt ſin, in hatred of it; he hates it not only as a hurtful thing, that would ruin him: but as a filthy and lothſome thing, that defiles him. He lothes it, as the abominable thing that God hates: as the deformity of the ſoul, the very reverſe of the glorious holineſs of God expreſſed in his law. He lothes himſelf for it; calls himſelf fool and beaſt, for his entertaining it; ſmites on his breaſt, as if he would bruiſe that breaſt it was bred in; and ſmites on his thigh, as if he would break the legs that carried him in the way of it, Luke xv. 20. 21. and xviii. 13. Jer. xxxvi. 18. 19. And he returns with full purpoſe of, and endeavour after new obedience; with a heart inclined to keep God's ſtatutes always, even unto the end, Pſal. cxix. 33. and filled with carefulneſs in that point, vehement deſire of it, and zeal for it, 2 Cor. vii. 11.

2. The other chief branch of the promiſe of ſanctification, is the promiſe of actual grace and ſtrength for all holy obedience; whereby one may be enabled acceptably to perform obedience, in all and every act of mortification or dying unto ſin, and of living unto righteouſneſs; to do every duty that is required of him, and to bear whatſoever affliction is laid upon him, Pſalm xxii. 30. ‘A ſeed ſhall ſerve him.’ Zech. x. 12. ‘And I ‘will ſtrengthen them in the Lord, and they ſhall walk ‘up and down in his name.’ Hoſ. xiv. 9. ‘The ways ‘of the Lord are right, and the juſt ſhall walk in them.’ Ezek. xxxvi. 27. ‘And I will cauſe you to walk in my ‘ſtatutes, and ye ſhall keep my judgements and ‘do them.’ And Deut. xxx. the root promiſe of ſanctification, in circumciſing of the heart to love the Lord, is in the firſt place propoſed, ver. 6.; and then follow both the branches thereof together, to wit, the promiſe of repentance, and of actual grace for new obedience, ver. 6.; And thou ſhalt return and obey the voice of the Lord, and do all his commandments. God planted Adam a noble vine, made him as a green tree full of ſap, for bringing forth all fruits of holineſs: but breaking the firſt covenant, he and all mankind in him withered and died, under the curſe; upon which enſued an abſolute barrenneſs, that no fruit of holineſs could be expected from them more. But the ſecond Adam having engaged to ſatisfy the law, by bearing the curſe; there was thereupon made a promiſe of raiſing them up again to walk in newneſs of life. And it is performed in their habitual ſanctification, wrought in them immediately upon their union with Chriſt: for though ſanctification doth in the order of nature follow juſtification, and the new relation to God as a Friend, Father, and God: yet in reſpect of time, it is together and at once with them: in the ſame moment that a ſinner is juſtified, he is alſo ſanctified. But even when we are habitually ſanctified, through the habits of grace infuſed into us by the Spirit; we are not of ourſelves, that is to ſay, merely upon that ſtock, without new communications of actual grace by the ſame Spirit, able to bring forth any fruit of holineſs; even of our gracious ſelves we can do nothing, as our Saviour teacheth, John xv. 4. 5. And the apoſtle profeſſeth, in his own name, and in the name of all other gracious perſons, 2 Cor. iii. 4. And ſuch truſt have we through Chriſt to God-ward, ver. 5. ‘Not that we are ‘ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves; ‘but our ſufficiency is of God.’ For (ſaith he, Philip. ii. 13.) it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do. And this is no more ſtrange in the diſpenſation of grace, than that, in nature, freſh ſeed ſown in good ground, yet cannot ſpring up, and bring forth fruit, without warming and moiſtening influences from the heavens; or, that we have a power of natural motion, and yet cannot actually move a finger, without a common providential influence of the Spirit of God, in (or by) whom we live, and move, Acts xvii. 28. Wherefore the promiſe is extended, as we have ſaid, unto actual grace and ſtrength for the acts of holy obedience; and is ſo made forthcoming to believers in their actual and progreſſive ſanctification.

And thus ſuch a ſufficient proviſion and allowance of grace is made in the covenant for believers, as that it is poſſible for them, even in this life, to perform obedience to the law of Chriſt, the ten commandments, the eternal rule of righteouſneſs, in all the parts thereof, acceptably: ſo that there is no corruption ſo ſtrong, but one may get it acceptably mortified; nor does the Lord require any duty ſo difficult, but one may get it acceptably done; nor is there any trial or affliction ſo heavy, but one may get it acceptably borne. If it had not been ſo, our Lord would not have made doing whatſoever he commands, the diſtinguiſhing mark of his friends, John xv. 14. The apoſtle doth indeed deny, that we are ſufficient of ourſelves; but withal he teacheth, that there is a ſufficiency for us of God, 2 Cor. iii. 5. So the Lord himſelf taught him, in his own caſe, chap. xii. 9. My grace is ſufficient for thee. Without it were ſo, Chriſt's yoke could not be eaſy, nor his burden light, Matth. xi. 30. Nay, they would be like the yoke and burden of the law as a covenant of works, grievous to be born, chap. xxiii. 4. But his commandments are not grievous, 1 John v. 3. It was no vain boaſting the Apoſtle uſed, when he ſaid, I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me, Philip. iv. 13. Nor was Epaphras out, in ſuppoſing that the Coloſſian believers might ſtand complete in all the will of God, Col. iv. 12. David had God's own teſtimony, as to fact in that matter, Acts xiii. 22. I have found David, a man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfill all my will.

This bears no prejudice to the doctrine of the imperfection of the obedience of the ſaints in this life, maintained by orthodox divines againſt the papiſts and other perfectioniſts; which, as it is abundantly evident from the holy ſcriptures, hath alſo a concurring teſtimony to the truth thereof, in the breaſts of all the ſerious godly, to whom it is given by the Spirit to diſcern the holineſs of God, the ſpirituality of the law, and the corruption of their own nature. But I am perſuaded, that through the ſleight of Satan, that doctrine is, as ſeveral other precious truths are, a ſtone of ſtumbling to many, through their not adverting to the proviſion and allowance of grace made in this promiſe of the covenant, and that by this means many a poor ſinner is ſnared and ruined; and the hands of many ſaints weakened in the practice of holineſs; to the great diſadvantage of the cauſe of holineſs in the world.

To break that ſnare, and ſet this matter in a clear light, there are three things carefully to be diſtinguiſhed.

1. Diſtinguiſh between performing obedience, in all the parts thereof, and in all degrees of theſe parts. The latter indeed no man can, at any rate, do in this life, James iii. 2. Eccleſ. vii. 20. But the former every true believer may do, yea, and actually doth; ſo far as theſe parts are known to him: as appears from the text above alledged. In confounding of theſe there lies a ſnare. “The beſt of men,” ſay crafty ſinners, “do in many “things come ſhort of the obedience required of them: “and but ſo do we.” Now, that the ſaints do come ſhort of the degrees of every part of obedience required of them, is very true: but that they come ſhort of any of the parts themſelves known to them, which is the caſe of the crafty ſinner ſeeking ſhelter for his ſin here, is falſe. And herein the former do really diſtinguiſh themſelves from the latter; as David ſhewed himſelf of another make than Saul, by his fulfilling all God's will, in the ſeveral parts thereof, which Saul did not, Acts xiii. 22. It is here as in the caſe of a family, conſiſting of pliable children, and refractory ſervants. The maſter of the family preſcribes ſeveral pieces of work to be done by them all: and his grown children, who have perfect ſkill of their buſineſs, do them all exactly according to his mind; and thus glorified ſaints obey: the younger children, who are but learning to work, do out of regard to their father's command, indeed put hand to every one of them, but they can do none of them exactly; even ſo it is with the ſaints on earth: but refractory ſervants put hand to ſome of them, but quite neglect others of them; and this is the manner of the wicked and ſlothful ſervant, who ſeeks ſhelter here for his ſloth, and his partiality in obedience.

2. Diſtinguiſh between performing obedience perfectly, and performing it acceptably. No man can perform obedience perfectly in this life, Philip. iii. 12. but every true believer performs obedience acceptably, Acts x. 35. He that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. In confounding of theſe there is a ſnare. The crafty ſinner ſaith, “There is none that “performs obedience perfectly: and I am ſure I do “many things, though indeed not all.” Now, that true believers do not perform obedience perfectly, is very true; but that they do not perform it acceptably, which is the caſe of the crafty ſinner, as not univerſal, and therefore not ſincere, in his obedience, is altogether falſe. They who are maſters, know very well how to make this diſtinction in their domeſtic affairs. If a child, or pliable ſervant, ſhew a real good-will to obey their orders, they will accept of their work, though it is not done, in every point, as they would have it; ſo, if there be firſt a willing mind, diſcovered in ſincere endeavours, it is accepted of God for the ſake of Chriſt, according to that a man hath, 2 Cor. viii. 12. But if a ſervant ſhall quite neglect to put hand to a thing which he is peremptorily ordered to do, becauſe he cannot do it every way ſo as the maſter would have it done; this is conſtrued to be a contempt of the maſter's authority. And what other account can men imagine will be made in heaven of their conduct, in inſtances of plain and unqueſtionable duty, which they quite neglect; and of ſin, that they indulge themſelves in?

3. Diſtinguiſh between ability in ourſelves for performing obedience in all the parts thereof acceptably, and ability for it in Chriſt to be fetched in by faith. Neither ſaints nor ſinners have the former, 2 Cor. iii. 5. but all true believers have the latter: they have ſuch ability in Chriſt their head, Col. 2. 10. Ye are compleat in him. Philip iv. 13. I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me. And it is in the goſpel offered to all, ſo that whoſoever will may have it; Matth. xi. 28. Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. Verſe 29. Take my yoke upon you. If a diſcreet maſter command his ſervant to go and do a particular piece of work, it will not excuſe the ſervant's neglect thereof, that he wanted inſtruments neceſſary for it; becauſe he will reckon, that his bidding him do the work, did ſuppoſe his allowing him inſtruments, without which it could not be done; and that the ſervant ought to have called for them. But here lies a ruining ſnare to many. "We can do nothing of ourſelves," ſay they: and hereupon the ſluggard puts his hand in his boſom, and does nothing; but, having laid his head on his ſoft pillow, he ſleeps to death on the bed of ſloth and carnal eaſe. O that men would open their eyes and ſee through this piece of ruining deceit! No man ſhall be able to excuſe himſelf hereby, for the performance of holy obedience in all the parts thereof. Nay, this his conduct will bring him under a double guilt; one, of neglecting what it was his duty to do; another, of deſpiſing the grace offered him, to enable him thereto: and ſo he will be condemned, not becauſe he could not obey, but becauſe he would not. God hath never been a hard maſter to mankind, reaping where he did not ſow; but hath always made ſuitable allowance of grace and ſtrength to them for his work.

In the covenant of works, only perfect obedience could be accepted at the hands of the covenant people; and there was an allowance of grace and ſtrength conform, made to them in it. God made man upright, able to obey the law in perfection. And the law juſtly inſiſts for perfection of obedience ſtill, upon the ground of that proviſion which was made for it, though it is now loſt; being that it was loſt by man's own fault. In the covenant of grace, which is adapted to our fallen ſtate, ſincere obedience may be accepted, notwithſtanding of imperfections attending it. And accordingly, in it there is made a proviſion and allowance of ſuch a ſufficiency of grace and ſtrength, as thereby every piece of obedience required of the covenant people, may be done, even in this life; though not as it ſhould be done, yet ſo as it may be accepted: accepted, I ſay, not for its own ſake indeed, nor for the worker's ſake neither; but for Chriſt's ſake, in whoſe name it is required to be done and offered to God as a ſpiritual ſacrifice, acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. ii. 5. This is evident from the forecited paſſages, 2 Cor. iii. 5. and xii. 9. Philip. iv. 13. But withal, this ſufficiency of grace and ſtrength for that effect, is not lodged in the covenant people themſelves; but in Chriſt their head, in whom they have it, as the branches have a ſufficiency of ſap and juice in the vine, for their bringing forth fruit in the ſeaſon: Iſa. xlv. 24. 'Surely, ſhall one ſay, in the Lord 'have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength.' 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Thou 'therefore, my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is in 'Chriſt Jeſus.' And it is fetched into the ſoul by faith, believing the promiſe; Jer. xvii. 5. Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in the Lord. Verſe 8. For he ſhall be as a tree planted by the waters, Pſal. xxviii. 7. My heart truſted in him, and I am helped. And ſo every command of Chriſt, in this covenant, ſuppoſeth an allowance of grace and ſtrength, ſufficient for the performing of it in an acceptable manner. Accordingly, the declaration of grace ſtands on the front of the ten commandments, Exod. xx. 2. I am the Lord thy God, verſe 3. Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before me, &c. If the law came to us without the goſpel, we might have ſome excuſe for not doing what we are commanded; yet not ſo ſtrong, but that it would be overthrown, as in the caſe of Pagans, Rom. ii. 12. But ſince, with the commands of the law requiring obedience, the goſpel alſo comes to us, ſhewing how we may be enabled to obey them acceptably, and offering us that ability in Chriſt Jeſus; we are inexcuſable in that matter: the plea of the wicked and ſlothful ſervant is rejected; and he is condemned, not only for not giving obedience, but for refuſing grace and ſtrength offered him, to enable him thereto.

Wherefore, let us firmly believe this promiſe of the goſpel-covenant, that we may give obedience to the commands of the law: for where there is no hope of performing acceptably what is required, there can be no ſuitable endeavours after it. If the heart is hopeleſs in that matter, the hands will certainly hang down: and the iſſue muſt needs be, either a ceaſing from the duty altogether, or elſe a very faint performance thereof, unacceptable to God. But the faith of this promiſe will remove the cover of ſloth, animate to every good work, and bring in grace and ſtrength for all holy obedience; Having therefore theſe promiſes, dearly beloved, let us cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God, 2 Cor. vii. 1.

Since God hath not given to the church the command of ſanctification to be obeyed, without the promiſe of ſanctification to be believed; but he that hath ſaid, Waſh ye, make you clean, hath ſaid alſo, I will ſprinkle clean water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean; no man hath ground to imagine, that he doth ſo much as endeavour to comply with the true deſign of the command of ſanctification, who doth not firſt believe and embrace the promiſe of ſanctification; but falls to work with the nitre and ſoap of his own faithleſs endeavours, to waſh himſelf clean. Such a one miſtakes the true intent and import of the command of ſanctification as it ſtands in his Bible; and that as far as the command of a diſcreet maſter would be miſtaken by a fooliſh ſervant, who being bid to go and dig a parcel of ground, ſhould thereupon fall a digging it with his nails, never looking after a ſpade, mattock, or any other inſtrument proper to dig with.

Now, the promiſe of ſanctification, with its ſeveral branches, is grafted upon the promiſe of a reſurrection made to Chriſt. For the condition of the covenant being fulfilled, he, as the head, was according to the promiſe, brought again from the dead, and lives unto God, death having no more dominion over him: and in virtue hereof again, his members are brought to repentance from dead works, and unto newneſs of life. Hence we are ſaid to be, 'begotten again, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt 'from the dead,' 1 Pet. i. 3.; foraſmuch as we are raiſed with him, (Col. iii. 1.) unto newneſs of life (Rom. iv. 4, 5.) according to the promiſe, Iſa. xxvi. 19. 'Thy 'dead men ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall 'they ariſe.—The earth ſhall caſt out the dead;' namely, in the firſt place, the head Chriſt Jeſus, the firſt born from the dead, Col. i. 18. and then his myſtical members after him in their order. Compare Hoſ. vi. 2. 'In 'the third day he will raiſe us up, and we ſhall live in 'his ſight.'

Thus far of the promiſe of ſanctification. Follows,

IV. The Promiſe of PERSEVERANCE in Grace.

The promiſe of eternal life doth, in like manner, comprehend the promiſe of perſeverance in grace, to be conferred on all the covenant people, being juſtified, new related to God, and ſanctified; ſo that, being once brought into the ſtate of grace, they ſhall never fall away from it totally nor finally. This promiſe we have, Jer. xxxii. 40. 'And I will make an everlaſting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me.' Here they are ſecured on both ſides; that God will never caſt them off, and that they ſhall never deſert him. And that this benefit is included in the promiſe of eternal life, is clear from the apoſtle's adducing this laſt to prove it, Heb. x. 38. Now the juſt ſhall live by faith. Such is the malice of Satan, and the advantage he hath againſt the ſaints in this life; ſo manifold are the ſnares for them in the preſent evil world; ſuch a tender bud of heaven is the implanted grace of God in them; and ſo corrupt, fickle, and inconſtant are the hearts of the beſt, while here; that, if their perſeverance had not been ſecured by promiſe in the covenant, but made the condition of the covenant, and left to the management of their own free-will, they would have had but a ſorry reſtoration of it into the ſtate of grace; much as if they had got a ſpark of fire to keep alive in the midſt of the ocean. At that rate they might have all periſhed; and Jeſus Chriſt, notwithſtanding of the ſhedding of his blood for them, might have eternally remained a head without members, a king without ſubjects. But the glory of Chriſt, and the ſalvation of his redeemed, were not left at ſuch uncertainty. That perſeverance which the firſt Adam failed of, and was made the condition of the ſecond covenant, the ſecond Adam did undertake in their name: and thereupon was made the promiſe of their perſeverance. And he having accordingly perſevered unto the end, in obedience to the law for them, being obedient even to the death, it was purchaſed for them. Thus Chriſt's perſeverance in obedience to the law, till the condition of the covenant was perfectly fulfilled, is the ground in law upon which the perſeverance of the ſaints is infallibly ſecured, in virtue of the faithfulneſs of God in the promiſe.

Now, this promiſe begins to be performed to them, as ſoon as they are united unto Chriſt; and it goes on all along, untill their death, that they enter into glory: yea, ſtrictly ſpeaking, death is not the laſt, but a middle term of their perſeverance; after which it proceeds far more illuſtriouſly than before. Upon their union with the ſecond Adam, being ſavingly intereſted in his obedience which he perſevered in unto the end, they are confirmed, that they can no more fall away: even as the firſt Adam's natural ſeed would have been confirmed, upon his having completed the courſe of his probationary obedience, and fulfilling the condition of the covenant of works. The myſtical members of Chriſt do then obtain the former, as the reward of his continued obedience; as in the other ſuppoſed event, Adam's natural ſeed would have obtained the latter, as the reward of his continued obedience.

The promiſe of the perſeverance of the ſaints, ſeems to be grafted upon the promiſe of aſſiſtance made to Chriſt in his work. The Father promiſed to him, that he would uphold him, ſo as he ſhould not fail, Iſa. xliii. 1. 4. The which promiſe being made to him as a public perſon, carries along with it the preſervation and ſupport of his members, in all their temptations, trials, and dangers of periſhing; enſuring the ſafe conduct, as of the head, ſo of the myſtical members, through this world, till they be out of the reach of danger.

Now, of the promiſe of perſeverance, there are two chief branches.

1. A promiſe of continued influences of grace, to be from time to time conferred on them, being once brought into a ſtate of grace: Iſa. xxvii. 3. I will water it every moment. Their ſtock of inherent grace would ſoon fail if they were left to live upon it, without ſupply coming in from another hand; of itſelf it would wither away and die out, if it were not fed, Luke xxii. 32. John xv. 6. Innocent Adam had a larger ſtock of inherent grace than any one of the ſaints in this life, and yet he loſt it. But the grace of God in believers cannot be ſo loſt: for in virtue of the promiſe, there are continued influences ſecured for them; namely, preſerving influences, whereby grace given is kept from dying out, that as they are ſanctified in God the Father, ſo they are preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, Jude 1. exciting influences, whereby the grace preſerved beginning to languiſh, or being brought low by the prevailing of corruption and temptation, is ſtirred up and put in exerciſe again; and ſtrengthening influences, whereby the grace excited is increaſed, and gathers more ſtrength, to the overtopping of corruption, and repelling of temptation, Hoſ. xiv. 7. 'They ſhall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine.' Accordingly, their faith is never ſuffered to fail totally, but is preſerved, excited, and ſtrengthened; and all the other graces with it, and by it. And this is brought to paſs, through the communication of new ſupplies of grace to them, by the Spirit, from Chriſt their head, from which all the Body having nouriſhment miniſtered, (namely through the ſupply of the Spirit, Philip i. 19.) increaſeth with the increaſe of God, Col. ii. 19.

2. The other chief branch of this promiſe, is a promiſe of pardon, continued pardon for the ſins of their daily walk; whereby emergent differences betwixt God and them, come to be done away from time to time, ſo that a total rupture is prevented: Jer. xxxiii. 8. 'I will pardon all their iniquities.' Howbeit the juſtified have as to their ſtate, no need of a new formal pardon, but only of a manifeſtation of their former pardon: ſince the pardon given in juſtification, is never revoked, though by means of their after-ſins they may looſe ſight of it; yet as to their daily walk, they have great need of a formal pardon; foraſmuch as they are daily contracting new guilt: John xiii. 10. 'He that is waſhed, needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet.' For howbeit no ſins of the juſtified can bring them any more under the guilt of eternal wrath; nevertheleſs they do bring them under the guilt of fatherly anger, Pſalm lxxxix. 30. 31. 32. And therefore they need to pray every day, Our Father, forgive us our debts.

This pardon is given them, upon their renewed actings of faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and of repentance towards God; yet not for their believing and repenting, but for Chriſt's ſake, even as the firſt pardon is given, 1 John ii. 1, 2. and i. 7. Applying the blood of Chriſt afreſh to their ſouls, they are anew moved to repentance, turning from their ſins with hatred of them, ſorrow, ſhame, and ſelf-lothing for them. Looking by faith on him whom they have pierced, they mourn in renewed repentance: and ſo receive this pardon. For although repentance doth not go before, but follows after the pardon of ſin in juſtification; yet not only faith, but repentance alſo, goes before the pardons given to thoſe already juſtified; 1 John i. 7. 'If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowſhip one with another, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.' Ver. 9. 'If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us.' Therefore we are ordered to pray thus, 'Our Father, forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors,' Matth. vi. 9. 12.; to teach all the children of God, that if they would have their Father's forgiveneſs, they muſt in the firſt place forgive others: which is yet more clearly intimated, Luke xi. 4. 'And forgive us our ſins; for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us.' But the matter is not ſo ſtated, with reſpect to the pardon of ſin in juſtification; but that pardon is the ſpring of our forgiving others, Matth. xviii. 32. 33. For our hearty and acceptable forgiving of o-them, proceeds from true Chriſtian love to our neighbour; and that it flows from love to God; the which is kindled in our hearts by God's pardoning grace to us, Luke vii. 47. Eph. iv. 32. The reaſon of the difference lies here. The unjuſtified ſinner is under the guilt of revenging wrath, which ſeeks not the amendment, but the deſtruction of the guilty: wherefore till once it is removed, there can be no true evangelical repentance, no acceptable amendment, in the ſinner; theſe being really a reſtoration of him to life, incompatible with a legal deſtination of him to deſtruction. But the juſtified ſaint is only under the guilt of fatherly anger, which ſeeks not the deſtruction, but the recovery and amendment of the guilty; and therefore it is not removed untill he repent, turning from his ſin unto God in an acceptable manner; and that is the very amendment God ſeeketh in ſhewing his anger againſt him, as in the caſe of David, and of Peter.

And thus are the ſaints cauſed to perſevere in grace, both real and relative. The promiſe of continued influences ſecures not only the preſervation, but the renewed exerciſe of their grace, particularly of their faith and repentance; and the promiſe of continued pardon to them believing and repenting, ſecures the removal of the guilt of fatherly anger. The Spirit of Chriſt ever dwells in them and ſo continues an inviolable bond of their union with him: and dwelling in them, he recovers them when they are fallen, ſtirs up the holy fire of grace lying hid with aſhes of corruption. Then the withered hand of faith is again ſtretched out; and the man believes the promiſe of the pardon of guilt of eternal wrath, as to all his ſins: this melts his heart in kindly repentance; and ſo he believes the promiſe of continued pardon, as to fatherly anger, with reſpect to the ſins, the cauſes of God's preſent controverſy with him, and obtains pardon accordingly. By theſe means, matters are always kept from coming to a total rupture.

V. The promiſe of TEMPORAL BENEFITS.

In the fifth and laſt place, the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, conſidered in this period, comprehends a promiſe of temporal benefits to be conferred on them, and every one of them, being united to Chriſt; and that in ſuch meaſure, as God ſees meet for his own glory and their good. This promiſe ſtands embodied with the ſpiritual promiſes in the covenant, Ezek. xxxvi. 29. 'I will alſo ſave you from all your uncleanneſſes, and I 'will call for the corn, and will increaſe it.' Hoſ. ii. 22. 'The earth ſhall hear the corn, and the wine, and the 'oil, and they ſhall hear Jezreel.' Indeed this is not the principal thing contained in the promiſſory part of the covenant: but it is a neceſſary addition thereto; as the preſent ſtate of the ſaints, while in this world, doth require, Matth. vi. 33. And thus godlineſs, as the apoſtle obſerves, 1 Tim. iv. 8. hath promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

When God took man into the firſt covenant, he made proviſion in it for his temporal as well as for his ſpiritual and eternal welfare. He gave him a right to, and dominion over the creatures in the earth, ſea, and air; giving and granting unto him full power, ſoberly to uſe them, and to diſpoſe of them, for God's glory and his own comfort; and this lordſhip to be holden of him as ſovereign lord of all, firm and irreverſible, by the tenor of that covenant, as long as he ſhould continue in his obedience; but to be forfeited to all intents and purpoſes, in caſe he ſhould by tranſgreſſion break the covenant, Gen. i. 28. and ii. 16. 17. But man continued not in this honour: he brake God's covenant, and ſo fell from that his right to, and dominion over the creatures. By his tranſgreſſion he forfeited life itſelf; and conſequently loſt his covenant-right to all the means and comforts of life. And in this condition are all natural men, with reſpect to theſe things. They have no covenant-right to the means and comforts of life, whatever portion of them they are poſſeſſed of. All the right that they have to them, is a mere providential, precarious right; ſuch as a condemned man hath to his food, during the time his execution is delayed at the pleaſure of the prince. This is a moſt uncertain and uncomfortable holding: nevertheleſs it ſo far avails, that they are not, properly ſpeaking, violent poſſeſſors of temporal benefits; having juſt the ſame right to them, as to their forfeited life, while it is left them by the diſpoſal of providence. Wherefore the worſt of men may lawfully eat and drink, and take the benefit of other neceſſaries of life, whatever Satan may ſuggeſt to the contrary in the hour of temptation; yea, they ought to do it, and they ſin againſt God egregiouſly if they do it not; becauſe he hath ſaid, Thou ſhalt not kill.

But the ſecond Adam having undertaken to bear the curſe, and to give perfect obedience to the law, in the name of his ſpiritual ſeed; there was thereupon made a promiſe of reſtoring to them the forfeited life, with all the means thereof: and particularly, a promiſe of the good things requiſite for the ſupport and comfort of their temporal life in this world, till at death they be carried home to heaven. And the performance of this promiſe to them is begun immediately upon their uniting with Chriſt: then their covenant relation to the firſt Adam is found to be lawfully diſſolved; the forfeiture is taken off; and a new covenant-right to the creatures is given them: 1 Cor. iii. 22. 23. All are yours, and ye are Chriſt's. And it goes on all along till death; ſo much of this their ſtock being from time to time put into their hands, as the great Adminiſtrator ſees needful for them. And whether that be little or much, they do from that moment poſſeſs it by a new title: it is theirs by covenant.

Now, this promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe made to Chriſt of his inheriting all things. For they that are his, are joint-heirs with him, Rom. viii. 17. to inherit all things too, through him, Rev. xxi. 7. The eſtate and honour which the firſt Adam loſt for himſelf and family, by his diſobedience in breaking of the firſt covenant, was, in the ſecond covenant, made over by promiſe to Chriſt the ſecond Adam, for him and his, upon the condition of his obedience. The which obedience being performed, the whole ancient eſtate of the family was recovered, together with the honours thereunto belonging. The ancient dominion was reſtored, in the perſon of Chriſt as ſecond Adam: and all his myſtical members partake thereof in him. This the Pſalmiſt teacheth, Pſalm. viii. 4. 'What is man, that thou art 'mindful of him? and the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt 'him?' Ver. 5. 'For thou haſt made him a little 'lower than the angels, and haſt crowned him with glo'ry and honour.' Ver. 6. 'Thou madeſt him to have 'dominion over the works of thy hands: thou haſt put 'all things under his feet;' Ver. 7. 'All ſheep and 'oxen, yea, and the beaſts of the field. Ver. 8. 'The 'fowl of the air, and the fiſh of the ſea, and whatſoever 'paſſeth through the paths of the ſeas.' Though there is here a manifeſt view to the firſt Adam, and all mankind in him, as they were happily and honourably ſtated at their creation; yet we are infallibly aſſured by the apoſtle, that this paſſage is meant of Chriſt the ſecond Adam, Heb. ii. 6. 7. 8. 9. and his myſtical members in him, ver. 6. Accordingly, Abraham had the promiſe, that he ſhould be heir of the world, and he had it through the righteouſneſs of faith, i. e. the righteouſneſs which faith apprehends, Rom. iv. 13. Now, Abraham was a type of Chriſt, and the father of the faithful, who are all bleſſed as he was. Therefore this promiſe was primarily to Chriſt, through the righteouſneſs by him wrought; ſecondarily to his members, through the ſame righteouſneſs apprehended by faith.

This promiſe of temporal benefits, carries believers poſſeſſion of the ſame, as far as their need in that kind doth go, Philip. iv. 19. Of which need, not they themſelves, but the Father is the fit judge, Matth. vi. 32. Accordingly, there are two chief branches of the promiſe, namely, a promiſe of proviſion, and a promiſe of protection.

1. A promiſe of proviſion of good things neceſſary for this life; upon which they may confidently truſt God for them, whatever ſtraits they are at any time reduced to: Pſal. xxxiv. 10. The young lions do lack, and ſuffer hunger: but they that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing. Their meat and drink are ſecured for them in the covenant: the which being perceived by faith, cannot miſs to give them a peculiar reliſh, however mean their fare be, as to quantity or quality: Iſa. xxxiii. 16. ‘ Bread ſhall be given him, his water ſhall be ſure.’ They ſhall be fed, though they be not feaſted: Pſalm xxxvii. 3. ‘ Verily thou ſhalt be fed.’ They ſhall have enough, they ſhall be ſatisfied, Joel ii. 26. And even days of famine ſhall not mar that their ſatisfaction: Pſalm xxxvii. 19. ‘ In the days of famine they ſhall be ‘ ſatisfied.’ And as ſleep for their refreſhment is neceſſary too, the promiſe bears it alſo: Prov. iii. 24. ‘ Thou ſhalt ly down, and thy ſleep ſhall be ſweet.’ They need cloathing, and proviſion is made as to it; Matth. vi. 30. ‘ If God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, ‘ ſhall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little ‘ faith?’ Having made them, by covenant, a new grant of life and of a body, which is more than meat and cloathing, he will not refuſe them theſe leſſer things neceſſary for the ſupport of the greater: Verſe 25. ‘ Is ‘ not the life more than meat, and the body than rai‘ ment?’ Thus our fallen firſt parents, having believed and embraced the promiſe of life, had, with the new grant of life, food and raiment provided for them, as is particularly taken notice of, Gen. iii. 15. 18. 21. A bleſſing alſo on their labours is promiſed, and ſucceſs in their lawful callings and affairs, Iſa. lxv. 21, 22, 23. In a word, the covenant bears, that God will withhold no good thing from them that live uprightly, Pſalm lxxxiv. 11.

2. There is alſo a promiſe of protection from the evil things that concern this life: Pſalm xci. 10. ‘ There ‘ ſhall no evil befal thee,’ Ver. 11. ‘ For he ſhall give ‘ his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ‘ ways.’ Together with the bread and the water provided by the covenant for them to live on, the munitions of rocks are ſecured to them for a place of defence, where they may ſafely enjoy them, Iſa. xxxiii. 16. The ſame Lord who is a ſun to nouriſh them, will be a ſhield to protect them, Pſalm lxxxiv. 11. He will be a wall of fire round about them, to cheriſh them, and to keep off, ſeare, and fright away their enemies, Zech. ii. 5. The covenant yields a broad covert for the ſafety of believers: Pſalm xci. 4. He ſhall cover thee with his feathers. The covert of the covenant is ſtretched out over their bodies; over their health, to preſerve it, while it is neceſſary for God's honour and their own good, Prov. iii. 7. ‘ Fear the Lord, and depart from evil.’ verſe 8. ‘ It ‘ ſhall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones.’ over their lives, as long as God has any ſervice for them in this world; ſo in ſickneſs they are carefully ſeen to, Pſal. xli. 3. 4. Thou wilt make all his bed in his ſickneſs: their diſeaſes healed, and they recovered, Pſal. ciii. 3. 4. And they are delivered from enemies that ſeek their life, Pſal. xli. 2. Yea, when death rides in triumph, having made havock on all ſides of them, as by ſword and peſtilence, they are found ſafe under the covert of the covenant, Pſal. xci. 6. 7. This covert is ſtretched over their names, credit, and reputation; Job v. 21. Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue: either the tongues of virulent men ſhall not reach them; or they ſhall not be able to make the dirt ſtick on them; or elſe if they ſhall be permitted to make it ſtick for a while, the covert of the covenant ſhall wipe all off at length, and their righteouſneſs ſhall be brought forth as the light, and their judgment as the noon-day, Pſal. xxxvii. 6. It is ſtretched over their houſes and dwelling places; Pſal. xci. 10. Neither ſhall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. It goes round about their ſubſtance, making a hedge about all that they have, Job i. 10. Yea, and there is a lap of it to caſt over their widows and children, when they are dead and gone: Jer. xlix. 11. ‘ Leave thy fatherleſs children, I will preſerve them a‘ live, and let the widows truſt in me.’

Thus far of the promiſe of eternal life, conſidered in the ſecond period, to wit, from union with Chriſt, untill death.

PERIOD III.

From death through eternity.

IT remains that we conſider the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, as it is accompliſhed to, and hath its effect upon them, from their death, all along through eternity. And ſo the great lines of it are two; to wit, a promiſe of victory over death, and a promiſe of everlaſting life in heaven. And theſe things I ſhall touch more briefly, having handled them at large elſewhere.

I. The promiſe of Victory over death.

The promiſe of eternal life comprehends a promiſe of victory over death, to be conferred on all and every one of the ſpiritual ſeed, in the encounter with the laſt enemy: Iſ. xxv. 8. ‘ He will ſwallow up death in victory, ‘ and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all ‘ faces.’ After the wearisome march, and the reiterated fights of faith they have in their paſſage through the wilderneſs of this world, they have to paſs the Jordan of death, and to fight the laſt battle with that enemy. But the victory is ſecured on their ſide by promiſe; of which there are two chief branches, to wit, a promiſe of diſarming death, and a promiſe of deſtroying it.

1. There is a promiſe of diſarming death to the dying believer; ſo that it ſhall at no rate be able to reach him a ruinating ſtroke: Hoſ. xiii. 14. O death, I will be thy plagues; namely, by taking the ſting quite away, 1 Cor. xv. 55. When ſin entered into the world, death followed; and ſin furniſhed death with an envenomed ſting, wherewith to kill the ſinner, both ſoul and body at once; the holy law, with its curſe, fixed this ſting in death's hand; having firſt ſo pointed it, that it could not miſs of doing execution. But Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, having undertaken to bear the curſe, and to die in the room and ſtead of his people; there was thereupon made a promiſe of diſarming death to them: ſince the ſurety ſuffering the pains of death armed with its ſting, the principal behoved to be liberate from ſuffering the ſame over again. And thus the covenant ſecures believers from death's harm. Yea, it ſo alters the nature thereof, that it makes it a quite new thing to them from what it was originally. Hence death is found in the inventory of the ſaints treaſure, 1 Cor. iii. 22. ‘ Whether life, ‘ or death, or things preſent, or things to come; all is ‘ yours.’ Not only is life theirs by the covenant, but death is theirs too by the ſame tenor. And indeed as it is new-framed by the covenant, it is of excellent uſe to them, bringing them into a ſtate of perfection, and everlaſting reſt, Heb. xii. 23. Rev. xiv. 13.

This promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe of victory made to Chriſt, as appears from the forecited Iſa. xxv. 8. He encountered death armed with its ſting, on purpoſe to diſarm it to his people: he received the ſting thereof into his own ſoul and body, that they might be delivered from it. Wherefore the promiſe of victory over death made to him, ſecures the diſarming of it to them. And as the promiſe makes them ſafe, in the encounter with that laſt enemy; ſo the lively faith of it may deliver from fear in the caſe.

2. There is a promiſe of deſtroying death to the dead believer, by a glorious reſurrection at the laſt day: Hoſ. xiii. 14. O grave, I will be thy deſtruction. When death entered into the world by ſin, then came the grave, as death's attendant, to keep faſt his priſoners for him, till the general judgment: and thus the grave ſerves death, in the caſe of all who die in a ſtate of enmity with God. But Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, having in the ſecond covenant engaged to go, in the room and ſtead of his people, death's priſoner, into the grave, and there to lie till their debt ſhould be fully paid; there was made thereupon a promiſe of a glorious reſurrection to his members, whereby they ſhall be put out of the reach of death for good and all, at the laſt day: for then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up in victory, 1 Cor. xv. 45; and then ſhall they triumphantly ſing, 'O death, where is thy ſting? 'O grave, where is thy victory?' ver. 55. And thus the covenant ſecures the forming anew of their diſſolved bodies, the return of their departed ſouls into them, and their coming forth of their graves glorious, immortal, and incorruptible. In the faith of which, the ſaints may with comfort conſider the grave as but a retiring place, from whence after a while they ſhall come forth with unſpeakable joy.

This promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe of a reſurrection made to Chriſt, Iſa. xxvi. 19. 'Thy dead men 'ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe.' The promiſe of a reſurrection being made to him as a public perſon, it muſt take place alſo in his myſtical members, whoſe federal head he was. Hence the Pſalmiſt ſays, his fleſh ſhould reſt in hope, namely, in the grave, in hope of a glorious reſurrection, becauſe the holy one Jeſus was not to ſee corruption, Pſal. xvi. 9. 10. with Acts xiii. 35.; thereby teaching, that Chriſt's reſurrection would inſure his glorious reſurrection, as a member of the myſtical body, by faith. And indeed there is ſuch a connection between Chriſt's reſurrection and the happy reſurrection of the ſaints, that they ſtand and fall together: 1 Cor. xv. 16. 'For if the dead riſe 'not, then is not Chriſt raiſed.'

II. The promiſe of everlaſting Life in Heaven.

The promiſe of eternal life doth, in the laſt place, comprehend a promiſe of everlaſting life in heaven, to be conferred on all and every one of the ſpiritual ſeed after death: Dan. xii. 2. 'And many of them that ſleep in 'the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life.' This was more ſparingly revealed under the Old Teſtament than under the New, 2 Tim. i. 10. yet was it, even then, ſo clearly revealed, that all the holy patriarchs lived and died in the faith of it, Heb. xi. 13.—16. The fathers before Abraham ſaw it in the promiſe of the ſeed of the woman, which was to bruiſe the ſerpent's head: and from Abraham they ſaw it in the promiſe of Canaan. But now by the goſpel, this life and immortality are ſet in a full light. By the breach of the firſt covenant that life was forfeited, the heavenly paradiſe loſt to Adam and all mankind: in token whereof he was turned out of the earthly paradiſe. But the ſecond Adam having, in the ſecond covenant, undertaken the redemption of the forfeited inheritance, there was a new promiſe of it made in favour of his ſeed; and they are inveſted with an indefeaſible right thereto, in the firſt moment of their union with Chriſt by faith; howbeit they are not inſtantly put in poſſeſſion thereof. And when they do come to the poſſeſſion, it is not given them all at once; but at two different periods, in different meaſures; according to the two chief branches of the promiſe thereof, namely, a promiſe of tranſporting their ſouls into heaven at death, and a promiſe of tranſporting them ſoul and body thither at the laſt day.

1. There is a promiſe of tranſporting their ſouls, ſeparate from their bodies, into heaven, and there to behold and enjoy the face of God. And it is accompliſhed to them immediately after their death. It was moſt plainly declared and applied by our Saviour to the penitent thief on the croſs, Luke xxiii. 43. To day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe. But it was in the faith of it, that the covenant was to David, even in the face of death, all his ſalvation, and all his deſire, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. and that Paul had a deſire to depart, knowing that he was to be with Chriſt upon his departure, Philip. i. 23. it is in the faith of the ſame, that the whole church militant doth groan earneſtly, deſiring to be clothed upon with the houſe which is from heaven, that is the heavenly glory, 2 Cor. v. 2. Indeed the curſe of the firſt covenant did, upon the breaking of that covenant, fall to their lot, as well as to the reſt of mankind: and that curſe would natively have iſſued in cutting them aſunder as covenant breakers, and appointing them their portion with the hypocrites; but that being executed to the full on Chriſt their head, to the parting aſunder of his holy ſoul and body, it can operate no more on them. Wherefore, howbeit others die in virtue of the curſe, ſeparating their ſouls and bodies, the one to the place of torment, the other to the grave, till the laſt day; yet they do not ſo die. Being redeemed from the curſe, Gal. iii. 13. they ſhall never ſee ſuch death, John viii. 51. But they die in conformity to Chriſt their head, being predeſtinate to be conformed to his image, (Rom. viii. 29.) who is the firſt born from the dead, Col. i. 18. and the firſt fruits of them that ſleep, which every man is to follow in his own order, 1 Cor. xv. 20. 23. That as in the caſe of the head, ſo in the caſe of the members, as death came on by ſin, ſin may go off by death. In virtue of their communion with Chriſt in his death, the union betwixt their ſouls and mortal bodies is diſſolved: their ſouls diſmiſſed in peace into the heavenly glory, there to remain till ſuch time as their bodies, laid down in the grave, come, in virtue of their communion with Chriſt in his reſurrection, to put on incorruption and immortality.

This promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe of acceptance made to Chriſt, when he ſhould make his ſoul an offering for ſin. In confidence of which acceptance, dying on the croſs he commended his ſpirit, or ſoul, into the hands of his Father, Luke xxiii. 46. and told the penitent thief, he was to be that very day in paradiſe, though then it was towards the evening of it, ver. 43. The words in which he commended his ſoul to his Father, were David's, Pſal. xxx. 5. 'Into thine hand I 'commit my ſpirit'; thereby intimating, that the reception of the ſouls of his dying people into the hands of the Father, depends on the reception of his ſoul into them. For his ſoul was, in virtue of the covenant, ſo received, as a public ſoul, repreſenting the ſouls of his whole ſeed: whence David, ſpeaking of Chriſt, ſaith, Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, Pſal. xvi. 10. with Acts ii. 31. Wherefore in the promiſe of receiving Chriſt's ſoul, was comprehended a promiſe of receiving the ſouls of all his myſtical members.

2. There is a promiſe of tranſporting them, ſoul and body, into heaven, there to be ever with the Lord; which is to be accompliſhed unto them at the laſt day: Dan. xii. 2. 'And many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the 'earth ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to 'ſhame and everlaſting contempt.' Ver. 3. 'And they 'that be wiſe, ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteouſneſs,' (or, rather they that do righteouſly, of the many,) 'as 'the ſtars for ever and ever.' Whereas the many mentioned, ver. 2. and comprehending all, are there divided into two ſorts, in reſpect of their future ſtate, in the event of the reſurrection; the happy part, being the firſt ſort of them, is deſigned, ver. 3. from their preſent ſtate in this life, the wiſe, and they that do righteouſly; that is, in New Teſtament language, the righteous, Matth. xiii. 43. and they that have done good, John v. 29. in oppoſition to the fooliſh, and they that have done evil. Thoſe having come forth, unto the reſurrection of life, John v. 29. ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever and ever: yea, they ſhall ſhine forth as the ſun, in the kingdom of their Father, Matth. xiii. 43. This is the higheſt pinnacle of the ſaints hope; wherein they, in their whole man, ſhall have the whole of eternal life in its perfection. Man had a conditional promiſe hereof, in the covenant of works; but the condition being broken, the benefit promiſed was loſt: heaven's gates were ſhut againſt Adam, and all his natural ſeed. Howbeit Chriſt the ſecond Adam, having undertaken to fulfill the condition of the ſecond covenant, which was ſtated from an exact conſideration of the demands that the broken firſt covenant had on his ſpiritual ſeed; there was a new promiſe of it made in their favour; and it is abſolute. And to his fulfilling of that condition, both the making and performing of this promiſe are owing allenarly. None other's works but his could ever have availed to reduce the forfeiture, and purchaſe a new right: and his works do it ſo effectually, that they ſecure the putting all his ſeed in actual poſſeſſion of the purchaſed inheritance; ſo that they ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. v. 17.

This is the promiſe of the covenant, which is the laſt of all in performing; as being the conſummation of all the reſt, not to be accompliſhed until the myſtery of God be finiſhed. The Old Teſtament ſaints died in the faith of it; and it is not as yet performed to them: nay, the New Teſtament ſaints have died, and ſtill muſt die, in the faith of it; not having it performed to them neither, till it be all at once accompliſhed to the whole ſeed together, at the end of the world. Thus this promiſe remains to be an unſeen object of faith to the church militant; and to the church triumphant too, whoſe fleſh muſt reſt in hope till that day, Pſal. xvi. 9. But becauſe the term prefixed for performing thereof, is, in the depth of ſovereign wiſdom, for reaſons becoming the divine perfections, ſet at ſuch a diſtance; there have been ſome ſignal pledges given of it, to confirm the churches faith in the caſe. Such was the tranſlating of Enoch, ſoul and body into heaven, in the patriarchal period; Elias, in the time of the law; and our bleſſed Saviour in the time of the goſpel.

This promiſe is grafted upon the promiſe of a glorious exaltation made to Chriſt; by which was ſecured to him his aſcenſion, in ſoul and body, into heaven, and entering into his glory: Luke xxiv. 26. 'Ought not 'Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter 'into his glory?' Both theſe were neceſſary in reſpect of the covenant: his ſuffering was neceſſary, in reſpect of the condition thereof, which behoved to be fulfilled by him; and his entering into his glory was neceſſary, in reſpect of the promiſe thereof, which behoved to be fulfilled unto him. Now, Chriſt aſcended and entered into glory, as a public perſon, as a forerunner entering for us, Heb. vi. 20. And therefore the promiſe, in virtue of which he aſcended and entered into it, comprehends the aſcenſion and glory of all his myſtical members, who are therefore ſaid to ſit together in heavenly places, in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. ii. 6. And then, and not till then, will the promiſe be perfectly fulfilled to him, when all the myſtical members are perſonally there, together with their head; when the whole ſeed perfectly recovered from death, ſhall reign there, together with him, in life, for evermore.

And this ſhall ſuffice to have been ſaid here of the promiſe of eternal life, in the laſt period thereof.

INFERENCE from the promiſe of eternal life.

Thus we have opened the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, with the effects thereof on them, in its ſeveral periods; to wit, before their union with Chriſt; and then, from their union with Chriſt untill death; and finally, from their death, through eternity: the whole ſpringing out of the promiſes peculiar to Chriſt himſelf. For as theſe laſt were fulfilled, in preſerving the root of Jeſſe, notwithſtanding of the various changes that family did undergo, in which it was often in hazard of extinction, until ſuch time as Chriſt ſprang out of it, as a root out of a dry ground, Iſa. xi. 1. 10. and liii. 2.; and then, in carrying him up, and carrying him through in his work, notwithſtanding of the load of imputed ſin that lay upon him, and the oppoſition he met with in the world, and the powers of hell, engaged againſt him, Iſa. xlix. 8. and l. 7. 8. 9.; and finally, in raiſing him from the dead, taking him up into heaven, and glorifying him there for ever and ever, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Even ſo the promiſe of eternal life to the elect, included therein, is fulfilled, in preſerving of them in their unconverted ſtate, till ſuch time as they are united to Chriſt by faith: and then, in carrying them up, and carrying them through, in favour and communion with God, during the whole time of their continuance in this world, notwithſtanding of all the oppoſition from the devil, the world and the fleſh: and laſtly, in raiſing them up at the laſt day, and receiving them, ſoul and body, into heaven, there to be ever with the Lord.

And now, from the whole of what hath been ſaid on that point, we deduce the following inference, to wit, "That all the benefits of the covenant of grace beſtow-"ed, or to be beſtowed on ſinners, are the ſure mer-"cies of David," Iſa. lv. 3. This may be taken up in theſe three things following.

1. They are all of them mercies, pure mercies, without reſpect to any worthineſs in the receivers. They are all free-grace gifts; for the covenant is to us a covenant of grace, from the firſt to the laſt; Eph. ii. 7. 'That in the ages to come, he might ſhew the exceeding 'riches of his grace, in his kindneſs towards us, through 'Chriſt Jeſus.' Ver. 8. 'For by his grace ye are ſaved 'through faith; and that not of yourſelves: it is the 'gift of God.' The receiving of believers into glory is, after all their working, as much of free grace, as the quickening of them, when being dead in ſin, they could do no good work at all. They have their faith and their works, their grace and their glory, their temporal and their eternal good things; all of them equally of free grace; for they are all ſecured to them in, and flow from the promiſe of the covenant made before the world began; and are founded on a ground which they had no manner of hand in the laying of.

2. They all are the mercies of David, that is, of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of David. His obedience and death are the alone channel wherein the free grace of the covenant runs, bringing along with it all thoſe mercies, Eph. ii. 7. It is to the holineſs of his nature, the righteouſneſs of his life, and the ſatisfaction made by his death, they are all owing: for upon theſe alone, and upon nothing in us, whether before or after converſion, is the promiſe of eternal life founded. Our believing through grace, while others continue in unbelief; our ſeeing God in glory, while others are caſt into utter darkneſs; the bread we eat, and the water we drink, in this life, together with the hidden manna we ſhall eat of, and the rivers of pleaſures we ſhall drink of, in heaven; are equally the purchaſe of our Redeemer's blood.

3. Laſtly, They are all of them ſure mercies. What of them the ſaints have already got, they could not have miſſed of; and what of them they have not as yet received, is as ſure as if they had it in hand, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. David perceived that the Lord had confirmed him king over Iſrael; and that upon this ground, for his kingdom was lift up on high, 1 Chron. xiv. 2. Now, Saul's kingdom was lift up on high too: and yet he loſt it. But David had his kingdom by the covenant; Saul, not ſo; hence the former ſeeing the promiſe begin to be accompliſhed, rightly concluded, that it ſhould hold on till it was fully performed: notwithſtanding that the latter fell off from his excellency. Uncovenanted mercies are tottering mercies; but the covenant mercies are ſure. The former may flow plentifully for a while, and yet at length be quite dried up for ever; but the ſpring of the latter being once opened, will flow for evermore, without interruption. The promiſe is infallibly ſure, and cannot miſcarry; it is ſure from the nature of God who made it; even from his infallible truth, and from his juſtice too in reſpect of Chriſt, 2 Theſſ. i, 6,

Thus far of the ſecond part of the covenant, namely, the promiſſory part.

No proper Penalty of the Covenant of Grace.

A penalty is no eſſential part of a proper covenant. It is but accidental only, ariſing not from the nature of a covenant, but from the nature of the covenanters, who being fallible, may break either the condition or the promiſe; in which caſe a penalty is annexed, to ſecure the performance of the condition on the one ſide, and of the promiſe on the other. Wherefore ſince the party-contracting on man's ſide, on whom it lay to perform the condition of this covenant, was infallible; as was the party-contracting on heaven's ſide, on whom it lay to perform the promiſe of it: there was no place at all for a penalty thereof, properly ſo called; as there was none in the firſt covenant, but upon one ſide. In the ſecond covenant, the Father and the Son abſolutely truſted each the other. Upon the credit of the Son, the Father received all the Old Teſtament ſaints into heaven, before the price of their redemption was paid; and upon the credit of the Father, the Son, near ſeventeen hundred years ago, paid the full price of the redemption of the elect, while vaſt multitudes of them were not as yet born into the world, and many of them are not even to this day.

It is true, the parties contracted for, are fallible: but then the performing of the condition of this covenant, as ſuch, doth in no caſe ly upon them; Chriſt having taken it intirely on himſelf, and accordingly performed it already. While they continue in their natural ſtate, without Chriſt, they are perſonally in the covenant of works, not in the covenant of grace. And being once become believers in Chriſt, the promiſe of the covenant of grace ſtands always entire to them, notwithſtanding of all their failures; and muſt needs ſtand ſo, in virtue of the condition of the covenant already performed, and judicially ſuſtained, as performed by Jeſus Chriſt for them. And though they are fallible in reſpect of their actions, as long as they are in this world; yet from the moment of their union with Chriſt by faith, they are not fallible in reſpect of their ſtate: they can no more fall out of their ſtate of grace, than the ſaints in heaven can. Even in their caſe, there is no place for the curſe, or eternal wrath, the only penalty by which they ſhould loſe their right to the promiſe of the covenant. They are indeed liable to God's fatherly anger and chaſtiſements for their ſins; but foraſmuch as by theſe there is no interciſion of their right to the promiſe; and that they are not vindictive, but medicinal; they cannot be accounted a proper penalty of the covenant of grace, however they may be improperly ſo called; but do really belong to the promiſſory part, and adminiſtration of the covenant, Pſalm lxxxix. 30, 31, 32, 33. Heb. xii. 5, 6, 7. Where the condition of a covenant is fully performed, and legally ſuſtained as ſuch, in favour of the party who is to receive the benefit promiſed, it is evident there can be no more place for a proper penalty of the covenant on that ſide; and ſo it is here, in the caſe of believers.

And thus we have diſpatched the third head, namely, The parts of the covenant.

H E A D IV.

The ADMINISTRATION of the Covenant of Grace.

IT remains now to conſider the adminiſtration of the covenant. And ſince the ſalvation of ſinners doth entirely depend on this covenant; and that all the diſpenſations of God toward them, for carrying on and completing that gracious deſign, are regulated according to it: and ſince withal it is in itſelf a deepeſt ſecret, being a compact entered into betwixt the Father and the Son, before the world began: it is altogether neceſſary, that there be an adminiſtration of it, whereby it may be rendered effectual to the end for which it was made. And hereof we will have a view, by conſidering, 1. The party on whom the adminiſtration of the covenant is devolved; 2. The object of the adminiſtration; 3. The ends of it; and, 4. The nature of it. Of all which in order.

I. Chriſt the Adminiſtrator of the covenant.

SUCH is the nature of the thing, the weight and importance of this adminiſtration, that none who was not fit to be a party-contractor in the covenant, could be meet to be intruſted therewith. Wherefore the adminiſtration of the covenant was devolved upon no mere man nor angel, but on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond Adam: and he hath it by the covenant itſelf, as a reward of his work. It was therein made over to him by promiſe; particularly, by the promiſe of a glorious exaltation, to be the Father's honorary ſervant, prime miniſter of heaven, mentioned before, and now to be more fully and diſtinctly unfolded. It was for this cauſe the laſt Adam was made a quickening ſpirit, as ſaith the text, 1 Cor. xv. 45. with which we ſhall compare the promiſe.

Iſa. xlix. 8. I will——give thee for a covenant of the people.

Theſe are the Father's words to Chriſt the ſecond Adam, the great ſurety-ſervant, choſen to make reparation of the injury done to the honour of God by the ſpiritual Iſrael, ver. 3.; the light of the Gentiles, ver. 6. which is none other but he, Luke ii. 32. Acts xiii. 47; whoſe appearing in the world made the acceptable time, the day of ſalvation, as in the preceding part of this 8th verſe, compared with 2 Cor. vi. 2. And they are a promiſe made to him of a reward of his work, in fulfilling the condition of the covenant by his obedience and death: for they are immediately ſubjoined to the promiſe of aſſiſtance therein; I will preſerve thee, (namely, in the courſe of thy obedience, doing, and dying, ſo that thou ſhalt not be utterly ſwallowed up of death, but ſwim through theſe deepeſt waters ſafe aſhore,) and give thee for a covenant of the people; or ſimply, of people. Not that Chriſt was never given for a covenant of the people till he aroſe from the dead; nay, he was ſo given immediately after the fall, Gen. iii. 15.: but that it was always upon the view, and in conſideration of his obedience and death he was ſo given; and that he was at his reſurrection and aſcenſion ſolemnly inveſted with that office.

This giving, according to the ſcripture-phraſeology, imports a divine conſtitution or ſettlement. So it is ſaid, ver. 6. 'I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that 'thou mayeſt be my ſalvation unto the end of the earth;' i. e. I will conſtitute or ſet thee for a light: even as God ſet (Heb. gave) the ſun and moon in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth, Gen. i. 17. Thus the people making or appointing a captain, are ſaid to give a head or captain, Numb. xiv. 4. Neh. ix. 17. Wherefore, to give Chriſt for a covenant of the people, is to conſtitute or make him the covenant; whereby the people, any people, Jews or Gentiles, may become God's people, and receive all the benefits of that covenant-relation to God. This then ſpeaks Jeſus Chriſt to be the ordinance of God for the reconciliation of ſinners to God, and their partaking of all the benefits of the covenant: even as the ſun is the ordinance of heaven for light to the world, unto whoſe light all have free acceſs; though in the mean time it doth not enlighten the blind, nor thoſe who will needs live in darkneſs, becauſe they hate the light. This honour was ſecured to him in the promiſſory part of the covenant, in conſideration of his fulfilling the conditionary part thereof.

Now, that Chriſt is by the authority of heaven conſtituted and made the covenant, imports theſe two things. (1.) He is conſtitute adminiſtrator of the covenant: as he had the burden of purchaſing the promiſed benefits, ſo he hath the honour of diſtributing and conferring them on ſinners. This meaning of the phraſe appears from the following words, declaring the end of this conſtitution, 'to eſtabliſh the earth, to cauſe to inherit the 'deſolate heritages;' ver. 9. 'That thou mayeſt ſay to 'the priſoners, Go forth.' See chap. xlii. 6. 7. (2.) The whole of the covenant is in him: ſo that he that hath Chriſt, hath the covenant, the whole of the covenant; he that hath not Chriſt, hath no ſaving part nor lot in it. This is the native import of this unuſual phraſe, occurring only here, and chap. xlii. 6. and is confirmed by the following words, to eſtabliſh the earth. A covenant is an eſtabliſhing thing. When the firſt covenant was broken, the foundations of the earth were, ſo to ſpeak, looſened, that it could no more ſtand firm, until Chriſt was given for a covenant to eſtabliſh it again: he bore up the pillars thereof, in virtue of the new covenant in himſelf. And if his adminiſtration of the covenant were once at an end on the earth, the earth will ſtand no longer, but be reduced to aſhes. The ſaying concerning the ſacramental cup, 'This cup is the New Teſtament 'in my blood,' 1 Cor. xi. 25. is ſomewhat a-kin to the expreſſion in the text, and ſerves to confirm the ſenſe given of it. For it ſurely bears, (1.) That the ſacramental cup is the miniſtration of the New Teſtament to believing receivers, ſo that receiving the one in faith, they receive the other too. (2.) That the New Teſtament is in Chriſt's blood; ſo that their communion of the benefits of the teſtament, is by their communion of the blood of Chriſt, 1 Cor. x. 16.

Now, from theſe texts compared, it appears, That the adminiſtration of the covenant of grace is devolved on Jeſus Chriſt the Second Adam, for that end made a quickening ſpirit, having the whole of the covenant in him.

This conſtitution, lodging the adminiſtration of the covenant in the perſon of the Mediator Chriſt Jeſus, is at once ſuited to the glory of God, the caſe of ſinners, and the honour of Chriſt himſelf.

1. It is ſuited to the glory of God the offended party. In the face of Jeſus the adminiſtrator, ſhines forth the glory of the God of the covenant, 2 Cor. iv. 7. His ſpotleſs holineſs, and tremenduous juſtice, appear there; together with his matchleſs love, freeſt grace and tendereſt mercy. God is in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, with the ſafety of his glory, giving forth his peace and pardons freely, without any merit of the receivers, and yet not without ſufficient ſatisfaction to his juſtice, and compenſation of his injured honour: as from a throne of grace, eſtabliſhed upon juſtice ſatisfied, and judgment fully executed, the firm baſes thereof.

2. It is ſuited to the caſe of ſinners, the offending party. In Chriſt the adminiſtrator of the covenant, they have to do with a God, whoſe rays of majeſty, that the guilty are not able to behold, are vailed with the robe of a ſpotleſs humanity. An inviting ſweetneſs appears in the face of the adminiſtrator, full of grace and truth, John i. 14. In him they may ſee their ſalvation ſo dear to the God that made them, that he himſelf would put on their nature, to eſtabliſh by his own blood a covenant of peace between Heaven and them. He is true man of the ſame family of Adam with themſelves; unto whom therefore they may confidently draw near, joining themſelves to him as the head of the covenant: and withal, he is the true God, undoubtedly able to make the covenant effectual for their ſalvation, notwithſtanding all their unworthineſs.

3. It is ſuited to the honour of Chriſt himſelf, the peace maker, who hath it as the reward of his work. Joſeph being ſold for a bond-ſervant, behaved himſelf with all meekneſs, patience, and faithfulneſs in that low character; the which was afterwards by all-ruling Providence, abundantly rewarded with honour, in his being advanced to be the prime miniſter of the kingdom of Egypt, having the adminiſtration of the whole kingdom committed to him, Pſal. cv. 17.—22. Herein he was a type of Chriſt. The Lord Jeſus did voluntarily ſubmit himſelf to the loweſt ſtep of reproach and diſgrace, taking upon him the form of a bond ſervant, and humbling himſelf in that form, even unto the death of the croſs; and that to perform the condition of the covenant, for the glory of God and the ſalvation of his people: and therefore he was exalted to the higheſt pinnacle of honour, being advanced to the prime miniſtry of heaven, having the adminiſtration of the covenant put into his hand, ruling over all under his Father; whereby is given him a name, which is above every name, whether of men or angels, all things being under his feet, Phil. ii. 7. 8. 9. Eph. i. 20. 21. 22. 23. In reſpect hereof, he is often called the Father's ſervant, namely, his honorary ſervant: and his honour in that character is often promiſed to be made very great, Iſa. xlix. 6. and lii. 13. 14. 15. Zech. iii. 8. with vi. 12. 13.

And foraſmuch as the everlaſting covenant will continue to be the ground and rule of God's diſpenſation towards his people for evermore; by the conſtitution lodging the adminiſtration of the covenant in the perſon of Chriſt, he is to enjoy that honour and dignity for ever and ever. For unto the Son he ſaith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, Heb. i. 8. Even of his kingdom which is given him, that is, his mediatory kingdom and adminiſtration, there ſhall be no end, Luke i. 32. 33. The time comes indeed, wherein he will deliver up the kingdom to God even the Father: preſenting to him at the laſt day, the whole church, and every member thereof, brought by his adminiſtration, according to his commiſſion, into a ſtate of perfection. And then cometh the end, 1 Cor. xv. 24. namely, the end of the world, but not the end of his adminiſtration; for being conſtitute adminiſtrator of the covenant, there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom; and his dominion is an everlaſting dominion, which ſhall not paſs away (as the world ſhall, 1. Cor. vii. 31.) and his kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed, (as all the four monarchies have been,) Dan. vii. 14.

And thus we have ſeen Chriſt to be the party on whom the adminiſtration of the covenant is devolved.

II. Sinners of mankind the Object of the adminiſtration of the Covenant.

The object of the adminiſtration of the covenant, is ſinners of mankind, indefinitely: that is to ſay, Chriſt is impowered by commiſſion from his Father, to adminiſtrate the covenant of grace to any of all mankind, the ſinners of the family of Adam without exception; he is authoriſed to receive them into the covenant, and to confer on them all the benefits thereof to their eternal ſalvation; according to the ſettled order of the covenant. The election of particular perſons is a ſecret, not to be diſcovered in the adminiſtration of the covenant, according to the eſtabliſhed order thereof, till ſuch time as the ſinner have received the covenant, by coming perſonally into it. And the extent of the adminiſtration is not founded on election, but on the ſufficiency of Chriſt's obedience and death for the ſalvation of all; neither is it regulated thereby, but by the fulneſs of power in heaven and earth given to Jeſus Chriſt, as a reward of his becoming obedient even unto death.

For confirming of this truth, let the following things be conſidered.

1. The grant which the Father hath made of Chriſt crucified, as his ordinance for the ſalvation of loſt ſinners of mankind. In the caſe of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, bitten by fiery ſerpents, God inſtituted an ordinance for their cure, namely a brazen ſerpent lifted up upon a pole; and made a grant thereof to whoſoever would uſe it for that purpoſe, by looking to it. No body whatſoever that needed healing was excepted: the grant was conceived in the moſt ample terms, Num. xxi. 8. ‘It ſhall come to paſs, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, ſhall live.’ So all mankind being bitten by the old ſerpent, the devil, and ſin, as his deadly poiſon, left in them; God hath appointed Jeſus Chriſt the ordinance of heaven for their ſalvation. There is a word of divine appointment paſſed upon a crucified Chriſt, making and conſtituting him the ordinance of God for ſalvation of ſinners; and God hath made a grant of him as ſuch, to whoſoever of Adam's loſt race will make uſe of him for that purpoſe, by believing on him; in the which grant none of the world of mankind is excepted. All this is clear from John iii. 14, 15, 16. ‘And as Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, even ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up; that whoſoever believeth on him, ſhould not periſh, but have eternal life. For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’ Now, the adminiſtration of the covenant being ſettled, in purſuance of this grant therein made, for a reward of the Mediator's obedience, the object of the former can be no leſs extenſive than that of the latter.

2. The Mediator's commiſſion for the adminiſtration, is conceived in the moſt ample terms; and he is clothed with moſt ample powers, with relation to that buſineſs. It carries his adminiſtering the covenant, not only to the meek, the poor, the broken hearted; but to the captives, blind, bruiſed, priſoners, bondmen and broken men, who have ſold their inheritance and themſelves, and can have no hope of relief but by a jubilee, Luke iv. 18, 19. with Iſa. lxi. 1, 2. What ſort of ſinners of mankind can one imagine, that will not fall under ſome of theſe denominations? Chriſt indeed is given for a covenant of the people; not of this or that people, but of people indefinitely. All power is given him in heaven and in earth, Matth. xxviii. 18. So there are none on earth excepted from his adminiſtering the covenant to them. He is impowered to ſave the guilty law condemned world, by adminiſtering it to them; ‘For God ſent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be ſaved,’ John iii. 17. forasmuch as he is the ordinance of God for taking away the ſin of the world, chap. i. 29.; though many to whom he offers the covenant, do refuſe it, and ſo are not ſaved eventually. Accordingly, from this fulneſs of power he iſſues forth the general offer of the goſpel; wherein all without exception are declared welcome to come and ſuck of the full breaſts of the divine conſolations in the covenant: Matth. xi. 27. ‘All things are delivered unto me of my Father.’ Ver. 28. ‘Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.’ Chap. xxviii. 18. ‘All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.’ Ver. 19. ‘Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.’ Mark xvi. 15. ‘Go, and preach the goſpel to every creature.’

3. He executes his commiſſion in an unhampered manner, adminiſtering the covenant to any ſinner of mankind: Prov. viii. 4. Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men. The object of his adminiſtration is not this or that party of mankind, under this or the other denomination; but men, any men, ſons of men indefinitely. So the goſpel, in which he adminiſters the covenant, is good tidings to all people, Luke ii. 10. a feaſt made unto all people, Iſa. xxv. 6. though many, not reliſhing the tidings, never taſte of the feaſt. Accordingly, he commiſſioned his apoſtles for that effect, in terms than which none can imagine more extenſive, Mark xvi. 15. Go ye into all the world, and preach the goſpel to every creature. The Jews called man the creature, as being God's creature by way of eminence: ſo by every creature is meant every man. There are in the world ſome men, who, by reaſon of their monſtrous wickedneſs, are like devils; there are other men, who, by reaſon of their ſavageneſs, ſeem to differ but little from brutes: but our Lord ſaith here in effect, “Be what they will, if ye can but know them to be men, aſk no queſtions about them on this head, what ſort of men they are: being men, preach the goſpel to them, offer them the covenant; and if they receive it, give them the ſeals thereof: my Father made them, I will ſave them.”

4. If we enquire, who they are to whom Chriſt ſtands related as a Saviour? or, whoſe Saviour he is, according to the ſcripture? we find, that conſidered as an actual Saviour, ſaving actually and eventually, he is indeed only Saviour of the body, Eph. v. 23.; but conſidered as an official Saviour, a Saviour by office, he is the Saviour of the world, 1 John iv. 14. John iv. 42. Thus one having a commiſſion to be the phyſician of a ſociety, is the phyſician of the whole ſociety, by office; and ſo ſtands related to every man of them, as their phyſician: howbeit, he is not actually a healer to any of them, but ſuch as employ him. Though ſome of that ſociety ſhould not employ him at all, but on every occaſion call another phyſician; yet he is ſtill their phyſician by office: though they ſhould die of their diſeaſe, being averſe from calling him; yet ſtill it is true, that he was their phyſician, they might have called him, and had his remedies; and it was purely their own fault, that they were not healed by him. Even ſo our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath heaven's patent, conſtituting him the Saviour of the world; by the authority of his Father he is inveſted with that office: and whereſoever the goſpel comes, his patent for that effect is intimate, 1 John iv. 14. ‘And we have ſeen and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.’ Wherefore, none of us ſhall periſh for want of a Saviour. Jeſus Chriſt is the Saviour of the world; he is your Saviour, and my Saviour, be our caſe what it will; and God, in and by him, is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe, 1 Tim. iv. 10. Hence Chriſt's ſalvation is the common ſalvation, Jude 3.; and the goſpel is the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation to all men, Tit. ii. 11. marg. Chriſt then ſtands related as a Saviour by office to the world of mankind; he is their Saviour: and he is ſo related to every one of them, as ſinners, loſt ſinners, of that ſociety, 1 Tim. i. 15. ‘Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners.’ Luke xix. 10. ‘The Son of man is come to ſeek and to ſave that which is loſt.’ Let no man ſay, “Alas! I have nothing to do with Chriſt, nor he with me; for I am a ſinner, a loſt ſinner.” Nay, upon that very ground there is a relation between him and you. Since you are a ſinner of mankind, Chriſt is your Saviour: for he is by office Saviour of the family whereof you are a branch. If you will employ another than him, or pine away in your diſeaſe, rather than put yourſelf in his hand, ye do it upon your peril: but know aſſuredly, that you have a Saviour of your own, choſen of God for you, whether you employ him or not. He is by his Father's appointment the phyſician of ſouls: ye are the ſick; and the leſs ſenſible ye are, the more dangerouſly ſick: there is a valuable relation then betwixt Chriſt and you, as ſuch, Matth. ix. 11. 12. He is the great burden-bearer, that gives reſt to them that labour and are heavy laden, Matth. xi. 28. Pſal. li. 22. Ye labour, ſpending your labour for that which ſatisfieth not: and are laden with iniquity, even heavy laden; and nothing the leſs ſo, that ye are not duly ſenſible thereof: there is a relation then betwixt Chriſt and you, on that very ſcore. Now, if Chriſt ſtands related to the world of mankind-ſinners, as their Saviour, then they are the object of his adminiſtration of the covenant.

5. Laſtly, if it were not ſo, then there would be ſome excepted perſons in the world of mankind ſinners, for whom there is no warrant, more than for devils, to take hold of the covenant, by believing in Chriſt: contrary to the conſtant voice of the goſpel, John iii. 16. Mark xvi. 15. For ſurely they have no warrant to take hold of the covenant, to whom the adminiſtrator is not impowered to give it. Which of the world of mankind ſinners can theſe excepted perſons be? Not Pagans, and other infidels, who hear not the goſpel: for howbeit, in the depth of ſovereign wiſdom, that warrant is not intimated to them; yet it doth really extend to them as included under that general term, whoſoever, John iii. 16. And if it did not extend to them, the covenant could not lawfully be preached and offered to them by miniſters of the goſpel more than a crier could lawfully go and proclaim and offer the king's indemnity to thoſe who have no concern in it, but are excepted out of it. The miniſterial goſpel offer is undoubtedly null and void as far as it exceeds the bounds of the object of Chriſt's adminiſtration of the covenant; as being, in ſo far, from one or more having no power to make it. Neither are any who hear the goſpel excepted; for the not taking hold of the covenant by faith in Chriſt, is the great ſin and condemnation of all who, having the goſpel, do ſo entertain it, Prov. viii. 36. John iii. 19. Mark xvi. 16. But it could not be the ſin of ſuch perſons; becauſe it can never be one's ſin, not to do a thing which he hath no warrant from God to do. Much leſs are the non-elect excepted: for at that rate, not only ſhould their unbelief be none of their ſin; but the elect themſelves could never believe, till ſuch time as their election were in the firſt place, revealed to them, which is contrary to the ſtated method of grace: for none can believe in Chriſt, till once they ſee their warrant; foraſmuch as that warrant is the ground of faith.

Wherefore we conclude, that ſinners of mankind indefinitely are the object of Chriſt's adminiſtration of the covenant; that he is impowered to adminiſter it to you, and every one of you, whatever you are or have been; and that you muſt either take hold of the covenant for life and ſalvation, or periſh as deſpiſers of it, ſince ye have heard the goſpel.

III. The Ends of the Adminiſtration of the Covenant.

The ends of the adminiſtration of the covenant, which make the buſineſs of the adminiſtrator as ſuch, are theſe three; to wit, (1.) the bringing of ſinners into the covenant; (2.) the management of them therein, according to it, in this world; and (3.) the completing of their happineſs, according to it, in the other world.

1. The bringing of ſinners perſonally and ſavingly into the covenant, Iſa. xlix. 5. 'And now, ſaith the Lord 'that formed me in the womb to be his ſervant, to bring 'Jacob again to him, though Iſrael be not gathered, yet 'ſhall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord.' Though the covenant was concluded from eternity, when we could neither conſent nor diſſent; yet, by the conſtitution thereof, it is provided, that, even to the end of time any ſinner of the race of Adam, who ſhall believe, his receiving and embracing the covenant by faith, ſhall be as good and valid to enter him into it, as if he had perſonally ſubſcribed it at the making thereof, John iii. 16. Thus it is left open to mankind-ſinners, that they may come into it, taking place therein under Chriſt the head; and ſo become perſonally confederate with Heaven, to their eternal ſalvation. And there is room enough within the compaſs of the infinite name of the ſecond Adam, for all of us to ſubſcribe our little names. Wherefore, notwithſtanding of all that have already ſubſcribed, in that name, ſaying, I am the Lord's, i. e. the Lord Chriſt's, Iſa. xliv. 5. ſince Eve firſt ſet down her name there, by believing the promiſe firſt, whereby ſhe then commenced, and actually was the mother of all living, Gen. iii. 20. yet the voice of the goſpel ſtill is, and will be even to the end, And yet there is room, Luke xiv. 22. For typifying of which, Noah's ark was, by the appointment of Heaven, made all little rooms, Gen. vi. 17. called in the margin there, neſts. Now, the Mediator is authoriſed to treat with ſinners, rebels to God, and ſubjects of Satan's kingdom, to bring them over to Heaven's ſide again; and for that effect, to adminiſter the covenant unto them, to propoſe it to them, and gather them into the bond thereof. Wherefore, having gone forth on that errand, he teſtifies his earneſtneſs in the work, Matth. xxiii. 37. How often would I have gathered thy children! and declares himſelf the door of the ſheep, John x. 7. 9.

2. The management of them in the covenant, according to it, during their continuance in this world. When ſinners are, by the Mediator's adminiſtration, brought within the bond of the covenant, they are not thenceforth truſted with the management of themſelves and their ſtock; but their ſtock being lodged with him, they are put under his hand as their ſolemn manager, the chief Shepherd and Biſhop of ſouls, unto whoſe overſight the ſtrays once returned are committed, 1 Pet. ii. 25. Whatever they need, they muſt receive from him; he is to diſpenſe all the benefits of the covenant, of whatever kind, unto them. Are they to be juſtified? he is to paſs the ſentence, Thy ſins be forgiven thee, Matth. ix. 2. 6. Are they to be brought into a new ſaving relation to God? he is to give them power to become the ſons of God, John i. 12. Are they to be ſanctified? he is to waſh, ſanctify, and cleanſe them, John xiii. 8. Eph. v. 26.; and to give them repentance, as well as forgiveneſs of ſins, Acts v. 31. Are they to be cauſed to perſevere? he is to keep them, and to account for each one of them to his Father, John xvii. 12. Are they to be ſeen to in all their temporal concerns? the care of them all lies upon him, 1 Pet. v. 7. He is our Joſeph, who hath all the ſtores of the covenant in his hand; and of him God hath ſaid, as Pharaoh ſaid to his famiſhing people, crying unto him for bread, Go to Joſeph, Gen. xli. 55. Moreover, they muſt receive all their orders from him, touching their duty in all points. They muſt receive the law at his mouth; ſince it is by him God ſpeaks unto them, according to the conſtitution of the covenant: for which cauſe God hath given a ſolemn charge to all the covenant people, ſaying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed: hear ye him, Matth. xvii. 5.

3. and laſtly, The completing of their happineſs, according to the covenant, in the other world: Eph. v. 27. 'That he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious 'church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing.' It is the comfort of believers, that Jeſus Chriſt adminiſters the covenant in this world; ſo that whatever part thereof they may be driven to, they can never be driven to any part unto which his adminiſtration doth not extend. Howbeit, the moſt glorious part of his adminiſtration takes its place in the other world: for it is in heaven, that the promiſes of the covenant have their perfect accompliſhment: the which makes heaven home to believers. "O! but the paſſage betwixt the two worlds is "a dark, dangerous and gloomy one! Who can without horror think of the Jordan of death, and the dark"ſome region of the grave!" But withal, God's covenant-people ſhould remember, that their Lord hath buſineſs in that paſſage, as well as on either ſide of it. The line of the covenant is drawn through it, making a path by which the redeemed ſafely paſs. So there alſo is the ſcene of Chriſt's adminiſtration of the covenant; he hath the keys of hell and of death, Rev. i. 18. It is great weakneſs, to think that he doth only, as it were, ſtand on the other ſide of the river, directing the believer in his paſſage, and ready to receive him when come aſhore: nay, it lies on him, as adminiſtrator of the covenant, even to go into the water with the paſſenger, to take him by the arm, and going between him and the ſtream, to break the force thereof unto him, and to bring him ſafe aſhore: Pſal. xxiii. 4. Though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me. In the Iſraelites paſſing over to Canaan, the ark went firſt into Jordan, and was laſt in coming out, being there till all the people were paſſed clean over, Joſh. chap. iii. iv. The ark being a type of Chriſt, as Canaan was of heaven, this teacheth us, that our Lord Jeſus will have buſineſs in the paſſage between the two worlds, as long as there is one of his people to paſs that way; and that his adminiſtration there will never be at an end, until the laſt man within the bond of the covenant is ſafely landed on the other ſide. This is done, he is to adminiſter the covenant to them there alſo, completing their happineſs by a perfect accompliſhment of all the promiſes thereof unto them. As Jeſus is the author, ſo he is the finiſher of our faith, Heb. xii. 2. In which texts there is an alluſion to the races famous among the ancient Greeks, wherein there was one that opened the race, ran it, and went on the head of all the reſt; another who was ſet on a throne at the end of the race, and gave the prize to ſuch as won it. In the ſpiritual race, Chriſt acts both theſe parts. As performer of the condition of the covenant, in the courſe of his obedience, wherein he endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, he is the author of our faith, or the chief leader, expreſly called the forerunner, chap. vi. 20. in bringing many ſons unto glory, going on their head as captain or chief leader, chap. ii. 10. Then, as adminiſtrator of the covenant, he is the finiſher of our faith, or the perfecter that gives the crown to the runners, and is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God. And thus it is his buſineſs to put the crown of glory on the heads of thoſe whom by his grace he hath made conquerors. From his hand Paul expected it, 2 Tim. iv. 8. 'Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous judge, (to wit, Chriſt the judge of of the world) ſhall give me at that day.' To him it belongs to grant the overcomers to ſit him with in his throne, Rev. iii. 21. And therefore I cannot help thinking, that the text, Matth. xx. 23. may ſafely be read without the ſupplement, 'To ſit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but for whom it is prepared of my Father.' So the particle but is uſed exceptively, 2 Cor. ii. 5. for ſave, Mark ix. 8. The fulneſs of power given to the Mediator, comprehends all power in heaven, as well as in earth: accordingly he prepares the place for his ſeveral people in his Father's houſe, having the whole at his diſpoſal as adminiſtrator of the covenant. And he is to adminiſter the covenant to them, not only at their firſt entrance into the regions of bliſs, but all along through the ages of eternity, being to remain the eternal bond of union and mean of communication between God and the ſaints for ever, Heb. vii. 15. Rev. vi. 17.

And theſe are the ends of the adminiſtration of the covenant. Follows,

IV. The nature of the adminiſtration of the covenant.

The nature of this adminiſtration offers itſelf to our view, in the relations Chriſt hath to the covenant as he is adminiſtrator thereof. We have already ſeen, how that Chriſt became the mediator of the covenant, both ſubſtantial and official; and have obſerved that his official mediation runs through the whole of the covenant: and we have taken notice of a threefold relation of his unto it, namely, his being, 1. The Kinſman-redeemer in it; 2. The ſurety of it; and 3. The Prieſt, the ſacrificing prieſt of it; the which parts of his mediation, reſpecting the condition of the covenant, do belong to the making of it. We ſhall now conſider his other relations thereto, bearing thoſe parts of his mediation, which reſpecting the promiſes of the covenant do belong to the adminiſtration of it. And they are theſe five. 1. He is the truſtee of the covenant; 2. The Teſtator of the covenant; 3. The Prophet of the covenant; 4. The King of the covenant; and, 5. The Interceſſor of the covenant; each of them which is a ſyllable of the name above every name, given him of the Father, as the reward of his work. And in viewing of theſe in order, the nature of the adminiſtration of the covenant will plainly appear.

I. Chriſt the Truſtee of the Covenant.

Our Lord Jeſus as adminiſtrator, is, in the firſt place, the Truſtee of the covenant; having the covenant, and all the benefits thereof, committed to his truſt: Col. i. 19. 'For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell.' This greateſt of all truſts, too great for any mere man or angel, our bleſſed Redeemer was perfectly qualified for; and ſo was ſet over the houſe of God, the moſt precious things thereof being put under his hand. What is ſealed up from the higheſt angel he hath acceſs to; he is truſted to looſe the ſeals, for he is worthy, Rev. v. 2.—5. A holy jealous God put no truſt in his ſervants, and his angels he chargeth with folly: for they were fallible: there was a poſſibility of their betraying their truſt, Job iv. 18. But it pleaſed him to truſt the bleſſed Jeſus, that in him, as an infallible adminiſtrator, all fulneſs ſhould dwell.

This high truſt was a neceſſary prerequiſite of the adminiſtration; and therefore, upon his engagement to fulfil the condition of the covenant, reputed in heaven as ſure as if it had been actually performed, all the benefits of the covenant were not only made over to him in point of right, but were delivered over into his hand in actual poſſeſſion, that he might diſpenſe them to ſinners, according to the method therein ſtated and agreed upon. John iii. 35. 'The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.' Matth. xi. 27. 'All things are delivered unto me of my Father.' Verſe 28. 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.' Hence it was that he entered upon the adminiſtration of the covenant, long before his incarnation; even as ſoon as there was any place for the adminiſtering thereof, which was in Paradiſe after the fall: though the ſolemnity of his inveſtiture, and taking poſſeſſion, was reſerved unto his aſcenſion into heaven, when the man Chriſt was ſet at God's right hand, Gen. iii. 8. 15. with Pſalm lxviii. 18. Eph. i. 20. 21. 22.

Thus the fulneſs of the covenant is in him: and this truſt makes the unſearchable riches of Chriſt, not to be particularly inventoried by us, ſince they are unſearchable. But, agreeable to what hath been ſaid before, we ſhall, for opening thereof, make the following things.

1. The unſeen guard of the covenant is under his hand. There is given unto him all power over natural and ſpiritual things, to manage the ſame for the preſervation, protection, and reſtraint of thoſe ſometime to be brought into the covenant; while yet they are ſtrangers from it, and neither perceive the guard about them, nor the commander thereof: John v. 22. The Father—hath commited all judgment unto the Son. Hoſ. xi. 3. I taught Ephraim alſo to go, taking them by their arms, but they knew not that I healed them. Sometimes they are during their ſtate of blindneſs, in eminent hazard of their lives, and narrowly eſcape, before the ſtream of ſtrong temptations threatning to carry them quite away; and yet the force of theſe is broken one way or other, and they brought back from the very brink of ruin; and they never truly know whoſe debtors they are for theſe things, nor ſee the love-deſign in them, untill converting grace has reached them; and then they hear the Captain of that guard ſaying to them, as he ſaid to Cyrus, Iſa. xlv. 5. ‘I girded thee, though thou haſt not ‘known me.’ So the mountain was full of horſes and chariots of fire, for the defence of Eliſha and his ſervant; while yet the ſervant ſaw none for them, but againſt them, untill the Lord opened his eyes, 2 Kings vi. 17.

2. The quickening Spirit of the covenant is in him, whereby to quicken dead ſinners, and cauſe them to live. The Spirit of life behoved to be purchaſed for ſinners, otherwiſe there was no life for them. Now, the fulneſs thereof is purchaſed, and actually lodged in the Mediator, according to the covenant. Hence Chriſt propoſeth himſelf to dead Sardis, as having the ſeven ſpirits of God, Rev. iii. 1. and ſaith to the Jews, John v. 25. ‘The dead ſhall hear the voice of the ſon of God;’ that is, dead ſouls ſhall be quickened; and being quickened, ſhall believe. The firſt Adam being made a living ſoul, was capable to communicate natural life, but not being made a quickening ſpirit, he could not reſtore life once loſt: but the laſt Adam was made a quickening ſpirit, to reſtore ſpiritual life to ſinners dead in treſpaſſes and ſins. So, in Chriſt as the truſtee of the covenant, is the fountain of life. Adam's ſin put out the lights of the whole world; and his natural offspring were all left by him as ſo many blind candles; but the ſecond Adam is made, and ſet up, a flaming lamp to lighten them again; and as many of them as it toucheth, do inſtantly flame too: and could they all but touch it, and none are forbidden, they ſhould all be lighted again, and ſhine with the light of ſpiritual life, partaking of the ſpirit of life in Jeſus Chriſt.

3. The righteouſneſs of the covenant is in him, whereby to juſtify the ungodly that have no righteouſneſs of their own. Hence his name is, The Lord our righteouſneſs, Jer. xxiii. 6. Righteouſneſs of man before the Lord was quite worn out: there was nothing of that kind left upon any of Adam's children, ‘as it is written, ‘There is none righteous, no not one,’ Rom. iii. 10. But Jeſus Chriſt having, in his birth, life, and death, wrought out the righteouſneſs of the new covenant, brought it in, and preſented it unto his Father, Dan. ix. 24. with Lev. xvi. 15. And it was ſuſtained and accepted as the new-covenant righteouſneſs, for juſtifying all that believe; and was lodged with the worker thereof, intruſted with it as Adminiſtrator of the covenant. Hence he is ſaid to be made unto us righteouſneſs, 1 Cor. i. 30. namely, by a divine conſtitution, even as he was made the covenant. And intimation hereof is made unto ſinners, in the goſpel, for a ground of faith, Iſa. xlv. 24. ‘Surely, ſhall one ſay, in the Lord have I righteouſ‘neſs,’ Heb. Only in the Lord, (concerning me he hath ſaid) is righteouſneſs. They are the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, narrating the divine conſtitution concerning himſelf. Compare ver. 23. with Rom. xiv. 10. 11. Wherefore, the goſpel is called the miniſtration of righteouſneſs, 2 Cor. iii. 9.; and his miniſters, miniſters of righteouſneſs, chap. xi. 15.; he being intruſted with the new-covenant righteouſneſs, for to adminiſter it to ſinners, unto juſtification of life, as the phraſe is, Rom. v. 18.

4. The new-covenant right to God is in his perſon as Mediator: and he is actually poſſeſſed of the fulneſs of the Godhead, as he is adminiſtrator of the covenant, to communicate of that fulneſs to all that ſhall believe, Col. ii. 9. ‘For in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the ‘Godhead bodily.’ Verſe 10. ‘And ye are complete ‘in him, which is the head.’ Our Lord Jeſus, as the eternal Son of God, had a natural indefeaſible right to the fulneſs of the Godhead: but as the ſecond Adam, he took out a new right thereto, purchaſing the ſame by his obedience and death; and as ſuch, it is now lodged with him, to be communicated by him. And thus the peace of the covenant, peace with God, is in him, Eph. ii. 14. the ſonſhip of the covenant, the adoption into the family of God, is in him as the firſt born among many brethren, Pſal. lxxxix. 27. with John i. 12. the covenant intereſt in God as one's own God, is in him, John xx. 17. And to obtain all theſe in one, let the ſinner but receive Chriſt by faith, and he hath them; for they are all under his hand as truſtee of the covenant, yea in him as the ſtorehouſe of the covenant.

5. The covenant fulneſs of the Spirit of ſanctification is in him, whereby to make ſinners holy; Col. i. 19. ‘It pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs ‘dwell.’ John i. 16. ‘And of his fulneſs have all we ‘received, and grace for grace.’ Having purchaſed the ſame with his own blood, it is lodged in him as Adminiſtrator of the covenant, in reſpect of which he is ſaid to be made unto us ſanctification, 1 Cor. i. 30. Therefore out of his pierced ſide came forth blood and water; blood to remove the guilt of ſin, water to waſh away the defilement thereof. So he is the fountain opened for ſin and for uncleanneſs: not a veſſel of that water of purification, which, how full ſoever, would lack as much as it ſhould communicate; but a fountain, a living ſpring of it, to ſupply the needs of the unclean, without any lack in itſelf; For God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure unto him, John iii. 34. wherefore there is in him ſuch a fulneſs of the Spirit of holineſs, as is, by the infinite efficacy thereof, ſufficient to ſanctify the whole family of Adam, and even the worſt of them. There is a fulneſs of all grace in him, to be communicated for the repairing of the loſt image of God in us. There is grace enough in him to melt the hardeſt heart into evangelical repentance, Acts v. 31. to mortify the ſtrongeſt luſts, Gal. v. 24. and to quicken, and to ſtrengthen unto holy obedience, 2 Tim. ii. 1.

6. The eſtabliſhing grace of the covenant is in him, whereby to cauſe the moſt fickle and inconſtant, once in him, to perſevere unto the end: Jude ver. 1. ‘Them ‘that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved ‘in Jeſus Chriſt.’ He is conſtituted the head of influences for all his myſtical members, which are to have their nouriſhment miniſtered from him, Col. ii. 19. The giving out of continued pardons, neceſſary for them in this their ſtate of imperfection, is alſo in his hand, as the Truſtee of the covenant, ‘exalted to be a Prince ‘and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and ‘forgiveneſs of ſins,’ Acts v. 31. Thus he is fully furniſhed for preſerving of them in a ſtate of grace, having a fulneſs of grace in himſelf to communicate unto them, ſuitable to all their exigencies, whether in reſpect of the power, or of the guilt of their ſin.

7. The temporal things of the covenant are all in his hand, whereby to provide for, and afford protection to his people, during their continuance in this world. In the covenant there was made to him a promiſe of his inheriting all things, as the firſt-born of the family of heaven: and in his perſon as the laſt Adam, the ancient dominion over the creatures was reſtored, as we heard before. Now, as he is the Truſtee of the covenant, the heritage of the world, and all things therein, is actually delivered over into his hand: ſo that he is not only Lord of the world in point of right, but in fact; having the power of all therein, from the ſmalleſt rag for covering of nakedneſs, even to the crowns and ſceptres. This he himſelf witneſſeth, Matth. xxviii. 18. ‘All power is ‘given unto me in heaven and in earth.’ chap. xi. 27. ‘All things are delivered unto me of my Father.’ Hence to encourge his impoveriſhed people in their building of the ſecond temple, he ſaith, Hag. ii. 8. ‘The ſilver ‘is mine, and the gold is mine,’ namely, to give them to whom I will. And that theſe are Chriſt's words appears from ver. 6. compared with Heb. xii. 26. Accordingly, from Pſal. xxiv. 1. ‘The earth is the Lord's, ‘and the fulneſs thereof,’ the apoſtle clears believers right to the creatures, 1 Cor. x. 25. 26. And thus he is fully furniſhed for affording all manner of proviſion to his people, in temporal things: and all protection from whatever dangers they can be in while here. The ſun, moon, and ſtars, the earth, ſea, and air, with all that in them is, are under his hand as the Truſtee of the covenant; and he can diſpoſe of them all for the ends of the covenant, as the glory of God and the welfare of his people do require.

8. The covenant-fulneſs of power over death and the grave is in his hand, whereby to diſarm death of its ſting, and bring about a glorious reſurrection. 'I,' ſaith he, 'have the keys of hell and of death,' Rev. i. 18. Death goes through the world as a mighty conqueror, whom none is able to reſiſt; the grave follows, and none can keep back its prey, nor cauſe it to give it up again. But the Mediator hath an effectual check upon them both. They are not abſolute potentates, as mighty as they are: there is one above them, to whoſe orders they muſt preciſely ſtick. Death may indeed enter in within the boundaries of the covenant, and carry off the covenant-people as well as others: but at the border it muſt drop its ſting, and enter without it; for the power of death is now in Chriſt's hand, and he will not ſuffer it to enter there with it. And the time cometh wherein he will ſay to the grave, Give up: and then the bars thereof will be broken aſunder, the gates thereof fly open, and it will deliver up to him its lodgers; for he is intruſted as Adminiſtrator of the covenant, with full power over death and the grave.

9. Laſtly, The eternal conſummate happineſs of the covenant is in his hand, whereby to render the ſouls of his people happy immediately after death, and then ſoul and body together happy at the laſt day: for all power in heaven is given him. The Father hath made him the great repoſitory of eternal life, the fountain from whence it ſhall ſtream forth to all the heirs of life: and the diſpenſing of it is intruſted to him: 1 John v. 11. 'God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son.' John xvii. 2. 'As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him.' Wherefore his dying people do in faith commit their ſouls to him, as Stephen, Acts vii. 59. Saying, Lord Jeſus, receive my Spirit. And at the laſt day he pronounceth the ſentence, and ſolemnly receives them into the kingdom of heaven, Matth. xxv. 34.

And thus Chriſt is the Truſtee of the Covenant.

II. Chriſt the Teſtator of the covenant.

In the next place, our Lord Jeſus is the Teſtator of the covenant, as the apoſtle teacheth, Heb. ix. 15. 16, 17. By the conditionary part of the covenant, God had a compenſation of the wrong done to his glory, by ſinners: and by the promiſſory part, Chriſt had unſearchable riches to communicate to them, whereby they might be made happy; and being to die in the cauſe according to his covenant, he timely made his teſtament, as a deed of conveyance thereof unto them; turning the promiſſory part of the covenant, reſpecting loſt ſinners, into a teſtament in their favour, 1 Cor. xi. 25. This cup is the new teſtament in my blood.

Hence it appears, that this belongs to the adminiſtration of the covenant, committed to him, for making ſinners partakers of the covenant-benefits; yea, and that it is the firſt and fundamental act of that his adminiſtration laid as a foundation of all the other acts thereof, which are but ſo many means of executing the teſtament. Upon the Mediator's undertaking to fulfil the condition of the covenant, the Father made to him a diſpoſition of the covenant-benefits contained in the promiſſory part: and the benefits ſo diſponed, were actually delivered over into his hand, as the appointed Truſtee of the covenant, as we have already ſeen. Now he having them all thus in his hand, hath made a diſpoſition of them to poor ſinners, by way of Teſtament, Luke xxii. 29. 'And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me.' Or, 'And I diſpone unto you, as my Father diſponed unto me, a kingdom.' The word here uſed, ſignifies to diſpoſe; and hath it in the notion of a federal or covenant diſpoſition, and a teſtamentary diſpoſition too. Of the former ſort was the diſpoſition made by the father to Chriſt, namely a federal diſpoſition; as being made on a moſt onerous cauſe, a condition properly ſo called, to wit, his making his ſoul an offering for ſin; and it can by no means be a teſtamentary diſpoſition, ſince where a teſtament is, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death of the teſtator, Heb. ix. 16. the which it is evident, could have no place in the caſe of the Father. Of the latter ſort is the diſpoſition made by Jeſus Chriſt to ſinners, namely, a teſtamentary diſpoſition, which, of its own nature, is a deed or conveyance of grace and liberality without conditions properly ſo called: and foraſmuch as ſinners were under an utter diſability to perform conditions properly ſo called; it was therefore neceſſary for their behoof, to make a teſtamentary diſpoſition or teſtament.

For clearing of the nature of this teſtament, which is of ſo great importance for all to know, who have any concern for their ſalvation, we ſhall conſider, 1. The making thereof; 2. The legatee; 3. The executor; and, 4. The legacies.

Firſt, As to the making of Chriſt's teſtament, it is firſt of all to be obſerved, that though the covenant was indeed from eternity, the teſtament was not ſo. For Chriſt made his teſtament as adminiſtrator of the covenant; which adminiſtration he did not enter upon but in time. He was from eternity the truſtee of the covenant, which grand truſt was a neceſſary prerequiſite of his adminiſtration; yet foraſmuch as his commencing teſtator of the covenant, was an act of his adminiſtration thereof, there could be no place for it until there was place for adminiſtering the covenant, which there was not, till once the covenant of works was broken. And hereto beſt agreeth the nature of a teſtament, which is not ſimply a will, but a will declared, teſtified, and ſignified by word or writ, or ſome one or other external ſign, pleadable by the legatees, in order to their obtaining of the legacies bequeathed.

Chriſt's teſtament, which for ſubſtance is but one, is yet twofold, in reſpect of different circumſtances wherewith it hath been veſted; namely, the old or firſt teſtament, and the new teſtament, 2 Cor. iii. 14.

Chriſt's old teſtament is the declaration of the laſt will of our dying Saviour, touching his unſearchable riches, confirmed by ſlain ſacrifices of divine inſtitution, ſealed with the ſeals of circumciſion and the paſſover, and enduring in the church till the fulneſs of time, and the manifeſtation of himſelf to Iſrael in the fleſh, Heb. ix. 20. Rom. iv. 11. 1 Cor. v. 7. Luke xvi. 16. This his teſtament was originally made by word of mouth, which kind of teſtament is called a nuncupative teſtament: but it was afterwards committed to writing; ſo that there was not only a word of the teſtament to be heard, but a book of the teſtament to be read, by the legatees, Heb. ix. 19. 20. And ſo we have it a written teſtament, in that part of the holy ſcripture called by the name of the Old Teſtament.

Chriſt's new teſtament is the declaration of the ſame laſt will of our dying Saviour, touching his unſearchable riches, confirmed by his own death on the croſs, ſealed with the ſeals of baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper, and to continue for evermore, 1 Cor. xi. 23, 24, 25. Matth. xxviii. 19. Heb. vii. 12. 16. 17. This alſo was originally made by word of mouth, in the time of his public miniſtry, wherein he declared his will anent the great ſalvation, which, as the apoſtle obſerves, at firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, Heb. ii. 3. And it was in like manner afterwards committed to writing: and we have it too a written teſtament, in that part of the holy ſcripture called by the name of the New Teſtament.

If we look for the original date of Chriſt's old or firſt teſtament, we find his teſtament to be of a date as early as the nature of the thing could bear; being made in paradiſe, on the day of Adam's fall, in the cool of the day, Gen. iii. 8. otherwiſe called the time between the two evenings, Exod. xii. 6. that is, between three and ſix o'clock in the afternoon. At the which time, our Lord Jeſus did, in the promiſe of the ſeed of the woman to bruiſe the head of the ſerpent, which ſhould bruiſe his heel, Gen. iii. 15. ſignify his death, and declare his will for the benefits of his purchaſe their accruing to ſinners thereby. And that I judge to have been the ſixth day of the creation, the ſame day wherein man was created; reckoned that the ſcripture teacheth, that Adam lodged not one night in honour, as ſome do, agreeable to the original, read Pſalm xlix. 12. They who cannot think that the events recorded from Gen. ii. 7. to the end of the third chapter, were crouded within the compaſs of one day, may weigh therewith the events relating to the death of Chriſt, which are recorded Luke xxii. 66. to the end. Chap. xxiii. 1.—33. John xix. 1. Math. xxvii. 27. 28. John xix. 2, 5. 9.—15. Math. xxvii. 34. All which things were done in the ſpace of half a day; for Chriſt was crucified about twelve of the clock, Luke xxiii. 44, 46.

Some, through an unwillingneſs to think of their death, do put off the making of their teſtament unto a death-bed; but ſo very willing was Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, to die for us, that he ſet his houſe in order, and ſo prepared himſelf for death, that very day wherein the firſt Adam fell. The buſineſs of the great King, and the buſineſs of the ruined world of mankind, required haſte. The whole fabric of the world was by Adam's fall ſo unhinged, that it was haſtening to a total diſſolution, and mankind about to periſh in the ruins; till the ſecond Adam went in, and bore up the pillars thereof, in virtue of his death to eſtabliſh the earth again, Iſa. xlix. 8. Wherefore in paradiſe he made his teſtament in a few words, containing a diſpoſition of the benefits of the covenant, in favour of poor ſinners, Gen. iii. 15. and typically went in under that weight of wrath, which was preſſing down all; and ſo he eſtabliſhed the earth again. In this form it was that they of the firſt ages of the world had the teſtament. But it was repeated and renewed to Abraham, to whom the promiſes were made, Gal. iii. 16. comprehended under the name of the covenants or teſtaments of promiſe, Eph. ii. 12. As alſo to Iſrael in the wilderneſs, whom Moſes ſprinkled with blood, ſaying, This is the blood of the teſtament, Heb. ix. 19, 20. And this was Chriſt's old teſtament, upon which all that believed, from Adam to Chriſt, built their faith, and hope of obtaining the legacies left therein; though it was upwards of four thouſand years, from the firſt making of the teſtament, unto the death of the Teſtator, by which the new teſtament was confirmed.

Now, the apoſtle ſaith, that a teſtament is of force after men are dead: otherwiſe it is of no ſtrength at all whilſt the teſtator liveth, Heb. ix. 17. Was Chriſt's teſtament then of no force all that time? Yea, it was of force; and that by means of a pre-confirmation, being confirmed before, Gal. iii. 17. The confirmation of a teſtament, in the ſenſe of the holy ſcripture, is by the death of the teſtator; as the apoſtle, in the forecited text, teacheth the Hebrews. And in ſcripture-reckoning, there was a twofold death of the Teſtator here: one typical, another real. In reſpect of the former of theſe, Chriſt was the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of world, Rev. xiii. 8. having died typically in the ſacrifices then offered, Gen. iii. 21. and thereafter all along under the Old Teſtament. And by that death of the Teſtator was the pre-confirmation of the teſtament; ſo that from the day it was firſt made, it was of force, for the legatees obtaining the legacies therein bequeathed; foraſmuch as it was then alſo confirmed. Wherefore the apoſtle obſerves, that, in full conſiſtency with that known maxim ancient teſtaments, Heb. ix. 17. above cited, 'Neither 'the firſt teſtament was dedicated without blood,' ver. 18. What the apoſtle means by the dedication of the teſtament, will be plain, if it is conſidered, that what our verſion of the Bible calls dedication, is, in the ſcripture uſe of words ſo rendered therein, nothing elſe but an entering on, or a firſt, or new uſing of a perſon or thing, to what they were deſigned for: inſomuch that the very dedication of the temple was no more but that, as appears by comparing 2 Chron. v. 13. chap. vi. and chap. vii. 1. with 4, 5. Wherefore, by the dedication of the teſtament, muſt be meant the legatees beginning to claim and obtain their legacies, upon the teſtament. And this, the apoſtle ſaith, was not done without the teſtament's being confirmed by blood, or death: the which, though really the blood or death of beaſts ſacrificed; yet, according to the apoſtle's reaſoning, were reckoned the blood or death of the Teſtator, they being ſacrificed as types of him.

And hence it appears, that whatever have been the different circumſtances wherewith the teſtament in different periods hath been veſted; the Old and New Teſtament, nuncupative and written, are for ſubſtance but the One teſtament of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſame yeſterday, and to-day, and for ever, Heb. xiii. 8. having the ſame force and effect for full remiſſion of ſin and eternal ſalvation, legacies claimed and obtained by faith, in virtue of the teſtament, Acts xv. 11. Rom. iv. 13.; only, what was firſt declared by word of mouth, the ſame was thereafter written. The legacies at firſt bequeathed in general comprehenſive terms, were afterward particularly nominated: and in the New Teſtament they are more clearly expreſſed than in the Old. The former was a copy of the teſtament, fitted for the times before the Teſtator really died: the latter, fitted for all times thereafter, to the end of the world; and therefore no other copy is to be accepted after it.

Secondly, It is to be inquired, Who are the legatees, the parties in whoſe favour the teſtament was made, and who may, in the method of the teſtament, claim and obtain the legacies therein bequeathed? Chriſt's making his teſtament being the fundamental act of his adminiſtration of the covenant, as we have already ſeen; the legatees in the teſtament muſt needs be the ſame as the objects of his adminiſtration of the covenant, that is to ſay, ſinners of mankind indefinitely: for if Chriſt is authoriſed by the Father to adminiſter the covenant to mankind ſinners indefinitely; and hath accordingly made his teſtament for that effect, ſurely none can be excepted out of the teſtament, that are not excepted out of his adminiſtration. Therefore the apoſtle lays down for the foundation of faith to thoſe who had even imbrued their hands in the blood of the Lord of glory, their intereſt in the promiſe, Acts ii. 39. 'For the promiſe is unto you 'and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even 'as many as the Lord our God ſhall call.' To whomſoever then the goſpel comes, we may warrantably ſay, the promiſe is to you, and to you, and to every one of you; even the promiſe of the teſtament: and ye have acceſs to claim it by faith, as your own legacy, your own mercy, Jonas ii. 8. And all the argument adduced on the head of the object of Chriſt's adminiſtration, which need not to be repeated here, do prove this.

And it is moſt agreeable to the nature of the thing. In Chriſt's teſtament, the legatees are not expreſſed by their names, as in teſtaments where the teſtator hath his children and friends about him, to whom he leaves his legacies: but it is here as in the caſe, wherein ſome of the children or friends of the teſtator are not come into the world at the time of the making of the teſtament; who muſt therefore have their legacies left to them under ſome general deſignation. Multitudes, multitudes of Chriſt's legatees were not born when he died; and multitudes of them have not to this day ſeen the ſun: nay, when Chriſt firſt made his teſtament, there were but two perſons in the world. Therefore the legatees have been expreſſed in it under a general deſignation, as thoſe of ſuch a family. Now, this general deſignation of the legatees in Chriſt's teſtament, is not actual believers, that is, ſuch as have already believed; for actual believing is the legatees claiming of the legacies left them, whereby they are put in poſſeſſion thereof; the which claim muſt of neceſſity have a foundation in the teſtament prior unto it. And indeed the teſtament is the ground of faith. Therefore it was made before there was one actual believer in the world, being made in paradiſe, and there recited in the hearing of our guilty firſt parents, who, upon the hearing of it, Gen. iii. 15. believed, and ſo were put in poſſeſſion of their legacies. And thus it will be to the end of time: faith will come by hearing of the teſtament, Rom. x. 17. Gal. iii. 2. Neither is it the elect: for howbeit in them only is the teſtament effectual, yet it is not to them only the legacies are left; they are not the only perſons in whoſe favour the teſtament was made. For election being a ſecret not known by us, until once we believe, cannot be the ground and warrant of believing, or embracing the teſtament, and claiming the legacies. Beſides, at that rate unbelievers continuing ſo to the end, could not be juſtly reckoned refuſers and ſlighters of Chriſt's teſtament, as having no portion nor concern in it, more than fallen angels. But the general deſignation of the legatees in Chriſt's teſtament, is mankind-ſinners indefinitely: to thoſe of the family of Adam are legacies left, to be claimed and poſſeſſed of them by faith: Prov. viii. 4. 'Unto 'you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men.' Rev. xxii. 17. 'Whoſoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.' John vi. 37. 'Him that cometh to 'me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.'

Put the caſe, that a rich man ſhould, for the love and favour he bears to a particular family, leave his ſubſtance to them by teſtament, to be divided among them: in this caſe it is evident, that however numerous that family be; all and every one of them are this man's legatees, howbeit their names are not particularly expreſſed in the teſtament; and they need no more to clear their claim, each to his ſhare of the legacy, but that they are of that family. And upon the executors making lawful intimation to that family, that, ſuch a teſtament being made in favour of them, they come, claim, and get their legacies, in the method of the teſtament: it is manifeſt, that all of them, who accordingly come and make their claim, as members of that family, will obtain a ſhare of the legacy: but in caſe there may be any of them, who will not come and make any claim thereto, they will juſtly loſe the benefit thereof, and may die of want for all the legacy that was left them in that teſtament. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt has made ſuch a teſtament: the loſt family of Adam, is the family conſtitute his legatees: and the goſpel is the lawful intimation made to them, to come to the executor, and receive their legacies. All that believe get the legacy: all unbelievers loſe it, and periſh under the want thereof; and they periſh without all excuſe. They cannot pretend, that there was nothing left them by the Teſtator; which is the caſe of the fallen angels: nor yet, that it was not intimate unto them; which is the caſe of thoſe who never heard the goſpel. But they periſh, becauſe, howbeit there was a rich legacy left them, yet they undervalued the Teſtator's kindneſs, and would never come and claim it by faith. Hence the benefits of the covenant of grace, even in reſpect of unbelievers, are called their own, namely, in virtue of the right they have to them by the tenor of Chriſt's teſtament: Jon. ii. 8. 'They that obſerve lying 'vanities, forſake their own mercy.' Accordingly, to the elder brother in the parable, Luke xv. the father ſaith, ver. 31. 'Son, all that I have is thine.' So chap. xvi. 12. 'If ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who ſhall give you that which is your 'own?' that is, 'the true riches,' ver. 11. And their ruin is lodged at the door of their unbelief, in not coming to Chriſt to receive them, John v. 40. 'And ye 'will not come to me, that ye might have life.' Chriſt's promiſes in his teſtament are to mankind-ſinners, as the promiſe of Canaan was to the Iſraelites in Egypt, indefinitely, thoſe not excepted whoſe carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs, Exod. vi. 6. 'Say unto the children of Iſ'rael, I am the Lord.'—Ver. 8. 'And I will bring you 'in unto the land concerning the which I did ſwear.' Thus was there a promiſe left them of entering into the reſt of Canaan: and thoſe who believed it, got the poſſeſſion accordingly; thoſe who believed not, did loſe it. And they fell ſhort of it, not becauſe it was not left to them; but becauſe, though it was left to them, as well as to thoſe that entered, yet they believed it not. So ſays the apoſtle, 'They could not enter in becauſe of 'unbelief,' Heb. iii. 19. And this was no imputation on the faithfulneſs of God: for even in promiſes, as well as in covenants, there is a neceſſity of a mutual conſent unto the ſame thing; the party to whom the promiſe is made, his acceptance thereof being neceſſary to complete the obligation on the promiſer to make it effectual: becauſe none making a promiſe of a benefit to another, can in reaſon be thought either to bind himſelf thereby to obtrude his benefit on the other againſt his will; or yet to give up with it, as a thing to be abandoned by him at any rate. Now, to this very purpoſe the apoſtle makes uſe of that caſe of the Iſraelites having the promiſe of Canaan left them, and yet coming ſhort of it through unbelief, Heb. iv. 1. 'Let us therefore fear, 'leſt a promiſe being left us of entering into his reſt, 'any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it.' Ver. 2. 'For unto us was the goſpel preached, as well as unto 'them: but the word preached did not profit them, not 'being mixed with faith in them that heard it.' Compare Exod. vi. 9. 'And Moſes ſpake ſo unto the children of Iſrael: but they hearkened not.'

Thirdly, It is to be inquired, Who is the executor of the covenant? In teſtaments among men, the teſtator and executor are always different perſons; and it muſt needs be ſo, becauſe the teſtator dying, cannot live again to ſee his will execute; therefore one or more, who live when he is gone, muſt be nominated for that purpoſe. But here that reaſon ceaſeth. Jeſus Chriſt could well be the executor of his own teſtament, and needed not to appoint any other to ſee to that matter. He was the Lord of life and death, and it was not poſſible he ſhould be holden of death, Acts ii. 24. Though he was really to die, to confirm his teſtament: yet he was quickly to riſe again, for the effectual execution thereof: accordingly the apoſtle obſerves, that he was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our juſtification, Rom. iv. 25. And he lives for evermore. Even when he was in the grave, he was capable of executing his teſtament, being God as well as man, having a life which could not be loſt, no not for a moment; namely the divine life. And the executing of it then, when the human nature was in the ſtate of death, was much the ſame as his executing of it before he had actually aſſumed the human nature at all.

And that Jeſus Chriſt really is the executor of his own teſtament, appears from his being conſtitute by the Father Adminiſtrator of the covenant, to diſpenſe the benefits thereof as great Steward of the houſe of Heaven: and from the acts of that his adminiſtration, both in this life, and in that which is to come: for he it is that hath in his hand the conferring of grace, both real and relative, on ſinners; and the conferring of glory on ſaints; the which are the executing of his teſtament, as well as the adminiſtering of the covenant; the former being ſubordinated to the latter. Mean while it cannot be refuſed, that he executes it by his Spirit, and employs goſpel miniſters in the matter. Wherefore, whoſoever would have any ſaving benefit by Chriſt's teſtament, or would partake of the legacies therein bequeathed, muſt come to himſelf to receive them; ſince he is the executor of his own teſtament. And therefore the conſtant call of the goſpel to periſhing ſinners, is, to come to Chriſt for life and ſalvation; and the complaint on thoſe who forſake their own mercy, is, that they will not come to him, John v. 40. And the whole life of believers muſt be a coming to him, 1 Pet. ii. 4. that is, a living by faith in him, Gal. ii. 20. whereby they may be daily receiving of the legacies, according to their exigencies.

Fourthly, In the laſt place it is to be enquired, What are the legacies left in Chriſt's teſtament, to poor ſinners of mankind, his only legatees? In the general, there is left to them therein what is ſufficient to make them happy for time and eternity; even all the benefits of the covenant to be received by faith. Theſe are Chriſt himſelf, and all things in and with him, Rom. viii. 32. And the general clauſe of the teſtament is, 'According 'to your faith be it unto you,' Matth. ix. 29. It being beyond our reach fully to reckon up the particulars, it ſhall ſuffice to point at a few things, as the comprehenſive legacies, left by Jeſus Chriſt in his teſtament, to ſinners of mankind indefinitely.

Legacy 1. His own complete righteouſneſs, to cover us before the Lord; hence called the gift of righteouſneſs, Rom. v. 17. as being made over to us in his teſtament, to be received by faith; in which ſenſe it is ſaid to be revealed unto faith, that is, to be believed or truſted on, and ſo received and put on, chap. i. 17. Dying perſons are wont to leave ſuits of mourning to their poor friends; but our dying Saviour left to all his legatees, The garments of ſalvation, the robe of righteouſneſs, Iſa. lxi. 10. beautiful garments, chap. lii. 1. white raiment, Rev. iii. 18. as a ſuit of rejoicing; for that, though he was dead, he is alive, and lives for evermore. Our father Adam left us naked, to our ſhame; yet need we not go naked, nor our ſhame be ſeen. For by the ſecond Adam's teſtament, ſufficient cloathing is left to our father's broken family; even the robe of his own righteouſneſs: and nothing remains, but that we receive it as his legacy to us, and put it on. A holy God cannot admit us into his preſence in our ſpiritual nakedneſs: the law requires us to appear before him in unſpotted holineſs of nature, and perfect righteouſneſs of life, as the condition of life; and withal, with a ſatisfaction to juſtice, by ſuffering, becauſe we have ſinned. But how can we make ſuch an appearance before him? We can by no means put ourſelves in ſuch a condition, by any thing we can do or ſuffer. Yet is not our caſe hopeleſs. We have a good friend, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath left us by teſtament, the holineſs of his nature, wherewith he was born; the righteouſneſs of his life, even all the good works he wrought in obedience to the ten commandments, during his life on earth; and the ſatisfaction made by his death, and ſufferings from the womb to the grave: he hath made all theſe one undivided gift of righteouſneſs, and bequeathed the ſame to us in his teſtament to be received by faith. By means hereof, the moſt wretched ſinner of us all may be beautified in the ſight of a holy God, have wherewith to anſwer all the demands of the law for life, and obtain a full pardon and acceptance with God, as righteous in his ſight. How ſhall we eſcape, if, never claiming this legacy, we trample on the Teſtator's kindneſs!

Legacy 2. His new covenant-intereſt in God, whereby to render us happy, Heb. viii. 10. I will be to them a God. Our father Adam left his whole family without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12. This was an unſpeakable loſs, a ruining loſs: all miſery in time and eternity was wrapt up in it. It was a loſs that could never have been compenſed; and to us it was irrecoverable. But Jeſus Chriſt hath recovered for us the loſt covenant-intereſt in God, and bequeathed it to us in his teſtament. This is a legacy full beyond our comprehenſion. Who can conceive fully what is in that, I will be your God? Surely all bleſſedneſs is in it, for time and eternity: Pſalm cxliv. 15. Happy is the people whoſe God is the Lord. Herein is left you peace, and reconciliation with God, John xiv. 27. adoption into the family of God, 2 Cor. vi. 16. 17. 18. yea, that ye ſhall have God for your own God, your own heritage, in jointheirſhip with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 17. all the perſons of the Godhead to be yours; the Father to be your Father, the Son your Saviour, the Holy Ghoſt your Sanctifier: and all the attributes of God to be employed for your happineſs. Nothing on Chriſt's part, nothing on God's part, ſtands between you and all this: nothing can make you come ſhort of it but unbelief. That new covenant intereſt in God is purchaſed by the blood of the everlaſting covenant; it is even given over unto Jeſus as Adminiſtrator of the covenant: and he again hath made it over to you by teſtament. And what remains, but that ye come to the Executor and receive your legacy, by faith? Alas! that any ſhould be found who have no heart to it.

Legacy 3. His Spirit of grace we ſo much need. Hear the words of the teſtament, Prov. i. 23. 'Turn 'you at my reproof; behold I will pour out my Spirit 'unto you.' Chriſt hath the ſeven Spirits of God, even a fulneſs of the Spirit in himſelf, to communicate; and hath made over the ſame, by his teſtament, to ſinners of Adam's race: withal, as executor of the teſtament he hath made intimation thereof, declaring himſelf ready to give the Spirit unto all that come to him accordingly; John vii. 37. 'Jeſus ſtood and cried, ſaying, If 'any man thirſt, let him come unto me, and drink.' Ver. 38. 'He that believeth on me, as the Scripture 'hath ſaid, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living 'water.' Ver. 39. 'But this ſpake he of the Spirit, 'which they that believe on him ſhould receive.' O ſuitable legacy for Adam's children! Here is life for us, life for our dead ſouls; for his Spirit is the Spirit of life, looſing the bands of ſin and death, Rom. viii. 2. How ſhall dead ſouls live? Our Lord himſelf anſwers that queſtion at large, John vi. ſhewing himſelf to be the life giving bread, that giveth life unto the world, verſe 33. that it is by eating this bread ſouls ſhall live, verſe 57. that the quickening Spirit is in it, verſe 63. and that it is to be eaten by faith, ver. 35, 63, 64. Whether then ſhould the ſoul go for life, but to Chriſt as executor of his own teſtament? verſe 68. For as we derived death from the firſt Adam, ſo we muſt derive life from the ſecond Adam, elſe we cannot have it, ver. 53. Here is regenerating and ſanctifying grace for us, whereby our natures may be changed, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. the image of God repaired in us, through grace received, anſwering to the grace in the man Chriſt, as the wax to the ſeal, John i. 16. for all this worketh the Spirit of Chriſt in thoſe who believe, Eph. i. 13. Here is made over to us grace whereby we may be enabled to true evangelical repentance, Zech. xii. 20. Ezek. xxxvi. 31. to walk in newneſs of life, ver. 27. and to mortify the deeds of the body, Rom. viii. 13. Here is bequeathed unto us enlightening grace, whereby we may diſcern our duty: for the Spirit is the Spirit of light and direction, John xvi. 13. exciting and ſtrengthening grace, which comes by the ſupply of the Spirit, Philip. i. 19. Eph. iii. 16. comforting grace in all trials and afflictions, for he is the comforter abiding for ever where once he comes, John xiv. 16. and eſtabliſhing grace, whereby the ſinner once in Chriſt, is forever kept from falling away, either totally or finally, ver. 17. 1 John ii. 27. In a word, Chriſt having left us the Spirit of grace in his teſtament, all grace ſuitable to our need lies open to us. Wherefore none that hear the goſpel remain deſtitute of grace, but becauſe they will not come to Chriſt for it.

Legacy 4. A ſuitable portion of the good things of this life, as infinite wiſdom ſees needful: Pſal. xxxvii. 3. 'Thou ſhalt dwell in the land, and verily thou ſhalt be 'fed.' Chriſt in his teſtament, has diſponed to ſinners a kingdom, even the kingdom of God, and added thoſe things thereunto, Matth. vi. 33. His teſtament is ſuited to all our need, even in temporal things; he hath ſeen to our proviſion and protection, according to the promiſes made thereanent in the covenant. Theſe promiſes primarily made to himſelf in the eternal covenant, he hath by his teſtament, as it were, indorſed to us, to be made forthcoming to all who by faith embrace it, and claim them upon it. Wherefore believers may go to Chriſt for their daily bread, as well as for ſpiritual benefits: pleading the teſtament for the one, as for the other. And to receive the bread and the water in virtue of Chriſt's teſtament, will be more ſatisfying to a Chriſtian in the exerciſe of faith, than all the fulneſs of worldly men can be; foraſmuch as at that rate they have them as the purchaſe of the precious blood of the Teſtator and his Father's bleſſing therewith.

Legacy 5. An unſtinged death: John viii. 51. ‘If ‘a man keep my ſaying, he ſhall never ſee death.’ Men in their teſtaments make proviſion for the comfortable life of their legatees; but they can leave them nothing to make death ſafe and comfortable to them. But in Chriſt's teſtament there is a ſpecial proviſion for his legatees in death, as well as in life: and in the faith thereof, the ſaints have welcomed the grim meſſenger, dying comfortably in the faith of the ſealed teſtament, Heb. xi. 13. Our Lord Jeſus being to encounter death armed with its ſting, and that in its full ſtrength given it by the broken law, was perfectly ſure of the victory: ſo making his teſtament, he left it as a part of his laſt will, that ſinners of Adam's race ſhould be free from the ſting of death, through faith in him. A precious legacy, which he could well bequeath, becauſe purchaſed by his own death: and which he can and will make effectual, ſince the fulneſs of power over death and the grave is in his hand, and he is executor of his own teſtament. How lamentable is it, that men, knowing they muſt die, ſhould ſlight the teſtament, and the kindneſs of their beſt friend, appearing here where none elſe are capable to help.

Legacy 6. and laſt. Everlaſting life on the other ſide of death: John vi. 58. ‘He that eateth of this bread, ‘ſhall live for ever.’ Chriſt's teſtament looks not only to this, but the other world; in it is proviſion made not only for time, but for eternity: he hath diſponed in it a kingdom, the kingdom of heaven, as an everlaſting inheritance for the legatees, Luke xxii. 29. This comprehends the happineſs of the ſoul in its ſeparate ſtate; the glorious reſurrection of the body at the laſt day; and the complete happineſs of ſoul and body together, from thenceforth, and for evermore. The importance thereof who can expreſs! But whatever is in it, it is in the teſtament made over to ſinners of mankind: and whoſoever of them come to Chriſt for it, ſhall, upon the ground of his faithfulneſs, without all peradventure, obtain it.

Theſe are the comprehenſive legacies of Chriſt's teſtament. To enter more particularly into the detail of them, there would be no end. Ye have the book of the teſtament, both old and new, among your hands: read it diligently; and that as Chriſt's teſtament, as indeed it is: and in every page ye will perceive of the unſearchable riches. Withal remember, that it nearly concerns you, and every one of you, as parties legatees in whoſe favour it was made: ſince ye are men, ſons of men, Prov. viii. 4. The teſtament is lawfully intimate to you, both by the preaching of the word, and by putting a copy of it, a Bible in your hands. And ye are called to come to Chriſt, as Executor of it, by faith in him, to receive your legacies. Happy will you be, if ye anſwer the call. But if ye do not, it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment than for you: for it will aggravate your condemnation, that not only were all theſe legacies left you in Chriſt's teſtament, but the ſame was intimate unto you, and ye were called to come to the Executor to receive them, but ye believed not, ye would not.

Thus far of Chriſt the Teſtator of the covenant.

III. Chriſt the Prophet of the covenant.

The covenant being an eternal tranſaction, which no creature had acceſs to be witneſs unto; the being thereof was an abſolute ſecret to the whole creation: and, in that it was a myſtery of the manifold wiſdom of God, Eph. iii. 10. no creature was ſufficient to unfold the nature thereof. Upon the which accounts, the apoſtle calls it the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom, which God ordained before the world, 1 Cor. ii. 7. And thence appears a neceſſity of conſtituting a Prophet of this covenant: and that none but a divine perſon was fit to be the original Prophet thereof; and this ſo much the more, that, by reaſon of the ſpiritual blindneſs of the parties unto whom it was to be revealed, a mere objective revelation could not be ſufficient in the caſe: for ‘the natural man receiveth not the things of ‘the Spirit of God; for they are fooliſhneſs to him: ‘neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritual‘ly diſcerned,’ ver. 15. Wherefore Jeſus Chriſt was, as Adminiſtrator of the covenant, conſtitute the Prophet thereof; being he of whom, by the apoſtle's teſtimony, ‘Moſes truly ſaid unto the fathers, A Prophet ſhall the ‘Lord your God raiſe up unto you, of your brethren, ‘like unto me,’ Acts iii. 22. And whoever elſe were at any time prophets thereof, he alone was the original Prophet of it, John i. 18. ‘No man hath ſeen God at ‘any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bo‘ſom of the Father, he hath declared him.’

And in this character Chriſt was conſtitute, (1.) The Meſſenger, (2.) The Witneſs, and (3.) The Interpreter of the covenant.

1. In the capacity of Prophet, he was conſtitute the meſſenger of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1. to bring the good tidings of that treaty of peace into the world: and not only ſo, but by the authority of Heaven, to proclaim the treaty to ſinners, to offer them the benefit thereof, and to deal with them to accept, by coming into it perſonally. A covenant ſurely of unparalleled weight and importance, that had ſuch a meſſenger thereof.

2. In the ſame capacity he was conſtitute the witneſs of the covenant, Iſa. lv. 4. Behold! I have given him for a witneſs to the people. God knew the world to be a guilty world, whoſe conſciences witneſſed their demerit of death; and that therefore they would be very ſlow to believe the good news from heaven, touching the covenant of peace: and for this cauſe he would give them one competent to witneſs the truth thereof; and pitched upon Jeſus Chriſt for that effect. He was a ſon of Adam: ſo the more fit to atteſt it unto men: he was the eternal Son of God; and therefore not liable to error or miſtake in his teſtimony: he was an eye witneſs to the eternal tranſaction, and ſo he could ſpeak in the matter that which he had ſeen with the Father, John viii. 38. He came down from heaven, where the covenant was made, unto the earth, in favour of which it was made: wherefore he could witneſs in earth, what he had ſeen in heaven about it, chap. iii. 31. ‘He that cometh from ‘heaven is above all.’ Verſe 32. ‘And what he hath ‘ſeen and heard, that he teſtifieth.’ In him we have a twofold witneſs, which is full evidence in law. He is the Amen, the faithful and true witneſs, Rev. iii. 14. In him we have the witneſs of man; in reſpect whereof he is the faithful witneſs: and the witneſs of God; in reſpect whereof he is the true witneſs, even truth itſelf. Compare John viii. 18. ‘I am one that bear wit‘neſs of myſelf.’ Where Chriſt as a divine witneſs, in reſpect of his Godhead, is ſaid to bear witneſs of himſelf, as a man appearing in the world, revealing the covenant. And in reſpect of both theſe, he is the Amen, whoſe witneſs confirms and determines the truth of the matter in law.

3. He is in the ſame capacity conſtitute the interpreter of the covenant, Job xxxiii. 23. to teach it unto men. We are not only ſlow to believe the covenant, but it is hard for us to underſtand it. It lies ſo far beyond the reach of our natural underſtanding, that we cannot underſtand it in a ſaving manner, unleſs the Son of God hath given us an underſtanding (a ſupernatural one) that we may know him that is true, 1 John v. 20. And whoſoever ſhall ſo underſtand it, muſt be all taught of God, John vi. 45. that is, of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 46. So he is by the Father conſtitute interpreter, and great teacher of the myſtery of the covenant; and all the children of the covenant muſt be his diſciples, and learn of him.

Now, Chriſt's adminiſtration of the covenant, as the Prophet thereof, may be taken up in theſe three things following.

1. His intimating and offering the covenant to ſinners by his word, for bringing them perſonally into it. This he did from the time of Adam's fall, is now doing, and will do even unto the end of time, that the myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed. He began the old Teſtament diſpenſation thereof, in Perſon. Appearing in human ſhape, with his own mouth he gave the firſt notice of the covenant that ever there was in the world, and made the firſt offer of it in paradiſe, Gen. iii. 8, 15. He carried it on by prophets and ordinary teachers, whom he commiſſionated for that effect, and furniſhed with gifts for the work. The former of theſe he employed to write in his name, as well as to ſpeak therein, in that matter; and by both he ſpoke to ſinners, intimating and offering the covenant unto them, by their means; whether through the word written or ſpoken. And thus he managed that work, to the ſalvation of thoſe who believed in the patriarchal ages, before and after the flood; and all along the time of the Jewiſh church, from Moſes to the end of that diſpenſation. Then he alſo began the New Teſtament diſpenſation in his own perſon. Having by his incarnation become man, he applied himſelf to this work. Though he was born king of the Jews, Matth. ii. 2. and many of them would have had him to have mounted their throne, John vi. 15. yet he chuſed rather to appear in the character of a prophet, and betake himſelf unto the work of the miniſtry, for to preach the goſpel, and intimate and offer the covenant to periſhing ſinners; and ſo he was a miniſter of the circumciſion, Rom. xv. 8. Of him in this capacity particularly, Solomon, that king-preacher, was a type, Eccl. i. 1. And this alſo he did, and ſtill doth carry on mediately and by proxy, eſpecially after his aſcenſion into heaven; and that partly by his apoſtles and other extraordinary officers, whom he employed to write, as well as to ſpeak, in his name; and partly by ordinary miniſters of the goſpel, to be continued in the church to the end of the world, Eph. iv. 11, 12, 13. Thus he is now adminiſtering the covenant unto us, by putting his written word of the Old and New Teſtament in our hands, and ſending men in his name to preach the goſpel unto us. By theſe means he ſpeaks to ſinners, intimating and offering them the covenant; and ſo he carries on the work, to the ſalvation of thoſe that believe, and rendering unbelievers inexcuſable, 2 Cor. v. 20. Rev. iii. 22. Luke x. 16. Wherefore the offer of the covenant made to us in the goſpel, is his offer; and though the word is ſent to us by men, they are but his voice in the matter, he is the ſpeaker. Then ſee that ye refuſe him not that ſpeaketh, Heb. xii. 25.

2. His making the intimation and offer of the covenant effectual to the elect, by the Spirit, 1 Pet. i. 12. 'By them that have preached the goſpel unto you, with 'the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven.' The great Prophet of the covenant can effectually teach the moſt unteachable ſinners of mankind; cauſing light not only to break forth in a dark world, by his word, but in dark hearts, by his Spirit: for the fulneſs of the Spirit is light in him, and he hath eye-ſalve for the ſpiritually blind, Rev. iii. 18. He knoweth who are his, in whoſe name he contracted with the Father, and received the promiſe of the Spirit: and, ſooner or later, he ſo enlightens them, that he reſcues them from under the power of their ſpiritual darkneſs, and renders the adminiſtration of the covenant effectual to them, however ineffectual it be to others, Col. i. 13. And this he doth, by bringing his word to them with power, through the efficacy of his Spirit opening their eyes. In the firſt place, by his Spirit acting upon them, as a Spirit of bondage, he ſets home on their conſciences, the holy law in the commands and curſe thereof, as of divine authority, and binding on them in particular. Hereby they are convinced of their ſin and miſery, ſeeing their ſin as heinous in the ſight of God, and his wrath due to them for their ſin: they are filled with remorſe, terror, and anxiety: are made to pant for relief, feel an abſolute need of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and deſpair of relief by any other way, Acts ii. 37. and xvi. 29. 30. And then, by the ſame Spirit acting within them as a Spirit of life, and communicated unto them from himſelf, in the word of the goſpel, he ſets home on their hearts and conſciences, the glorious goſpel in its free promiſe of life and ſalvation to ſinners through Jeſus Chriſt, as it ſtands in the holy ſcriptures; clearing and demonſtrating the ſame unto them, to be the infallible word of the eternal God, and his word to them in particular: 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. 'Ye 'received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in 'truth) the word of God.' chap. i. 5. 'For our goſpel 'came not unto you in word only, but alſo in power, 'and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance.' This demonſtration of the Spirit is that which immediately cleareth to them the ground of their believing in particular; as ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Cor. ii. 4. 5. 'My preaching was—in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power: 'that your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, 'but in the power of God.' And it is an internal atteſtation of the word of the goſpel unto them, diſtinct from the cleareſt external and miniſterial atteſtation of it; according to the ſaying of our Saviour, John xv. 26. 'The 'Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he 'ſhall teſtify of me.' Ver. 27. 'And ye alſo ſhall bear 'witneſs.' By the power hereof, getting, by way of ſpiritual ſight, John vi. 40. a knowledge of Chriſt in his tranſcendent glory and excellency, exhibited to them in the free promiſe of the goſpel, they are infallibly brought to believe. The Spirit thus applying the word of the goſpel to them, they greedily embrace it, and apply it to themſelves by faith; as may be ſeen in theſe converts, Acts ii. 38. 'Then Peter ſaid unto them, 'Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name 'of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins.' Ver. 39. 'For the promiſe is unto you.' Ver. 41. 'Then they 'that gladly received his word, were baptized.'

3. Laſtly, His teaching and inſtructing them by his word and Spirit, from thenceforth, as children of the covenant, his own diſciples. The whole plan of ſalvation is laid down in the covenant, being a myſtery of the manifold wiſdom of God, whereof there is ſtill more and more to be learned: and Chriſt is the great prophet to teach it. And the ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will ſhew them his covenant, Pſal. xxv. 14. The ſaints, by reaſon of the remains of darkneſs in their minds while here, are apt to loſe ſight of the parties in the covenant: but the great prophet is to ſhew them the Father, and to manifeſt himſelf unto them, by the Spirit. The condition of the covenant, the Mediator's own righteouſneſs, the ſole ground of all their hopes, cannot be kept in view, but by means of the light of life from himſelf. And in his light only can they have a believing view of the promiſes and privileges of the covenant. The duties of the covenant, whereof the exceeding broad law of the ten commands is the rule, are many; and though they be clear in themſelves, yet they are often ſo dark and perplexed to us, that we cannot diſtinguiſh between ſin and duty: but the children of the covenant have an infallible teacher, whom they may conſult in all caſes, and of whom they may learn how to ſteer their courſe in every point; and the meek will he guide in judgment, the meek will he teach his way, Pſal. xxv. 9.

The darkneſs brought on mankind by ſin, nothing but the grace of the new covenant can effectually diſpel, The true light is a benefit of that covenant, purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt; and lodged with him among the reſt of the benefits of his great truſt; and he hath the diſpenſing of it, as the great Prophet of the covenant. To him then muſt we have our recourſe for light in all caſes, whether we be under the midnight darkneſs of a natural ſtate, or under the twilight-darkneſs of the preſent imperfection of a ſtate of grace; yea, in the mid-day light of glory, the Lamb is the light of the heavenly city, Rev. xxi. 23.

And thus Chriſt is the prophet of his covenant.

IV. Chriſt the King of the Covenant.

The Covenant of grace is a matter of ſo vaſt importance, both to the honour of God, and the good of ſouls; and of ſuch a diffuſive and general concern to mankind, that the adminiſtration thereof required one inveſted with kingly power and authority for that effect. And the diſpoſition of the parties, objects of the adminiſtration, together with the nature of the thing itſelf, which concerns the inner man chiefly, and the diſpoſal of the choiceſt of Heaven's favours at once laid aſide the greateſt of men, and the higheſt of angels, as no more fit to bear that office, than to produce another world out of nothing. Wherefore the Father's choice in that matter natively fell on his own Son, the ſecond Adam: and he was made King of the covenant.

God as Creator of the world, is King of the ſame, by an original, underived right; and ſo he hath the ſupreme power over it, of which he can no more diveſt himſelf, than of his being. This is the eſſential kingdom, common to the three Perſons in the glorious Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt.

But the kingdom of the covenant, whereof we ſpeak, is a derived, delegated one, which the Mediator Chriſt holds of his Father by the tenor of the covenant, for the adminiſtration thereof; as is declared, Pſal. ii. 6. yet have I ſet my king upon my holy hill of Zion. Now, the great deſign of that adminiſtration, is, to gather together ſinners of mankind into one body, under the bond of the covenant; and to make them happy, in the enjoyment of the privileges thereof, in grace and glory: the which body, the church, is the kingdom of the covenant, a kingdom that was to be won, and raiſed out of the rebel world of mankind, lying in wickedneſs; and whereof Chriſt was by his Father conſtitute the alone King and Head.

In ſubſerviency to this kingdom, the kingdom of providence throughout the world was alſo committed to him, being made the head over all things to the church, which is his body, Eph. i. 22. 23. he was appointed to rule, not only over his willing ſubjects, but in the midſt of his enemies, Pſal. cx. 2. The management of the wheel of providence, throughout the whole world, was put into the hands of Zion's King. Into the ſame hand that the Father hath committed the government of the church, he hath alſo committed the government of the world; for there is no exception. 'The Father hath 'committed all judgment to the Son,' John v. 22. 'All power in heaven and in earth,' Matth. xxviii. 18. So he is Lord of lords and King of kings. Rev. xvii. 14. and 'by him kings reign—princes rule, and nobles, 'even all the Judges of the earth,' Prov. viii. 15. 16. This headſhip over the world was neceſſary to his adminiſtration of the covenant, as Head of the church; neceſſary for compaſſing the ends thereof. Being veſted therewith, he ſets up and pulls down, in the world, as he ſees meet for the great purpoſes of the covenant; and of what uſe this is, in the adminiſtration thereof, may be learned from Iſa. xliii. 14. 'For your ſake' (namely, for the ſake of the church) 'I have ſent to 'Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles, and 'the Chaldeans.' Verſe 15. 'I am your King.' Thus the King and Head of the church manageth all things by his providence, as well without as within the church; though in a very different manner, becauſe in a very different relation, as to his own people, and to ſtrangers. The which was typified in David, who for the benefit of his own kingdom, the kingdom of Iſrael, was made the head of the Heathen, Pſalm. xviii. 43. For David ſmote the Philiſtines, and ſubdued them, 2 Sam. viii. 1. and the Moabites, verſe 2. and the Syrians, verſe 6. And all they of Edom became David's ſervants, ver. 14. And David reigned over all Iſrael, and David executed judgment and juſtice unto all his people, verſe 15.

Now, the chief acts of Chriſt's adminiſtration of the covenant, as he is King thereof, are theſe.

1. His appointing ordinances of his kingdom, both for bringing of ſinners perſonally into the covenant, and for confirming and ſtrengthening the covenanted; as alſo officers of his kingdom, to adminiſter theſe ordinances in his name and authority. Both the one and the other were different, under the Old Teſtament, and under the New; which hath made two different forms of external adminiſtration of the covenant; the old, which is paſſed away, and the new, that will continue to the end of the world; but both were from the ſame authority, and for compaſſing the ſame great deſigns of the covenant, agreeable to the different times for which they were appointed, and all of them to be found in the ſcriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, the book of the manner of the kingdom. It was the ſame Lord Jeſus, the angel of the covenant, which ſpake to Moſes in the mount Sinai, Acts vii. 38. who inſtituted the new teſtament church and ordinances, and gave ſome apoſtles, and ſome prophets, and ſome evangeliſts, and ſome paſtors and teachers; for the perfecting of the ſaints, for the work of the miniſtry, Eph. iv. 11. 12. The Saviour, King, and Lawgiver of the church, are one, Iſa. xxxiii. 22. 'The Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King, 'he will ſave us.'

2. Emitting his royal proclamations into the world, by the hand of his meſſengers, in the goſpel; bearing, that whoſoever will come unto him, and unite with him as the head of the covenant, by faith, ſhall be readily received into it, and have a right to all the privileges thereof, in him: Mark xvi. 15. 'Go ye into all the world, 'and preach the goſpel to every creature.' Ver. 16. 'He that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved.' Therein the covenant is publiſhed, and offered in his name to every ſinner of mankind unto whoſe ears this voice reacheth: and they are called, commanded, and charged to come into it, and ſubmit to his royal ſceptre. His call and offer is their warrant to come: his command obligeth them, that they cannot refuſe, but in rebellion and diſobedience againſt his royal authority. The promiſes are ſet before them indefinitely, that whoſoever will, may, by believing, apply them to themſelves. The king's proclamation meddles not with the ſecrets of the eternal election, to reveal them. But the promiſes of the covenant, infallibly to be accompliſhed in ſome, are, in Chriſt's teſtament, as indorſed to ſinners of mankind indefinitely, to be fulfilled unto all and every one who ſhall by faith embrace them: and the proclamation makes lawful intimation of the teſtament. This intimation is the appointed means of begetting faith, and of bringing ſinners into the covenant thereby; for faith cometh by hearing, Rom. x. 17. And it is made effectual to ſome, by the Spirit, through the grace of the covenant ſecured by promiſe for them.

And hence it is, that, the covenant being thus adminiſtered to all promiſcuouſly, there is an uſe of conditional phraſes in the adminiſtration thereof; though in the covenant itſelf there are no conditions, properly ſo called, but what were fulfilled by Jeſus Chriſt in his own perſon. The word of the covenant coming with a like warrant to the elect and the non-elect; to them who certainly will believe, and to them who will continue in their unbelief; the adminiſtering of it equally to both in the goſpel-proclamation, muſt needs be by propoſing the promiſes indefinitely as to perſons; the which muſt at length be reſolved into conditional phraſes. So it is proclaimed into the ears of all, I will betroth thee unto me, and I will be to them a God. And one believes and applies the ſame; and he is thereupon united to Chriſt, and inſtated in the covenant to all ſaving purpoſes; another, who hath as good a revealed warrant to believe as the former, yet believes not; and ſo comes ſhort of the promiſe. Now, to ſpeak alike to thoſe who will thus differently entertain the words of the covenant, it follows of courſe to reſolve them into ſuch expreſſions as theſe, 'Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou 'ſhalt be ſaved;' and, 'He that believeth ſhall be ſaved, he that believeth not ſhall be damned.' Mean while the covenant itſelf is a different thing from the form of the external adminiſtration of it.

3. Effectually ſubduing the elect to himſelf, through the power of his Spirit ſo managing the word, that it operates on them like a ſword, piercing their ſouls, conquering their natural averſion and obſtinacy, and making them willing to yield, and embrace the covenant. Rev. i. 16. 'Out of his mouth went a ſharp two-edged 'ſword.' What that ſword is, and by what a ſtrong arm it is wielded, in this caſe, may be learned from the apoſtle, calling it the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, Eph. vi. 17.; and what the effect of it is, being managed by that arm of the Lord revealed, is declared by the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. cx. 3. 'Thy people ſhall 'be willing in the day of thy power;' and by the prophet, Iſa. xliv. 3. 'I will pour my Spirit upon thy ſeed:' Ver. 4. 'And they ſhall ſpring up.'——Ver. 5. 'One 'ſhall ſay, I am the Lord's.' Chriſt communicates to them, and every one of them, at the time appointed in the eternal counſel, the Spirit and grace in the covenant, therein ſecured for them by promiſe: and thereby they are quickened, enabled, and determined to believe. And whereas he finds them priſoners, though priſoners of hope, he opens the houſe of their bondage, breaking the yoke of ſin, death, and the devil, from off their necks, by his Spirit applying to them his ſatisfaction. The which has that mighty effect, inaſmuch as then the law hath full ſatisfaction as to them; and the law being ſatisfied, the ſtrength of ſin is broken; and the ſtrength of ſin being broken, the ſting of death is taken away; and the ſting of death being taken away, the devil loſeth his power over them; and Satan's power over them being loſt, the preſent evil world, which is his kingdom, can hold them no longer. Thus they are ſeparated from the world lying in wickedneſs, and conſtituted members of the kingdom of Chriſt; delivered from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, Col. i. 13. And from thenceforth, though they be in the world, yet they are no more of it; but ſtrangers and pilgrims in it, true and lively members of the inviſible kingdom of Chriſt; a ſociety to which the world is an implacable enemy, John xv. 19. 'Ye are not 'of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, 'therefore the world hateth you.' And herein Chriſt doth, in a ſpecial manner, ſhew himſelf a King mighty in battle, by the power of his grace overcoming the moſt perverſe and rebellious to a cordial ſubmiſſion, and reſcuing them from the bondage and dominion of their enemies.

4. Gathering them and others with them together into a viſible church ſtate, Gen. xlix. 10. 'Unto him 'ſhall the gathering of the people be.' Thus is erected the viſible church or kingdom of Chriſt in the world; a ſociety ſeparate from the viſible kingdom of the devil, and profeſſing faith in, and obedience to Chriſt, outwardly bearing his badge, and the ſigns of his covenant. Among them is the ordinary ſeat of the adminiſtration of the covenant, the ordinary means of ſalvation, and offers of grace. In their land the voice of the turtle is heard, and the ſinging of birds in the preaching of the glorious goſpel; while there is a laſting winter over all the world beſides. They have the Bible, and ſabbaths, the miniſtry of the word, and the holy ſacraments. Among them is to be found the communion of ſaints, and a church government, inſtituted for controlling the unruly, ſuppreſſing of ſin and wickedneſs, and encouraging an orderly walk. And they have the privilege of heaven's protection; inſomuch that the church ſhall be defended, and her enemies ſo reſtrained and conquered by her King, that ſhe ſhall continue while the world ſtands, maugre all oppoſition that hell can make againſt her; Matth. xxviii. 20. Lo, I am with you alway even to the end of the world.

5. Laſtly, Ruling and governing his true and kindly ſubjects agreeably unto the covenant, by which his royal prerogative is ſtated, and their privileges are ſecured, Iſa. ix. 6. The government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder. Of this his government there are ſeveral acts, the chief of which are theſe following.

1ſt, He gives them the laws of the covenant; not only intimating the ſame unto them externally by his word; but teaching them internally by his Spirit, writing them upon the tables of their hearts, and leaving an indelible copy of them affixed there; Heb. viii. 10. 'I will put 'my laws into their minds, and write them in their 'hearts.' Theſe laws of the covenant are no other but the laws of the ten commandments, originally given to Adam in his creation, and at his tranſportation into paradiſe and ſettlement there, veſted with the form of the covenant of works; and now, unto believers in Chriſt, ſtanding without that form, in the covenant of grace, as the eternal rule of righteouſneſs, whereunto they are to be conformed by the grace of the covenant; the effectuating of which is committed by the Father to Jeſus Chriſt as adminiſtrator thereof. And accordingly, he carries it on, by his word and Spirit, in a ſuitableneſs to their nature as rational agents, and to their ſtate; making theſe laws known to them, as the rule of life, unto which they ſtand bound by the ſovereign authority, and matchleſs love of God their Creator and Redeemer; and withal inclining their hearts unto the obedience of the ſame.

2dly, He gives them the rewards of the covenant in the courſe of their obedience: Pſal. xix. 11. In keeping of them there is a great reward. He puts his people indeed to work and labour; but not to labour in the fire, and for vanity, as the ſervants of ſin do; they are to work and labour, like the ox treading out the corn, which was not to be muzzled, but to have acceſs at once to work and to eat. The ſervice now done to Zion's king, hath a reward in this life, as well as a reward in the life to come. By the order of the covenant, there is a privilege eſtabliſhed to follow duty, as the reward thereof; the which order is obſerved by the king, in his adminiſtration. Accordingly, he propoſeth the privilege of comfort, to excite to the duty of mourning, Matth. v. 4. 'Bleſſed are they that mourn; for they 'ſhall be comforted:' the ſpecial tokens of heaven's favour, to excite unto a holy tender walk, John xiv. 21. 'He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, 'ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and 'will manifeſt myſelf to him.' In like manner, to excite to the ſame holy obedience, he propoſeth the full reward in the life to come, 1 Cor. ix. 24. 'So run that 'ye may obtain.' Rev. iii. 21. 'To him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my throne.' And ſo certainly doth he accompliſh the promiſe of the reward of both kinds, that his people may be aſſured their labour is not in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. xv. 58. for faithfulneſs is the girdle of his loins; and in diſpenſing of the privileges to his people upon the back of their duty, he doth but obſerve the ſtated order of the covenant. Not that the order of the covenant is, in every particular, firſt duty, then privilege: nay, it is firſt firſt privilege, next duty; then privilege again; and ſo forward, till privilege and duty come both to perfection in heaven, not to be diſtinguiſhed more. Wo to us if it were otherwiſe! truly if it were otherwiſe, we could neither be brought into the covenant, nor kept within it in life; for how ſhall one at firſt believe, till once he is privileged with the quickening Spirit? And how ſhall a fallen ſaint renew his faith and repentance, till once he is privileged with new influences of grace? John xv. 5. Without me ye can do nothing. But here lies the matter, the leading privilege bringing in duty, there follows further privilege on the back of duty, according to the order of the covenant; and theſe further privileges are the rewards we ſpeak of. And the ſcripture calls them reward, even in reſpect of the ſaints; becauſe they are given to a working ſaint, on the back of his work. Howbeit they are as far from the nature of a reward, ſtrictly and properly ſo called, the which on the account of one's work is of debt to him, as the leading privileges are, that produce the working; but both the one and the other are equally the reward of Chriſt's work, in the moſt ſtrict and proper notion of a reward.

3dly, He miniſters unto them the diſcipline of the covenant, in the caſe of their diſobedience. The diſcipline of the covenant is fatherly chaſtiſement, which their eſtate of imperfection in this life makes neceſſary to their welfare; and therefore it is ſecured for them in the covenant, Pſalm lxxxix. 30. If his children forſake my law;—verſe 32. Then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with the rod,—verſe 33. Nevertheleſs—verſe 34. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. It belongs to the promiſſory part of the covenant, and particularly to the promiſe of ſanctification; foraſmuch as it is not vindictive, but medicinal; being an appointed means of advancing holineſs in them. 'He chaſtens for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs,' Heb. xii. 10. And thus it ſerves to purge iniquity, and to take away ſin, Iſa. xxvii. 9. namely, in that as a fire melting down the paint and varniſh of the defiling objects in the world in our ſight, and as a looking-glaſs ſhewing us our pollution, it occaſions and excites us unto waſhing in the only laver of the blood of Chriſt, by faith. Now the adminiſtering of the diſcipline of the covenant is committed unto Zion's King, John v. 22. 'The Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son,' Rev. iii. 19. 'As many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten.' And, as to the nature of it, it comprehends all manner of ſtrokes upon their worldly ſubſtance, name, employments, and relations; all manner of bodily afflictions, diſeaſes and pains incident to ſinful fleſh; even natural death itſelf, 1 Cor. xi. 30. 32. and generally, all outward ſtrokes which any of the children of men are liable to, Eccleſ. ix. 2. 'All things come alike to all.' Moreover, it comprehends alſo ſpiritual ſtrokes, ſuch as deſertion, God's hiding his face from them, withdrawing the light of his countenance, their loſing ſome meaſure of their graces and comforts, woundings of ſpirit, horrors of conſcience, whereby they may be brought to the very brink of deſpair; ſo that, howbeit the caſting of them into hell is not within the compaſs of the diſcipline of the covenant, yet the caſting of a kind of hell into them, making them to roar by reaſon of diſquietneſs of heart, Pſalm xxxviii. 8. is within the compaſs of it. And what is worſe than any of all theſe, it comprehends their being haraſſed with horrid temptations, and ſet up as marks for Satan's fiery darts, Eph. vi. 16. the hardning of their hearts, Iſa. lxiii. 17. their being ſuffered to fall into one ſin, and that a groſs ſin too, for the puniſhment of another, as in the caſe of David and Peter. All theſe things are within the compaſs of the diſcipline of the covenant; and believers are particularly and directly threatned with them, in the caſe of their diſobedience to move them to beware of it; yea, and they are often inflicted by Zion's King on his beloved ſubjects, that, by theſe marks of his diſpleaſure againſt their ſin, he may correct them, make ſin bitter to them, and ſtir them up to repentance and watchfulneſs. And the worſt of them all, even the very hardening of their hearts, and the puniſhing of one ſin with another, are, by the ſovereign grace of the covenant, made effectual for theſe holy ends; the which grace opening the heart in renewed repentance, godly ſorrow for ſin breaks forth the more forcibly, as waters do which have been long dammed up. Thus theſe bitter waters, running in the channel of the covenant, become healing waters; theſe ſharp ſwords are, by the covenant, beaten into plough-ſhares; and theſe piercing ſpears, into pruning hooks. Of this diſcipline of the covenant, all the ſubjects of Chriſt in this world do partake; and they muſt be under it, till they arrive at perfection in the other world, Heb. xii. 6. 7. 8.

5thly, He affords them the defence of the covenant, while in this life they are amongſt their enemies, Pſal. lxxxix. 18. 'For the Lord is our defence; and the holy One of Iſrael is our king.' Satan is their enemy, a malicious ſubtile, and powerful enemy: but Chriſt is their friend, and takes them under his protection. He loves them dearly, as the purchaſe of his own blood, the members of his own myſtical body, and bearing his Father's image: he is infinitely wiſe, and can outſhoot the devil in his own bow: and he is the ſtronger man, who can bind the ſtrong man. The world joins iſſue with Satan in oppoſing them; but ſhall not prevail to ruin them, neither by force nor fraud: for greater is he, than the god of this world and all his dominion, 1 John iv. 4. "Ye are of God, and have overcome them: becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." Their worſt enemies are within them, namely, the remains of corruption, which, in the depth of ſovereign wiſdom, are not expelled during this life: but left for their exerciſe and trial, and for the diſcovery of the power of the grace of their King. And he manifeſts his power, in keeping alive in them the ſpunk of holy fire, in the midſt of an ocean of corruption; and cauſing it to make head againſt the ſame, untill it quite dry it up: Rom. vii. 24. 'O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!' Ver. 25. 'I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.' He has all their enemies in chains, that they can act no further againſt them than he ſees meet to permit: and at his pleaſure he reſtrains them, bounding them by his power, as to the kind, degree, and continuance of their attacks, Pſal. lxxvi. 10. 'The remainder of wrath ſhalt thou reſtrain.'

Laſtly, He authoritatively completes the happineſs of the covenant in them: he purchaſed it for them as a Prieſt; reveals it to them as a Prophet: but as a King, he doth in the way of authority, put them in full poſſeſſion thereof, Matth. xxv. 34. 'Then ſhall the King ſay unto them on his right hand, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.' And by the ſame authority he will paſs ſentence againſt his and their enemies, having fully conquered them, verſe 41. And ſo he will complete for ever the peace of his covenant-ſubjects.

Thus far of Chriſt's adminiſtration of the covenant, as he is King thereof.

V. Chriſt the Interceſſor of the Covenant.

As for performing the condition of the covenant, Jeſus Chriſt became the Prieſt, namely, the ſacrificing prieſt of it, as hath been ſaid in the due place: ſo for the adminiſtration of the covenant, he became the interoffice, namely, the interceeding prieſt of it. Chriſt's interceſſion did not take its place in the making of the covenant. The love and grace of God made the motion for a new covenant freely; and the breach betwixt God and ſinners was of another nature, than to be made up by a ſimple interceſſion: the which might have moved mercy, but could not have ſatisfied juſtice, that requiring a ſacrifice for ſin, could not be ſatisfied by pleading, but by paying a ranſom; Heb. ix. 22. Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion. Neither doth Chriſt's ſacrificing take its place in the adminiſtration of the covenant; there is no need of any new ſacrificing there; 'For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them 'that are ſanctified,' chap. x. 14. But his ſacrificing properly took its place in the making of the covenant, and fulfilling the condition thereof; and his interceſſion, in the adminiſtration of the covenant, and fulfilling the promiſes of it. Accordingly, for the adminiſtration of the covenant, he is the Interceſſor thereof: Rom. viii. 34. 'It is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again, 'who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo mak-'eth interceſſion for us.'

And indeed there was need of an interceſſor for that effect: ſince an infinitely holy God, and ſinful creatures, could neither come together into a ſtate of peace, nor continue in it, with the ſafety of God's honour, without an interceſſor. Wherefore Jeſus Chriſt being appointed thereto, is, in that character, 'entered into heaven it-'ſelf, now to appear in the preſence of God for us,' Heb. ix. 24. to manage the buſineſs of the covenant for our behoof; willing the merit of his ſacrifice to be applied to all thoſe in whoſe room and ſtead he died, and that for all the intents and purpoſes of the covenant in their favours, according to the method laid down and ſtated therein. And this his interceſſion is always effectual, as he himſelf teſtifieth, ſaying unto his Father, John xi. 42. 'I knew that thou heareſt me always.' Whence it appears, that the object of it is not of equal latitude with the object of the adminiſtration of the covenant, and of his acting in the other relations belonging to that adminiſtration; but that it is reſtricted unto thoſe whom he, as ſecond Adam, repreſented in the eternal tranſaction. And this is very agreeable to the nature of the divine contrivance for the ſalvation of ſinners; in which the eternal purpoſe hath made a difference of perſons, according to ſovereign will and pleaſure: this being as it were, one clauſe in the conſtitution of the adminiſtration, peculiarly in favour of the objects of electing love. So the Interceſſor himſelf teacheth us, John xvii. 9. 'I 'pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt 'given me:' ver. 20. 'For them which ſhall believe 'on me.' ver. 24. 'Father, I will that they alſo whom 'thou haſt given me, be with me where I am.'

Now, Chriſt adminiſters the covenant as Interceſſor thereof, theſe following ways chiefly.

1. Effectually procuring, by his intereſt in heaven, the actual inbringing of his elect, at the time appointed, into a covenant-ſtate of union, communion, peace, and favour with God: John xvii. 20. 'Neither pray I for 'theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall believe on 'me through their word;' ver. 21. 'That they all may 'be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that 'they alſo may be one in us.' They are by nature in a ſtate of enmity with God, even as others; but through Chriſt's interceſſion the peace is made between heaven and them. He purchaſed it for them by the blood of his ſacrifice; it was promiſed to him in the covenant on that ſcore; and by his interceſſion he actually obtains it unto them. His interceſſion is the ſpring that puts all the wheels in motion, that are ſet a-going, in the time of loves, for bringing one out of the ſtate of nature, into a ſtate of grace. Providence manageth favourably towards the converſion of the man; the word powerfully affects him, while on others it falls like rain on a rock, running off as faſt as it comes on; the buſineſs of eternal ſalvation is cloſely laid to heart with him; the law doth its office upon him, and ſo doth the goſpel alſo in its turn; and theſe things ceaſe not, until he is brought into a new ſtate, and he is become a new creature. Whence did all this take its riſe? Why, the man had an unknown friend in the court of heaven, who ſpoke for him to the King; and all this is the fruit of that interceſſion made for him.

2. Appearing for them, and in their name taking poſſeſſion of heaven, and all the other benefits of the covenant, which they have a right to, in virtue of their new covenant ſtate: Eph. ii. 6. 'And hath raiſed us up to-'gether, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in 'Chriſt Jeſus.' Heb. vi. 20. 'Whither the forerunner is 'for us entered.' That moment wherein a ſinner enters into the covenant by believing, he hath a right to all; for if children then heirs, Rom. viii. 17. Howbeit, in the caſe of moſt of the children of God, the poſſeſſion ſeems to be delayed long after that time. But it is to be conſidered, that poſſeſſion may not only be taken by a man in his own perſon, but alſo in the perſon of another; thus one may by his attorney take poſſeſſion of an eſtate which he never ſaw; and a minor, by his repreſentative, may be poſſeſſed of what is not as yet meet to give him into his own hand. So, howbeit the believer's poſſeſſion of all in his own perſon is indeed delayed; yet in this reſpect it is not delayed one moment after believing in Jeſus Chriſt: for his Interceſſor acts for him in the matter. What ſhould hinder this manner of poſſeſſion one moment after believing? For the covenant of promiſe is an undoubted right; the ſinner though on earth, doth by faith plead it before God in heaven; and Chriſt is there, as his repreſentative and interceſſor, to take poſſeſſion in his name. Wherefore every believer ſhall juſtly reckon himſelf, though having nothing, yet poſſeſſing all things, 2 Cor. vi. 10. and complete in him, Col. ii. 10.

3. Maintaining the peace between God and them while they are here in this world. Having purchaſed their peace with Heaven by the ſacrifice of himſelf, and by his interceſſion brought them into a ſtate of peace, he doth not leave it to themſelves to maintain it. If it were ſo, it would ſoon be at an end. There are ſo many failures on their part, while they are compaſſed with the body of ſin, that their own conſciences have wherewith to accuſe them every day; and the devil is an inceſſant accuſer of the brethren: but Chriſt intercedes for them, to the preventing always a total rupture betwixt Heaven and them; however they may for their ſins fall under God's fatherly diſpleaſure? upon the ground of his ſatisfaction for them, he anſwereth all accuſations againſt them, and makes up all the emerging differences between them and their covenanted God: 1 John ii. 1. 'If any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, 'Jeſus Chriſt the righteous:' verſe 2. 'And he is the 'propitiation for our ſins.' Hereupon the apoſtle triumphs over all their accuſers, Rom. viii. 33. 'Who 'ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It 'is God that juſtifieth:' verſe 34. 'Who is he that 'condemneth? It is Chriſt that died,——who alſo 'maketh interceſſion for us.' Wherefore their ſtate of peace with God is inviolably maintained; though for their correction, they may indeed loſe the ſight and ſenſe of it for a time. Having once become their friend in Chriſt, he may indeed ſeverely chaſtiſe them for their faults, but he never becomes their enemy again, even in the way of legal enmity, far leſs in the way of real enmity, Rom. viii. 1. Iſ. liv. 9.

4. Procuring them acceſs to God, and acceptance with him, notwithſtanding of their imperfections, while in this life. Saints on earth never want buſineſs in the court of heaven. Yet being ſinful, they are in themſelves unfit to come into the preſence of the King. But the Interceſſor of the covenant introduceth them, procuring them acceſs by his intereſt in the court: For through him we have an acceſs by one Spirit unto the Father, Eph. ii. 18. And by his means they are allowed acceſs with boldneſs, chap. iii. 12. He makes their perſons accepted, notwithſtanding of the ſinfulneſs cleaving to them: they are accepted in the beloved, chap. i. 6. And in him they have an altar that ſanctifies their gifts, Heb. xiii. 13. So that their ſpiritual ſacrifices, howbeit they want not their blemiſhes, yet are acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Their prayers made in faith, though ſmelling rank of the remains of the corruption of nature, yet being perfumed by the Interceſſor with the incenſe of his merit, are accepted in heaven, and have gracious returns made them, Rev. viii. 3. Their doing ſervices, and their ſuffering ſervices, which howſoever coſtly, could not be accepted for their own worth, becauſe imperfect, are through his interceſſion accepted, as being waſhed, and made white in the blood of the Lamb, chap. vii. 14.

5. Laſtly, Obtaining their admittance into heaven, in the due time; and continuing their ſtate of perfect happineſs there for ever and ever: John xvii. 24. 'Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am.' Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt was by his Father, conſtituted a Prieſt for ever, Pſal. cx. 4. Nevertheleſs, after his having once offered up himſelf a ſacrifice on the croſs, he offereth no more ſacrifice. Therefore he muſt be, not a ſacrificing Prieſt for ever, but an interceeding Prieſt, as the apoſtle explains it, Heb. vii. 25. 'He ever liveth to make interceſſion for them.' Now, the ſpirits of juſt men being made perfect immediately after death, there is no more imperfection about their ſouls morally conſidered, Heb. xii. 23.; and after the reſurrection, there will be no more imperfection about their bodies neither, 1 Cor. xv. 53. The effect then of Chriſt's interceſſion for ever, muſt be the everlaſting continuation of their happy ſtate; their Interceſſor eternally willing the continuance of the ſame, on the ground of the eternal redemption obtained for them, by the ſacrifice of himſelf. The infinite merit of his ſacrifice will be eternally preſented before God in the holy place, while he ſhall appear there in our nature continually: and this will be the everlaſting ſecurity for the continuation of the ſaints happineſs. The which happineſs iſſuing from the merit of his ſacrifice as their Prieſt, will be communicated unto them by him as their Prophet and their King: for theſe his offices will never be laid aſide. As he is a Prieſt for ever, ſo of his kingdom there ſhall be no end, Luke i. 33. and the Lamb will be the light of the heavenly city, Rev. xxi. 23.; the ſaints communion with God there, being ſtill in and through the Mediator, in a manner agreeable to their ſtate of perfection, chap. vii. 17.

And theſe are the chief acts of his adminiſtration of the covenant, as Interceſſor thereof.

Thus far of the fourth head, namely, the adminiſtration of the covenant.

HEAD V.

The TRIAL of a ſaving perſonal inbeing in the covenant of grace.

WE have now opened the doctrine of the covenant of grace, in treating of the parties in it, the making of it, the parts of it, and the adminiſtration thereof: it remains to make ſome practical improvement of the whole, in this and the following head.

If one ſeriouſly conſiders the covenant of grace, as that on which the ſalvation of our ſouls depends, he can hardly miſs to put the queſtion to himſelf, What intereſt have I in that covenant? There is no queſtion but you have a common intereſt in it, by which you are ſufficiently warranted to come into it: but that you may have, and yet periſh; for even 'children of the kingdom ſhall be caſt out into utter darkneſs,' Matth. vii, 12. But the queſtion is, Whether ye have a ſaving intereſt in it, being actually come into it, or not? The covenant is indeed brought unto you, in the ordinances of the goſpel: but are you brought into the covenant, united with the head thereof, Jeſus Chriſt? It hath been adminiſtered to you: but have you by faith taken hold of it? You have received the ſacrament of baptiſm, the ſeal of the covenant, in the right of your parents: but have you perſonally embraced the covenant in ſincerity? The two covenants, of works, and of grace, divide the whole world between them: every man is under one of the two; and no man can be under both at one and the ſame time, in reſpect of his ſtate before the Lord, Rom. vi. 14. Under the firſt covenant ſtands a numerous party, in the firſt Adam, head of that broken covenant, deriving ſin, death, and the curſe from him: under the ſecond covenant ſtands a party, in the ſecond Adam, head of that fulfilled covenant, deriving life and ſalvation from him. Theſe parties will be judged, each according to the covenant they are under: ſo the former will be condemned, in virtue of the curſe of the covenant in which they are; and the latter will be eternally ſaved, in virtue of the promiſe of life, in the covenant wherein they are. In the mean while, there is acceſs for thoſe of the firſt covenant to leave their party and covenant, and to join the party in the ſecond covenant: but death will block up that acceſs. Wherefore it is the intereſt of the one, as well as of the other, to know which party and covenant they belong to. And for trial hereof, I offer the following marks, ſigns, or characters of thoſe who are ſavingly and perſonally within the covenant of grace.

I. They are ſuch as have fled for refuge from the covenant of works; that have come into the covenant of the ſecond Adam, as refugees from the covenant of the firſt Adam. For that is the character of the heirs of promiſe, Heb. vi. 17. 18. Though time was, when they lived at eaſe within the dominion of the covenant of the law; yet God hath ſet fire to their neſts there, that they have found themſelves unable to dwell any longer within the boundaries of that covenant. Mount Sinai hath been altogether on a ſmoke round about them, and the trumpet of the curſe of the law hath waxed louder and louder, till it made them to hear it on the ſide of their righteouſneſs and beſt works, where they were deafeſt; and it hath cauſed them exceedingly to fear and quake, as a curſe denounced againſt them in particular: Rom. vii. 9. When the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. It hath chaſed them from all the ſtarting holes about that mountain, and left no place within the bounds of that covenant ſafe to them; not only hath it chaſed them out of their profane courſes, but alſo out of all confidence in their good works and duties of whatſoever kind: to flee for their life into the covenant of free grace, as the ſlayer into the city of refuge, what things were gain to them counting theſe loſs for Chriſt, Philip. iii. 7.

II. They are ſuch as cordially approve of and acquience in the plan of the covenant, as ſuited to the honour of God and to their caſe in particular; looking upon it as well ordered in all things, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Whoſoever duly conſiders the corruption brought into man's nature by the fall, will plainly perceive, that the method of ſalvation laid down in the covenant of grace, is the very reverſe of the inclination of corrupt human nature; ſo that nothing leſs than the powerful efficacy of divine grace can bring a ſoul unto a cordial approbation of it, and acquieſcence in it; wherefore our Lord pronounceth them bleſſed, whoſoever ſhall not be offended in him, Matth. xi. 6. Natural men may indeed ſhape the covenant, in their own apprehenſions, into ſuch a form, as they may have a very good liking of it. They may apprehend it as a covenant deſigned to make men eaſy and happy, while in the mean time it allows them, at leaſt in ſome inſtances, to be unholy; as a covenant wherein, through Chriſt's merits, they may obtain acceptance with God by their good works, notwithſtanding of their ill works. But in all this they are in love with a creature of their own fancy, not with God's covenant of grace. Let the covenant be ſet before them in the light of the holy Scripture, and viewed by them in that light; they will be ſure to diſlike it, and pike holes in it. Let the deſign of the covenant be fairly diſcovered, as being to exalt God's free grace on the ruins of all excellency left with man; to make Chriſt all, and man nothing in his own ſalvation; the proud heart cannot away with that, cannot ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God, Rom. x. 3. The efficacy of it, in working out ſin, ſeparating between the ſoul and its deareſt luſts, once fairly appearing; natural men flee from it, as if one cried unto them, There is death in the pot. Let them ſeriouſly enter into the thought, how it is ſuited to the honour of God, and the divine perfections; and how it is ſuited to their real ſafety before him; and they cannot ſee how it is ſo. To the Jews wiſdom it is a ſtumbling block, a device inconſiſtent with the divine perfection; the Grecian learning pronounceth it fooliſhneſs, a method of ſalvation unſafe to be truſted to: only the eye of faith diſcovers it to be the power of God and the wiſdom of God; ſafe for guilty creatures, and honourable for a holy God, 1 Cor. i. 23. 24.

III. Upon the diſcovery of the covenant to them, as made from eternity between God and the ſecond Adam, and offered to them in the goſpel; they will ſatiſfy themſelves, in their covenanting, with heaven's draught of of it, ſo far as they underſtand it; and they will not go about to add unto it, nor diminiſh from it; but will ſtand to the terms of God and Chriſt's making, Acts ix. 6. Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? They will put a blank in the Lord's hand, for their part; as content of all within the compaſs of the covenant, without putting in their exception, or deſiring amendments and alterations to be made in their favour. They are content of the laws of the covenant, as well as of the privileges of it; of the diſcipline of the covenant, as well as of the rewards of it; of the condition of the covenant as fulfilled by Chriſt alone, as well as the promiſes of it to be fulfilled to them; and of the promiſe of ſanctification, as well as of the promiſe of juſtification and glorification. Hence the covenant, as revealed in the goſpel, is by the Holy Ghoſt called a hearing, Iſa. liii. 1. marg. that is, a thing to be heard and received by faith, as a voice is received and heard by the ear according to that, chap. lv. 3. Hear, and your ſoul ſhall live. It is the natural diſpoſition of mankind to ſpeak rather than to hear; for we are more ready to declare our own will by ſpeaking, than to receive the will of another by hearing. Wherefore the goſpel being the declaration of the will of God for our ſalvation, only to be heard and received by faith, and therefore called the hearing of faith, Gal. iii. 2. there is need of the power of grace, to ſubdue the heart to the hearing thereof, and to ſtop the mouth from making propoſals of our own in that matter.

IV. The love of God in Chriſt is habitually predominant in them: Prov. viii. 17. I love them that love me. Great was the love to them appearing in the covenant. The parties contractors about them acted therein from a principle of free, and yet greateſt love. From thence ſprung the firſt motion for a covenant of life and ſalvation unto them: thence it was the Father was content to give his own Son for them; the Son was well pleaſed to become man, and ſuffer death for them; the Holy Spirit to take them for his habitation, to quicken, ſanctify, and perfect them. The love of God produced the propoſal of the great and precious promiſes in their favour, upon terms conſiſtent with his juſtice: Chriſt as ſecond Adam, out of love to them, accepted of theſe terms. And when the eternal tranſaction was, in the goſpel, by the demonſtration of the Spirit, opened and brought home to their ſouls; this love ſhone forth to them, ſo as they believed it. And that believed love of God in Chriſt kindled in their ſouls a ſuperlative love to him again: 1 John iv. 19. We love him, becauſe he firſt loved us. And therefore, although that their love is not always alike vigorous, but hath its waxings and wanings according to the increaſe and decreaſe of their faith; yet, ſince their faith never altogether fails, Luke xxii. 32 it never fails altogether neither, from the moment that it is kindled in their hearts. And it is an active principle in them, conſtraining them to obedience, 2 Cor. v. 14. giving the chief room in their heart and affection to God in Chriſt, that their ſoul ſaith, 'Whom 'have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon 'the earth, that I deſire beſide thee,' Pſalm lxxiii. 25. It makes it to be their greateſt care to pleaſe him, and to be accepted of him, 2 Cor. v. 9. and their greateſt fear, to ſtir him up, or offend him, Cant. iii. 5. It makes duty agreeable to them, as a matter of choice: 1 John v. 3. 'This is the love of God, that we keep 'his commandments: and his commandments are not 'grievous.' And it renders the remains of ſin, the body of this death, a heavy burden they long to be delivered from, Rom. vii. 24.

V. Jeſus Chriſt the head of the covenant, is their head with their own conſent. With heart and good-will they have taken him for their head, for all the purpoſes of the covenant; and they ſtand to it, not to alter, if the choice were to make a thouſand times. Thoſe unto whom the Father from eternity choſe to Chriſt for a head, do, in the day of their converſion, by faith approve the choice, making it over again perſonally for themſelves; whence they are ſaid to appoint themſelves one head, Hoſ. i. 11. And as often as they reiterate their acts of faith, which they muſt live by, they do upon the matter reiterate their choice. Being ſenſible of what they ſuffered by the miſcarriage of Adam their firſt head, Chriſt is precious to them as a ſecond Adam. They come into the covenant, and abide alſo in it, under his wings allenarly; expecting no benefit of it, nor by it, but through him. And they have taken him as their head for government, as well as their head for nouriſhment and ſupport. They have delivered up themſelves unto him, to be ruled by him, as well as to be ſaved by him; to be governed by his laws, and not by their own luſts, as well as to be ſaved by his grace, and not by their own works.

VI. The condition of the covenant fulfilled by Jeſus Chriſt, is the alone ground of their confidence before God, as to acceptance with him, or any benefit of the covenant they look to partake of. A crucified Saviour is the foundation laid in Zion, for ſinners to build on: and believing on him is the ſoul's building upon it, 1 Pet. ii. 6. If men build on another foundation, they build on the ſand, and their confidence ſhall be rooted out: If, being driven off from all other foundations, they build not on this neither, they muſt needs periſh as the chaff which the wind driveth away. To believe, or build on Chriſt's righteouſneſs by him fulfilled, can import no leſs than one's truſting on it for his ſalvation. Whether this truſt be ſtrong or weak, it muſt be, elſe faith is not, building on Chriſt is not; but the ſoul is kept in a ſtate of wavering, in oppoſition to the ſtaying of it by faith on Chriſt, Jam. i. 6. Now, he that is within the covenant takes Chriſt's righteouſneſs as his alone ground of confidence before the Lord: for the covenant ſhews not not ſhows any other, nothing ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2. He hath ſome meaſure of confidence for life and ſalvation, upon that ground; whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from the deſperate, faithleſs, and unbelieving: and what confidence he hath for life and ſalvation, he hath upon that ground alone; whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from the preſumptuous, formaliſts, and hypocrites. And both theſe things are joined in the believers character, Philip. iii. 3. 'And rejoice in 'Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.'

VII. The promiſes of the covenant are a ſatisfying portion to their hearts. They are indeed ſenſible they have many wants: but then they ſee as much in the covenant as would ſupply them all; that they need not go to another door for ſupply: they are perſuaded there is as much water in that well as would quench all their thirſt, if they could but get the art of drawing it. Thus the covenant is all their ſalvation, and all their deſire, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. This diſcovery of the covenant is not owing to nature, but to that grace which ſhews ſo much worth in the one pearl, as makes a man content to ſell all he hath, to gain it, Matth. xiii. 46. But no man will come unto the covenant, untill once he get it; for who will join himſelf to one in a marriage-covenant, or contract of ſervice, with whom he cannot ſee how to live? Faith diſcerns in the covenant not only a refuge, but a portion, Pſal. cxlii. 5. elſe the man would never come into it. And none, who have once got this diſcovery, will remain out of the covenant, Pſal. ix. 10. 'They 'that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee.' See John iv. 10. If the worth of the treaſure hid in the field of the goſpel, be perceived, all will go for the obtaining thereof, Matth. 44. 45. all will be counted loſs and dung for the excellency of it, Philip. iii. 8. Certainly the men of the world do not ſee this in the covenant: it is but an empty hungry thing in their blinded eyes. The covenant is, in the goſpel, held out to them in the breadth and length thereof: but it does not take with them; it is far from being all their deſire: after all as if they had ſeen nothing that could ſatisfy, they ſtill cry, Who will ſhew us any good? Pſal. iv. 6. The truth is, the heart of man can never ſee enough in the covenant for to reſt ſatisfied with, till grace give it a new ſet, and contract its endleſs deſires: for that which the unrenewed heart is moſt ſet upon, there is no proviſion in the covenant for, but againſt it.

VIII. The Spirit of the covenant is in them: and that is another ſpirit than what the men of the world are acted by, Numb. xiv. 24. Ezek xxxvi. 27. I will put my Spirit within you. The Spirit of Chriſt is the Spirit of the covenant, purchaſed by the blood of the covenant, lodged in the fulneſs thereof in Chriſt the head of the covenant, and communicated in ſome meaſure to all the covenant-people. And that Spirit may be known by theſe three characters thereof.

1. The Spirit of the covenant is a ſpirit of holineſs. The great deſign of the covenant, next to the glory of God, was the ſanctification of ſinners, Luke i. 74, 75. All the lines of the covenant, from the firſt of them unto the laſt, meet in that as their centre. There is a diſplay of exact juſtice, in the condition of the covenant; of rich grace and mercy, in the promiſes of it: of greateſt faithfulneſs and power, in the adminiſtration of it: but holineſs goes through the whole, and every the leaſt part of it. Wherefore it is called the holy covenant, Dan. xi. 30. Who then can reaſonably imagine, that the unholy are within this covenant? that the ſervants of ſin whether profane, or formaliſts, ſtrangers to the power of godlineſs, whom no bands of holineſs will hold, can be within the bond of the holy covenant? No, ſure they are not; they have not the Spirit of the covenant. The Spirit of the covenant makes the covenanted initially holy; and to preſs towards the mark, to wreſtle, long, grone, and pant for the perfection of holineſs, Philip. iii. 14. It makes a vein of holineſs run through their whole man; their whole life; their thoughts, their words, their actions; their dealings with God, and their dealings with men. The covenant was erected on purpoſe to deſtroy the works of the devil: it was a confederacy entered into by the Father and the Son, for rooting ſin out of the hearts and lives of the children of Adam; for reſtoring the divine image in them; and for bringing them again to a perfect conformity to the moral law of the ten commandments, from which they fell in Adam. For this end was the condition of it performed, the promiſes of it made, and the adminiſtration thereof committed to the holy Jeſus: 1 John iii. 8. 'For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might 'deſtroy the works of the devil.' Wherefore, whoſoever partake of the Spirit of the covenant, partake of the Spirit of holineſs: Gal. v. 18. 'If ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law.' Ver. 16. 'Walk in the 'Spirit and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh.'

2. The Spirit of the covenant is an ingenuous free ſpirit, Pſal. li. 12. It is the ſpirit of ſons, not of ſlaves; of free men, not of bond men, Rom. viii. 15. There is ſome obedience to the holy law given by unbelievers, the men of the firſt covenant, as well as by believers, the men of the ſecond covenant: and the eyes of the world can perceive no difference between the obedience of ſome of the former ſort, and of thoſe of the latter ſort; howbeit there is a vaſt difference, which is ſeen by the all-ſeeing eye. Are theſe within the covenant praying perſons? So are many, who have no ſaving part nor lot in it, Iſa. lviii. 2. Are they men of temperance and ſobriety, juſtice and honeſty, candor and faithfulneſs, men of blameleſs lives? So are ſeveral others beſides them, for all that any man can ſee, Philip. iii. 16. Thus far they agree. But there is a vaſt difference of the ſpirit they are acted by, which makes a mighty odds in the manner and kind of their obedience. Unbelievers are acted by a ſpirit of bondage, ſuitable to their ſtate of bondage under the covenant of works, Gal iv. 24, 25. A ſlaviſh fear and a ſervile hope are the weights hung upon them by that covenant, cauſing them to go: ſin is avoided, duty performed, not out of love to God and holineſs, but out of love to themſelves. Believers are acted by the Spirit of adoption, ſuitable to their ſtate of adoption, under the covenant of grace, ver. 26. God is their Father; and they ſerve him as ſons, not as ſlaves, Mal. iii. 17. Chriſt is their elder brother, who loved them, and gave himſelf for them; and his love conſtrains them, 2 Cor. v. 14. The holy Spirit dwells in them, hath quickened them, renewed them, making them partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. i. 4. So ſin is avoided, as contrary to their new nature, duty purſued as agreeable to it. Their faith of the love of God in Chriſt hath begotten in them love to God again, for a new principle of obedience, 1 Tim. i. 5. By faith they truſt on Chriſt, and on him alone for life and ſalvation: and this at once undermines in them the ſlaviſh fear of hell, and the ſervile hope of heaven; ſo that theſe are ſo far from being their only motives to obedience, that they cannot be their predominant motives; nay, they cannot be at all in them, but as enemies to their faith and love, 2 Tim. i. 7. 1 John iv. 18. Yet withal, it is to be remembered, that it is not ſlaviſh for ſaints to fear God's fatherly anger, and thereby to be ſtirred up to duty, Pſal. cxix. 120. Heb. xi. 7.; nor to hold the way of duty, in hope of the enjoyment of God in that way, and the tokens of his favour, John. xiv. 21. and in the end perfect happineſs in heaven; all through Jeſus Chriſt alone, 1 Cor. xv. 58. Our need of theſe things for incitements to duty, do indeed argue our childiſh ſtate, for there will be no need of theſe fears and hopes in heaven; but by no means a ſlaviſh ſtate. Neither is it at all ſlaviſh, to have the heart filled with a reverential fear and dread of God, upon the conſideration of his tremenduous juſtice, and wrath in hell, againſt the miſerable objects thereof; and to be ſtirred up to duty thereby, Matth. x. 28. Heb. xii. 28. 29. To look thereunto, and move away towards God in the way of duty, with fear and trembling, is very agreeable to the ſtate of thoſe who have by faith received a kingdom that cannot be moved; but are not yet aſcended into heaven; who are indeed drawn up out of the fearful depth; but are not as yet haled up to the top of the rock, though the ſtrong chain of the covenant is ſo about them, that they ſhall never fall down again. For in heaven the awe and reverence of God, on that ſcore, will be perfect, Iſa. xi. 1, 2, 3. But it is ſlaviſh for ſaints, to fear their being caſt into hell for ſin; and ſervile, to hope their obtaining heaven for their good works. And yet that ſlaviſh fear and ſervile hope, may creep in upon the children of the ſecond covenant, and move them to duty: becauſe their faith is weak, much of the old Adam remains in them, and it is not eaſy for them, though dead to the law in point of privilege, to be dead to it in point of practice. But theſe impure mixtures of ſelfiſhneſs in their duties will be humbling unto them: and they will loath themſelves, for that they act not, in their obedience, with more of the free ſpirit and ſon-like diſpoſition. And their will in that caſe is accepted through Chriſt.

3. The Spirit of the covenant is a Spirit of ſympathy, regulated by the covenant. There is a commonneſs of intereſt, and thence a mutual ſympathy, among confederates. And this ſympathy among the confederates of heaven, regards both the head and the people of the covenant.

(1.) They have a native and kindly ſympathy with the God and head of the covenant. It is true, his eſſential glory can never be liable to diminution; nor can his eternal reſt in himſelf be in the leaſt diſturbed, by whatſoever men or angels may do or ſuffer: and the man Chriſt is now beyond the reach of ſuffering. Nevertheleſs, his declarative glory in the world hath its times of ſhining clear, and of being under a cloud. Now, as he hath a ſympathy with them, in all their concerns, their diſtreſſes, and their enlargements, their joys and their griefs, Iſa. lxiii. 9. Luke xv. 5.; which is a very tender ſympathy, inſomuch that the touching of them is the touching of the apple of his eye, Zech. ii. 8.: ſo they alſo have a very tender ſympathy with him, in the concerns of his glory. They are glad and rejoice in the proſperity of his kingdom, Acts xi. 23, 24. They pray for it continually, Pſal. lxxiii. 15.; and contribute their endeavours, in their ſtations to advance it, Philip. i. 21. 'For me to live is Chriſt.' They have a feeling of the indignities done to his Majeſty, as done to themſelves, Pſal. lxix. 9. 'The reproaches of them that reproached thee, are fallen upon me.' And they are mourners for the ſins of others, as well as for their own; on the account of the diſhonour they do to God, becauſe they keep not his law, Pſal. cxix. 136. The children of the covenant will neither be oppoſers of the kingdom of Chriſt, nor will they be neuters; but will put their ſhoulders to the work of their Lord, to help it forward, according to their vocation: and without ſuch a public ſpirit, in greater or leſſer meaſure, no man ſhall be able to prove his ſaving intereſt in the covenant: for ſo hath our Lord himſelf determined the matter, Matth. xii. 30. 'He that is not with me, is againſt me; and he that 'gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad.'

(2.) They have a native and kindly ſympathy with the people of the covenant; for they are members one of another, Eph. iv. 25. The grace of the covenant diſpoſeth men to be loving, and beneficial to mankind, but in a peculiar manner to holy men; to do good unto all men, eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith, Gal. vi. 10. The common bond of the covenant engageth them in a peculiar love to one another; even as in that bond, they are the common objects of the world's hatred. They bear the ſame image with Chriſt their common head; and that image will recommend all who bear it, unto one that is within the covenant himſelf, ſo far as he can diſcern it. Wherefore their love is a love to all the ſaints, Eph. i. 15. And hence ariſeth the ſympathy which every true Chriſtian hath with the church of Chriſt throughout the world, and with the ſeveral members thereof known to them; their joint intereſt in the covenant challengeth it; for by the covenant there is a near relation among them; and from their union under the ſame head, reſults their communion, 1 Cor. xii. 12. 26. Therefore a ſpirit of ſelfiſhneſs, whereby mens concerns are all ſwallowed up in their own things, leaving them no ſympathy with the church and people of God, is a ſhrewd ſign of a graceleſs ſtate. How much more, a ſpirit of reigning enmity againſt religion, and the profeſſors thereof; where religion, and what concerns it, make men the ſpecial objects of their enmity, ſpite, and reſentment? An habitual courſe of this is none of the ſpots of God's people; but it declares men to be of the world, John xv. 19. I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you, the Spirit of the covenant will carry men quite another way; ſince, taking hold of the covenant, they have embarked in the ſame bottom with thoſe whoſe head Chriſt is, and who have declared war againſt the devil's kingdom. To whom they will ſay, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you, Zech. viii. 23.

IX. In the laſt place, The laws of the covenant are in their hearts, namely, the laws of the ten commandments, the eternal rule of righteouſneſs, Heb. viii. 10. That law, in all its parts, is a copy of the divine nature, which in regeneration is tranſcribed into the heart of of every one brought into the covenant: and the whole of it is written there, tho' every part is not written alike clear, nor any part perfect. As is the image of God reſtored in us, ſo is the law written in our hearts: in ſanctification there is a new man created; which ſpeaks a perfection of parts, though there is not a perfection of degrees in theſe parts, Eph. iv. 24. 2 Cor. v. 17. 1 Cor. xiii. 12. This may be taken up in theſe four things.

1. They approve of the whole law, ſo far as it is known to them: Pſalm cxix. 128. 'I eſteem all thy precepts 'concerning all things to be right.' They love God: and every part of the law is a line of his image: wherefore loving the law as expreſſing the image of his holineſs, they muſt needs love the whole law: ſince there is nothing in it but what is a tranſcript of that holineſs. And as the head of the covenant is in their eyes altogether lovely, Cant. v. 16. the laws of the covenant being like him, muſt be ſo too. Why do not unbelievers love the holy law, but becauſe they do not love a holy God? Rom. viii. 7. But believers loving a holy God in Chriſt, muſt love the law alſo, ſince in it the image of his holineſs is expreſſed. The holy law condemns many things in them; yea, every thing of theirs, ſo far as it is morally imperfect; and ſo they do themſelves, conſenting to the law that it is good, chap. vii. 16. It condemns every ſin, every one's moſt beloved ſin, the evil he is moſt eaſily led aſide into: and for that very cauſe the unrenewed heart hates the law. But the grace of the covenant makes a man to leave his complaint on himſelf; to approve the law, and condemn his own luſt contrary thereto: Rom. vii. 12. 'The law is holy, 'and the commandment holy, and juſt, and good,' verſe 14. 'But I am carnal.'

2. They have an inclination of heart towards the whole law, ſo far as they know it: Pſalm cxix. 5. 'O 'that my ways were directed to keep thy ſtatutes?' There is in them a fixed principle, which lies the ſame way with the holy law: bending away from what the law forbids, and towards what the law directs unto. True, there is a contrary principle in them too, which fights againſt it; but ſo do they againſt that contrary principle, breathing, longing, and luſting for the complete victory over it, and for full conformity to the holy law, Gal. v. 17. This is a new ſet of heart given in the new birth; exerting itſelf, not in lazy wiſhes for conformity to the law, but in a reſolute ſtruggle for it, enduring to the end. Hence,

3. They will habitually endeavour to conform in their practice to the whole law, ſo far as they know, Pſalm cxix. 6. 'Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have 'reſpect unto all thy commandments.' If the law is written in one's heart, he will write it out again in his converſation; and a ſanctified heart, will certainly make a holy life: Matth. vi 22. If thine eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be full of light. Where is the efficacy of the holy covenant, if men may be within the covenant, and yet live like thoſe that are without it? Nay but to whomſoever the grace of God hath effectually appeared, it will have taught them effectually to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world, Tit. ii. 11. 12. If the grace of the covenant bring you not to the duties of piety towards God, you have no ſaving part in it. If you are brought unto theſe, but withal left at liberty from the duties of righteouſneſs toward your neighbour, that you do not loath, but dare to be unjuſt in ſmaller or greater matters; you are yet in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity. Luke xvi. 11. 'If ye have not been 'faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will com'mit to your truſt the true riches?' If you are brought forward unto both theſe, and yet not ſober, but left ſlaves to your ſenſual appetite and fleſhly affections, you are no better: for they that are Chriſt's have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts, Gal. v. 24. But whoſo have fled to the covenant of grace in Chriſt for life and ſalvation, and withal are honeſtly endeavouring conformity to the whole law in their practice, they, howbeit in many things they miſs their mark, do ſhew themſelves to be within the bond of the holy covenant, and ought to take the comfort thereof, as the divine allowance to them: 2 Cor. i. 12. 'Our rejoicing is this, the teſ'timony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly 'ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of 'God, we have had our converſation in the world.'

4. Laſtly, Their ſouls ly open to what of the laws of the covenant they know not. They are content to know them, deſirous to be taught them, that they may conform unto them: Pſalm cxix. 26. Teach me thy ſtatutes. There are many ſins of ours hid unto us: becauſe there is much of the laws of the covenant we do not diſcern. And hypocrites do not deſire to know the whole law: they are willingly ignorant of ſome things thereof, becauſe they have no inclination to entertain them. But the ſincere, being content to part with every falſe way, and to take upon them the whole yoke of Chriſt, hating ſin as contrary to God's nature and will, and loving duty as agreeable thereto, do of courſe ly open to further diſcoveries of ſin and duty: they come to the light, John iii. 21. They ſay, 'That which I ſee not, teach thou 'me,' Job xxxiv. 32. 'Search me, O God, and know 'my heart: try me and know my thoughts. And 'ſee if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me 'in the way everlaſting,' Pſalm cxxxix. 23. 24.

And thus much ſhall ſuffice to have ſpoken on the fifth head, namely, The trial of a ſaving perſonal inbeing in the covenant of grace.

HEAD VI.

The WAY of INSTATING Sinners perſonally and ſavingly in the Covenant of Grace.

BY the marks and characters given, it appears, that they are but few who are perſonally and ſavingly inſtated in the covenant of grace, in compariſon of thoſe who are ſtrangers to it; but we are allowed to offer it to ſtrangers; to invite and call them who are without the covenant, to come into it, and ſo to compel them to come in, Luke xiv. 23. Here then are the glad tidings of the goſpel: there is a covenant, which was entered into from eternity between God and Chriſt the ſecond Adam; a covenant of grace, made in favour of ſinners of Adam's race, ruined by the breach of the covenant of works. In it there is full proviſion for your ſalvation; to relieve you from all the ruining effects of the broken firſt covenant, and to render you completely happy. The condition of this covenant is indeed high; being ſcrewed up to a pitch by the demands of the law and juſtice: yet there is nothing on that part to diſcourage you from the covenant; for your inability being foreſeen from eternity, it was laid upon one that is mighty, to perform it; and now it is already performed and fulfilled to your hand by that mighty One Chriſt Jeſus. Only, the promiſes remain to be fulfilled. So the burden of the condition is over without you; and ye are called to the benefit of the promiſes. And that ye may have the more clear acceſs thereto, the adminiſtration of the covenant is put into the hand of the ſame Chriſt Jeſus: and he is intruſted with all the promiſes, to fulfill them to ſinners. He hath begun to fulfill them to all who have taken hold of the covenant; and he is ready to fulfill them to all who yet ſhall take hold thereof. For that end he hath made his teſtament of theſe promiſes, and conſtituted ſinners of mankind his legatees; that whoſoever of them will, may come, claim, and take hold of the water of life freely, Rev. xxii. 17. The whole of the covenant is in him. In him is God, the party-contractor on heaven's ſide, 2 Cor. v. 19. 'God was in Chriſt, reconcil'ing the world unto himſelf.' He himſelf is the party contractor on man's ſide; and in him are believers really, and all the elect legally and repreſentatively. In him is the condition of the covenant, and that as fulfilled: he is the Lord our righteouſneſs, Jer. xxiii. 6. In him are all the promiſes yea, and amen, 2 Cor. i. 20. all meeting in him, as lines of a circle in their centre; and ſure and ſtedfaſt, no ways liable to miſgive, as did the promiſe of the covenant of works in the firſt Adam. And he as a King hath emitted his royal proclamations, bearing, that whoſoever will come unto him, and unite with him as head of the covenant, ſhall be taken into it, and have a right to all the privileges thereof in him, and through him.

Thus the covenant is brought to you, and ſet before you in the goſpel: ſo that ye muſt needs be either receivers or refuſers of it. Refuſe it not: that is dangerous beyond expreſſion. Take hold of it; for it is your life. Sinners, ye are under the covenant of works, where there is no life, nor ſalvation for you; but the door of the new-covenant is opened unto you: come, enter into it without delay. Flee, and make your eſcape out of the dominion of the law, the covenant of works, ye are born under, and are living under: and that can no ways be done, but by your accepting and embracing this covenant offered to you in the goſpel; to the inſtating of you perſonally in it: to all the purpoſes of life and ſalvation.

Sinners inſtated in the covenant by Faith or believing.

TO clear your way into the covenant, it is neceſſary to ſhew, by what means it is that a ſinner embraceth and is inſtated in it, effectually unto ſalvation. And this, in one word, is by faith or believing on Jeſus Chriſt, Acts xvi. 31. ‘ Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and ‘ thou ſhalt be ſaved.’ The covenant of grace is held forth in the goſpel unto you; God ſaith to every one of you, ‘ I will make an everlaſting covenant with you, ‘ even the ſure mercies of David:’ and to cloſe the bargain with you, and ſtate you perſonally in it, to all the intents and purpoſes of ſalvation, all that is required of you, is to hear, that is, to believe; Hear, and your ſoul ſhall live, Iſa. lv. 3. He that believeth is within the covenant of grace perſonally and ſavingly: he that believeth not is ſtill under the covenant of works, where the firſt Adam left him. Faith is the hand whereby one taketh hold of the covenant, ſigns it for himſelf, and cloſeth the bargain for his own ſalvation. It is the mouth whereby ſinners conſent to the covenant, that God becomes their God, and they his people. Altho' while ye are without the covenant, the working of perfect obedience under the pain of the curſe is required of you: and more than that, ſuffering alſo, even to the ſatisfaction of juſtice; and both theſe, in virtue of the broken firſt covenant: and when ye are once brought within the covenant, obedience to all the ten commandments, and ſuffering of the diſcipline of the covenant in caſe of your failures, are required of you, in virtue of the new covenant ye are entered into: yet to enter you into the covenant, and inſtate you in it unto ſalvation, nothing is required of you, but that ye believe on Chriſt. Only believe, Mark v. 36. is the conſtant doctrine of the goſpel in this point. Do what you will, and believe not, you remain in a ſtate of damnation: whatever is done, or not done by you, believe, and you are in a ſtate of ſalvation. If you ſhould ſay it with your lips a thouſand times over, that you accept of the covenant, if you ſhould come under the moſt ſolemn and awful bond and engagement to be the Lord's, expreſsly taking the ſame upon you in prayer, or otherways; if you ſhould write your covenant, and ſubſcribe it with your hand; and ſhould take the ſacrament of Chriſt's body and blood upon it, to confirm all: yet if you do not with the heart believe on Jeſus Chriſt, you embrace not the covenant, you miſs the ſaving hold of it, and remain without the ſaving bond of it. And if you ſhould this moment with the heart believe on Chriſt, having no acceſs to ſpeak, pray, write, or communicate: yet the moment you believe, you are perſonally and ſavingly inſtated in the covenant, never to fall out of it through the ages of eternity; God is your God, and all the promiſes of the covenant are yours, though you had miſſed the grip of the covenant ten thouſands times before: in that caſe you have it firm and ſure: Mark xvi. 16. ‘ He that believeth and is ‘ baptized, ſhall be ſaved: he that believeth not, ſhall ‘ be damned.’

And that believing on Chriſt ſhould be the appointed means of entering ſinners into the covenant of grace, is very agreeable to the nature and end of that great tranſaction. The which appears by theſe two conſiderations following.

1. Hereby the grace of the covenant is preſerved entire in the diſpenſation of the covenant: and by that means the promiſe is made ſure to all the ſeed, Rom. iv. 16. Faith is contradiſtinguiſhed to works, as grace is to debt, chap. iv. 4. 5. If any work or doing of ours were that upon which we were inſtated in the covenant, and got the right in the promiſes: then the covenant and benefit thereof would be of debt to us, contrary to the declared end and deſign of that method of ſalvation, which is to exalt the free grace of God, and to cut off all boaſting from us, Eph. ii. 8. 9. But the nature of faith's efficacy in the buſineſs is adapted to that end and deſign of the covenant: inaſmuch as it is a grace, not giving, but purely receiving; taking all freely from Chriſt, without money and without price, laying the ſtreſs of the ſouls acceptance with God, wholly on what Chriſt hath done and ſuffered: and entirely renouncing all doings and ſuffering of our own in that point. And thus the promiſe is ſure to us; for whereas the plea of any work of ours would be a very uncertain one; faith's plea is ever ſure and ſtedfaſt, as grounded allenarly on what Chriſt hath wrought.

2. Hereby the ſinner's entering into the covenant is by uniting with Chriſt the repreſentative, with whom it was made as party-contractor; which is the ſcripture-account of the matter, John x. 9. ‘ I am the door: by ‘ me if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaved.’ and ſo the unity of the covenant, and the repreſentation in it, are preſerved. If men entered into the covenant ſome other way, as by their accepting properly called terms to them propoſed, and promiſing for themſelves the performance of them: in that caſe the repreſentation in the covenant is marred; and there would be in effect as many covenants of grace, as there are perſons embracing it at different times; at leaſt, Chriſt's covenant would be one, and ours another diſtinct therefrom; the contrary of which is before evinced from the ſcripture. But the covenant of grace being made with Chriſt as ſecond Adam, in the name of all ſuch as ſhould be his: it plainly follows, that the only way of one's entering perſonally into it, muſt be by becoming his, ſtanding related to the head of the covenant as our head: and it is by faith, and no work, nor conſent of ours differing from faith, that we are united to him, and become members of his body, Eph. iii. 17. How do we all enter perſonally into the covenant of works, ſo as to partake of the curſe in it? Is it not through our becoming, by natural generation, branches of the firſt Adam, the repreſentative in that covenant? Hereby every one of us is perſonally entered, and inſtated in that covenant, before we are capable to approve or diſapprove of the ſame, to conſent to it, or diſſent from it. Even ſo we enter perſonally into the covenant of grace, ſo as to partake of the benefits in it, by our becoming branches of the ſecond Adam, the repreſentative therein: and that is through faith, in ſubjects capable of actual believing. It is by being ingrafted into Chriſt, we come to partake of the covenant benefits thereof. And hence it is, that infants, not capable of actual believing, nor of knowing what the covenant is, yet having the Spirit of faith, are perſonally entered into it, and inſtated in it; foraſmuch as that Spirit of faith is effectual in them, to a real uniting them with Chriſt. Hereunto agrees God's giving Chriſt for a covenant; that in him people may have the covenant and all the benefits thereof. As God, in making of the covenant, took Chriſt for all, for the condition, and for the parties to receive the promiſes; he being a ſecond Adam; ſo ſinners, in accepting and embracing of the covenant, are to take him for all; the whole of the covenant, the parties and parts of it too being in him, foraſmuch as he is a God as well as man, ſecond Adam.

And thus it appears, that uniting with Chriſt the head of the covenant, is a ſinner's formal entering into the covenant; the which uniting with him being by faith on him, it is evident, that it is by believing on Chriſt a ſinner embraceth, enters into, and is inſtated in the covenant unto ſalvation. Wherefore reach Chriſt by faith, and ye reach the covenant: if ye miſs him, ye miſs the covenant, in point of life and ſalvation. But here ariſeth a weighty queſtion, to wit, Queſt. What is that believing, by which one unites with Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo enters into the covenant of grace?

Anſw. The clearing of this point being ſo neceſſary to direct ſinners in their way into the covenant, for their eternal ſalvation; we ſhall, for what now remains, addreſs ourſelves to the conſideration thereof only.

And to begin with the word by which the Holy Ghoſt expreſſeth what we call believing, whether in the Old or New Teſtament: whoſoever ſhall duly conſider the import of it, in the ſcripture-uſe thereof, will find, that it is juſt truſting, truſting a word, perſon, or thing. And hence the ſcripture-phraſes of believing to, and believing in, that is, truſting to, and truſting in; the former phraſes, however unuſual with us in converſation, yet ordinary, both in the Old and New Teſtament, according to the originals. It is the truſting a word, as to a report, Iſa. liii. 1. In his words, Pſal. cvi. 12. It is the truſting a perſon; ſo, in the ſtyle of the Holy Ghoſt, the Iſraelites believed in the Lord, and in Moſes his ſervant, Exod. xiv. 31. He believed not in his ſervants, Job iv. 18. that is, as we read it, He put no truſt in them. And it is the truſting of a thing too: ſo, in the ſame ſtyle, Job xxxix. 12. Wilt thou believe in him (to wit, the unicorn) that he will bring home thy ſeed? i. e. Wilt thou truſt in him that he will do it? Deut. xxviii. 66. Thou ſhalt not believe in thy life; that is, as we read it, Thou ſhalt have none aſſurance of thy life; no truſt in it, becauſe no certainty about it. The phraſeology is the ſame in the New Teſtament, as being brought into it from the Old, only in a different language. And taking the meaning of the Holy Ghoſt in this matter, from the words which he teacheth, as we are directed, 1 Cor. ii. 13. we conclude, That faith or believing, ſo expreſſed by him in the ſcripture, is, in the general, truſting, the truſting of a word, and of a perſon, and thing, held forth in that word.

Now, there is a twofold word to be believed or truſted of all thoſe who would enter into the covenant of grace in a ſaving manner; namely, the word of the law, and the word of the goſpel. The believing of the former, is a faith of the law; the believing of the latter, a faith of the goſpel; of which in order.

A Faith of the law preparatory for the Covenant.

THE faith of the law is not indeed ſaving faith: for the law is the word and adminiſtration of condemnation, and not of righteouſneſs; as ſpeaking nothing of a Saviour, an atonement, or an imputed righteouſneſs, 2 Cor. iii. 9. Nevertheleſs, it is a neceſſary antecedent thereof, according to the ſtated order of the diſpenſation of the covenant. The faith of the law is like the hearing of the ſtrong wind, the feeling of the earthquake, and ſeeing of fire: in which though the Lord was not, yet they ſerved to prepare to hearkening to the ſtill ſmall voice in which he was, 1 Kings xix. 11. 12. Accordingly, the faith of the law is the work of the Spirit of God, as well as the ſaving faith of the goſpel: though wrought in a different manner. The former he works as a ſpirit of bondage, convincing of ſin and miſery, by the law, Rom. viii. 15. with John xvi. 8. The latter he works as a quickening ſpirit, enlightening the ſoul in the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Cor. iii. 17. 18.

Whoſoever then would enter into the covenant of grace, muſt in the firſt place have a faith of the law; for which cauſe, it is neceſſary, that the law, as well as the goſpel, be preached unto ſinners. And that faith of the law conſiſts in a belief of theſe three things.

1. By it a man believes that he is a ſinner. The holy law pronounceth him guilty: and he believes the report of the law concerning himſelf in particular; his heavy and ſorrowful heart, by this faith, echoing to the voice of the law, guilty, guilty! Rom. iii. 19. The which faith reſts not on the teſtimony of man, whether ſpoken or written; but is a divine faith, founded upon the teſtimony of God, in his holy law, demonſtrated by the ſpirit of bondage, to be the voice of the eternal God, and the voice of that God to him in particular. And thus he believes, (1.) That his life and converſation is ſinful, diſpleaſing, and hateful in the ſight of a holy God, according to the divine teſtimony, Rom. iii. 12. 'They 'are all gone out of the way, they are together become 'unprofitable, there is none that doth good, no not one.' He is convinced, that he is gone out of the way of God, and walking in the way of deſtruction; that the number of his errors of omiſſion and commiſſion he cannot underſtand; and that all his righteouſneſſes, as well as his unrighteouſneſſes, are as filthy rags before the Lord. (2.) That his heart is full of miſchief and iniquity, according to the divine teſtimony, Jer. xvii. 9. 'The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately 'wicked.' The law ſhineth into the heart, diſcovers divers luſts there, which he little noticed before; and preſſing the unholy heart, irritates them: and thus ſuch a myſtery of iniquity within his breaſt opens to his view, as he could never before believe to have been there, Rom. vii. 9. 'I was alive without the law once: but 'when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I 'died.' (3.) That his nature is quite corrupted, as one dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, according to the divine teſtimony, Eph. ii. 1. To the verdict of the law, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Job xiv. 4. his ſoul, by this faith, echoes back, unclean, unclean! 'I was ſhapen in iniquity, and in ſin did my mother 'conceive me.' He is conceived, his diſeaſe is hereditary and natural; and that therefore his nature muſt be renewed: that otherwiſe, he not only does no good, but can do no good. In all theſe reſpects, he believes himſelf to be an object loathſome in the ſight of God: loathſome in his nature, heart, and life.

2. By it a man believes, that he is a loſt and undone ſinner, under the curſe of the law; liable to vengeance, according to the divine teſtimony, Gal. iii. 10. 'Curſed is every one, that continueth not in all things writ'ten in the book of the law to do them.' He can no more look upon the curſe as ſome ſtrange thing, belonging only to ſome monſters of wickedneſs, and not to him; for the Spirit of the Lord, as a ſpirit of bondage, applies it cloſely to him: as if he ſaid, Thou art the man. And, like one under ſentence of death pronounced againſt him, he groans out his belief of it, under the preſſure thereof, Luke xv. 17. I periſh.

3. Laſtly, By it a man believes his utter inability to recover himſelf. He believes that he cannot, by any doings or ſufferings of his remove the curſe of the law from off him; according to the divine teſtimony of our being without ſtrength in that point, Rom. v. 6. nor change his own nature, heart, and life, ſo as to render them acceptable to God; according to the infallible teſtimony, Jer. xiii. 23. 'Can the Ethiopian change 'his ſkin, or the leopard his ſpots? then may ye alſo 'do good that are accuſtomed to do evil.' He is, in his own eyes, as in the ſight of God, a ſpiritually dead man; legally dead, and morally dead, as the apoſtle teſtifies of himſelf in that caſe, Rom. vii. 9.

This is the faith of the law. And the effect of it is a legal repentance, whereby a ſinner is broken and bruiſed with fear and terror of the wrath of God; grieves and ſorroweth for ſin, as a ruining and a deſtructive evil; and therefore really deſires to be freed from it; deſpairs of ſalvation by himſelf, and ſeriouſly looks out for relief another way, Acts ii. 17. and xvi. 29, 30. Thus the law is our ſchoolmaſter to bring us unto Chriſt; and the faith of the law makes way for the faith of the goſpel. Not that either this legal faith, or legal repentance, is the condition of our welcome to Chriſt and the covenant of grace: our acceſs to Chriſt and the covenant is proclaimed free, without any conditions or qualifications required in us, to warrant us ſinners of mankind to believe on Jeſus Chriſt, as was ſhown before. But they are neceſſary to move and excite us, to make uſe of our privilege of free acceſs to Chriſt and the covenant, inſomuch that none will come to Chriſt, nor embrace the covenant, without them in greater or leſſer meaſure. Even as if a phyſician ſhould cauſe proclaim, that he will freely cure all the ſick of ſuch a place, that will employ him: in which caſe, it is plain, none will employ him, but ſuch as are ſenſible of ſome malady they labour under; yet that ſenſe of a malady is not the condition of their welcome to that phyſician; nor is it requiſite for his curing them, but for their employing him.

Now, in calling you to embrace the covenant, ye are called indirectly, and by conſequence, to this faith of the law, namely, to believe that ye are ſinners in life, heart, and nature; loſt and undone, under the curſe; and utterly unable to recover yourſelves. Yet it is not ſaving faith, nor doth it inſtate one in the covenant of grace; that is peculiar to another kind of believing: of which in the next place.

The Faith of the Goſpel, inſtating in the covenant.

SAving faith, which unites to Chriſt, is the faith of the goſpel. For the goſpel only is the miniſtration of righteouſneſs, 2 Cor. iii. 9. It is in it that the righteouſneſs of faith is revealed unto faith, revealed to be believed on, Rom. i. 17. It is the alone word which gives ſinners the notice of a Saviour, of the atoning blood, and the new covenant in that blood; and therefore is the only word by which ſaving faith is begotten in the heart of a loſt ſinner. In the word of the goſpel, the Lord and Saviour Chriſt, with all his benefits and covenant, is; and that to be believed on, as appears from Rom. ix. 6, 7, 8, 9. So that, the word of the goſpel, being received by believing, we have Chriſt, and his covenant, with all the benefits thereof; ſaving faith being indeed the echo of the quickened ſoul, to the word of grace that bringeth ſalvation; a truſting of the word of the goſpel, and the perſon, to wit, the Saviour, and the thing, therein held forth to us, to be believed on for ſalvation. Mark i. 15. 'Believe the goſpel.' Iſa. liii. 1. 'Who hath believed our report?' Gal. iii. 2. 'The hearing of faith.' This is that believing, by which we are united to Chriſt, entered into the covenant of grace, and inſtated therein unto ſalvation. The which believing may be explained in four particulars; (1.) The faith of Chriſt's ſufficiency; (2.) The faith of the goſpel-offer; (3.) The faith of our right to Chriſt; and, (4.) The faith of particular truſt for ſalvation. So putting the Queſtion, What is that believing, by which I, a loſt ſinner, under the curſe of the law, may unite with Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo enter into, and be inſtated in the covenant of grace, to my eternal ſalvation? We anſwer thereto directly in theſe four particulars, by way of direction in this momentuous point whereon ſalvation depends.

I. The faith of Chriſt's Sufficiency.

In the firſt place, you are to believe, that there is a fulneſs of ſalvation in Chriſt for poor ſinners. This is the conſtant report of the goſpel concerning him, Eph. iii. 8. 'That I ſhould preach among the Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt.' Heb. vii. 25. 'He is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God, by him.' In the word of the goſpel Chriſt is held forth as an able Saviour; able to ſave men from their ſins, and from the wrath of God. His merit is a ſufficient ſcreen againſt the tempeſt of fiery wrath, which incenſed juſtice is ready to cauſe fly forth againſt tranſgreſſors: Iſa. xxxii. 2. 'A man ſhall be a covert from the tempeſt.' His Spirit is ſufficient to ſanctify the moſt unholy: 1 Cor. vi. 11. 'And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.' The righteouſneſs he fulfilled as the condition of the covenant, is ſo valuable in itſelf, and in the eyes of his Father, that it is ſufficient to procure juſtification, ſanctification, and all other ſaving benefits to ſinners, who in themſelves deſerve death and damnation: ſo that they are happy who are in him; they ſhall never periſh, but have everlaſting life, being eternally ſecure under the covert of his righteouſneſs, as a ſufficient defence. Believeſt thou this?

This is the general faith of the goſpel, which being without particular application, doth not unite the ſinner to Chriſt, nor enter him into the covenant; and may be found in reprobates and fallen angels, being only an aſſent in general to the truth of the doctrine of the goſpel, Matth xiii. 20. 21. and viii. 29. But, by the nature of the thing, it is neceſſarily prerequiſite to a faith of particular application: for I muſt firſt believe a ſaying to be true in itſelf, before I can truſt to it for my part; I muſt firſt believe a thing to be good in itſelf, before I can believe that it is good for me.

But where the faith of the goſpel is carried forward to uniting with Chriſt, the effect of this general faith is very valuable as well as neceſſary. And that is, an high eſteem of Chriſt and his covenant, an ardent deſire of union and communion with him, a longing for his righteouſneſs, as a hungry man longs for meat, or a thirſty man for drink. The man ſees indeed, that he has no ſpecial intereſt in Chriſt and his righteouſneſs: but he would fain have it: all is ſapleſs to him without it; his ſoul within him cries, "Give me Chriſt, or elſe "I'll die;" and he is content to part with all for him, and to take him for all. This is taught us in the parables of the treaſure hid in the field, and of the pearl of great price, the finding out of which moves to ſell all, and to buy them, Matth. xiii. 44. 45. 46.

Howbeit this eſteem and deſire of Chriſt is different from that which follows upon the ſoul's union with Chriſt, when once faith hath taken poſſeſſion of him and his benefits, and hath got a view of his intrinſic ſupereminent worth and value: the which is mentioned, 1 Pet. ii. 7. Pſalm lxxiii. 25. The true ſpring of all this eſteem and deſire, is the principle of ſelf-preſervation, and the view of Chriſt as ſuited to that end. The merchant man is ſeeking goodly pearls for his own enriching: and ſeeing that the one pearl will anſwer that deſign, he is reſtleſs till he have it. The poor ſinner is hotly purſued by the laws curſe, which is ſtill ringing death and damnation in his ears. In the mean time, he gets a diſtant view of the city of refuge; and therefore he makes forward to it with all ſpeed: but what makes him run, but life, life, precious life, that he may not periſh? Verily, he cannot be expected to act from a more generous principle, before he is united to Chriſt: John xv. 5. 'Without me ye can do nothing.' But let him not fear; he is welcome to Chriſt, even coming to him from no higher principle. The truth is, the Lord Jeſus, by his Spirit, ſets the principle of ſelf-preſervation a ſtir, being a thing in itſelf good; and uſeth it as a mean to haſten ſinners unto him. This is evident from the complaint, John v. 24. 'And ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life.' Can one imagine our Lord will reject a ſinner coming to him for life, when he complains that ſinners will not come to him for that end?

II. The Faith of the Goſpel offer.

In the next place, you muſt believe, that Jeſus Chriſt with his righteouſneſs and all his ſalvation is by himſelf offered to ſinners, and to you in particular. This is the plain voice of the goſpel to all unto whom it comes, Iſ. lv. 1. 'Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye unto the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price.' Rev. xxii. 17. 'Whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely.' Prov. viii. 4. 'Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men.' But alas! few believe it: yea, none will believe it to purpoſe till the Spirit of the Lord make it plain to them, and perſuade them by an inward illumination. Many ſecure ſinners hear the goſpel, and are glad of the offer, but they diſcern not Chriſt's voice in it. They hear it not, as the word of the Lord Chriſt himſelf to them; but as the word of men: hence it hath no due authority upon their conſciences; ſo they paſs it over lightly. Thus were his offers of himſelf entertained, when made by his own mouth, but he not diſcerned as the eternal Son of God, and Saviour of the world. So, in the congregation of Nazareth, ‘ All ‘ bare him witneſs, and wondered at the gracious words ‘ which proceeded out of his mouth.’ But ‘ they ſaid, ‘ Is not this Joſeph's ſon ?’ Luke iv. 22. And in a little they roſe up and thruſt him out of the city, verſe 29. Again, when the voice of Chriſt is diſcerned in the offer by the convinced ſinner; then the ſinner is ready to conclude, that it is to others, but not to him. Unbelief ſaith, but “ our bones are dried, and our hope “ is loſt, we are cut off for our parts,” Ezek. xxxvii. 11. They cannot believe, that ſo good news from heaven concerns them, or that ſuch a good word is directed unto them. And thus men not believing God in the record given of his Son, that he is with all his ſalvation offered to them, do make him a lyar, 1 John v. 10.

But where ſaving faith is a working, the word of the goſpel offer is, by the holy Spirit, applied to the ſoul in particular with power as the word of the Lord himſelf, and not of men; whereby the man is aſſured, that it is the voice of Chriſt, and to him in particular: whereupon he applies it to himſelf by believing: 1 Theſſ. i. 5. ‘ For our goſpel came not unto you in word only, but ‘ alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much ‘ aſſurance.’ Chap. ii. 13. ‘ The word of God, which ye ‘ heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but ‘ (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually ‘ worketh alſo in you that believe.’ This is altogether neceſſary; inſomuch that without it there can be no receiving of Chriſt, foraſmuch as otherwiſe the ſoul can ſee no ſolid ground and foundation of faith for itſelf; for it is evident, there can be no receiving aright, where the ſinner doth not believe the offer to be to him in particular. And here begins the application of faith, an application tending to union with Chriſt.

Wherefore, if you would unite with Chriſt, and ſo enter into the covenant of grace, ſiſt yourſelves before the Lord as condemned and curſed ſinners, under the curſe of the law; and hear and believe the word of his goſpel, as directed to you condemned and curſed ſinners in particular. So it will come unto you, as the riſing ſun to one ſitting in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death; or as the offer of a pardon, to one under ſentence of death. And let not your heart miſgive you by unbelief; but firmly believe the offer to be made by Chriſt himſelf unto you, as it is in very deed, Iſa. lv. 3. ‘ Hear, ‘ and your ſoul ſhall live, and I will make an everlaſting ‘ covenant with you.

But here it is neceſſary to remove the following objections.

Object. 1. But Chriſt is now in heaven, and I hear no voice from thence: how then can I believe that he himſelf is offering himſelf to me? Anſw. Though Chriſt is in heaven, yet he is ſpeaking from heaven to us; howbeit not by a voice ſounding through the clouds, yet by a voice ſounding in the goſpel: Heb. xii. 25. ‘ See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh——that ſpeaketh from heaven.’ And not only is his voice in the word of the goſpel, but he himſelf by his Spirit is in it, as the apoſtle teacheth, Rom. x. 6. 7. 8. Thence it is, that it is a quickening word to dead ſouls: John vi. 36. ‘ The words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life.’ It is the lively ſeed, whereof the new creature is formed, 1 Pet. i. 23. Jeſus Chriſt did once, by a voice ſounding through the clouds, ſpeak a word of conviction, Acts ix. 4. 5. But even in that caſe, the word of the offer of himſelf was remitted to the preaching of the goſpel by a meſſenger thereto appointed, ver. 6. And the voice of Chriſt ſounding in his written word, is more ſure than a voice ſounding through the clouds, 2 Pet. i. 18. 19. This voice in the word is the ſtated ground of faith, with which faith muſt cloſe for ſalvation: Rom. i. 16. ‘ The goſpel of Chriſt: it is ‘ the power of God unto ſalvation, to every one that believeth.’ Ver. 17. ‘ For therein is the righteouſneſs of ‘ God revealed from faith to faith.’ And there is no true ſaving faith, where it is not received as the very voice of the Lord himſelf, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. Therefore you muſt receive the word of the goſpel, as the word of Chriſt himſelf, as in very deed it is.

Object. 2. But Chriſt in the word of the goſpel doth not name me; how then can I believe that he offereth himſelf, his righteouſneſs and ſalvation, to me in particular? Anſw. Neither doth he name you in the word of the law, whether in the commands thereof, or in the curſe thereof. How do you come to believe that you are a ſinner? Is it not, that, the commands of the law being directed to all men, you conclude and believe, that, you being of the number of mankind, they are therefore directed to you in particular, as well as to others? And how come you to believe that you in particular are under the curſe of the broken law? Is it not, that, ſince the law denounceth its curſe againſt every one that, being under it, breaks it, Gal. iii. 10. Rom. iii. 19. you do conclude and believe, that it curſeth you, foraſmuch as you are one of theſe breakers thereof? Now, you have as ſufficient ground to believe that the offer of the goſpel is to you in particular; foraſmuch as it is made to all, without exception, unto whom the goſpel comes, Rev. xxii. 17. Iſa. lv. 1. It is ordered to be made to every creature under heaven, Mark xvi. 15.: and how ſinful ſoever you are, you are one of theſe creatures. Chriſt's voice is unto men, ſons of men: and be what you will, you are one of mankind-ſinners: and therefore the offer is to you in particular, Prov. viii. 4. Accordingly, we are warranted to apply the general offer to every one in particular; and every one is warranted to apply it to himſelf: Acts xvi. 31. ‘ Believe on the ‘ Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved.’

Object. 3. But alas! I fear I want the qualifications determinative of thoſe to whom the goſpel-offer is particularly directed. I dread that I have not as yet got a due ſenſe of ſin: and our Lord ſays expreſly, ‘ They that ‘ be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. ‘ I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance.’ Matth. xi. 12, 13. The goſpel offer runs in theſe terms, ‘ Ho, every one that thirſteth, come,’ Iſa. lv. 1. ‘ Come unto me, all ye that labour and are ‘ heavy laden,’ Matth. xi. 28. ‘ Whoſoever will, let ‘ him take the water of life freely,’ Rev. xxii. 17. But when I view my own condition, I very much fear I have not as yet reached that thirſt after Chriſt, and that willingneſs to take him, which theſe texts ſpeak of; and that I cannot be accounted one truly labouring and heavy laden: how then can I believe that Chriſt offers himſelf to me in particular? Anſw. It is moſt certain truth, that unleſs you have a due ſenſe of ſin, unleſs you thirſt after Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, unleſs you be heavy laden with the felt burden of ſin, and willing to take Chriſt on any terms, you will never take him by a true faith. Neverthelеſs, whatever qualifications you have, or have not; yet if you are a ſinner of Adam's race, (and I hope you doubt not that,) Chriſt is offered to you, together with his righteouſneſs, and all his ſalvation, Prov. viii. 4. John iii. 16. Mark xvi. 15. For howbeit there are indeed certain qualifications neceſſary to move you to take Chriſt; yet there are none at all to hamper the goſpel-offer: but Chriſt is really offered to you, be in what caſe you will; ſo really, that if you do not believe it, and thereupon receive an offered Saviour, you will be damned for not believing, Mark xvi. 16.

It is undeniable, the leſs that ſinners are ſenſible of their ſins, they are the farther from righteouſneſs; they do the more need Chriſt, and are the more to be called to repentance. This is evident from the whole tenor of the holy ſcripture, and from the very nature of the thing. And therefore it is ſinners in the general, and not ſenſible ſinners only, who are meant, Matth. ix. 12. 13. Even as it is ſick people in general, comprehending even thoſe of them who are ſo delirious, as to think nothing ails them, that need a phyſician; and not thoſe ſick only, who are ſenſible of their ſtate and hazard. This is the plain literal ſenſe of that paſſage, from which there is no neceſſity to depart: and the departing from it is attended with a manifeſt inconvenience.

Neither is the thirſt mentioned, Iſa. lv. 1. to be reſtricted to a gracious thirſt, a thirſt after Chriſt and his righteouſneſs. For ſome at leaſt of the thirſting ones, to whom the offer is there made, are ſpending money for that which is not bread, and their labour for that which ſatisfieth not, verſe 1. 2. But it is evident, that ſinners duly ſenſible, who are thirſting after Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, are not ſpending their money and labour at that rate; but on the contrary, for that which alone is bread, and ſatisfieth, namely, Jeſus Chriſt the true bread which came down from heaven. Wherefore the thirſt there meant, muſt needs comprehend, yea, and principally aim at, that thirſt after happineſs and ſatisfaction, which being natural, is common to all mankind. Men pained with this thirſt do naturally run, for quenching thereof, to the empty creation, and their fulſome luſts; and ſo they ſpend money for that which is not bread, and their labour for that which ſatisfieth not; finding nothing there that can ſatisfy that their appetite or thirſt. Now, to men in this wretched caſe is the goſepl offer of the water of life made: Chriſt is offered unto them, as bread, fatneſs, and what is good, and will ſatisfy that their painful thirſt, which otherwiſe will never be quenched, ibid,

And as little is the ſolemn goſpel offer, Matth. xi. 28. reſtricted to a certain ſet of men endued with ſome laudable qualifications, going under the name of labouring and being heavy laden; the which do indeed denote the reſtleſsneſs natural to the ſoul of man, ſpending its labour for that which ſatisfieth not, Iſa. lv. 2. Our father Adam left his whole family with a conſcience full of guilt, and a heart full of unſatisfied deſires. Thus we naturally having a reſtleſs conſcience, and a reſtleſs heart, the ſoul as naturally falls a labouring for reſt to them. And it labours in the barren region of the fiery law, for a reſt to the conſcience; and to the empty creation for a reſt to the heart. But after all, the conſcience is ſtill heavy laden with guilt, whether it has any lively feeling thereof, or not; and the heart is ſtill under a load of unſatisfied deſires. So neither the one, nor the other, can find reſt indeed. This is the natural caſe of all men. And to ſouls thus labouring and laden, Jeſus Chriſt calls, that they may come to him, and he will give them reſt; namely a reſt for their conſcience, under the covert of his blood: and a reſt to their hearts, in the enjoyment of God thro' him. To this interpretation we are led by the ſtile of the ſcripture, the phraſeology of the Holy Ghoſt, both in the Old and New Teſtament, the which may be viewed in the following texts compared, to wit, Eccleſ. x. 15. Hab. ii. 13. Iſa. lv. 2. and i. 3. 4. 2 Tim. iii. 6. 7.

Finally, as for the willingneſs which you are afraid you are defective in, ſurely, in all other caſes, he that ſaith, Whoſoever will, let him take ſuch a thing, will according to the common ſenſe and underſtanding among mankind, be reckoned to offer that thing unto all, and to exclude none from it; however it may be an intimation, that it is not to be forced on any. Why then ſhould this manner of ſpeech, Rev. xxii. 17. be thought to limit the goſpel offer to a certain ſet of men?

Wherefore we conclude, that Chriſt lays no bar in the way of any of you: do not ye put bars in your own way, and then complain ye cannot get over them. For according to the holy ſcripture, it is infallible truth, that Chriſt is offered to you, and every one of you, in particular; believe it, elſe ye make God a liar, 1 John v. 10.

III. The faith of our Right to Chriſt.

Furthermore, you muſt believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Saviour of the world, and your Saviour in particular, by his Father's appointment, and his own offer; and that, by the ſame appointment and offer, his righteouſneſs, the condition of the covenant, and eternal life, the promiſe of the covenant are yours; yours (I mean not, in poſſeſſion, but) in right thereto; ſo far as that you may lawfully and warrantably take poſſeſſion of the ſame, and uſe them as your own to all intents and purpoſes of ſalvation, John iv. 42. 'We know that this is indeed the 'Chriſt, the Saviour of the world.' 2 Sam. xxiii. 3. and Luke i. 47. my Saviour. Do not think this too much for you: it is no more than what is neceſſary to ſaving faith in Chriſt. If you believe only, in the general, that Chriſt is the Saviour of the world, but believe not that he is your Saviour in particular; what do you believe more than the devils do? They believe him to be Jeſus a Saviour, Mark i. 24. If you would go beyond them, you muſt believe that he is your Saviour; and conſequently, that his righteouſneſs and ſalvation are yours, in the ſenſe before opened: for where Chriſt is given, with him are freely given all things. And pray conſider, how can ye take him or receive him as your Saviour, if he is not yours indeed? A man may fraudulently take poſſeſſion of what he doth not believe to be his by right: but no man can fairly and honeſtly claim and take poſſeſſion of what he doth not believe to be his own. Certainly, God muſt firſt give Chriſt to us, before we can receive him: for 'a man can receive no'thing, except it be given him from heaven,' John iii. 27. Giving on God's part, and receiving on ours, here, are correlates: and the former is the foundation of the latter. Now, God's gift is ſufficient to make a thing ours. Therefore believe firmly, that Chriſt is your Saviour in particular; that his righteouſneſs is yours, and eternal life yours.

Queſt. But how can I, a poor ſinner, by nature under the curſe, believe that Chriſt is my Saviour, that his righteouſneſs, and eternal life, are mine? Anſw. You may firmly believe it, becauſe you have the word and teſtimony of the eternal God upon it, in his holy goſpel. What is the goſpel, which the apoſtles were ſent, in the name of God, to teſtify? The apoſtle John declares it, 1 John iv. 14. 'We teſtify, that the Father ſent the 'Son to be the Saviour of the world.' Is not Jeſus Chriſt then, by office, whatever he is in the event, Saviour of the world? And if he is ſo, and you are one of that world of mankind, is he not therefore your Saviour? Why then will ye not believe it? God ſet the ſun in the heavens, to be a light to the world: and do not you therefore judge, that you have a right to the light of that ſun, as well as the reſt of mankind; and accordingly uſe it freely, to work or read by it, as your own by God's free gift? Jeſus Chriſt alſo is the light of the world, John viii. 12.; given for a light to the Gentiles, Iſa. xlix. 6.: and faith appropriates him, ſaying, The Lord is MY light, and MY ſalvation, Pſal. xxvii. 1. Now, you are a member of theſe ſocieties, to wit, the world, and the Gentiles: therefore he is your light, that is, given for a light to you. Will you take Chriſt's own word upon it? You have it, John vi. 32. 'My Father giveth you the 'true bread from heaven.' If your neighbour give you bread, you will reckon his gift thereof ſufficient to make it yours; and ſo eat of it freely as your own. If your prince ſhall give you a houſe or land, which he hath an unqueſtionable right to diſpoſe of, you would reckon them truly yours by his gift; and would freely go and dwell in that houſe, and poſſeſs that land, as your own. How is it then, that when the Father gives you his Chriſt, yet you will not believe that he is yours, nor take poſſeſſion of him as your own? Why, the truth of the matter lies here: you believe your neighbour, you believe your prince; but you believe not your God, in his holy goſpel, but make him a liar, not believing the record that God gave of his Son, 1 John v. 10. But, whether you will believe it or not, it is a truth, that Chriſt is your Saviour: and if you will not believe it now, to your ſalvation, you will undoubtedly ſee your miſtake hereafter; when periſhing, you will be convinced that you periſh, not becauſe you had not a Saviour, but becauſe you neglected to make uſe of him.

In like manner, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt is yours, namely, that which he fulfilled as the condition of the covenant. It is yours by heaven's gift, being given you with himſelf; and therefore it is called the gift of righteouſneſs, Rom. v. 17. it is a teſtamentary gift, made over to you in Chriſt's teſtament, where ſinners of mankind, without exception, are the legatees, as hath been already cleared. Eternal life is another ſuch gift or legacy; ſo it is yours too. And you have the record, teſtimony, or witneſs of God himſelf upon it, that it is given you, 1 John v. 11. 'And this is the record that 'God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his 'Son.' Is not God's own record a ſufficient ground for believing? will you venture to miſbelieve it on any pretence whatſoever? Here you have that record, namely, that God hath given to us eternal life. It may be you will imagine, that it relates only to actual believers in Chriſt, or at moſt to the elect; and uſe that for a defence of your unbelief. But, I pray you, conſider it is the ground and warrant of all to believe on Chriſt, and to lay hold on eternal life in him; being the witneſs of God, which he hath teſtified of his Son, to be received by all to whom the goſpel comes, verſe 9. but that God hath given eternal life to a certain ſelect ſet of men, can never in reaſon, be deemed to be a warrant for all men to believe. Moreover, the great ſin of unbelief lies in not believing this record: but it doth not lie in not believing that God hath given eternal life to actual believers, or to the elect; for the moſt deſperate unbelievers believe that, inſomuch that their belief of it adds to their torment: but it lies in their not believing that to mankind-ſinners, and to themſelves in particular, God hath given eternal life. This is what flies in the face of the goſpel of God, which is the proclaimed deed of the gift and grant of Chriſt and all his benefits, to ſinners of mankind, declaring the grant thereof to be made them, and calling them to take poſſeſſion of the ſame as their own, Iſa. ix. 6. 'Unto us a child is born.' (the word ſignifies preſented born, as to his relations having a particular intereſt in him; as Machir's children were preſented to Joſeph, and laid on his knees, Gen. l. 23. and Ruth's ſon to Naomi, Ruth iv. 17.) 'unto us a ſon is 'given.' John iii. 16. 'God ſo loved the world that he 'gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth 'in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.' 1 Cor. i. 30. Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us (namely, by legal deſtination) wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption.

And thus you ſee you have an infallible ground for this act of faith, namely, the teſtimony of God that cannot lie. Wherefore, as ever you would be united to Chriſt, and ſo inſtated in the covenant, believe firmly that Chriſt is yours, his righteouſneſs yours, and eternal life in him yours.

This is a more cloſe application of faith than the former, and ariſeth from it; for thus one believeth the efficacy of the divine appointment, and of the goſpel offer. If God appoints Chriſt a Saviour to you, with his righteouſneſs and eternal life, and Chriſt offers himſelf to you accordingly; ſurely the effect of that appointment and offer muſt be, that they are indeed yours, to be uſed by you, as your own, for your ſalvation. If you believe that appointment of the Father, and the Son's offer, you muſt needs believe this: for if they be real, and not ludicrous deeds, they certainly convey to you a right to Chriſt, his righteouſneſs and ſalvation; ſo that, in virtue of them, theſe muſt be yours, to be warrantably claimed and uſed by you as your own, for the purpoſes of ſalvation. It is not doubted, but mens deeds of gift, and their offers, real and not ludicrous, do convey ſuch a right to the parties in favour of whom they are made. If a friend of yours, having a ſum of money lying in a neighbour's hand, ſhould, eſpecially by a deed of writing under his own hand, appoint and ordain that ſum a gift to you, to relieve you out of a certain ſtrait; you then would make no queſtion but you might go and claim it, and take it up; if having the ſum in his own hand, he ſhould offer it to you as a gift, you would make no queſtion but you might take it to you; and, in both caſes uſe it as your own by your friends appointment or offer. And ſhall not the Father's ordinance and appointment, and Chriſt's offer, be as efficacious? Why then will ye not believe this its efficacy? Why will ye not believe that Chriſt with his righteouſneſs and eternal life are yours?

Truly, the believing hereof is the very next ſtep to the ſoul's uniting with Chriſt: and therefore it is propoſed to the ſinner, as the neareſt means to bring him cloſe unto God in Chriſt, Hoſ. xiv. 1. 'Return unto the 'Lord thy God;' he is thy God, thou haſt a right to him, return, come even to him, take poſſeſſion of him as thine own God. Accordingly, the ſinner coming to him by faith, comes on this very ground, Jer. iii. 22. 'Behold, we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our 'God. Verſe 23. 'Truly in the Lord our God is the 'ſalvation of Iſrael.' As Hagar's eyes were ſeaſonably opened, to ſee ſhe had a well by her, when ſhe had given up her ſon for dead: ſo when the ſinner lies in his death's wounds from the law, in a work of conviction, the ſpirit of faith opens his eyes, by means of the glorious goſpel, in a work of ſaving illumination, ſo that he ſees he hath a Saviour, a righteouſneſs, and ſalvation. And then he preſently apprehends or grips the ſame as his own. Thus the prodigal firſt believed that he had yet a father, and a father's houſe, where there was enough and to ſpare, and then ariſeth and goeth to him, Luke xv. 17. 18.

Object. 1. If it be true, that Chriſt is my Saviour, that his righteouſneſs, and eternal life in him, are mine; then I may be eaſy, I will certainly be ſaved without any more ado. Anſw. That is but a cavil, beſt ſuiting thoſe who, being indifferent about Chriſt and ſalvation, think it not worth their pains ſeriouſly to conſider ſuch things. One truly weighted with the matter, and duly conſidering, being once brought to believe this, would rather ſay, "Then, ſince Chriſt is really my Saviour, "his righteouſneſs and eternal life mine; I will take "him to me, I will receive and reſt upon him as my "Saviour, I will rely on his righteouſneſs, and look for "eternal life in him: why ſhould I be loſt for ever, "ſince I have a full Saviour? why ſhould I go naked, "ſince I have a complete righteouſneſs made over to me "by Heaven's gift? why ſhould I die, when I have e"ternal life in Chriſt?" Put the caſe, you did ſee a man at the point of ſtarving for want of bread; and out of kindneſs and pity to him, you ſhould appoint and ordain meat for him, out of your own ſtore, for preſervation of his life; and withal ſhould carry it to him, and ſet it before him, ſaying, Ha, there is meat I and my father have ordained for you, eat, and welcome. If that man ſhould ſay, Oh! I may not take it, for it is not mine own; would you not tell him, that your gift, appointment, and offer of it to him, makes it his, ſo that, with a good conſcience, he may freely eat it as his own bread? But ſhould he then reply, and ſay, Why then, if it is mine, without any more ado I am ſecured from ſtarving; I need not at all be at pains to take and eat it; would you not reckon him either mad, or but jeſting with you, not ſenſible of his hazard of ſtarving? The application is obvious. It is not meat's being one's own, ſo that he may uſe it freely as ſuch, that will keep him from ſtarving: he muſt take and eat it, and ſo uſe it as his own, if he would have that benefit by it. Even ſo it is not Chriſt's being yours, with his righteouſneſs and ſalvation, that will ſave you: you muſt take poſſeſſion of him, and make uſe of him as your own for ſalvation, if you would be actually ſaved by him. There is a wide difference betwixt a thing's being ours in ſimple right thereto, and its being ours in poſſeſſion. It is in the former way only that Chriſt is yours before uniting with him; and if you do not improve that, by receiving him, and taking poſſeſſion, you will periſh eternally for all it: Heb. iv. 1. ‘Let us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe being left ‘ us of entering into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to ‘ come ſhort of it.’ Luke xvi. 12. ‘ If ye have not been ‘ faithful in that which is another man's, who ſhall ‘ give you that which is your own?’

Object. 2. But Chriſt, a Saviour, his perfect righteouſneſs, and eternal life, are things ſo exceeding great and precious, and I am ſo very ſinful and unworthy, that it is mighty hard for me to believe they are mine. Anſw. Yea, here indeed lies a great difficulty of believing; when once a ſinner's eyes are opened, to ſee the tranſcendent excellency of Chriſt, the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, and his own utter unworthineſs: a difficulty not to be ſurmounted, but by the effectual operation of the Spirit of faith, cauſing one to believe, according to the working of his mighty power, Eph. i. 19. But for your help, conſider they are yours by mere free gift; which is ſo far from requiring any worth in the creature, that it excludes all reſpect thereto. Chriſt himſelf is the Father's gift to you, John iv. 10. and vi. 32. His righteouſneſs is a gift too, Rom. v. 17. And ſo is eternal life in him, 1 John v. 11. Now, what is freer than a gift? And then, howbeit they are indeed a gift far beyond whatever you could have expected, yet they are not too great for an infinite God to give. In making of this gift, he acted not according to the dignity of the party in whoſe favour it was made; but according to himſelf, his own greatneſs and majeſty. Mean while, though the gift is quite above your dignity, yet it is no more than what your need required. If leſs could have anſwered your neceſſity, there is no ground to think, a crucified Chriſt, the Son of God, would have been prepared for you. If you do but ſuppoſe it, you mar that expreſſion of matchleſs love, John iii. 16. ‘ God ſo loved the world, that he gave his ‘ only begotten Son.’ Wherefore, argue with yourſelf in this manner: “ The gift is indeed unſpeakable, but “ no leſs can ſerve my need; if Chriſt be not mine, I “ muſt periſh: ſince therefore God hath ſaid it, that he “ hath given me Chriſt; and the gift is not above him “ to give, and no leſs can ſerve my turn; I muſt and “ will believe that he is mine, with his righteouſneſs “ and ſalvation.”

IV. The Faith of particular Truſt for Salvation.

Finally, You muſt wholly truſt on him as your Saviour, and in his righteouſneſs as made over to you; and that for his whole ſalvation to you in particular, upon the ground of God's faithfulneſs in his word. And this is that ſaving faith, or believing on Chriſt Jeſus, by which a ſinner is united to him, and perſonally entered within the covenant of grace unto ſalvation; Acts xvi. 31. ‘ Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt ‘ be ſaved.’ Pſalm ii. 12. ‘ Kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, and ye periſh;—bleſſed are all they that put their ‘ truſt in him.’ And Pſalm xxxvi. 4. ‘ He ſhall ſave ‘ them, becauſe they truſt in him.’ Rom. xv. 12. ‘ In ‘ him ſhall the Gentiles truſt.’ Compare Iſa. xi. 10. Rom. i. 17. ‘ Therein is the righteouſneſs of God re‘vealed from faith to faith;’ or, ‘ Therein is the right‘eouſneſs of God by faith, revealed unto faith,’ to wit to be believed or truſted on. See Phil iii. 9. Gal. ii. 16. ‘ We have believed in Jeſus Chriſt, that we might be ‘ juſtified.’ Acts xv. 11. ‘ We believe, that, through ‘ the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt we ſhall be ſaved.’ 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. ‘ Ye received it not as the word of men, ‘ but (as it is in truth) the word of God.’ 1 Cor. ii. 5. ‘ That your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men ‘ but in the power of God.’ This, according to the ſcripture, is a ſinner's receiving and reſting upon Chriſt for ſalvation, as ſaving faith is defined in our Catechiſm, and this is indeed believing, and nothing but believing; according to the ſcriptural uſe of that word.

1. I ſay, this is the ſcriptural receiving and reſting on Chriſt. It is the receiving of him in the ſenſe of the holy ſcripture: John i. 12. ‘ As many as received him, ‘ to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, ‘ even to them that believe on his name:’ where the receiving of Chriſt is explained by believing on his name. God hath appointed Chriſt Saviour of the world, and your Saviour. You hear the ſame publiſhed in the goſpel; and you accordingly believe that he is your Saviour by his Father's appointment, and his own offer: hereupon you truſt on him, and on him alone, for ſalvation, and all that you need for your ſalvation. Is not this a receiving of him for your part in the character of a Saviour, wherein his Father ſent him forth to you? is it not a taking of him to yourſelf, as offered to you? Our Lord complains of the Jews, John v. 43. that whereas he came in his father's name, they received him not, to wit, in the character wherein he was ſent, namely, as the Meſſias, the Saviour of the world, and their Saviour, truſting in him that he would ſave them. This plainly appears to be the meaning, if one compares herewith the words there immediately following: ‘ If ano‘ther ſhall come in his own name, him will ye re‘ceive:’ q. d. Ye will believe him to be the Meſſias, and your Saviour, and truſt on him accordingly, that he will ſave you, the which has been often verified in that unbelieving people. Moreover this is reſting on Chriſt in the ſcripture ſenſe of that expreſſion: Iſa. xxvi. 3. ‘ Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ‘ ſtayed on thee: becauſe he truſteth in thee.’ And indeed one cannot deviſe what way a perſon can reſt on a word, or a ſoul or ſpirit can reſt on a perſon, but by truſting them, or truſting in or on them. It is ſaid, 2 Chron. xxxii. 8. ‘ The people reſted themſelves up‘on the words of Hezekiah.’ What way can one imagine they did ſo, but by truſting them? Chap. xiv. 11. ‘ Help us, O Lord our God; for we reſt on thee.’ How could they do ſo, but by truſting on him for their help?

2. This is believing, in the ſcriptural uſe of that word, which, in our entry on the queſtion under conſideration, we eſtabliſhed from the ſcripture itſelf. For it is a truſting of, or truſting in a perſon, namely, Jeſus Chriſt, and God in him, the perſonal object of ſaving faith, Acts xvi. 31.; a truſting in a thing, namely, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the ultimate real object of faith, Rom. i. 17.; and a truſting in a word, namely, the record and teſtimony of God, the word of the promiſe of the goſpel, the proximate or neareſt real object of faith, ibid; and all this for the great purpoſe of ſalvation. And then it is nothing but ſuch believing: for thus faith is not explained away into, but is a thing quite diſtinct from the nature of a work, as the ſcripture contradiſtinguiſheth works to faith.

Wherefore we conclude, that this truſt is that believing on Chriſt, by which the ſoul is united to him, and ſavingly inſtated in the covenant. And for opening of it, we ſhall take notice of theſe five things plainly imported in it.

1. This truſt imports, not only a willingneſs, but a ſincere and honeſt deſire to be delivered from ſin and wrath; a deſire to be ſanctified, as well as to be juſtified; to be delivered from the reigning power, pollution, practice, and inbeing of ſin, as well as from the guilt of it; according to that of the apoſtle, Rom. vii. 24. 25. ‘ Who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! I ‘ thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.’ For it is a truſting on Chriſt, not for the half of his ſalvation, to wit, ſalvation from wrath only, which is all the truſt of many, being by no means deſirous to part with ſin; but for the whole of it, namely, ſalvation from wrath, and ſalvation from ſin too, which is the principal part thereof, Matth i. 21. Now, a man may indeed fear that from one, which he doth not deſire: but no body truſts in one for what he deſires not. Faith is a believing with the heart, Rom. x. 10. The whole ſalvation of Chriſt is the believers choice; it is the end he deſires to compaſs; and the truſt of faith is exerted as the means to compaſs that end.

2. A renouncing of all confidence in all that is not Chriſt, or in Chriſt, as to the matter of ſalvation particularly. In this truſt is overturned ſelf confidence, law-confidence, creature-confidence; and the ſoul builds on a quite new ground: Philip. iii. 3. ‘ We rejoice in ‘ Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.’ Jer. xvi 19. ‘ The Gentiles ſhall come unto thee,—and ‘ ſhall ſay, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vani‘ ty, and things wherein there is no profit.’ For it is a truſting wholly on Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, a truſting, or a believing with all the heart, Prov. iii. 5. Acts viii. 37. At this rate the believer is carried off from the works of the law, to the blood of Jeſus, for his juſtification; and carried out of himſelf too, unto the Spirit of holineſs in Chriſt, for his ſanctification: being perſuaded, that no doing nor ſuffering of his own, can procure him the pardon of, or atone for the leaſt piece of guilt; and that he is not able truly to mortify one luſt, more as to purge away the guilt of one ſin, Matth. v. 3. Iſa. xlv. 24.

3. A hearty approbation of the plan or device of ſalvation according to the covenant, manifeſted in the goſpel, as ſuited to the divine perfections, and to the caſe of ſinners, and their own in particular: 1 Cor. i. 23. ‘ We preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumb‘ ling block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs;’ ver. 24. ‘ But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, ‘ Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God.’ Without this, no man knowing what God is, what ſin is, and what is the worth of his own ſoul, will ever venture his ſalvation upon it; but one's truſting his ſalvation to Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, ſpeaks him to be well pleaſed therewith, as what one may ſafely truſt to, even in the ſight of a holy God. And this is that rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus, which makes an illuſtrious piece of the believer's character, Philip. iii. 3.

Withal it bears three things. (1.) An eying of Chriſt in this matter, as a crucified Saviour, who hath fulfilled all righteouſneſs, according to the ſtated condition of the covenant, 1 Cor. ii. 2. It is not Chriſt in the eternal glory he had with his Father before the world was, that faith fixeth its view on, while the ſoul in this caſe ſtands trembling before a holy God; but Chriſt the Son of God made man, come in the fleſh, being born holy, leading a life perfectly righteous, and at laſt dying on the croſs, to ſatisfy the demands which the law had on poor ſinners. It looks unto him lifted up on the croſs, as thoſe who were bitten by the ſerpents in the wilderneſs looked unto the braſen ſerpent lifted up on the pole, Iſa. xlv. 22. Numb. xxi. 9. John iii. 14, 15. Therefore it is called faith in his blood, Rom. iii. 25. his righteouſneſs; whereof the ſhedding of his blood was the completing part, being the ſpring of the believer's hope. (2.) A real perſuaſion of the ſufficiency of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to ſave ſinners, and us in particular, from ſin and wrath; to anſwer for us before a holy juſt God, in the eye of his holy law; and to procure for us eternal holineſs and happineſs. There is no ſaving faith without this: Chriſt's ability to ſave muſt be believed, and that with application to your own caſe in particular, Matth. ix. 28. ‘ Believe ye that I am able to do this?’ And in order hereunto, faith eyes Chriſt's righteouſneſs as the righteouſneſs of God, and therefore of infinite value and efficacy, Philip. iii. 9. 1 John i. 7. The reaſon why the goſpel, and no other doctrine whatſoever, is the power of God unto ſalvation of ſinners, is, becauſe therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God unto faith, Rom. i. 16. 17. and that is the only righteouſneſs, ſuited at once to the divine perfections and our caſe. (3.) An acquieſcing to that way of ſalvation, for ourſelves in particular. The believer hath a cordial liking of it, for the way of his ſalvation as perfectly ſafe, being the power of God, and the wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. i. 24. His ſoul pronounceth them ſafe and happy, that are in it; he deſires for his own part to be found in it; and is perſuaded he would be ſaved if he were in it. Thus faith acted in the woman diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood, Matth. ix. 21. ‘ She ſaid within herſelf, If I ‘ may but touch his garment, I ſhall be whole.’ And thus it acteth in all believers, determining them to that way, and to that way alone, for their caſe in particular. And here unbelievers are always unſettled.

4. A betaking one's ſelf unto Chriſt and his righteouſneſs alone, for ſalvation from ſin and wrath. This is done by this truſting. For the ſinner believing that Chriſt is his Saviour, and that his righteouſneſs is made over to him by free gift; and withal, that this his Saviour, with his righteouſneſs, is ſufficient to ſave him from ſin and wrath; doth accordingly truſt on Chriſt and his righteouſneſs for his own ſalvation, and ſo betake himſelf thereto: even as a beggar once having, and withal believing himſelf to have riches and wealth made over to him by a friend, leaves off to beg, and for his maintenance truſts to that wealth allenarly; and thereupon betakes himſelf to it. It is true, that wealth being a corporal thing, to which there is a bodily motion, the betaking one's ſelf thereto is not the ſame thing with the truſting to it; howbeit the former is a native conſequent of the latter: but Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, as revealed unto faith, being things purely ſpiritual, to which there is no bodily motion requiſite, that we may betake ourſelves to them; the truſting and betaking one's ſelf thereto are one and the ſame. So by this truſt the ſoul takes poſſeſſion of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; and uſeth the ſame as its own, to the purpoſe of ſalvation. By it the ſinner betakes himſelf as a condemned man unto Jeſus Chriſt as the propitiatory mercy ſeat through his blood, affording the ſafety to the guilty before a holy God: and by it the ſinner betakes himſelf as a ſick man unto the ſame Jeſus as the Phyſician of ſouls, having the fulneſs of the Spirit of ſanctification in him, to be communicate. Accordingly faith is called a coming to Chriſt, John vi. 36. a fleeing for refuge, as one in hazard of his life by a purſuer, Heb. vi. 18. and is often expreſſed, as Pſalm ii. 12. by a word which properly ſignifies to retire as into a ſhadow, Judg. ix. 15. or as the chickens do under the wings of the hen, Ruth ii. 12. ‘ The Lord God of Iſrael, under whoſe ‘ wings thou art come to truſt:’ properly, to retire. Compare Matth. xxiii. 37. ‘ How often would I have ‘ gathered thy children together, even as a hen gather‘ eth her chickens under her wings.’

5. Laſtly, This truſt of faith imports an affiance, confidence, or truſt on Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, that he will ſave us from ſin and wrath, according to his promiſe ſet before us in the goſpel: ‘ Whoſoever believeth ‘ in him ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’ Iſa. xxv. 9. ‘ We have waited for him, and he will ſave us. Heb. iii. 6. ‘ Whoſe houſe are we, if we hold faſt ‘ the confidence.’ Iſa. l. 10. ‘ Let him truſt in the ‘ name of the Lord, and ſtay upon his God.’ And that this truſt of faith is thus particular, is evident alſo from the nature of the thing. For whoſoever truſts in a perſon for any thing, hath a perſuaſion of the ſame degree of firmneſs with the truſt, that that perſon will do that thing for him. And for a ſure token of this, where the party truſted fails, the party truſting is aſhamed and confounded; as being diſappointed in that which he truſted he would do for him. Wherefore, ſince the truſt of faith is never diſappointed, the ſcripture doth therefore aſſure us, that he that believeth on him ſhall not be confounded, 1 Pet. ii. 6. nor aſhamed, Rom. x. 11. The which doth ſufficiently intimate, that he that believeth on Jeſus Chriſt for ſalvation, doth truſt that he will ſave him; otherwiſe there could be no place for his being confounded or aſhamed, whatever ſhould be the event of his truſt. Accordingly the truſt of faith doth, in proportion to the firmneſs thereof, eſtabliſh and fix the heart, Pſalm cxii. 7. ‘ His heart is fixed, truſt‘ ing in the Lord:’ and hereof we have a plain inſtance in Paul's caſe, 2 Tim. i. 12. 'I am not aſhamed; for 'I know whom I have believed,' marg. or truſted. Agreeable hereunto, faith is called in effect a building on Chriſt, as upon a foundation that will bear our weight, Iſa. xxviii. 16. with 1 Pet. ii. 6. It is called a leaning upon him, Cant. viii. 5. a ſtaying on him, Iſa. xxvi. 3. a reſting or relying on him, 2 Chron. xiv. 11. and xvi. 8. as upon one that will bear us up; a looking unto him, Iſa. xlv. 22. having our eyes upon him, 2 Chron. xx. 12. as one from whom we look for help and ſalvation; and finally, believing on him, 1 Pet. ii. 6. as one by whom we ſhall be ſaved, Acts xv. 11.

The ſinner being ſhaken out of all confidence for life and ſalvation in other things, ſtays himſelf by faith on Jeſus Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; truſting on him, that he ſhall have life and ſalvation thro' his righteouſneſs. It is true indeed, this particular truſt and confidence may be aſſaulted with many doubts and fears: but theſe are things that faith hath to conflict with, as its oppoſite; and the ſtronger that faith is, the leſs they prevail; the weaker it is, they prevail the more; Matth. xiv. 31. 'O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt 'thou doubt?' It is indeed of very different degrees in different perſons, and in one and the ſame perſon at different times: but if you remove all truſt and confidence in Chriſt for one's ſalvation, from faith, the very nature and eſſence of it is deſtroyed. For at that rate, the ſinner, whoſe confidence in the fleſh for his ſalvation is razed, having no confidence for it in Chriſt neither, is left quite unſettled and wavering, like a wave of the ſea, or a reed in the water; and where then is faith's building, leaning, ſtaying, relying, and reſting the ſoul on Chriſt? James i. 6. 'Let him aſk in faith, nothing 'wavering, for he that wavereth is like a wave of the 'ſea, driven with the wind and toſſed.' Verſe 7. 'For 'let not that man think that he ſhall receive any thing 'of the Lord.' But the believing ſinner, finding his confidence in the fleſh razed, doth, by believing, caſt the anchor of his truſt and confidence on Chriſt Jeſus and his righteouſneſs, confiding and truſting that he will ſave him. And however he may indeed waver in that matter; being toſſed with doubts and fears about his ſalvation, weakening the actings of that his confidence; and ſometimes prevailing ſo far, as to cauſe an intermitting of the exerciſe thereof; yet, even in that caſe, under all that toſſing, he doth not waver as a wave of the ſea, that hath nothing to fix it; but only like a ſhip at anchor. His confidence is never quite rooted out, as to the habit thereof; but will again exert itſelf: and in that reſpect every believer, as a real partaker of Chriſt, holds the beginning of his confidence ſtedfaſt unto the end, Heb. iii. 14. And this truſt and confidence is what our reformers called aſſurance, and deſcribed faith by.

Object. 1. Since it is not true of all who hear the goſpel, that they ſhall be ſaved; there cannot be, in the caſe of every one of them, a ground on which this particular truſt may be warrantably founded. Anſw. All and every one of them, notwithſtanding that, have a ſolid ground for it, even for truſting on Chriſt and his righteouſneſs for their own ſalvation in particular. And that is the record and teſtimony of God in his goſpel, that 'whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall not periſh, but have 'everlaſting life,' John iii. 16. The true ſenſe of which, as appears from what is ſaid, is, that whoſoever ſhall have this truſt and confidence in Chriſt, ſhall not be diſappointed, but certainly ſhall be ſaved. Here then is the faithfulneſs of God in his word, for the foundation of this faith of particular truſt: and true faith is always built on that foundation. It is certain indeed, that, in the event, many to whom the goſpel comes will not be ſaved: but then, it is as certain, that thoſe who will not be ſaved, will not believe neither; that is, they will not come up to this particular truſt and confidence, we have deſcribed from the word, Iſa. liii. 1. 'Who hath believ'ed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord 'revealed?' Howbeit, at this rate they have a firm ground of particular confidence. If they will not believe for all it, their ruin is of themſelves, they will periſh without excuſe: and their unbelief will be the great ground of their condemnation. Jeſus Chriſt, with his righteouſneſs and ſalvation, is ſo far made theirs, by the Father's appointment, and his own offer, that they may lawfully and warrantably truſt on him as their Saviour, each one for his own ſalvation. If they will not believe it, or not truſt on him accordingly; they do, by their unbelief and diſtruſt, diſhonour the Father and his Son, and muſt juſtly periſh.

Object. 2. Many truſt in Chriſt as their Saviour, with a particular confidence that he will ſave them; and yet are groſsly ignorant, profane, and formal hypocrites; and therefore not true believers, nor united to Chriſt. Anſw. The apoſtle ſpeaking of faith unfeigned, 1 Tim. i. 5. doth ſuppoſe that there is a feigned faith. And indeed ſuch truſters in Chriſt have it; but as for this truſt which we have deſcribed from the word, it is as certain they have it not, as it is certain that true faith purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9. and truly ſanctifies, chap. xxvi. 18. As ſuch truſters ſay, that they receive Chriſt, and reſt on him alone for ſalvation, embrace, accept, and conſent to him in the goſpel-offer: even ſo, they ſay, that they truſt on him. But this truſt on him they really have not. For, firſt, They truſt not on him for his whole ſalvation; nay, as for the chief part thereof, to wit, ſalvation from ſin, they are by no means reconciled thereto: wherefore it may well be an object of their fears and averſion; but it cannot be an object of their truſt. Secondly, They truſt not on him alone for the ſalvation they really deſire: they do not truſt on him with all their heart; but partly to him, and partly to their own doings and ſufferings, betwixt which and the Saviour their heart is divided. This is clear from Matth. v. 3. 'Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit: for theirs is the 'kingdom of heaven.' Laſtly, Their truſt is not grounded on the faithfulneſs of God in the free promiſe of the goſpel; but reared up on ſome one or other ſandy foundation: Iſa. liii. 1. 'Who hath believed our report?' Matth. vii. 26. 'Every one that heareth theſe ſayings of 'mine, and doth them not, ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh man, which built his houſe upon the ſand.'

And thus have we ſhown, what is that faith or believing by which a ſinner unites with Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo enters ſavingly into the covenant of grace. Why God hath appointed it to be the means of union with Chriſt, may be learned from Rom. iv. 16. 'Therefore it 'is of faith, that it might be by grace;' of which before. Here I ſhall only obſerve, that this truſting wholly on Chriſt and his righteouſneſs for his whole ſalvation, is an apt means or inſtrument of union, betwixt Chriſt the party truſted, and the ſoul truſting on him: forasmuch as the ſoul is therein ſo carried forth unto him, that from that moment it is thereby as it were wholly to ſtand or fall with him; as the ſuperſtructure with the foundation; the leaner with the leaning-ſtock; the thing relying, reſting, ſtaying upon another thing, with the ſtay or baſe on which it is laid. Wherefore the object of faith being infallible, they that thus truſt in the Lord, ſhall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever, Pſal. cxxv. 1. Thereby they are united to Chriſt, and being united to him, are perſonally inſtated in the covenant to their eternal ſalvation.

Of PERSONAL and FAMILY FASTING and Humiliation, in the general.

RELigious faſts, kept in ſecret by a particular perſon apart by himſelf, and by a particular family apart by themſelves, concerning which this Memorial is preſented both to ſaints and ſinners, are not indeed the ſtated and ordinary duties of all times, to be performed daily, or at ſet times recurring; ſuch as prayer, praiſe, and reading of the word are; but they are extraordinary duties of ſome times; and to be performed occaſionally, as depending entirely, in reſpect of the exerciſe of them on the call of providence, which is variable.

They are authoriſed, and injoined us, in the word of God; and therefore, when we ſhall have performed them, we muſt ſay, 'We are unprofitable ſervants,' we have done that which was our duty to do; and muſt abhor the leaſt thought of meriting thereby.

The particular ſeaſons of them are determined by providence. Wherefore they who would be practiſers of them, muſt be religious obſervers of providence: otherways God may be calling aloud for weeping and mourning, and girding with ſackcloth, while they not heeding it, are indulging themſelves in joy and gladneſs, Iſa. xxii. 12. 13. a dangerous adventure! Ver. 14. 'Surely 'this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you till ye die, 'ſaith the Lord.'

Hence the moſt ſerious and tender among knowing Chriſtians, will readily be found the moſt frequent in theſe exerciſes. It is on the pouring out of the Spirit, that the land is to mourn, every family apart, and their wives apart, Zech. xii. 10. 12. Paul was a ſcene wherein corrupt nature ſhewed her curſed vigour, he being, when he was bad, very bad; and grace in its turn, its ſacred power, he being, when he was good, very good; and then in faſtings often, 2 Cor. xi. 27.

Theſe duties conſiſt of an external and circumſtantial part, and internal and ſubſtantial part.

To the external and circumſtantial part of them belong time, place, and abſtinence.

I. Firſt of all, a proper time muſt be ſet apart for theſe duties. And this is to be regulated by Chriſtian prudence, as beſts ſuits the circumſtances of the perſon or family.

We find the ſaints, in ſcripture, ordinarily kept their faſts by day. But we have an inſtance of a perſonal faſt kept by night, 2 Sam. xii. 16. 'David faſted, and went 'in, and lay all night upon the earth.' This I do the rather notice, to obviate the excuſe of thoſe who quite neglect this duty, under the pretence of their not being maſters of their own time. If the heart can be brought to it, one will readily find ſome time or other for it, either by day, or elſe by night. It is recorded to the honour of one of the weaker ſex, namely Anna, that ſhe ſerved God with faſtings and prayers night and day, Luke ii. 36. 37.

As to the quantity of time to be ſpent in perſonal or family faſting and humiliation; the duty, I judge, is to regulate it; and not it to regulate the duty. The family faſt of Eſther with her maidens, obſerved alſo by all the Jews in Shuſhan, laſted three days, Eſther iv. 16. We read of the faſting day, Jer. xxxvi. 16. Sometimes, it would ſeem, it was but a part of a day, that was ſpent in ſuch exerciſe, as in Cornelius his perſonal faſt, which ſeems to have been over before the ninth hour, that is before three o'clock in the afternoon; Acts x. 30. 'Four days ago I was faſting untill this hour, and at the ninth hour I prayed in my houſe,' before the which time of the fourth day, Peter, to whom Cornelius ſaith this, might be come; there being but 36 miles from Joppa to Ceſarea, verſe 23. 24. Compare verſes 8. 9. 17. Much about that time of the day, Daniel got the anſwer of his prayers, made in his perſonal faſt, namely, about the time of the evening oblation, or the ninth hour, Dan. ix. 21. And the people being aſſembled with faſting, Neh. ix. 1. they read in the book of the law, one fourth part of the day, and another fourth part they confeſſed, and worſhipped, verſe 3. So they continued in the work ſix hours; from nine o' clock in the morning, till three in the afternoon; that is from the time of the morning ſacrifice, to the time of the evening ſacrifice, with which the work ſeems to have been cloſed, as, it may be preſumed, they ſpent the morning in private preparation for the public duty.

Wherefore I judge, that none are to be ſollicitous, as to what quantity of time, more or leſs, they ſpend in theſe exerciſes, ſo that the work of the time be done. Nay, I very much doubt, men lay a ſnare for themſelves in tying themſelves to a certain quantity of time in ſuch caſes. It is ſufficient, to reſolve, that according to our ability, we will take as much time as the work ſhall be found to require.

II. A proper place is alſo to be choſen, where the perſon or family may perform the duty without diſturbance from others. Time and place are natural circumſtances of the action; and all places are alike now, under the goſpel; none more holy than another. Men may pray every where, whether in the houſe or in the field, lifting up holy hands, 1 Tim. ii. 8. Only for as much as family-faſting is a private duty, it requires a private place; and perſonal faſting a ſecret duty, it requires a ſecret place; according to the caution given us by our Saviour, Matth. vi. 18. 'That thou appear not unto men to faſt but unto thy Father which is in ſecret.'

III. Abſtinence is included in the nature of the thing; abſtinence from meat and drink, and all bodily pleaſures whatſoever, as well as ceaſing from worldly buſineſs. The Jews are taxed for finding pleaſure, and exacting their labours in the day of their faſt, Iſa. lviii. 3. A time of religious faſting, is a time for one's afflicting his ſoul, verſe 5. by denying himſelf even thoſe lawful comforts and delights, which he may freely uſe at other time: Exod. xxxiii. 4. 'The people—mourned, and no man did put on his ornaments.' Dan. ix. 3. 'I ſet my face unto the Lord God, to ſeek by prayer, and ſupplications, with faſting, and ſackcloth, and aſhes.' 1 Cor. vii. 5. 'Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with conſent for a time, that ye may give yourſelves to faſting and prayer.'

The rule for abſtinence from meat and drink, cannot be the ſame as to all; for faſting, not being a part of worſhip, but a means to diſpoſe and fit us for extraordinary worſhipping, is to be uſed only as helping thereto; but it is certain, that what meaſure of it would be helpful to ſome for that end, would be a great hinderance to others. Wherefore weakly perſons, whom total abſtinence would diſfit and indiſpoſe for duty, are not called to faſt at that rate: in their caſe, that ſaying takes place, Hoſ. vi. 6. 'I deſired mercy and not ſacrifice.' Yet ought they not in that caſe, to indulge themſelves the uſe of meat and drink, with the ſame freedom as at other times; but to uſe a partial abſtinence, altering the quantity or quality of them, or both, ſo as they may thereby be afflicted, as the ſcripture expreſſeth it, Lev. xxiii. 29. So Daniel in his mourning, Dan. x. 3. ate no pleaſant bread, neither came fleſh nor wine into his mouth.

Mean while, all theſe things are but the outward ſhell of theſe duties: the internal and ſubſtantial part of them, lies in the following ſpiritual exerciſes.

1. Serious meditation, and conſideration of our ways, Hag. i. 5. Such times are to be ſet apart from converſing with the world, that we may the more ſolemnly commune with our hearts, as to the ſtate of matters between God and us. In them we are diligently to review our paſt life, ſearch and try our ways, Lam. iii. 40. And we are to ſearch out our ſins, by a ſorrowful calling to remembrance the ſins of our heart and life; and that, as particularly as we can: and to ſearch into them, by a deep conſideration of the evil of them, and of their aggravations, the light, love, mercies, and warnings, we have ſinned againſt; tracing them up to the ſin of our nature, the impoiſoned fountain, from whence they have all proceeded. And the more fully and freely we converſe with ourſelves upon them, we will be the more fit to ſpeak unto God anent them, in confeſſing and pleading for pardon.

2. Deep humiliation of ſoul before the Lord; the which was ſignified by the ſackcloth and aſhes uſed, under the law, on ſuch occaſions. The conſideration of our ways is to be purſued, till our ſoul be humbled within us; our heart rent, not with remorſe for ſin only, but with regret and kindly ſorrow for it, as an offence to a gracious and merciful God, Joel ii. 12. 13. our face filled with ſhame and bluſhing before him, in view of our ſpiritual nakedneſs, pollution, and defilement, Ezra ix. 6. and we lothe ourſelves, as moſt vile in our own eyes, Ezek. xxxvi. 31. Job xl. 4.

3. Free and open confeſſion of ſin before God, without reſerve. This is a very material part of the duty incumbent on us in religious faſting: and the due conſideration and deep humiliation juſt now mentioned, do natively iſſue in it; producing, of courſe, extraordinary confeſſion of ſin, an exerciſe moſt ſuitable on ſuch an occaſion. Hence the Jews ſpent one fourth part of the day in confeſſing and worſhipping, Neh. ix. 3.; and the angel, who brought the anſwer to Daniel's ſupplications, about the time of the evening-oblation, found him ſtill praying and confeſſing his ſin, Dan. ix. 20. 21. For here the ſinner duly humbly has much ado, acting againſt himſelf the part of an accuſer, recounting before the Lord his tranſgreſſions of the holy law, ſo far as he is able to reach them; the part of an advocate, opening up the particulars, in their nature, and aggravating circumſtances; and the part of a judge, juſtifying God in all the evil he has brought upon him, and condemning himſelf as unworthy of the leaſt of all his mercies, and deſerving to periſh under eternal wrath.

4. The exerciſe of repentance in turning from ſin unto God, both in heart and life; the native reſult of deep humiliation and ſincere confeſſing: Joel ii. 12. 'Turn ye even to me—with faſting, and with weeping, and with mourning.' In vain will we faſt, and pretend to be humbled for our ſins, and make confeſſion of them, if our love of ſin be not turned into hatred; our liking of it into loathing; and our cleaving to it, into a longing to be rid of it; with full purpoſe to reſiſt the motions of it in our heart, and the outbreakings thereof in our life: and if we turn not unto God as our rightful Lord and Maſter, and return to our duty again. If we are indeed true penitents, we will turn from ſin, not only becauſe it is dangerous and deſtructive to us; but becauſe it is offenſive to God, diſhonours his Son, grieves his Spirit, tranſgreſſeth his law, and defaceth his image: and we will caſt away all our tranſgreſſions, not only as one would caſt away a live-coal out of his boſom, for that it burns him; but as one would caſt away a loathſome and filthy thing, for that it defiles him.

But withal, it is to be remembered, that the true way to deal with a hard heart, to bring it to this temper, is to believe the goſpel. As ravenous fowls firſt fly upward, and then come down on their prey; ſo muſt we firſt ſoar aloft in believing, and then we ſhall come down in deep humiliation, ſincere and free confeſſion, and true repentance: Zech. xii. 10. 'They ſhall look 'upon me whom they have pierced, and ſhall mourn.' Therefore the ſcripture propoſeth the object of faith in the promiſe of grace, as a motive to repentance, that, by a believing application thereof, the hard heart may be moved and turned, Joel ii. 13. 'Turn unto the Lord 'your God, for he is gracious.' One may otherwiſe toil long with it; but all in vain. 'Without faith it is 'impoſſible to pleaſe God,' Heb. xi. 6.; and therefore impoſſible to reach true humiliation, right confeſſion, and ſincere repentance, which are very pleaſant to him, Jer. xxxi. 18. 19. 20. The unbelieving ſinner may be brought to roar under law horror; but one will never be a kindly mourner, but under goſpel-influences. When guilt ſtares one in the face, unbelief locks up the heart, as a keen froſt doth the waters: but faith in the Redeemer's blood melts it, to flow in tears of godly ſorrow. Hard thoughts of God, which unbelief ſuggeſts to a ſoul ſtung with guilt, alienate that ſoul more and more from him; they render it like the worm, which, when one offers to tread upon it, preſently contracts itſelf, and puts itſelf in the beſt poſture of defence that it can: but the believing of the proclaimed pardon touches the heart of the rebel ſo, that he caſts down himſelf at the feet of his Sovereign, willingly yielding himſelf to return to his duty.

5. Solemn covenanting with God, entering into, or renewing covenant with him in expreſs words. As a faſt-day is a day to looſe the bands of wickedneſs, ſo it is a day for coming explicitely into the bond of the holy covenant, Jer. l. 4. 'Going and weeping; they ſhall 'go, and ſeek the Lord their God. Verſe 5.—Saying 'Come, and let us join ourſelves to the Lord, in a per'petual covenant, that ſhall not be forgotten.' Accordingly this was an eminent part of their faſt day's work, Neh. ix. 38. It follows of courſe, on due humiliation, confeſſion, and the exerciſe of repentance, whereby the league with ſin is broken. And it lies in a ſolemn profeſſing before the Lord, that we take hold of his covenant, believing on the name of his Son as the Saviour of the world, and our Saviour, and that in and through him he will be our God, and we ſhall be his people; and that we are from the heart content, and conſent to take him for our Portion, Lord, and Maſter, and reſign ourſelves to him only, wholly, and for ever: Heb. viii. 10. 'This is the covenant,—I will be to them a God, 'and they ſhall be to me a people,' Iſa. xlix. 8. 'I 'will give thee for a covenant.' Chap. lvi. 6. 'Every 'one that taketh hold of my covenant.' John i. 12. 'As many as received him,—that believe on his name.' Pſalm xvi. 2. 'O my ſoul, thou haſt ſaid unto the Lord, 'Thou art my Lord.' Iſa. xliv. 5. 'One ſhall ſay, I 'am the Lord's.'

6. Laſtly, Extraordinary prayer, in importunate addreſſes and petitions unto our covenanted God for that which is the particular occaſion of our faſt. The confeſſion and the covenanting are, both of them, to be done prayer-ways, as appears from Dan. ix. 4.—15. Neh. ix. 6.—38. But beſides, there muſt be prayers, ſupplications, and petitions made for what the perſon or family hath particularly in view, in their faſt: Pſalm xxxv. 13. 'When they were ſick, my cloathing was 'ſackcloth: I humbled my ſoul with faſting, and my 'prayer returned into mine own boſom.' And, indeed, the great end and deſign for which ſuch faſts are to be kept, is, that thereby the parties may be the more ſtirred up unto, and fitted for wreſtling with God in prayer, anent the caſe which they have particularly at heart. So the Ninivites having their threatened overthrow at heart, it was ordered, that man and beaſt ſhould be covered with ſackcloth, and cry mightily unto God, Jonah iii. 8. that is, that the men ſhould cry in prayer for pity and ſparing; and to the end they might be moved to the greater fervency in theſe their praying cries, it is provided, that they and their beaſts ſhould be covered with ſackcloth; and that their beaſts having fodder withheld from them on that occaſion, ſhould be made to cry for hunger and thirſt, even to cry unto God, namely, interpretatively, as the young ravens cry unto him, Job xxxviii. 41. At which rate the cries of the beaſts, being mixed with the cries of men, would make the ſolemnity of that extraordinary mourning very great: and the hearts of the men being, every now and then, during that ſolemnity, pierced with the cries of the harmleſs brutes, would be ſtirred up to a more earneſt, fervent, and importunate pleading with God for mercy.

Thus far of perſonal and family faſting and humiliation, in the general.

CHAP. II.

Of PERSONAL Faſting and Humiliation, in particular.

FROM what is ſaid it appears, that a perſonal faſt is a religious exerciſe, wherein a particular perſon having ſet apart ſome time from his ordinary buſineſs in the world, ſpends it in ſome ſecret place by himſelf, in acts of devotion tending to his humiliation and reformation, and particularly in prayer, with faſting. Concerning the which we ſhall conſider, (1.) The divine warrant for it; (2.) The call to it; and, (3.) Offer advice how to manage it.

SECT. I.

Of the divine Warrant for perſonal Faſting and Humiliation.

FOraſmuch as will-worſhip is condemned by the word, and that can never be obedience to God, whereof his revealed will is not the reaſon and rule; it concerneth all who would perform this duty in faith, ſo as to have it accepted of him, to know who hath required it at their hands. And to ſet that matter in a light ſufficient to ſatisfy and bind it upon the conſcience, as a duty owing unto God, let theſe few things following be duly weighed.

1. God requires it in his word; and that both directly and indirectly.

It is directly required, James iv. 9. 'Be afflicted and 'mourn and weep.' It is plain enough from the context, thoſe things are propoſed as agreeing to particular perſons in their perſonal capacity. See verſes 8. 10. And what it is that is required of them in theſe words, could not miſs to be as plain to thoſe unto whom they were originally directed: to wit, that it is faſting and humiliation that was intended by them. For this epiſtle was written to thoſe who were Jews by nation, the twelve tribes ſcattered abroad, chap. i. 1. And this is the very language of the Old Teſtament in that caſe, the ſame manner of expreſſion in which their prophets called them to it; Lev. xxiii. 27. ‘ On the tenth day ‘ of the ſeventh month, there ſhall be a day of atonement, ‘ and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls;’ to wit, with faſting, Iſa. lviii. 5. ‘ Is it ſuch a faſt as I have choſen? a day ‘ for a man to afflict his ſoul?’ Or, more agreeable to the original, ‘ Shall a faſt I will chuſe, a day of mens ‘ afflicting their ſoul be like this?’ Joel ii. 12. ‘ Turn ‘ ye even to me—with faſting, and with weeping, and ‘ with mourning.’ And the mourning required in theſe texts differs from the weeping, as the habit and geſtures of mourners differ from their tears, Gen. xxxvii. 34. Eccleſ. iii. 4. directly pointing unto the duty of faſting and humiliation.

It is alſo required indirectly in the word, which ſuppoſeth it to be a duty the ſaints will practiſe; inaſmuch as divine directions are given anent it. Now it is inconſiſtent with the holineſs of God, to give directions for regulating of will-worſhip, which he doth ſimply condemn, Matth. xv. 9. Col. ii. 23. Jer. viii. 31. But our Saviour gives directions about perſonal faſting: Matth. vi. 16. ‘ When ye faſt be not as the hypocrites, ‘ of a ſad countenance; for they disfigure their faces, ‘ that they may appear unto men to faſt. Verily I ſay ‘ unto you, they have their reward.’ Ver. 17. ‘ But ‘ when thou faſteſt, anoint thine head, and waſh thy ‘ face:’ Ver. 18. ‘ That thou appear not unto men ‘ to faſt, but unto thy Father which is in ſecret: and ‘ thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee ‘ openly.’ And it is evident, that theſe directions do concern ſecret and perſonal faſting; for, beſides that the text ſpeaks expreſly of that which is done in ſecret, and therefore is to be kept ſecret, contrary to the practice of the hypocritical Phariſees, who made it their buſineſs to propale their ſecret devotions, the outward ſigns of faſting are commended in the caſe of public faſts, Exod. xxxiii. 4. Jonah iii. 8. Joel ii. 15. 16. 17. In like manner the apoſtle Paul gives a direction about this duty, 1 Cor. vii. 5. ‘ Defraud ye not one the other, except ‘ it be with conſent for a time, that ye may give your‘ ſelves to faſting and prayer;’ where the conſent mentioned as neceſſary, determines the faſting to be perſonal; foraſmuch as, in the caſe of public faſts, that matter is predetermined by a ſuperior authority; and in the caſe of family faſts, it follows of courſe on the appointment of ſuch a faſt.

2. It is promiſed that the ſaints ſhall perform this duty; Zech. xii. 10. ‘ I will pour upon the houſe of Da‘ vid, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit ‘ of grace and of ſupplication.’ Ver. 12. ‘ And the ‘ land ſhall mourn, every family apart,—and their wives ‘ apart.’ Thus, in virtue of the grace of the covenant, this duty is made the matter of a promiſe, even as other duties of holy obedience are. Accordingly our Lord promiſed it, in the caſe of his diſciples in particular, Matth. ix. 15. ‘ The days will come when the bride‘ groom ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they ‘ faſt’: to wit, perſonally: for it was not the neglect of the public faſt appointed and ſtated in the law, Lev. xxiii. 27.—32. that they were taxed; but the neglect of perſonal faſting, uſed by the diſciples of John, upon the occaſion of their maſter, the friend of the bridegroom, his being taken from them; and alſo by the Phariſees, out of their ſuperſtitious and vain-glorious diſpoſition, Matth. ix. 14. with Luke xviii. 12.

3. It is recommended unto us by the practice of the ſaints mentioned in ſcripture. It was, as we have already ſeen, practiſed by David, a man according to God's own heart, 2 Sam. xii. 16. Pſal. xxxv. 13.; by Daniel, a man greatly beloved, Dan. ix. 3. and x. 2. 3.; and by the devout centurion, Acts x. 30. It was a frequent exerciſe of Paul the laborious apoſtle of the Gentiles, 2 Cor. xi. 27. Theſe all had the ſeal of God's good pleaſure with their work ſet upon it, in the communion with God allowed them therein. And it is our duty to go forth by the footſteps of the flock, following their approved example.

4. Laſtly, That occaſional religious faſting and humiliation is a duty required in the word of God, and to be performed by ſocieties in a public capacity, will not, I preſume, be queſtioned. Now, upon that ground the duty of perſonal faſting and humiliation may be thus evinced.

1ſt, There is nothing in the nature of religious faſting and humiliation, that of itſelf is public, or neceſſarily requiring a plurality of perſons to join therein. The preaching of the word, and celebrating of the ſacraments, do, in their nature, require ſociety; and therefore are not to be uſed by a ſingle perſon alone in his cloſet. But it is not ſo in this caſe. One may keep a faſt alone, as well as he may pray, read the ſcriptures, and ſing pſalms alone. Now, whatever ordinances God hath appointed, and hath not tied to ſocieties or aſſemblies, nor to any certain ſet of men, they are the duty of every one in particular, who is capable to perform them.

2dly, The ground upon which the duty of faſting and humiliation is bound on ſocieties, in a public capacity, takes place in the caſe of particular perſons, namely, that extraordinary duties are called for on extraordinary emergents and occaſions. If then a church or congregation is called to faſting and humiliation, on ſuch occaſions in their caſe; is not a particular perſon called to the ſame, on ſuch occaſions in his caſe? If abounding ſin, or judgments threatened or inflicted on a land, require ſolemn public faſting and humiliation; do not the ſame things, in the caſe of a particular perſon, call for perſonal faſting and humiliation? Surely, every one ought to keep his own vineyard, with the ſame diligence the public vineyard is to be kept: If one does not ſo, it will be bitterneſs in the end, Cant. i. 6.

3dly, Extraordinary duties to be performed by a whole nation, church, or congregation, cannot be ſoon overtaken; becauſe all great bodies are ſlow in their motions: and ſometimes the ſeaſon may be over, ere they can move thereto in a public capacity: yea, and oft times God is calling aloud, by his providence, for national and congregational faſting and humiliation, when the call is not heeded by them, on whom it is incumbent to appoint them. Now, what ſhould particular perſons, diſcerning the call of providence, do in ſuch caſes? Muſt they ſit ſtill, and not anſwer the call as they may, becauſe they cannot anſwer it as they would? Should they not rather keep perſonal and family faſts, for thoſe cauſes, for which others either cannot or will not keep public faſts; as in the caſe of God's pleading with the land of Egypt, ‘ He that feared the word of the Lord amongſt ‘ the ſervants of Pharaoh, made his ſervants and his cat‘ tle flee into the houſes,’ Exod. ix. 20. When the Jews are diſperſed, ſome of them in one country, ſome in another, how ſhall the land mourn? Muſt they wait until they be gathered together? No; but the land ſhall mourn, families apart, and particular perſons apart: even as when our neighbour's houſe is on fire, we do not tarry until the whole town or neighbourhood be gathered; but immediately fall to work ourſelves, to do what lies in our power for quenching the flames.

And thus much ſhall ſuffice to have ſpoken of the divine warrant for this extraordinary duty.

SECT. III.

Of a providential Call to perſonal faſting and humiliation.

THE caſe of the church, the caſe of a neighbour, and one's private caſe, may, each of them ſeparately, and much more all of them conjunctly, found a providential call to perſonal faſting and humiliation. The prophet Daniel kept a perſonal faſt on the church's account, Dan. ix. 2. 3. David, on his neighbour's account, Pſal. xxxv. 13. and on his own, 2 Sam. xii. 16. Zion's children ſhould reckon her intereſt theirs: and as ſecret perſonal faſting for public cauſes, argues a truly public ſpirit; ſo it is highly commendable, and being rightly managed, is very acceptable in the ſight of God, Dan. ix. 20. 21.

The communion of ſaints is an article of our creed, and a moſt beneficial thing in the practice thereof. Conſidered only in theſe two parts of it, namely, a communion of burdens, Gal. vi. 2. and a communion of prayers, James v. 16. it is one of the beſt cordials the travellers towards Zion have by the way. For one to love his neighbour as himſelf, whereof ſecret faſting on his account is a good evidence, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, Mark xii. 33. And whether it do good to his neighbour, or not, it will not fail, if rightly managed, to return with a plentiful reward into his own boſom, according to the Pſalmiſt's experience, Pſal. xxxv. 13.

Howbeit, it is hardly to be expected, that one will be brought to the practice of this duty on the account of others, till once he has been engaged therein upon his own account. But ſurely, if profeſſors of religion were more exerciſed about their own ſpiritual caſe, this duty of perſonal faſting and humiliation would not be ſo rare as it is. Paul, who had much of this kind of exerciſe, Acts xxiv. 16. was in faſtings often, 2 Cor. xi. 27.; kept under his body, and brought it into ſubjection, 1 Cor. ix. 27.

Now, any or all of theſe caſes call for this extraordinary duty, in three kinds of events, other circumſtances agreeing, and pointing thereto in the conduct of providence.

Either, 1. When there is any ſpecial evil actually lying upon us, the church, or our neighbour, in whom we have a ſpecial concern; whether it be ſinful or penal evil. There are ſome ſins that leave ſuch guilt on the conſcience, and ſuch defilement on the heart and life, as call aloud for faſting and humiliation, in order to a recovery from the diſmal effects thereof, Jam. iv. 8. 'Cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purify your hearts ye double-minded.' Ver. 9. 'Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep.' Accordingly the Iſraelites gathered to Mizpeh, being ſenſible of the abominable idolatries they had fallen into, 'faſted that day, and ſaid, We have ſinned againſt the Lord,' 1 Sam. vii. 6.

In like manner, when the tokens of God's high diſpleaſure are gone out in afflicting providences, it is time for us to roll ourſelves in the duſt; and ſo to accommodate our ſpirit and way to the diſpenſation, humbling ourſelves before him with faſting. Thus Nehemiah found himſelf called to faſting, upon information received of the continued ruins of Jeruſalem, and the affliction that the returned captives were in, Neh. i. 3. 4.; David, and thoſe with him, upon the news of the defeat of Iſrael, and the death of Saul and Jonathan, 2 Sam. i. 11. 12.; and the people, upon the conſideration of the ſlaughter which the Benjamites had made among them, Judg. xx. 26.

Or, 2. When there is any ſpecial ſtroke threatened and impending. Thus the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, being in imminent danger from their enemies, were providentially called to weeping and mourning, though they heeded it not, Iſa. xxii. 12. 13. But the Ninevites took ſuch an alarm, and complied with the call of providence, Jon. iii. 4.—9. So did David, when God ſtruck his child with ſickneſs, 2 Sam. xii. 15. 16. Yea, and ſo did even Ahaz, when he had heard Elijah's heavy meſſage againſt him and his houſe, 1 Kings xxi. 27. When the lion roars, it becomes us to fear: when God's hand is lifted up, and he appears to be about to ſtrike, it is high time for us to ſtrip ourſelves of our ornaments, and to lie in ſackcloth and aſhes.

Or elſe, 3. When there is ſome ſpecial mercy and favour to be deſired of the Lord; as was the return of the Babyloniſh captivity, for which Daniel kept his faſt, Dan. ix. 1. 2. 3. Chriſtians exerciſed unto godlineſs, will rarely, if ever, want their particular ſuits, and ſpecial errands unto the throne of grace. The ſame God, who makes ſome mercies fall into the lap of others, without their being at much pains about them, will give his own children many an errand unto himſelf for them, ere they obtain them; becauſe they muſt have them in the way of the covenant; whereas they come to others only in the way of a common providence, in which a blaſting curſe may come along with the mercy.

To ſet this matter yet in a clearer light, we ſhall exemplify theſe general heads, in one's own private caſe; and that in ſeveral inſtances, to be accommodate to the caſe of the church, and of our neighbour, by thoſe who are diſpoſed religiouſly to obſerve and conſider the diſpenſations of providence. There is a variety of theſe particular caſes, which, with agreeing circumſtances to be diſcerned by each one for himſelf, call for perſonal faſting and humiliation. As,

1. When through a long tract of ſinning and careleſs walking, the caſe of one's ſoul is left quite in diſorder and confuſion; Iſa. xxxii. 11. 'Tremble, ye women that are at eaſe; be troubled ye careleſs ones; ſtrip ye and make ye bare, and gird ſackcloth upon your loins.' Certainly the voice of God unto ſuch, is, 'Thus ſaith the Lord, Conſider your ways,' Hag. i. 5. Want of conſideration ruins many. They deal with their ſouls, as ſome fooliſh men do with their eſtates, running on without conſideration, till they have run themſelves aground. But thoſe who adventure ſo to take a time for ſinning, have need alſo to ſet a time for mourning; for it is not to be expected, that accounts which have been long running on, can be cleared and adjuſted with a glance of one's eye. O careleſs ſinner, conſider how matters ſtand betwixt God and you: are you in any tolerable caſe for the other world, for death and eternity? are not matters gone quite to wreck with your ſoul? are you not pining away in your iniquity? is not the ſtate and condition of your ſoul like that of the ſluggard's vineyard that was all grown over with thorns, and nettles covered the face thereof, and the ſtone wall thereof was broken down? Prov. xxiv. 31. O ſet about perſonal faſting and humiliation. Ordinary pains will not ſerve to recover the long neglected garden: it muſt be trenched, digged deep. A little may help the caſe, that is timely ſeen to, but all this will be little enough for thine, which hath lain ſo long neglected.

2. When one is under convictions, entertaining ſome thoughts to reform. On ſuch an occaſion was that faſt kept, Neh. ix. 1. 2. and had very good effects, ver. 38. Chap. x. 1. 28. 29. This method is, in ſuch a caſe a proper means to bring men to a point in the matter, and to fix their reſolutions, otherways ready to prove abortive. Some have convictions, which, at times, coming and paſſing away, like a ſtitch in one's ſide, ſet them now and then to their prayers: but never prevail to bring them to a ſettled courſe of reformation of life; their diſeaſe is too inveterate, to be ſo eaſily carried off. But were they ſo wiſe as to make theſe convictions a matter of ſolemn ſeriouſneſs, ſetting ſome time apart on that occaſion for perſonal faſting and humiliation, they might through the divine bleſſing, turn to a good account for the intereſt of their ſouls.

3. When the conſcience is defiled with the guilt of ſome atrocious ſin. Doth national guilt of that kind require national faſting? and doth not perſonal guilt of the ſame kind, require perſonal faſting? Yea, ſure, God calls men, in that caſe, to be afflicted, and mourn, and weep, Jam. iv. 8. 9. Strong diſeaſes require ſtrong remedies; and conſcience-waſting guilt deep humiliation, as in David's caſe, Pſal. li. and Peter's, Matth. xxvi. 75. This kind of guilt, deeply wounding and ſtinging the ſoul, defiling and waſting the conſcience, may be without any ſcandalous enormities of life, appearing to the view of the world. God is witneſs to ſecret ſins, even to the ſins of the heart: and men of tender conſciences will be ſick at the heart with ſuch ſins as are hid from all the world, and will never move others.

4. When one would fain get over a ſnare he is often caught in, and have victory over a luſt that hath often maſtered him. There are not a few who have many good things about them, yet lack one thing: and that one thing is like to part between heaven and them; marring all their good things, both by way of evidence and of efficacy, Mark x. 21. They know that it is wrong; they often reſolve to amend; and they would fain get above it: but whenever a new temptation comes, Satan attacking them on the weak ſide, down go all their reſolutions, like a bowing high wall, whoſe breaking cometh ſuddenly at an inſtant; and they are hard and faſt in the ſnare again. O conſider, that this kind goeth not out, but by prayer and faſting, Matth. xvii. 21. Set therefore ſome time apart for perſonal faſting and humiliation, on the account of that very thing, that you may wreſtle with God in prayer anent it: and uſe this method time after time, until you prevail againſt it: elſe that one thing may ruin you; and you will be condemned for it, not becauſe you could not help it, but becauſe you would not uſe the means appointed of God for relief in that caſe.

5. When one is under a dead deſertion: in which caſe the Lord is departed, the wonted influences from heaven are with-held, but, the wound not ſmarting, by reaſon of ſpiritual deadneſs, the party is not much moved therewith. This was the caſe of the ſpouſe, Cant. iii. 1. 'By night on my bed I ſought him whom my ſoul 'loveth: I ſought him, but I found him not.' And, for a recovery from it, ſhe made ſome extraordinary efforts in the way of duty, ver. 2. 3. 4. The ſame appears to be the caſe of many, with whom ſome time aday it was better than now. God hides his face from them: their incomes from heaven are rare and ſcanty, in compariſon of what they have formerly been: they are ſighing, and going backward. Though they go the round of ordinary religious exerciſes ſtill; yet it is long ſince they had a token from the beloved, acceſs to or communion with God in them. O faſt and pray for a recovery; as did Iſrael, when, after they had been long deſerted, and very little affected with it, they began at length to lament after the Lord, 1 Sam. vii. 2. 6. It requires much, in the way of ordinary means, for to go to the ground of ſuch a caſe, wherein by much ſlothfulneſs the building hath decayed, and through idleneſs of the hands the houſe droppeth through. Though true grace can never be totally loſt; yet it may be brought to ſuch a very low paſs, that as ſome ſcholars, for retrieving the loſs ſuſtained through long abſence from the ſchool, muſt begin anew again; ſo ſome Chriſtians, in order to their recovery, muſt be carried through the ſeveral ſteps of converſion again, as we may learn from our Saviour's words to Peter, with relation to his fall, Luke xxii. 32. 'I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when 'thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren.'

6. When one is under a felt and ſmarting deſertion, Iſa. xlix. 14. 'Zion ſaid, The Lord hath forſaken me, 'and my Lord hath forgotten me.' This is a more hopeful caſe than the former: howbeit it goes to the quick, Prov. xviii. 14. 'The ſpirit of a man will ſuſ'tain his infirmity; but a wounded ſpirit who can 'bear? There are many bitter ingredients in it, which make it a ſorrowful caſe, exquiſitely painful to the ſoul, like that of a woman forſaken, and grieved in ſpirit, even a wife of youth, Iſa. liv. 6. To one thus deſerted, wrath appears in the face of God, and impreſſed on every diſpenſation, Pſalm lxxxviii. 7. 8. To his ſenſe and feeling, his prayer is ſhut out, Lam. iii. 8. and flaſhes of hell come into his ſoul, Pſalm lxxxviii. 15. 16. Under the preſſure hereof, ſome very grave and ſolid perſons have not been able to contain themſelves, Job xxx. 28. 'I went mourning without the ſun; I 'ſtood up, and I cried in the congregation.' This ſmarting deſertion, in greater or leſſer meaſure, has often been the fearful outgoing from the dead deſertion, as it was in the experience of the ſpouſe, Cant. v. 3.—7. And it is a loud call to perſonal faſting and humiliation, Matth. ix. 15. 'When the bridegroom ſhall be taken 'from them, then ſhall they faſt.'

7. When one is preſſed with ſome outward affliction, whether in his body, relations, name, ſubſtance, or otherwiſe. In ſuch a caſe, 'Job rent his mantle, and 'ſhaved his head, and fell down and worſhipped.' Job i. 20. and 'David's knees were weak through faſting,' Pſalm cix. 24. A time of affliction is a ſpecial ſeaſon for faſting and prayer. The Lord often lays afflictions on his people, on purpoſe to awaken them to their duty, and as it were to neceſſitate them to it; even as Abſalom, who, having ſent once and again for Joab, obliged him at length to come unto him, by cauſing ſet his corn field on fire. This is the way to get affliction ſanctified, and in due time removed, James iv. 10. 'Humble 'yourſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift 'you up.' We ought therefore to take heed, that we be not of thoſe who cry not when he bindeth them; but that in this caſe we do as Benhadad's ſervants, who upon a ſignal defeat of his army, put ſackcloth on their loins, and ropes on their heads, and went out to the king of Iſrael, who had ſmote them, 1 Kings xx. 31.

8. When, by the aſpect of providence, one is threatened with ſome ſuch affliction. It is an ungracious hardneſs, not to be affected when the Lord is lifting up his hand againſt us. He was a man of an excellent ſpirit, who ſaid, 'My fleſh trembleth for fear of thee, 'and I am afraid of thy judgments,' Pſalm cxix. 120. Though he was an hero that feared the face of no man, he laid aſide that bravery of ſpirit when he had do with his God. Wherefore when the Lord was threatening the removal of a child of his by death, though the continuing of that child in life would have been a laſting memorial of his reproach, yet the impreſſion of the Lord's anger on that threatening diſpenſation, moved him to betake himſelf to perſonal faſting and humiliation before the Lord, for the life of that child, 2 Sam. xii. 21. 22.

9. When one would have light and direction in ſome particular matter of ſpecial weight. It is much to be lamented, that men profeſſing the belief of a divine providence in human affairs, ſhould, in confidence of their own wiſdom, take the weight of their matters on themſelves, without acknowledging God in them; aiming only to pleaſe themſelves therein, and not their God; as if their fancy, conveniency, or advantage, and not their conſcience, were concerned in their determinations and reſolves. Hence it is, that wiſe men are often left to ſignal blunders in conduct, and feel marks of God's indignation juſtly impreſſed on their raſh determinations. Thus Joſhua and the princes of Iſrael, in the matter of the league with the Gibeonites, finding no need of the exerciſe of their faith, but of their wit, vainly imagining they could ſee well enough with their own eyes, took of their victuals, and aſked not counſel at the mouth of the Lord, and were egregiouſly over-reached by them, as they ſaw afterward, when it was too late, Joſh. ix. 14. 22.

We have a divine command and promiſe, extending to our temporal, as well as to our ſpiritual concerns; and very ſuitable to the neceſſary dependance we have on God, in all things, as creatures on their Creator, Prov. iii. 5. 'Lean not unto thine own underſtanding.' Verſe 6. 'In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall 'direct thy paths.' We ought therefore, in all our matters, to eye him as our director; and ſteer our whole courſe, as he directs by his word and providence. Since he hath ſaid, 'I will teach thee in the way which thou 'ſhalt go, I will guide thee with mine eye.' Pſalm xxxii. 8. it is unqueſtionably our duty to ſet the Lord always before us, Pſal. xvi. 8. to regulate our acting, and ceaſing from action by the divine direction; even as the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs removed and reſted, juſt as the pillar of cloud and of fire removed or reſted before them, Numb ix. 15.—23.

Sometimes indeed an affair may be in ſuch a ſituation as allows not an opportunity of making an addreſs unto God, for light in it, by ſolemn prayer: but we are never ſo circumſtanced, but we have acceſs to lift up our eyes to the holy oracle, in a devout ejaculation; as Nehemiah did in ſuch a ſituation, Neh. ii. 4. 5. And there is a promiſe relative to that caſe, which has been often verified, in the comfortable experience of the ſaints taking that method to obtain the divine direction, Prov. iv. 12. ‘ When thou runneſt, thou ſhalt not ſtumble.’ But Chriſtians ſhould accuſtom themſelves to lay their matters before the Lord, in ſolemn prayer, for light, and direction therein, as far as circumſtances do permit. So did Abraham's pious ſervant, with the affair his maſter had committed to him, Gen. xxiv. 12. 13. 14. And accordingly he had a pleaſurable experience of the accompliſhment of the promiſe relative to that caſe; Prov. iv. 12. ‘ When thou goeſt, thy ſteps ſhall ‘ not be ſtraitened.’ And where they are to be determined in a matter of ſpecial weight, ſuch as the change of their lot, the choice of an employment, ſome momentuous undertaking, or any the like occurrences in life, whereof ſerious Chriſtians will find not a few, allowing them time and opportunity to deliberate on them; that is a ſpecial occaſion for extraordinary prayer with faſting, for light from the Lord the Father of lights, to diſcover what is their duty therein, and what he is calling them to in the matter. So the captives returning from Babylon with Ezra, kept a faſt at the river Ahava, to ſeek of God a right way, Ezra viii. 21.

10. When duty being cleared in a matter of ſpecial weight, it comes to the ſetting to; in which event one needs the preſence of God with him therein, the divine bleſſing upon it, and ſucceſs in it. Thus Eſther being to go in unto the king, to make requeſt for her people, there was ſolemn faſting, on that occaſion, uſed by her and the Jews in Shuſhan, Eſther iv. 8. 16. And Barnabas and Saul being called of God unto a ſpecial work, were not ſent away to it, but after faſting and prayer, Acts xiii. 2. 3. We need not only light from the Lord to diſcover unto us our duty in particular caſes; but that being obtained, we need alſo his preſence to go along with us in the thing, that we may be enabled rightly to make our way, which he bids us go. Therefore ſaid Moſes, Exod. xxiii. 15. ‘ If thy preſence go ‘ not with me, carry us not up hence.’ Sin hath defiled every thing to us: and however promiſing any worldly ſtate, condition, or thing whatſoever, may appear in our eyes; yet if we have not the preſence of God in it, and his bleſſing upon it, to purify it unto us, we will be mired in it, and find a ſnare and a trap, if not a curſe, therein to us.

11. When one having ſome unordinary difficulty to encounter, is in hazard of being inſnared either into ſin or danger. On ſuch an occaſion was the forementioned faſt at Shuſhan kept; Eſther jeoparding her life, in going in unto the king in the inner-court, not called by him, Eſth. iv. 11. 16. The ſhip has need to be well ballaſted, that ſails while the wind blows high: and in a difficult and inſnaring time, there is need of faſting and prayer for Heaven's ſafe conduct through it. Mens truſting to themſelves in ſuch a caſe, cannot miſs of betraying them into ſnares.

12. Laſtly, When one hath in view ſome ſpecial ſolemn approach unto God; in which caſe a ſpecial preparation is requiſite. Thus Jacob called his family to ſuch preparation, in the exerciſe of repentance, in order to their appearing before the Lord at Bethel, Gen. xxxv. 2. 3. The Iſraelites were called to the ſame, in order to the awful ſolemnity of the giving of the law on mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 10 11. 15. And it is obſervable, that whereas the feaſt of tabernacles was the moſt joyful of all the feaſts the Jews had throughout the year, a ſolemn faſt was appointed of God to be obſerved always before it, four free days only intervening, Lev. xxiii. 27. 34. For, in the method of grace, none ſtand ſo fair for a lifting up, as thoſe who are moſt deeply humbled, Iſa. xl. 4. Luke xviii. 14. Jam. iv. 10. Whereſore, it is a laudable practice of our church, that congregations keep a congregational faſt, before the celebration of the feaſt of the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper among them, in order to their preparation for a ſolemn approach unto God in that holy ordinance. And for the ſame reaſon, ſecret faſting by particular perſons apart, and private faſting by families apart, eſpecially ſuch as have not acceſs to join the public faſt, would be very ſeaſonable on ſuch an occaſion. And if thoſe ſecret and private faſts could more generally obtain, and get place in congregations, ſome little time before the communion work did begin; it would be a token for good, and might prove like the noiſe and ſhaking among the dry bones, that uſhered in the breathing on the ſlain, and the cauſing them to ſtand up upon their feet, Ezek. xxxvii. 7. 10.

Theſe things duly conſidered, each Chriſtian may be in caſe to judge for himſelf, when it is that he is under a providential call to perſonal faſting and humiliation.

S E C T. III.

Directions anent perſonal faſting and humiliation.

HAving ſeen the divine warrant for perſonal faſting and humiliation, and conſidered the nature of a providential call to that extraordinary duty, it remains to offer ſome advices or directions for the profitable managing of it in practice.

DIRECTION I.

When you find that the Lord is calling you to this duty, prudently make choice of a fit time and place for it aforehand, wherein you may have acceſs to go about it without diſtraction. And carefully diſpoſe of your ordinary affairs before that time, ſo as you may have no let nor hindrance from that part, which you can prevent. Works of neceſſity and mercy, which are lawfully done on the Lord's day, are much more ſo in this caſe, wherein the duty waits not on the time, but the time on the duty. Yea, in caſe ſomething of worldly buſineſs, which you could not foreſee nor prevent, do fall out in the time of your faſt, and cannot be deferred or put off without ſome notable inconveniency; you may, without ſcruple, diſpatch it: for the time is not holy. But, in that caſe, labour that, if poſſible, your work be not thereby marred, and carefully keep up your frame of ſpirit for the duty you are engaged in. But Chriſtian providence to weigh circumſtances, for which you are to look up unto the Lord, is neceſſary to determine herein, according to the general rules of the word, Mat. xii. 3.-7.

As for ſuch as are not maſters of their time, which is the caſe of ſervants, they cannot lawfully diſpoſe of their time at their own hand, even for this duty; for our God hates robbery for burnt offering, Iſa. lxi. 8. But then they may endeavour to procure the neceſſary time, at the hand of their maſters; to whom, if they be godly and ſerious, they may modeſtly hint their deſign; pitching on a time with ſo much diſcretion, as that their good may not be evil ſpoken of. And if any be ſo unmindful of their Maſter which is in heaven, as to refuſe ſuch a diſcreet deſire; yet let not the party by any means think, that the ſacred nature of the thing he has then in view, gives him a power to rob his maſter of ſo much of his time; for men can offer nothing to God, with a good conſcience, but what is their own; and exerciſes of devotion are ſo far from ſlacking the tie of moral duty to our neighbour, that they are nothing but an outward form of devotion, unacceptable to God, ſo far as they do not influence the party to a careful and religious obſervance of the duties of morality, ſuch as judgment or juſtice, mercy, and faith or faithfulneſs, Matth. xxiii. 23. Neither yet let him imagine, on the other hand, that he is then no more concerned to look after that extraordinary duty: for no reaſon can be aſſigned, why one ought not to be willing to be at as much pains or expence, for procuring to himſelf an opportunity of communion with God in that duty, as he will be for an opportunity of attending ſome worldly buſineſs of his own, placing another in his room. But if none of theſe can effectuate it; then though the day or time of labouring is the maſter's, yet the night or time of reſting is the ſervant's; let him give unto God what he has, and it ſhall be accepted through Chriſt. But excepting the caſe of a providential neceſſity obliging one to take the night for this exerciſe, the day is, generally ſpeaking, the moſt proper time for it, beginning the exerciſe in the morning.

DIRECT. II.

Make ſome preparation for it the night before, turning your thoughts towards the exerciſe you have in view, conſidering of it, and avoiding every thing that hath a decency to disfit or indiſpoſe for it. Shun carnal mirth and ſenſual delights; ſup ſparingly; to eat the more, that one is to faſt religiouſly after, is to mock God, and cheat one's ſelf. In the intervals of ſleep, take heed that your thoughts be not vain, and much more that they be not vile; but that they be ſuch as tend to fit you for the extraordinary duty in view.

DIRECT. III.

Riſe early in the morning; even ſooner than ordinary, unleſs by reaſon of bodily weakneſs, that would tend to disfit you for the work; for then you are called, in a ſpecial manner, to watch unto prayer, Eph. vi. 18. Sleep is a fleſhly comfort, which howbeit it is neceſſary, yet one is in this caſe called to be ſparing of. Therefore the prieſts were bid lie all night in ſackcloth, Joel i. 13. and it is recorded of Ahab, that he in his faſt lay ſo, 1 Kings xxi. 27. A proper means to make one ſleep ſparingly.

DIRECT. IV.

As ſoon as you awake in the morning, let holy thoughts with a view to your work, immediately have acceſs into your heart. And beware that carnal or worldly thoughts get not the ſtart of them; for if you allow that, they will be to your ſoul like water poured upon fire-wood, that makes it hard to kindle. Surely, if one is at any time to follow the example of the Pſalmiſt David, Pſalm cxxxix. 18. When I awake I am ſtill with thee; he is to do it at ſuch a time.

DIRECT. V.

Let your ordinary duties of prayer and reading of the word, be firſt of all performed: for extraordinary duties are not to juſtle out the ordinary, but to be ſuperadded unto them. And, in ſuch prayer, beg of God grace to enable you for the work before you, according to his promiſe. Yea, it may be very expedient, that thereafter you go unto God again by prayer, particularly and purpoſedly for his grace, to enable you unto the duty now come to the ſetting to. And foraſmuch as our corrupt hearts are, upon a near view of a difficult and laborious holy exerciſe, very apt to wax faint, and our hands to hang down; albeit the way of the Lord is declared to be ſtrength to the upright, Prov. x. 29. do you therefore, by all means, ſtudy to exerciſe faith; and labour to believe ſtedfaſtly, that his grace ſhall be ſufficient for you, to the making of his yoke eaſy, and his burden light unto you, 2 Cor. xii. 9. with Matth. xi. 30. For no man ſhall ever be able to perform a duty acceptably unto God, without a believing perſuaſion, in greater or leſſer meaſure, of an allowance made him of grace ſufficient for an acceptable performance of it, 2 Cor. iii. 4. 5. Philip ii. 12. 13. One will otherwiſe be but a wicked and ſlothful ſervant, as our Saviour teacheth, Matth. xxv. 24. 25. 26.

DIRECT. VI.

After prayer in faith, for the aid of divine grace, as in the preceding direction, begin the work with a ſolemn review of your ſins, in deep meditation, and ſerious communing with your own heart thereupon; applying yourſelf to think of them in ſuch manner as you think of your affairs, when conſidering how to manage them in caſes of difficulty. God calls for this at your hand, Hag. i. 5. 'Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Conſider your ways.' Lam. iii. 40. 'Let us ſearch and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord.' It is recommended unto us by the practice of the ſaints, Pſalm lxxvii. 6. 'I communed with mine heart, and my ſpirit made diligent ſearch,' and cxix. 59. 'I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy teſtimonies.' The nature of a religious faſt requires it; for how can the deep humiliation therein to be aimed at, be otherwiſe obtained? or what way elſe can one be fitted to make a confeſſion ſuitable to ſuch an occaſion? It is obſervable, that in the faſt mentioned, Neh. ix. the reading of the law went before the making of the confeſſion, verſ. 3. So the firſt work was to ſet the looking glaſs before their eyes, that therein every one might ſee his foul face. And the direction given to fallen Iſrael, in order to a recovery, Hoſ. xiv. 2. Take with you words, and ſay, &c. doth plainly bear, that there ſhould, in that caſe, be a ſolemn ſerious thinking before ſolemn prayer.

Now, to aſſiſt you in the practice of this part of your work, the following advices are offered.

Firſt, Read ſome pertinent paſſage of the holy ſcripture; and that with application, as reading your own heart and life therein. Such are thoſe paſſages, which contain diſcoveries and confeſſion of ſin, as Iſa. lix. or liſts of ſins, or of ſeveral ſorts of ſinners, as Rom. i. 29.—32. 2 Cor. vi. 9. 10. Gal. v. 19. 20. 21. 2 Tim. iii. 1.—5, Rev. xxi. 8. Particularly, I recommend for this purpoſe Ezra ix. Neh. ix. Dan. ix. Of theſe, or other ſcriptures of the like nature, you may read ſuch as you ſhall judge meet.

Secondly, It will be expedient and uſeful, in this caſe, to read alſo the Larger Catechiſm on the ten commands, in the anſwers to the queſtions, What is required? and, What is forbidden? and eſpecially the latter. For by reading thereof with application to yourſelf, you will find out your guiltineſs in many points, which perhaps would not otherwiſe come into your mind.

Thirdly, This done, apply yourſelf to think of your ſins, in order to your getting a broad and humbling view of your ſinful and wretched caſe. And for your help herein, I ſuggeſt to you theſe things following.

1. You may compoſe yourſelf what way you find, by experience, to be beſt for keeping the mind fixed. It is a piece of Chriſtian prudence in this caſe, to diſpoſe of every thing ſo, as you may the more readily reach that end, and block up the avenues by which impertinent thoughts may make their entrance. And (1.) Becauſe the eyes often betray the heart, through a variety of objects, which preſent themſelves to one's view in the light: if you are in a houſe, you may darken it by ſtopping the light; if in the fields, you may lie down on your face, and cloſe your eyes. (2.) If you can by no means keep your heart at ſimple thinking, you may ſpeak to yourſelf with a low voice, that words may help to fix the mind unto the thing. Theſe are only prudential advices, which they that need may uſe, they that need not may let alone.

2. It will be very profitable to obſerve ſome method and order, in thinking of your ſins. A confuſed and indeterminate manner of thinking of our ſins, in ſeveral reſpects, fall ſhort of an orderly thought about them. It is true, when the Spirit of the Lord is carrying on a ſpecial work of conviction in the heart of a ſinner, the man's ſins will of courſe be readily laid to hand, and ſet in order before his eyes, Pſalm l. 21. But it is another caſe, where one is ſearching out his ſins, with an ordinary aſſiſtance of the Spirit: herein thoſe do not duly conſult their own intereſt, who refuſe the help of method in the ſearch.

And there is a twofold method or order, which may be helpful to you therein; to wit, the order of the time of life, and the order of the ten commandments. Both theſe are natural, and eaſy to the meaneſt capacity.

Thinking on your ſins in the order of the time of your life, you will thereby get a general view of your own ſinfulneſs, and that throughout your whole life. And in this method.

1ſt, You are to conſider the ſin of your nature. You are to look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged, Iſa. li. 1. Think, what a ſinful lump thou waſt in thy conception and birth, ſhapen in iniquity, conceived in ſin, Pſalm li. 5. how thou cameſt into the world, with cords of guilt wreathed about thy neck, binding thee over to wrath under the curſe; ſtripped naked of original righteouſneſs; thy whole nature corrupted, being the very reverſe of the holy nature of God; thy ſoul in all its faculties quite perverted, ready to diſcover with the firſt occaſion its wrong ſet, namely, a propenſity to evil, and an averſion to good; and thy body in all its members ſinful fleſh. In conſideration whereof, thou mayeſt well ſay, with admiration of the divine patience, 'O why 'did the knees prevent me! Or why the breaſts that I 'ſhould ſuck!'

2dly, Then turn your thoughts to the ſins of your childhood. Solomon in his penitentials, tells us, that childhood and youth are vanity, Eccleſ. xi. 10. Truly, the ſins of that early period of our life, are not to be remembered to be laughed at, but mourned over; and ſo they will be thy true penitents; for they are the early ſproutings and buds of corrupt nature, that might have been fatal to us, ere we had gone further, 'Be'hold,' how in that period, 'thou haſt ſpoken and 'done evil things as thou couldſt.' It is likely that many of theſe things are forgotten: but yet you may ſtill ſearch out as many of them, as may be matter of deep humiliation unto you before the Lord. There may be ſins of childhood, that will make a bleeding wound in a gracious heart, on every remembrance thereof, even unto the dying day.

3dly, Then take a view of the ſins of your youth. Job got a moving view of his, when he was come to a good age, Job. xiii. 26. 'Thou writeſt bitter things 'againſt me, and makeſt me to poſſeſs the iniquities 'of my youth.' David's heart bleeds at the remembrance of his, crying unto God, 'Remember not the 'ſins of my youth,' Pſalm xxv. 7 Youth is but vain, raſh and inconſiderate; and therefore a dangerous period of life, precipitating ſome into ſuch ſteps as make them to halt all their life after, proving fatal to many, and laying up matter of repentance to all. And if the follies of it be not timely repented of, and mourned over, by the ſinner, they ſhall lie down with him in the duſt, Job xx. 11. and preſent themſelves again in full tale, when for all theſe God will bring him into judgment, Eccleſ. xi. 9. Therefore do you take a mournful view of them, and judge yourſelves, in time.

4thly, If you are to come to middle age, proceed to the ſearching out of the ſins of that period of your life. In it you cannot miſs of matter of deep humiliation; for man at his beſt ſtate is altogether vanity, Pſalm xxxix. 5. Every period of life is attended with its proper ſnares and temptations. And he who, right or wrong, hath made his way through thoſe of youth, doth but enter into a new throng of temptations of another kind, while he enters on the next ſtage of life; in the which men often, ere they are aware, pierce themſelves through with many ſorrows, loſe themſelves in a cloud of cares and buſineſs, and troubled about many things, forget the one thing needful.

Laſtly, If you are advanced into old age, go forward and view your ſins in that period. Whatever infirmities do attend it, the ſins of it muſt be ſearched out, and repented of too: for it will not excuſe a man, before a holy God, that he is an aged ſinner. The corruption of nature, the longer it hath kept its ground, is the more hateful, and will be the more humbling to a gracious ſoul.

Thus you will have your whole life before you, in parcels. And that you may, with the greater diſtinctneſs, review any period thereof which you have fully paſt, or of which you have paſt a great part; you may diſtinguiſh the ſame into leſſer periods, according to the more notable events, turns, or changes that were in it, and review them ſeparately; as for inſtance, the time before you went to ſchool, by itſelf; the time of your being at it, by itſelf; and ſo in other caſes.

But for a more full and particular view of your ſins, do you proceed in the order of the ten commandments. The holy law conſidered in its ſpirituality and vaſt extent, is the proper means for ſound conviction: it is the ſinner's looking glaſs, whereby to diſcern the vaſt multitude of his ſpots and defilements, in order to his humiliation: Rom. vii. 7. 'I had not known 'ſin, but by the law: for I had not known luſt except 'the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.' Wherefore by no means neglect, in this review, to go through the ten commandments; and pauſe upon every one of them, conſidering the duties therein required, and wherein you have been guilty by omiſſion of them; and the ſins forbidden therein, and wherein you have been guilty, by commiſſion of them; guilty in both kinds, in thought, word, and deed. This would be a proper means to ſhew you the multitude of your tranſgreſſions.

But to proceed in both the one and the other order jointly, namely, by reviewing each period of your life ſeparately, in the order of the ten commandments, would, through the divine bleſſing, be of the moſt ſingular uſe for reaching the moſt humbling view of your whole life.

Thus far of the ſecond thing ſuggeſted for your help, to think of your ſins, in order to a humbling view of your caſe. And for your farther help therein,

3. Be ſure that in a ſpecial manner you ſet before your eyes the ſignal miſcarriages of your life, thoſe ſins that have wounded your conſcience deepeſt. I doubt there are but few, if any, of a tender conſcience, who ſee not ſome ſuch blots in their eſcutcheon; ſome remarkable treſpaſſes in heart or life, that are ready to gall them on every remembrance; though perhaps known unto none but God and themſelves. Good Eli had ſuch a blot on him, pointed out to him under the name of The iniquity which he knoweth, 1 Sam. iii. 13. And the beſt of the ſaints mentioned in ſcripture, had ſomething of that nature to humble them. Now, as ever you would be duly humbled in your exerciſe of perſonal faſting, let theſe, in your review of your ſins, be brought forth by head-mark, and ſet before you in the ſight of a holy God: and that, although they be freely pardoned unto you long ago: for the view of theſe is moſt likely to affect you; and pardoned ſins, inaſmuch as they are pardoned, are humbling in the remembrance of them, Luke vii. 37. 38. 47. as Paul's pardoned blaſphemy and perſecution were to him, 1 Tim. i. 13.

4. In thinking on your ſins, take along with you the aggravations of them. Repreſent to yourſelf the infinite majeſty of God, againſt whom you have ſinned; and as ever you would be duly humbled, entertain high and elevated thoughts of the Lord our Lawgiver. This will make you to ſay with David, Pſalm li. 4. ‘Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight’; underſtanding by your own experience what he meant thereby. In your meditation, ſet God’s way of dealing with you, all along from your very birth, over againſt your way of dealing with him; ſo ſhall conviction be brought home on your conſcience, with a peculiar edge; while, conſidering the mercies he hath heaped on you, the light and warnings he hath afforded you, your guilt will appear of a deepeſt dye.

5. Having thus ſeen your extreme ſinfulneſs, conſider in the next place the juſt demerit of your ſin, even God’s wrath and curſe, both in this life, and that which is to come. ‘For becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience,’ Eph. v. 6. The law is a looking glaſs for ſinners, not only in its commands, but alſo in its threatenings and curſe, ſhewing unto all their curſed ſtate by nature; to unbelievers, what they are actually lying under for their ſins; and to believers, what theirs do deſerve. And therefore, after you have, as before directed, gone through all the ten commandments, for your conviction and humiliation; do you, for your further humiliation, ſet your eyes upon the threatnings and curſe of that holy law as a covenant of works; and ſee therein your juſt deſerving, ſo as that God may be juſtified when he ſpeaketh againſt you, and clear when he judgeth, Pſalm li. 4. And think with thyſelf, how thou ſhouldſt, without peradventure, eternally periſh under his wrath, if he ſhould proceed againſt thee according to his law and juſtice; as he hath actually proceeded againſt many, for thoſe very ſins wherewith thou art chargeable.

6. In this review of your ſins, endeavour all along that your eye may affect your heart. In vain will you rake into that dunghill, if ſuitable affections or emotions of heart be not thereby excited in you. And theſe ſuitable affections are, (1.) Hatred, deteſtation, and abhorrence of ſin, Pſal. cxix. 128. Rom. xii. 9. Wherefore pull the maſk from off it, remove the paint and varniſh that has been laid over it, that you may ſee it in its native deformity, and look on it untill your ſtomach turn on the ſometimes ſweet morſel. (2.) Grief and ſorrow of heart for it, Pſal. xxxviii. 18. Let your heart be rent, in conſideration of the offence thereby given to a gracious God, its contrariety to his holy nature and will, its diſhonouring of his Son who gave himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin, and grieving of his Spirit who ſanctifies us. (3.) Holy ſhame upon the account of it, Jer. xxxi. 19. Behold it is a filthy thing, the very reverſe of the beauty of holineſs, the holineſs of God expreſſed in his law; and be confounded at the ſight. Behold it as a baſe requital of divine favours, and bluſh before him. (4.) Self-loathing, Ezek. xxxvi. 31. Purſue the thought of the filthineſs of your ſin, till you lothe yourſelf in your own ſight, as rendered unclean all over, by abominations of heart and life. (5.) A longing to be rid of ſin, the guilt, defilement, prevailing, and indwelling of it. Dwell on the thought of your ſinfulneſs, till your heart, pained and burdened therewith, grone out longing deſires of deliverance, as Rom. vii. 24. ‘O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!’ Who will draw this dagger out of my bowels! this ſting out of my conſcience! this poiſon out of my fleſh! Who will take this load off my back!

All this would be no more than neceſſary humiliation. For it will be the lot of every ſinner, either in time or in eternity, to be like the fiſh that is boiled in the water which it ſometime a day ſwimmed in. But ‘bleſſed are ye that weep now,’ Luke vi. 21. ‘Wo unto you that laugh now! for ye ſhall mourn and weep,’ verſe 25.

Laſtly, It will be very neceſſary, that the whole of this work be mixed with devout ejaculations. For be ſure Satan will be at your right hand, to reſiſt you, and to mar your work: your heart will be ready to miſgive you in it, to ſtop, and turn aſide: therefore preſs forward in it, lifting your eyes, every now and then, to the Lord for help.

With this review of your own ſins, let a view of the public ſins of the church and land wherein you live, be joined; uſing the ſame helps, as in your own particular caſe, which need not be here repeated.

And in relation to this, I ſubjoin only three advices.

1. Begin always with your own ſins; even though the principal cauſe of your faſt be the ſtate of the church or land. This has been the manner of the ſaints, Iſa. vi. 5. ‘Then ſaid I, wo is me, for I am undone, becauſe that I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midſt of a people of unclean lips.’ Dan. ix. 20. ‘And whilſt I was ſpeaking and praying, and confeſſing my ſin, and the ſin of my people Iſrael.’ The reaſon hereof is manifeſt: for one will never be duly humbled for the ſins of others, who is not in the firſt place ſo humbled for his own.

2. Repreſent public ſins to yourſelf, under ſuch notions as may tend to excite ſuitable affections and emotions of heart in you. Look on them as they are diſhonouring to our gracious God, wounding or ruining to the ſouls of men, diſgraceful to our holy Chriſtian profeſſion, and provoking God to wrath againſt the land. Hate and lothe them, be aſhamed of them, and mourn over them, on theſe accounts; and long for the day of purging them away.

3. See your own ſinful part in them, by all means. Bring them home to your own conſcience, before the Lord: ſearch out, and ſee what of the guilt thereof you are, either directly or indirectly, chargeable with in his ſight; and be deeply humbled for the ſame.

Thus far of the review of ſin.

DIRECT. VII.

After this review of your ſins made, go unto God by prayer, and make confeſſion of them. And here, confeſſion is to be the chief part of your prayer; yea, and if the whole of it almoſt be confeſſion, it will not be amiſs. Certainly extraordinary confeſſion of ſin, is a great part of the work of a religious faſt, Neh. ix. 3. Dan. ix. 20. And the ſolemn review, in which one’s ſins are ſo particularly ſearched out, natively iſſues therein.

For the more profitable management of this confeſſion of ſin, the following advices are offered.

1. Take no thought of your voice, farther than to keep it from being unſeaſonably high. For the voice in itſelf, is nothing before the heart-ſearching God, who regards not the ſound of mens throats, but of their heart and affections. ‘The true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and in truth; for the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him,’ John iv. 23. But ſometimes there is a deceit in the voice, to the beguiling of the ſoul; as it fared with Ezekiel’s hearers, with the mouth ſhewing much love, Ezek. xxxiii. 31. And one by an indiſcreet management of it, may be fruitleſsly weakened, and diſfitted for continuing at the work, ſo as need may require. The affections are the beſt rulers of the voice.

2. Endeavour to bring along into your confeſſion, and carry along, thoſe affections and emotions of heart, of which before: namely, hatred and deteſtation of ſin, godly ſorrow, holy ſhame, ſelf-loathing, and longing to be rid of ſin, Pſalm xxxviii. 18. ‘I will declare mine iniquity; I will be ſorry for my ſin.’ When the leper was to cry, Unclean, unclean, his cloaths were to be rent, his head bare, and there was to be a covering upon his upper lip, Lev. xiii. 45. A confeſſing tongue requires a broken heart, a ſpirit really weighted with a ſenſe of ſin. And the marble that ſweats in foul weather, but yet is neither a whit the ſofter, ſhall be an emblem of one confeſſing his ſin with a whole heart.

Yet let none ſenſible of the hardneſs of their heart, be thereby made to ſtand aloof from confeſſion, ſaying, ‘ Who will roll away the ſtone!’ Let them go forward, and eſſay it: let them confeſs their hardneſs of heart, and unfitneſs to make confeſſion; for ſo they may find the ſtone rolled away to their hand.

3. Be as full as you can in your confeſſion; laying all your ſpiritual ſores before the Lord, ſo far as you know them. One wound concealed from the phyſician, may prove fatal to the patient: and one ſin induſtriouſly paſſed over in confeſſion, may prove fatal to the ſinner; for ‘ he that covereth his ſins, ſhall not proſper,’ Prov. xxviii. 13. David was aware of this, Pſal. xxxii. 5. ‘ I acknowledged my ſin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid.’ It fared ill with Ananias and Sapphira, for that in another caſe, they lied unto God, and kept back a part, Acts v. And he is no true penitent, that deſires to hide any ſweet morſel under his tongue, and is not willing to take ſhame to himſelf for every known ſin.

4. Be very particular in your confeſſion, opening out your ſpiritual ſores before the Lord, Pſal. li. 4. ‘ I have ‘ done this evil in thy ſight.’ Joſh. vii. 20. ‘ I have ſin‘ ned,—and thus and thus have I done.” To confeſs the ſeveral kinds of your ſin in general, without deſcending to particulars, is too ſuperficial work on ſuch an occaſion. The particular abominations of your heart and life, are raiſed up in meditation, to be laid before the Lord in humble confeſſion. I ſuppoſe you to be at this work in a ſecret place, where you may freely utter before him, what it would not be proper you ſhould ſay in the hearing of others. No doubt, a great deal of freedom may be uſed in ſecret prayer, in narrating of thoughts and actions, with the deſignation of time, place, and perſons, ſo as may tend to one's deeper humiliation: which would not be to edification, in ſocial prayer.

Now, in order to your being the more full and particular in your confeſſion, I would recommend the ſame method and order to be obſerved therein, as in the review of your ſins. I believe, that, ſo doing, you will find the advantage of it. Go orderly through the ſeveral periods of your life, and through all the ten commandments, making your confeſſion; where alſo you may take in the confeſſion of public ſins, always ſo as may beſt tend to the further humiliation of yourſelf In a ſpecial manner, be very particular as to the ſignal miſcarriages of your life: and aggravate your guilt, acknowledging the aggravating circumſtances thereof. And unto the confeſſion of your known ſins, againſt all the ten commandments, add a humble acknowledgment of a large void and blank to be left for your unknown ſins againſt every one of them; which you can by no means fill up; but the all-knowing God can: for ‘ who can un‘ derſtand his errors?’ Pſal. xix. 12. And, conſidering the commands of the perfect law, as binding you to embrace the goſpel, confeſs your atrocious guilt in ſinning againſt the remedy of ſin, therein revealed, offered, and exhibited unto you.

5. It will be profitable, that all along through your confeſſion you approve of the law, as holy, juſt, and good, Rom. vii. 12. For as black doth beſt appear, when ſet by white; ſo ſin appears moſt clearly in its native hue, exceeding ſinful, when ſet over againſt the pure, holy, juſt, and good commandment. As for example, when you are to confeſs your ſins againſt the firſt commandment, you may ſay to this purpoſe, “ Lord, thou “ commandeſt me, ſaying, Thou ſhalt have no other “ gods before me. I acknowledge, this thy command “ is moſt juſt and reaſonable in itſelf, and moſt good “ for me. It was thou alone who made me, thou alone “ haſt preſerved me.—I never needed another god be“ ſides thee, and none but thou could ever do the part “ of a god to me.——Thou didſt magnify thy rich “ grace, in condeſcending to be in Chriſt a God to me “ a moſt wretched creature. Nevertheleſs, over the “ belly of this law of love, my duty, and my intereſt, “ I have had many other gods before thee: I have ſet “ up my curſed ſelf in thy room and ſtead,—made “ the vain world my god,—&c.” And ſo in other caſes.

6. Laſtly, Let your confeſſion be cloſed with ſelf-condemning, ſelf emptying, and a look of faith.

1ſt, Condemn yourſelf, as did the returning prodigal, Luke xv. 18. ‘ Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, ‘ and before thee.’ Ver. 19. ‘ And am no more wor‘ thy to be called thy ſon.’ As you looked to the commandments before, and confeſſed your ſin; ſo look now to the threatenings and curſe of the law, and confeſs your juſt deſerving. Read there your deſerved doom, and paſs ſentence againſt yourſelf. Nothing is more natural, than that now you call yourſelf fool and beaſt; for that you have followed the wild fire of your corrupt inclinations, to the miring of yourſelf thus in ſin and guilt; and have broken over the hedge, where now you find the ſerpent biting you. And here,

(1.) Confeſs you deſerve no good, but all evil, in time. If the cauſe of your faſt be ſome evil you are at preſent ſmarting under, acknowledge God to be juſt, very juſt in it. If it is ſome ſtroke threatened, and hanging over your head, confeſs that you well deſerve it ſhould fall on you in its full weight. If it is light that you want, confeſs you deſerve to be left in darkneſs: or whatever be the mercy you come to make ſupplication for, acknowledge from the heart, that you have forfeited it. Surely, in caſe your uncircumciſed heart be humbled, you will accept of the puniſhment of your iniquity, Lev. xxvi. 41. And then, if your ſin has found you out, you will own the procedure againſt you to be righteous and holy; if your broken bones ſmart, you will ſay it is juſt: if the Lord has turned his former ſmiles into frowns, mixed your comforts with gall and wormwood, ſouring them ſo as to ſet your teeth on edge, blaſted your enjoyments, and ſqueezed the ſap out of them, you will, after confeſſion of ſin, ſay from your very heart, ‘ My folly makes it ſo.’

(2.) Confeſs you deſerve eternally to periſh, and that it is of the Lord's mercies you are not conſumed, Lam. iii. 22.; that God might in juſtice wrap you up in the filthy garments of your ſin, and caſt you out of his ſight, into the lake burning with fire and brimſtone, as the fitteſt place for ſuch a ſinful lump. Acknowledge yourſelf to be, in yourſelf, a wretched creature, juſtly under the curſe and condemnatory ſentence of the law, having nothing to ſay for yourſelf, at the bar of juſtice, why it may not be fully executed againſt you, a ſelf-condemned, as well as a law-condemned ſinner, Pſal. li. 4. Whatever your ſtate be in the ſight of God, it is altogether juſt, that your libel againſt yourſelf be not concluded without this.

2dly, Be emptied of yourſelf, in a humble and hearty acknowledgment of utter inability to help yourſelf. Having taken a view of the load of ſin lying upon you, and laid before the Lord the particulars of your burden, with the ſinking weight thereof, acknowledge that it is quite beyond your power to move it from off you. Say from the heart, “ Lord, here is a load of guilt lying “ upon me, which by no doing or ſuffering of mine can “ can be moved: here is a mighty power of ſin I am “ no more able to grapple with, than a little child with “ a giant: a dead weight I can no more remove, than “ I can remove a mountain. If thou leave me under “ it, as juſtly thou mayeſt, I periſh.’

This is true humiliation, where the poor broken ſinner lies at the Lord's feet, ſenſible that he is bound with ten thouſand cords of guilt, but unable to looſe the weakeſt of them; that his ſoul is preyed upon, and like to be devoured, by a ſwarm of living luſts, yet unable to kill or ſhake off any of them. If we are duly humbled, our humiliation will be carried thus far; for it is the ruin of many, that they ſee not the abſolute need of the blood of Chriſt, for removing of their guilt; and far leſs, the abſolute need of his Spirit, for breaking of the power of ſin in them.

Laſtly, Let there be a look of faith out of the low dungeon. Look unto God in Chriſt, and ſay, God be merciful to me a ſinner, Luke xviii. 13. Turn thou to me, and I ſhall be turned, Jer. xxxi. 18. Tell him, that, ſince according to his holy goſpel, there is yet hope in Iſrael concerning this thing, you muſt and will take the benefit of the goſpel-proclamation of grace and mercy, and lay hold on the horns of the altar; and therefore, tho' your weight be heavier than mountains of braſs, you do, with humble confidence, at the Father's bidding, lay it wholly over on the blood of his Son, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, truſting thereon allenarly for remiſſion of ſin, ſanctification, and complete ſalvation.

Now, as to the two directions laſt mentioned, I mean not, that what is propoſed in either of them, muſt needs be done all at once, without intermiſſion. You may uſe them, as you are beſt able to reach them. It is not very likely, that thoſe who ſpent one fourth part of the day in confeſſing and worſhipping, Neh. ix. 3. did make but one confeſſion continued without intermiſſion. So you may make ſuch intermiſſion in in either or both of them, as you find neceſſary. Chriſtian prudence muſt direct in the matter, to uſe the means, ſo as may beſt conduce to the end.

DIRECT. VIII.

After confeſſion of ſin, apply yourſelf to the duty of perſonal covenanting, explicit entering into, or renewing covenant with God, by taking hold of God's covenant of grace, in expreſs words. That this is a neceſſary part of the work of a perſonal faſt, may be gathered from Jer. l. 4. and Neh. ix. 38. both cited before. And it is clear from the nature of the thing; for to what purpoſe ſhall men lay open their wounds before the Phyſician of ſouls, if they mind not to put themſelves in his hand for cure, in the way of the covenant; or how can they pretend to mourn for ſin, if they are not to enter on the way of reformation? A time of perſonal faſting is a time for the runaway to return to his duty, and to ſet matters right again, that were put wrong by turning aſide from God and his way. And one unwilling to enter into covenant with God, cannot be ſincere in his confeſſion of ſin and mourning over it, whatever he may pretend.

For the right managing of this duty of perſonal covenanting, theſe three following advices are offered.

1. See that you underſtand, and rightly take up the covenant, the covenant of grace, together with the way and manner of a ſinner's perſonal entering into it, and being inſtated in it unto ſalvation; the which are to be learned from the holy ſcripture alone, as being revealed in it only. Miſtakes and miſapprehenſions of theſe things may be of very bad conſequence in the practice of this duty; for which cauſe men ought earneſtly to pray, that God would, by his own word and Spirit, ſhew them his covenant, according to the promiſe, Pſal. xxv. 14.

According to the ſcripture, the covenant, namely the covenant of grace for life and ſalvation, is not left unto you to make, in whole or in part, by propoſing and condeſcending on terms thereof, as a party-contractor; it is made already, completely made and concluded in all the articles thereof, whether conditionary or promiſſory, and that between God the party contractor on Heaven's ſide, and Chriſt as Mediator and ſecond Adam, the party contractor on loſt man's ſide. And it is regiſtered in the ſacred records, the holy ſcripture. And you are invited unto the fellowſhip of it, Pſal. lxxxix. 3. 'I have made a covenant with my choſen.——David 'my ſervant' 1 Cor. xv. 45. 'The laſt Adam,' 1 John i. 3. 'That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we 'unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us; 'and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with 'his Son Jeſus Chriſt.'

The condition of it is, Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs in the name of his Spiritual ſeed, Matth. iii. 15. Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs. This righteouſneſs was ſtated from the broken covenant of works; and that in three things, namely, perfect holineſs of nature, righteouſneſs of life, and ſatisfaction for ſin; all which Chriſt did fulfil, in his being born perfectly holy, living perfectly righteous, and making compleat ſatisfaction by his death and ſufferings. And thus the condition of the covenant, on which is founded the right and claim to the promiſes of it, is fulfilled already to your hand.

The promiſe of it, reſpecting loſt ſinners, is the promiſe of eternal life in its full latitude, comprehending all things neceſſary to make a ſinner holy and happy: that God in Chriſt will be their God, and they ſhall be his people, Tit. i. 2. 'In hope of eternal life, which 'God that cannot lie, promiſed before the world began.' Heb. viii. 10. 'This is the covenant;—I will be to 'them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people.' And it is begun to be fulfilled to all who have taken hold of the covenant; and is ready to be fulfilled unto all, who yet ſhall take hold thereof.

This covenant is the plan laid by infinite wiſdom for the ſalvation of loſt ſinners; upon which they may ſafely venture themſelves, for time and eternity, as upon a bottom infallibly ſure, Iſa. lv. 3. 'I will make an ever'laſting covenant with you,' (Heb. I will cut to you an everlaſting covenant) 'even the ſure mercies of David,' 1 Cor. i. 23. 24. 'We preach Chriſt,—Chriſt the 'power of God, and the wiſdom of God.' It is heaven's device for repairing the loſs we ſuſtained by Adam's fall, whereby we become unholy and miſerable, lying in ignorance which we could not cure, under guilt and the curſe which we could not remove, and under bondage to ſin and Satan which we could not break, ver. 30. 'But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of 'God is made unto us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and 'ſanctification, and redemption.'

The great deſign of it, is to exalt the free grace of God, in the ſalvation of ſinners; to ſhew therein the exceeding riches of his grace to them, in Chriſt. It is a plan laid for cutting off all ground of boaſting from the creature; to make Chriſt all, and the creature nothing in its own ſalvation, as being indebted to free grace for the whole thereof, Eph. i. 6. 'To the praiſe of the 'glory of his grace.' Chap. ii. 7. 'That he might 'ſhew the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kind'neſs towards us through Chriſt Jeſus.' Ver. 9. 'Not 'of works leſt any man ſhould boaſt.' It is much like unto a contract of marriage, deviſed and drawn by a wealthy and wiſe phyſician, of his own proper motion alone, between himſelf and a poor woman drowned in debt, weak and witleſs, and withal over-run with lothſome ſores, rendering her incapable to do any thing, whether for her own relief, or for his ſervice; and this upon a deſign to have her wholly indebted to him for her relief, the payment of her debt, the managing of her perſon, and her recovery for action and buſineſs.

This covenant is offered and exhibited to you in the goſpel, as really as that contract drawn and ſigned by the phyſician, would be offered and exhibited to the woman, if he ſhould come and preſent it to her, for her acceptance: Rom. x. 6. 'Say not in thine heart, Who 'ſhall aſcend into heaven (that is, to bring Chriſt down 'from above,') Verſ. 7. 'Or, Who ſhall deſcend in'to the deep? (that is, to bring up Chriſt again from 'the dead.') Verſ. 8. 'But what ſaith it? The word 'is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: 'that is the word of faith which we preach.' So that the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, to wit, the holineſs of nature wherewith he was born, and which he retained unſpotted till death, the righteouſneſs of his life, and his ſatisfaction made by his ſufferings, is in that word freely offered and exhibited to you, as the fulfilled condition of the covenant, being therein revealed unto faith, Rom. i.

17. Gr. as alſo, the promiſe of eternal life, as the promiſe of the covenant to be fulfilled, being therein left you. Heb. iv. 1.

Hence it appears that the duty of perſonal covenanting is much miſtaken and miſmanaged, where the party apprehending that God, in the word, declares himſelf willing to be his God, upon certain terms to be by him performed, different from accepting God's full and free covenant of promiſe, does accordingly make a covenant with God, ſolemnly taking him for his God upon theſe terms; promiſing and vowing, that if God will be his God, pardon his ſins, be at peace with him, and ſave his ſoul, he will for his part, be one of his people, and faithfully ſerve him all the days of his life, watching againſt all known ſin, and performing every known duty. This is juſt as if the woman, in the caſe before put, ſhould tell him who offers her the contract, that ſhe is content to take him for her huſband, upon certain terms; particularly, that if he will be her huſband, and do the duty of a huſband to her, ſhe will, for her part, be a faithful wife to him, all the days of her life, doing all that ſhe is able to do for paying off her debt, managing herſelf and his houſhold to the beſt of her ſkill, and taking all pains on her ſores, to make her lovely in his eyes: the which being quite contrary to the deſign and end of that unuſual kind of contract, which is, to have the wife wholly indebted to the huſband for all, doth alter the nature of the propoſal, and would quite mar the ſurpriſing match, which was in a fair way to be carried on.

But likeas, in that caſe, nothing remains for the woman to do, to entitle her to the benefit of the contract, but believing it to be a real and ſerious, not a ludicrous deed, to ſign her acceptance: which ſigned with the hand is neceſſary, becauſe her belief of the reality of the offered contract, and truſting to it accordingly, being inward acts of the ſoul, cannot be known among men, but by a proper external ſign; even ſo all that remains for you, to inſtate you ſavingly in God's covenant of grace, offered and exhibited to you in the goſpel, is to take hold of it, Iſa. lvi. 4.

And to the end that, in your aiming to take hold of the covenant, you may not be at a loſs, fearing that you may miſs any part or parts thereof, lying ſcattered through the bleſſed Bible; know, that Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, head of the covenant, is by his Father given for a covenant to you, Iſa. xlix. 8. So that you have the whole covenant in him; and you take hold of it, by taking hold of him offered and exhibited to you in the free promiſe of the goſpel.

And this is done by faith, or believing on his name, according to John i. 12. ‘As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name.’ Wherefore, by believing on the name of Chriſt, we take hold of the covenant, and are inſtated in it unto ſalvation. And God hath made believing to be the means of inſtating ſinners perſonally and ſavingly in the covenant, in conſonancy with the great deſign and end thereof, declared in the word, and of which before: Rom. iv. 16. ‘Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace.’ chap. iii. 27. ‘Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay, but by the law of faith.’

Now, to believe on the name of Chriſt, is to believe or credit the free promiſe of the goſpel with application to yourſelf, and accordingly to truſt on him as the Saviour of the world, and your Saviour, in whom God will be your God, and you ſhall be one of his people, unto your ſalvation from ſin and from wrath: Mark i. 15. ‘Believe the goſpel.’ Gal. iii. 2. ‘The hearing of faith.’ 1 Theſſ. i. 5. ‘Our goſpel came not unto you in word only, but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance.’ 1 Cor. ii. 4. ‘In demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power:’ Ver. 5. ‘That your faith ſhould ſtand—in the power of God.’ And Acts xvi 31. ‘Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved.’ Pſal. xxxvii. 40. ‘He ſhall ſave them, becauſe they truſt in him.’ And ii. 12. ‘Bleſſed are they that put their truſt in him.’ Acts xv. 11. ‘We believe, that, through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved.’ This believing, or crediting the word, and truſting on the perſon of Chriſt, is that which of all things is fartheſt removed from the nature of a work, according to the ſcripture-uſe of that word; and therefore is the moſt agreeable means of ſaving entrance into that covenant, which is of faith, that it might be by grace: not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt.

A ſinner, being by this believing on Chriſt united to him as the head of the covenant, is thereby perſonally entered into the covenant; ſo as, in his right, to have a ſaving intereſt in the condition, promiſe and privileges thereof, unto his eternal ſalvation: even as becoming, through natural generation, children of Adam the head of the covenant of works, we are perſonally entered into that covenant; ſo as to be involved in the guilt of the breach of it, and laid under the curſe thereof: Rom. v. 19. ‘For as by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners: ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous.’ John x. 9. ‘I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaved.’ Eph. iii. 17. ‘That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith.’

Upon this believing on the name of Chriſt, crediting and truſting in manner ſaid before, do neceſſarily follow, an abſolute conſent to take him for our Huſband, Head, and Lord, and God in him for our God; an unconditional reſignation of ourſelves unto him, ſoul and body, to be his only, wholly, and for ever: with an illimited renounciation of all other for him; even as, in the caſe before put, upon the woman's believing the reality of the offer of the contract of marriage between the phyſician and her, and accordingly, that he will indeed be her huſband, follows her conſenting to take him for her huſband, head, and lord, giving up herſelf unto him, and renouncing all other for him, abſolutely, unconditionally, without limitation or reſervation; the which ſhe can never do, till once ſhe believe that. And thus to the word of grace, the covenant offered and exhibited in the goſpel, ‘I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people,’ the believing ſoul anſwereth, as an echo, ‘My beloved is mine, and I am his,’ Cant. ii. 16.

2. Having underſtood the covenant aright, together with the way and manner of being perſonally and ſavingly entered into it, examine yourſelf anent it impartially, as ever you would make ſure work in this weighty matter. Inquire into your ſenſe of the need of the covenant, your belief of it, and the diſpoſition of your heart towards it. And upon theſe heads, poſe yourſelf with theſe or the like queſtions.

“In the firſt place, O my ſoul, do I verily believe, that I was loſt, ruined, and undone in Adam, by his breaking of the covenant of works; and that I have ruined myſelf more and more, by my actual tranſgreſſions? Do I believe, that I am by nature wholly corrupt and ſinful, averſe to good, prone to evil, and juſtly laid under the curſe, binding me over to the revenging wrath of God for time and eternity? Am I convinced, that I am utterly unable to help myſelf, in whole or in part, out of this guilt of ſin and miſery into which I am plunged; and that I muſt needs periſh under the guilt, dominion, and pollution of my ſin without being juſtified or ſanctified, for ever, if I be not relieved by heaven's own hand?

“Next, O my ſoul, do I believe, that there is a covenant of grace, for the relief of loſt ſinners, eſtabliſhed between God the Father, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, as ſecond Adam, wherein, upon condition of Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs, as a public perſon, is promiſed eternal life to them, that God in Chriſt will be their God, and they ſhall be his people? Do I believe that this is the plan and device of heaven, for life and ſalvation to loſt ſinners, for making of them holy, and for making of them happy ? Do I believe, that Jeſus Chriſt hath by his holy birth, righteous life, ſatisfactory death and ſufferings, performed that condition of the covenant, and thereby purchaſed and ſecured the benefit therein promiſed, for poor ſinners ? Then, do I indeed believe, that this covenant already fulfilled in its condition, and certainly to be fulfilled in its promiſe, is, in Chriſt crucified, really offered and exhibited to me in the goſpel ; and that I am called to the fellowſhip of it in him ? And then, do I verily believe on the name of Chriſt crucified, offered and exhibited to me, as the great High Prieſt, who, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, hath made the atonement, paid the ranſom, and brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs for poor ſinners ? That is to ſay, (1.) Can I credit his word of grace to me, that he with his righteouſneſs will be mine, and in him, God will be my God, and I ſhall be one of his people ? (2.) And can I, as on a ſafe bottom, truſt on him as my Saviour, that in him it ſhall be ſo unto me, to my eternal life and ſalvation, to the making of me holy and happy ?

“ Finally, O my ſoul, how do I like the covenant ? Am I pleaſed with the frame of it, whereby Chriſt was from eternity appointed, not only the Prieſt of the covenant, to fulfill the condition of it, but alſo the Prophet and the King thereof, to adminiſter it ? And can I find in my heart to acquieſce in that device for ſalvation, as all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, for making me holy and happy ? Am I content to take Chriſt the Son of God, for my only Prieſt, Surety, Interceſſor, and Redeemer ; and in him, the Father for my Father, and the Holy Ghoſt for my Sanctifier ; God in Chriſt for my God ? Am I willing wholly to reſign myſelf, ſoul and body, to him, to be ſaved by his blood alone, renouncing all confidence in my own righteouſneſs, doings, and ſufferings ? Am I content to take him for my Head and Huſband ? Particularly, am I content to take him for my alone Prophet, Oracle, and Guide ; to reſign and give up myſelf wholly to him, to be taught, guided, and directed in all things, by his word and Spirit ; renouncing mine own wiſdom, and the wiſdom of this world ? Am I content to take him for my alone King and Lord ; to reſign myſelf wholly, ſoul and body, unto him, to be reſcued by his power from ſin, death, and the devil, and this preſent evil world, for to ſerve him for ever, and to be ruled by the will of his command, as to my duty, and the will of his providence, as to my lot ? And am I heartily content to part with and renounce every known ſin, and particularly that which moſt eaſily beſets me ; together with my own fooliſh will, and all other lords beſides him ; without reſervation, and without exception againſt his croſs ? And am I really, as in his ſight, willing to have diſcovered unto me, and upon diſcovery to part with every ſin in me, that I know not ?”

Now, howbeit all doubting as to ſuch of theſe points as are points of faith, and every the leaſt degree of averſion to the conſenting, reſignation, and renunciation, is ſin before the Lord, and needs to be purged away by the Redeemer's blood ; yet they ought not to ſtop your proceedings, unleſs they be predominant over your belief and willingneſs in the matter : Mark ix. 24. Lord, I believe : help thou mine unbelief. Gal v. 17. The fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit ;—ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would, namely, in that perfection that ye fain would do them. But indeed, if they be predominant, keeping your mind and heart quite unſettled, and wavering like a wave of the ſea, that hath nothing to fix it ; one cannot adviſe proceeding in that caſe ; for that would be to lie unto the Lord, with a witneſs ; James i. 6. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the ſea, driven with the wind and toſſed. Verſe 7. For let not that man think that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord. Howbeit, a ſincere belief and willingneſs in theſe points, may indeed waver like a ſhip at anchor, which is ſtill held faſt in the place, notwithſtanding of all its wavering therein. And one may take hold of God's covenant of grace, unto ſalvation, even with a trembling hand.

3. Laſtly, Having in your ſelf-examination ſatisfied your conſcience as to theſe points, go unto God by prayer, and therein ſolemnly and in expreſs words, take hold of the covenant. The which may be done in words to this purpoſe.

“ O Lord, the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, I confeſs I am by nature a loſt ſinner wholly corrupted, and laid under the curſe, in Adam, thro' the breach of the covenant of works ; and have ruined myſelf more and more by my actual tranſgreſſions innumerable. I am convinced, and do acknowledge, that I am utterly unable to help myſelf, in whole or in part, out of this gulf of ſin and miſery, into which I am plunged ; and that it is beyond the reach of the whole creation to help me out of it : ſo that I muſt inevitably periſh for ever, if thine own ſtrong hand do not make help to me.

“ But foraſmuch as there is a covenant of grace for life and ſalvation to loſt ſinners, eſtabliſhed between Thee and thine own Son, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as ſecond Adam ; wherein, upon condition of his fulfilling all righteouſneſs, which is now performed in his having been born perfectly holy, lived altogether righteouſly, and made perfect ſatisfaction to juſtice by his death and ſufferings, thou haſt promiſed, that thou wilt be their God, and they ſhall be thy people, to the making of them holy and happy for ever : and that this covenant is, in Chriſt the head thereof, offered and exhibited to me in thy goſpel : and thou calleſt me into the fellowſhip of it in him : Therefore, upon the warrant of, and in obedience to thy command and call, I, a poor periſhing ſinner, do take hold of that covenant, for life and ſalvation to me ; believing on the name of Chriſt crucified, the head thereof, offered and exhibited to me, as the great High Prieſt, who, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, hath made atonement, paid the ranſom, and brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs for poor ſinners. I credit his word of grace to me, and accordingly truſt on him, that he with his righteouſneſs will be mine, and that in and through him, God will be my God, and I ſhall be one of his people, to the making of me holy and happy for ever.

“ O my God, I do by thy grace acquieſce in that covenant, as all my ſalvation and all my deſire. With my whole heart and ſoul the Son incarnate is my only Prieſt, my Surety, my Interceſſor, and my Redeemer ; and, in him, the Father my Father, the Holy Ghoſt my Sanctifier ; God in Chriſt my God. I reſign myſelf, ſoul and body, to him, to be ſaved by his blood alone ; renouncing all confidence in mine own righteouſneſs, doings, and ſufferings. With my whole heart and ſoul, he is my Head and Huſband. And I am his only, wholly, and forever ; to live by him, to him, and for him. I take him for my alone Prophet, Oracle, and Guide ; give up myſelf wholly to him, to be taught, guided, and directed in all things, by his word and Spirit ; and renounce mine own wiſdom, and the wiſdom of this world. He is, with my heart's conſent, my alone King and Lord. And I reſign myſelf wholly, ſoul and body, unto him, to be reſcued by the ſtrength of his mighty hand, from ſin, death, and the devil, and this preſent evil world, for to ſerve him for ever, and to be ruled by the will of his command, as to my duty, and the will of his providence, as to my lot. I am with my whole heart content (Lord, thou knoweſt) to part with, and do renounce every known ſin, luſt, or idol, and particularly, my——the ſin which moſt eaſily beſets me ; together with my own fooliſh

“ will, and all other lords beſides him; without reſervation, and without exception againſt his croſs: proteſting in thy ſight, O Lord, that I am, through grace, willing to have diſcovered unto me, and upon diſcovery, to part with every ſin in me that I know not: and that the doubtings and averſeneſs of heart mixed with this my accepting of thy covenant, are what I allow not; and that, notwithſtanding thereof, I look to be accepted of thee herein, in the beloved, thine only Son and my Saviour, purging away theſe, with all my other ſins, by his precious blood.

“ Let it be recorded in heaven, O Lord, and let ——— and whatever is here preſent, bear witneſs, that I, tho' moſt unworthy, have this day here taken hold of, and come into thy covenant of grace, offered and exhibited to me in thy goſpel; and that thou art my God in the tenor of that covenant, and I am one of thy people, from henceforth and for ever.”

DIRECT. IX.

After covenanting with God, ſet yourſelf to ply the throne of grace by prayer and ſupplication, with reference to what is the particular cauſe or cauſes of your faſt. This is ſurely the proper order: for then is one in beſt caſe to make ſpecial requeſts unto the Lord, when, by application of the blood of Chriſt, in taking hold of the covenant, his conſcience is purged; whereas if one falls to that work before this, he cannot have the confidence towards God neceſſary in this caſe, 1 John iii. 20. 21.

And for the right managing hereof, the following advices are offered.

1. As it is fit you ſhould, the night before, condeſcend in your own mind, on the cauſes of your faſt; ſo now again you ſhould review them, partly, that the things which you are to lay before the Lord in prayer and ſupplication, may be ready before you; and partly that you may be duly affected therewith.

2. Then go to prayer, and preſent your petitions anent them, to your covenanted God. And pray again and again on theſe heads, as you ſhall find your caſe to require; for the time is ſet apart for that end, that you may have opportunity to wreſtle with God, in prayer and ſupplication thereanent.

3. In theſe prayers, let there be a holy mixture of humility ſuitable to our unworthineſs, fervency ſuitable to our preſſing needs, and of confidence in God ſuitable to the acceſs unto him allowed us by the covenant: the which are the ſpecial ingredients in prevailing prayer.

1ſt, In all your addreſſes to the throne of grace, continue a humble ſupplicant, not forgetting, but maintaining a due ſenſe of your ſinfulneſs, vileneſs, and unworthineſs of the mercies you make ſuit for. Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof, ſaith the Centurion, Matth. viii. 8. I am not worthy of the leaſt of all thy mercies, ſaith Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 10. Due humility will oblige you to look on yourſelf as abſolutely unworthy of ſpiritual mercies, though in the mean time, you ſee an abſolute need of them: it will keep you from being peremptory in the matter of temporal mercies, and diſpoſe you to a holy ſubmiſſion unto the will of God therein: and it will engage you in matters of light, to lay yourſelf fairly open to the divine determination.

If, in this laſt caſe, your own inclination do ſway you to any one ſide; yet be ſure to have no regard to it before the Lord, but come unto him, as it were, in an equipoiſe, to be caſt to what ſide he will. Such are the meek he will guide in judgment, the meek he will teach his way, Pſal. xxv. 9. Unfair dealing with God in this caſe is exceeding ſinful and dangerous. They who venture on it, are therein diſſemblers; and will readily throw off their maſk, if the anſwer of God fall not in with the ſide that their inclination is on: they will repel it, they will not ſee it; but will take their own way, notwithſtanding, to the provoking of the eyes of his glory. Whereof we have a remarkable inſtance, in the Jews conſulting God as to what they ſhould do, while in the mean time they were aforehand reſolved what to do, being bent to go to Egypt, Jer. xli. 17. chap. xlii. 1.—6. 19. 20. chap. xliii. 2.-7. Such dealing with God, in the matter of light, ſometimes provokes him to give men their will, with a vengeance. Thus Balaam got an anſwer from God, plainly notifying to him, that he ſhould not go with Balak's meſſengers, Numb xxii. 12. But that anſwer not ſuiting his inclinations, which were towards the wages of unrighteouſneſs, 2 Pet. ii. 15. he went back for another anſwer more agreeable thereto, and in wrath he got it, ver 19. 20. 21. 22.

2dly, Be fervent in your addreſſes, labouring fervently in prayer, Col. iv. 12. On ſuch occaſions, the body is afflicted, that the ſpirit may become the more earneſt in ſupplication; the ordinary weight of worldly incumbrances is laid aſide, that the ſoul may the more readily take wing, and mount heavenward. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, James v. 16.

3dly, Pray with confidence in God, through Jeſus Chriſt; believingly, not doubtingly and diſtruſtfully: Matth. xxi. 22. And all things whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive. Whether your petitions be for temporal or ſpiritual mercies, preſent them to the Father in the name of Chriſt, according to the promiſes of the covenant relative thereto; believing, and being confident on the ground of the merit and interceſſion of the Mediator, that God will do the beſt in your caſe, that your labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord, and that what is for his glory and your good ſhall not be withheld from you, Pſal. lxxxv. 11.

4. In the intervals of prayer, give yourſelf to ſome godly exerciſe, ſuch as ſinging of Pſalms, reading of the word, or meditation. And particularly, if you be ſeeking light into a matter, you may enter on thinking about it, in order to your clearing therein; weighing circumſtances with dependence on the Lord, according to the promiſe, Pſal. xxxii. 8. I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye. And eſpecially, if you are ſeeking light into the ſtate of your ſoul; here is a favourable nick of time for it; the marks and evidences of a gracious ſtate being, upon the back of covenanting with God, in a fair way to be diſcovered, to the ſatisfaction of the ſincere ſoul.

5. Laſtly, Lay no weight on the quantity of your prayers; that is to ſay, how long, or how many they are. Theſe things avail nothing with God; by whom prayers are not meaſured, but weighed. And what makes the weight in them, is the faith, fervency, and humility therein: ſo that one of thoſe groanings mentioned, Rom. viii. 26. will down-weigh a whole day's prayers, in which theſe things are wanting. Do you labour to get near God in prayer, and preſs forward to obtain that.

DIRECT. X.

As you have ability and opportunity, let works of charity and mercy be joined with your faſt; doing them, whether in the time of it, or before it, or after it: Iſa. lviii. 6. Is not this the faſt that I have choſen?—ver. 7.—to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are caſt out, to thy houſe? when thou ſeeſt the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyſelf from thine own fleſh? Let the poor be gainers by your faſt: for it is the promiſe of God, that he that watereth, ſhall be watered alſo himſelf, Prov. xi. 25.: and one's finding mercy with God, natively iſſues in a merciful diſpoſition towards one's fellow-creatures, Matth. xviii. 33. Eph. iv. 32.

DIRECT. XI.

Before you give over your work, you will do well to conſider ſeriouſly, that you are now the Lord's and no more your own: and foraſmuch as your covenanting with God, ſuppoſeth that you are reſolved to reform, and to walk more cloſely with God; lay down reſolutions, in the ſtrength of your covenanted God, to watch. And by all means forget not to conſider, what are thoſe things whereby, in a ſpecial manner, your ſpiritual condition hath formerly been worſted; and by what means it may be kept right; and ſincerely reſolve, to eſchew the one, and purſue the other; that ſo what gaps have been in your converſation, may be filled up, whereby it will appear, that by your faſt you have been ſet forward in your Chriſtian courſe. And withal review your failures in all the parts of the exerciſe you have now been employed in.

DIRECT. XII.

You may conclude the work with prayer, wherein you may humbly confeſs your failures in the management of this duty, and apply anew to the blood of ſprinkling for purging them away; avouch your covenant-intereſt in God, and his in you; and lay the cauſes of your faſt again before him, and ſolemnly leave them on him. The laying over a matter on the Lord believingly, in prayer, gives great eaſe to a burdened heart: it turns a faſt ſometimes into a ſpiritual feaſt. When Hannah had done ſo with her caſe, ſhe went away and did eat, and her countenance was no more ſad, 1 Sam. i. 18. And lay over yourſelf upon him, for the grace of the covenant, to ſubdue your corruptions, bear you up againſt temptations, and carry on your reſolutions; that you may go out into the world again, in the faith of his grace ſufficient for you in all exigencies.

DIRECT. XIII.

When the work is over, take heed to your ſpirit: And,

1. Beware of ſpiritual pride. Do not value yourſelf upon the account of the work done, as they did who ſaid, 'Wherefore have we faſted, and thou ſeeſt not?' Iſa. lviii. 3. The opinion of the merit of good works, is what the heart of man eaſily goes off into, by its natural bias; and there is ſo much of the old man in the beſt, that they are apt to think highly of their religious performances and ſervices. Wherefore be on your guard, particularly on that ſide; and conſider the perfection required by the holy law, and keep in view your own miſmanagements, ſo as when you ſhall have done all thoſe things, you may be obliged to ſay, We are unprofitable ſervants, Luke xvii. 10.

2. Beware of carnal ſecurity. Saints ſometimes fall aſleep, quickly after a full meal of ſpiritual enjoyment; as it fared with the ſpouſe, Cant. v. 1. 2. And Satan, watching the advantage, rallies his ſcattered forces, and with his wounded men burns the city. So it comes to paſs, that, according to Solomon's obſerve, Prov. xii. 27. The ſlothful roſteth not that which he took in hunting: what was gathered with much pains, is loſt through unwatchfulneſs, ere he gets the uſe of it.

3. Laſtly, Beware of forgetting the cauſes of your faſt; but in your ordinary addreſſes to God, remember them; and wait on for an anſwer. Pſal. v. 3. I will direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up. Prayers may be accepted, and yet not preſently anſwered. In which caſe, it is neceſſary that with patience we wait for a return from heaven, mean while uſing the appointed means for obtaining the end. The neglecting hereof may provoke the Lord to continue the ſymptoms of his anger, or ſtroke of his hand, which otherwiſe might ſooner be removed; and to leave one perplexed and embarraſſed, in matters wherein light is needed.

But in your waiting for light, whatever the Sovereign Lord may do, do not you look for impreſſions, far leſs for voices, nor extraordinary revelations any manner of way, to diſcover your duty in particular caſes, 2 Pet. i. 18. 19. But, having laid yourſelf fairly open to the divine determination, and made humble and earneſt ſupplication unto God for light in your particular caſe, believe that you ſhall be guided, taught, and directed by him, according to his promiſe, Pſal. xxv. 9. Prov. iii. 6. And then, in dependence on the Lord, weigh the matter and circumſtantiate caſe in the balance of ſanctified reaſon, according to the general directions of the word, ſuch as Philip. iv. 8. Whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praiſe, think on theſe things. And carefully obſerve the conduct and motions of providence, with reference to it, ſtill comparing them with the word. And you will find, that he will guide you with his eye, according to the promiſe, Pſal. xxxii. 8. And with reſpect thereto, you may put up that petition unto him in faith, Pſal. lxxxvi. 17. Shew me a token for good.

Thus far of perſonal faſting and humiliation.

CHAP. III.

Of FAMILY Faſting and Humiliation in particular.

Wherein the ſubſtance of this duty, which is the ſame in all religious faſts whatſoever, doth conſiſt, is already declared. And there being many things common to family-faſts, with perſonal ones, of which we have treated at large; it remains only to add here ſome few things peculiar to family-faſting. And,

First, As to the divine warrant for it, one may be ſatisfied upon theſe grounds.

1. Foraſmuch as every Chriſtian family ought to be a church, Rom. xvi. 5. to receive all ordinances appointed of God, and competent to them in their family capacity; and that religious faſting is an ordinance of divine appointment, in the nature whereof there is nothing to hinder its being performed by a family in their family-capacity: it is evident, that family faſting and humiliation is a part of family-worſhip; namely, an extraordinary part thereof, to be occaſionally performed. Accordingly, it is promiſed as an effect of the pouring out of the Spirit, Zech. xii. 12. The land ſhall mourn, every family apart. We have alſo a plain inſtance of it, in Eſther's family, on the occaſion of the miſchievous decree againſt the Jews, procured by Haman, Eſth. iv.

16. I alſo and my maidens will faſt likewiſe. And the faſting of the Jews, on the ſame occaſion, in every province whitherſoever that decree came, mentioned ver. 3. ſeems to have been moſtly, if not altogether, of the ſame kind, to wit, family-faſting; not only, in reſpect of their circumſtances in thoſe provinces where they were diſperſed, chap. iii. 8. but alſo, that the thankſgiving for their deliverance was appointed to be kept throughout every family, chap. ix. 28.

2. The ground upon which the duty of faſting and humiliation is bound upon public worſhipping ſocieties, and upon particular perſons, takes place alſo in the caſe of families. If national, congregational, and perſonal ſins to be mourned over, judgments to be deprecated, and mercies to be ſought, do found a call to a nation, congregation, or perſon, reſpectively, to humble themſelves with faſting; can there be any reaſon aſſigned, why the ſame ſhould not hold in like manner, in the caſe of families? Surely, as there are times wherein it goes ill with a land, or with a particular congregation or perſon; ſo there are times wherein it goes evil with one's houſe, 1 Chron. vii. 23. in reſpect of ſpecial family ſins or ſtrokes; and in which there are ſpecial family-mercies needed. And families are obliged to the uſing of the ſame appointed means for getting rid of the one, and obtaining the other; as other worſhipping ſocieties, and particular perſons, are, in their reſpective caſes. And where the concern of members of a family is common, although it be not equal, all of them ought, in reaſon, to take part of the burden.

3. Laſtly, The promiſe made to joint prayers hath weight here. Matth. xviii. 19. If two of you ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they ſhall aſk, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. Ver. 20. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. It is certain, there is ſuch a thing as extraordinary prayer, which hath a ſhare in the benefit of this promiſe: and if the Lord is pleaſed to lay ſuch a weight on ſome of his people, their agreeing together to aſk a thing of him, or their ſounding together, as the word properly ſignifies; it is not to be doubted, but extraordinary prayer in families, upon ſome ſpecial occaſions, is both required by him, and acceptable unto him through Jeſus Chriſt his Son.

Secondly, As for a providential call to family faſting and humiliation; by what is ſaid before, for clearing of one's call to perſonal faſting, it may be judged of and diſcerned; the circumſtances of the family being duly conſidered, and what the conduct of providence towards it, appears to point unto. The caſe of others, in whom the family hath a particular concern, eſpecially the caſe of the church, may found a call to family faſting: as in the practice of Eſther with her maids, Eſth. iv 16. And ſo may the privace caſe of the family itſelf; whether in reſpect of family-ſins, family-ſtrokes, threatned or inflicted, or ſome ſpecial family-mercies to be deſired. And ſince the exemplification of theſe general heads, in one's private caſe, made in the ſecond ſection of the foregoing chapter, may without difficulty be accomodated to the caſe of one's family, by perſons of the meaneſt capacity diſpoſed to conſider them, it is not neceſſary here to deſcend to particulars again.

Laſtly, For directions towards family-faſting; there are but few that need to be added unto thoſe given before, in the caſe of perſonal faſting. It is plain from the nature of the thing, that the external ordering and management of this matter belongs to the head of the family: and he or ſhe is diſcreetly to chuſe and appoint the time and place, wherein the family may perform the duty with leaſt diſturbance; and to ſee that all be done decently and in order. And,

1. Let the head of the family, ſome competent time, at leaſt the night before, give notice to them, that ſuch a time is ſet apart for, and to be ſpent in that exerciſe: and withal ſhew them the cauſes of it, and exhort them to ſtir up themſelves to the duties of ſuch a ſolemn approach unto God. Common prudence will direct, as well as Chriſtian duty doth oblige, the huſband to conſult his wife aforehand, as to the fixing of the time to be ſet apart in the family for that extraordinary piece of devotion.

2. In the morning, let each member in the family go apart by himſelf into ſome ſecret place, and there ſpend ſome time in reviewing, confeſſing, covenanting, praying, and ſupplicating, as directed in the caſe of perſonal faſting, ſo far as he can overtake them. The more conſcientiouſly this ſecret work is managed, it will readily fare the better with the family, when met together.

3. Let the head of the family, having taken to himſelf, and allowed to them, a competent time for their extraordinary ſecret devotions, thereafter call them together. And the family being conveened, he may again, if need be, lay before them the cauſes of their faſt, with ſuitable exhortations and encouragements, for exciting them unto the duty. And after calling on God for aid of his holy Spirit, let him ſing with them ſome pſalm or a part of a pſalm, ſuitable to ſuch an occaſion, ſuch as Pſalm. lxxx. 1. and downwards, Pſalm xxxix. 6. to the end, Pſalm li. 1. and downwards; read before them ſome pertinent paſſage of ſcripture, ſuch as thoſe mentioned in the 6th direction of the preceeding chapter; and then pray with them. After prayer made by the head of the family, let the miſtreſs of the family, and ſuch others as he judgeth fit, pray, one after another. It is very deſirable, that each member of the family, being through grace fit to be employed, do take a part in that work. In the intervals of prayer, there may be ſinging, reading, or conference, as may be found moſt expedient.

4. It is fit that in theſe prayers there be extraordinary confeſſion of ſin, as particular as may be expedient; together with profeſſion of repentance, and hearty ſorrow for ſin, and of unfeigned deſire to return unto God, and unto the duties of a chriſtian life: and then, fervent and earneſt ſupplications, upon the matters that are the peculiar cauſes of the faſt.

5. It is proper, that the concluding prayer be made by the head of the family; and that therein he reſume the confeſſions, profeſſions, and ſupplications on the matters of the faſt; humbly acknowledge their failures in the management of the work; and profeſs their looking for pardon and acceptance through the blood of Jeſus Chriſt alone, and alſo for grace to walk in the ways of new obedience, through the ſame atoning blood. Then the joint exerciſe may be cloſed, with ſinging ſome part of a pſalm, ſuch as Pſalm. xc. 13. to the end; Pſal. lxxxv. 6. to the end: or Pſal. lxix. 30. and downward.

6. Laſtly, The joint exerciſe of the family being over, let each of them go apart by himſelf again, and ſpend ſome time in a review of what they have been employed in, and in ſecret prayer: the which is but a ſuitable concluſion to ſuch ſolemn work. And family reformation ought to follow hereupon; every member of the family watching over himſelf, and all of them watching one over another; that by their holy walking in peace and unity, and a conſcientious performance of their relative duties, it may appear, that they have been ſincere and upright before the Lord, in their faſt.

The CONCLUSION.

AND now, to recommend the practice of thoſe duties, to perſons and families, theſe five things are offered in favour thereof; namely, that the practice of them is a proper means, 1. To bring ſtrangers to religion acquainted with it; 2. To recover backſliders; 3. To prevent relapſes; 4 To prepare for a time of trial; and laſtly, to get matters clear for eternity.

Firſt. The practice of perſonal and family faſting and humiliation, is a proper means to bring ſtrangers to religion acquainted with it; that thoſe who have not yet dipt into practical religion, may begin to enter into it. The work of converſion unto God begins at ſolemn ſerious conſideration of one's own ſpiritual ſtate and caſe: the which if ſinners could once be brought unto, there would be ſome hope of them, as of the prodigal, when he came to himſelf, Luke xv. 17. And if they would ſet themſelves to the duty of perſonal faſting, and maſters of families would now and then uſe family-faſts, they might at length be brought to conſider of their ſpiritual ſtate and caſe. Wherefore,

1. Ye who are young, and have not yet dipt into the heart of religion, this memorial is for you. It is preſumed, ye were baptized in your infancy, and that now ye are come to the years of diſcretion: but have you ever as yet taken a ſolemn deliberate view of your loſt and undone ſtate by nature, under ſin and the curſe; and of the remedy provided for you in Jeſus Chriſt? And have you ever as yet perſonally entered into covenant with God, by taking hold of this covenant of grace? You eat, you drink, you ſleep, you work, you play or divert yourſelves; and ſo do young beaſts too, the which, when they are dead, are done: but you have an immortal ſoul, that muſt eternally live happy in heaven, or miſerable in hell. It may be, that you ſay your prayers too: but have you as yet perſonally renounced the devil, the vain world, and the fleſh? You cannot but ſee, that death ſeizeth ſome as young and ſprightly as you are; and you know not how ſoon God may call you off: have you then laid your meaſures for eternity? Alas! you are heedleſsly running about the devil's trap, playing yourſelves about the pit's mouth: and ſhould your foot ſlip now, you are undone for ever. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Conſider your ways.

2. Careleſs ſinners, careleſs about the concerns of the other world, whatever your age or years be, this memorial is for you. 'Ye careleſs ones, ſtrip ye, and make ye bare, and gird ſackcloth upon your loins,' Iſa. xxxii. 11. What is your religion? Is it not like the foam on the water, no ſubſtance in it? What is your life and converſation? See your own picture, Jer. ii. 24. 'A wild aſs uſed to the wilderneſs, that ſnuffeth up the wind at her pleaſure.' What condition is your ſoul in? The emblem of it is the ſluggard's vine-yard, All grown over with thorns, nettles covering the face thereof, and the ſtone wall thereof broken down, Prov. xxiv. 30, 31. Can you really perſuade yourſelves, that you are going forth by the footſteps of the flock? that the ſaints now in glory took the ſinful liberty of thinking, ſpeaking, and acting, that you do? that their ſouls ſtate and caſe coſt them as few ſerious thoughts as yours hath coſt you? Do you think to ſtumble on a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, a pardon, a heaven? No, you will not find it ſo. Up then, and be doing: ſet apart ſome time for conſidering of, and doing ſomething effectually in your ſoul's caſe; that you may go to the ground of the matter, and get it rectified.

Secondly, It is a proper means for the recovery of backſliders, that they may remember whence they are fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works, Rev. ii. 5. There are not a few, who ſome time a day bloſſomed fair, in hopeful beginnings of religion, who are now withered. Their bones are dried, and there is no ſap of that kind in them now: and by their ſinning againſt light, they have provoked God to depart from them, ſo as there is no ſap in ordinances, nor in providences, to them neither; but theſe are all, as it were, blaſted to them, and they are left in the unhappy caſe of the vineyard, Iſa. v. 6. I will alſo command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. And ſome are not only withered, but are become noiſome in their life and converſation: they have not only loſt any life of religion they ſometimes ſeemed to have, but their luſts are become rampant in them, as given up to vile affections, defiling the very outward man. 'It has happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, The ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire,' 2 Pet. ii. 22.

O backſliders, your caſe is a fearful one, Heb. x. 38. If any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him. What mind ye to do with it? Will ye continue in it, to your eternal ruin? Oh! no, pity your own ſouls. There is hope in Iſrael concerning this things, as bad as it is. Perhaps your heart tells you that your caſe is now gone too far, to be mended: but it is not ſo; that is but a ſatanical ſuggeſtion. God's word ſays otherwiſe: Jer. iii. 1. 'Though thou haſt played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, ſaith the Lord.' Iſa. liv. 6. 'I have called thee as—a wife of youth, when thou waſt refuſed, ſaith thy God.' Wherefore, O backſlider, beſtir thyſelf to anſwer the Lord's call, and remember that ſome devils go not out but by prayer and faſting, Matth. xvii. 22. Try this method then for your recovery: try it, as you would not be guilty of wilful dying of your diſeaſe. Our heavenly Father kindly meets returning prodigals; the returning backſlider will be treated by him as a dear ſon, a pleaſant child, Jer. xxxi. 20. Return ye then, and he will reſtore to you the years that the locuſt hath eaten, Joel ii. 25. And as yet, your bones ſhall flouriſh like an herb, Iſa. lxvi. 14.

Thirdly, It is a proper means to prevent relapſes, and to keep one's ſpiritual caſe right, when once it is right. Frequent ſtating of accounts, keeps matters clear, which otherwiſe might come to be perplexed, and involved. And the caſe which, being on the decline, is taken in time, is eaſily righted, in compariſon of that which is long run on; even as when Chriſt raiſed the young man of Nain, whom they were carrying out to the grave, he only touched the bier, and ſaid, young man, I ſay unto thee ariſe, Luke vii. 14. but he wept and groaned once and again at the raiſing of Lazarus, who had been four days dead, John xi. 33. 35. 38. The unhealthy and ſickly diſpoſition of the ſouls of men, by reaſon of the remains of corruption that are always in the beſt, while here, makes the occaſional performance of extraordinary duties now and then neceſſary, over and above the courſe of their ordinary and ſtated devotions.

Fourthly, it is a proper means of preparation for a time of trial. It is a piece of Chriſtian prudence to foreſee the evil, and hide one's ſelf, while the ſimple paſs on, and are puniſhed, Prov. xxii. 3. When God is threatening a land with his judgments, it becomes the inhabitants to take the alarm, and prepare to meet their God: and perſonal and family faſts are proper expedients for that end; ſince they who in ſinning times ſigh and cry for all the abominations done in the midſt thereof, ſtand fair to receive the mark of ſpecial favour in ſuffering times, Ezekiel ix. 4. For all the leſſer ſtrokes and deliverances theſe nations have met with of late years, it is alas! viſible to ſober men, of whatever denomination, that we are not thereby reformed, nor duly convinced of, far leſs humbled under, the cauſes of God's flaming controverſy with us. And while there is a God to judge on the earth, we can have no reaſon to think that a generation chargeable with the guilt which we are chargeable with, is in ſafety with ſuch a load upon them: but that either God will, by an unordinary pouring out of his Spirit, awaken, humble, and make the land to mourn; or elſe by ſome rouſing ſtroke of judgment, will vindicate his own honour, injured to a pitch that our fathers arrived not at. And the leſs appearance there is of the former, there is the greater appearance of the latter. However we ſeem to have no ſuch ſecurity againſt it, as to render it unſeaſonable to keep perſonal and family faſts in that view; that we may mourn over our own ſins, and the ſins of the nations, and may ſolemnly commit ourſelves and our families to the divine grace, mercy, and protection, whatever may be the occurrences of providence in our day. None know what dark ſteps may be between them and the grave; and therefore it cannot be an unwiſe courſe, timely to take God in Chriſt for our guide through the mountains of darkneſs, for our protector in all dangers, and for our ſupporter and helper in the midſt of trouble.

Laſtly, It is a proper means to get matters clear for eternity, and ſo to make us a ſafe and comfortable paſſage out of this world. It was David's unſpeakable comfort on his death bed, that he could ſay of the God unto whom his ſpirit was about to return, He hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Jacob being an old man and a dying, comfortably reflected on the place and time, where and when, in the days of his youth, he had remarkable communion with God, received the bleſſing, and vowed the vow, Gen. xlviii. 3. with chap. xxxviii. 10 ——23. Would one be in a condition to look death in the face? to paſs ſafely and comfortably to the other world? there is not a more feaſible means to reach it than this. Therefore,

1. Ye who are under doubts and fears, complaining that ye can never reach clear evidences for heaven, this memorial is for you. No wonder they walk in the dark, who will not be at ſo much pains to get light into their ſtate. The obtaining of ſuch light, might of itſelf be a ſufficient ground for ſuch an exerciſe. Clear evidences for heaven are ſuch an unſpeakable comfort, and ſo hard to raiſe up amidſt ſo much corruption of heart and life, that it is not at all ſtrange, they require ſomething beyond the ordinary courſe of devotion and application, to obtain the ſame. And this is a moſt feaſible means for that purpoſe; for after one has got his ſoul humbled by a review of his ſins, hath poured out his heart before the Lord in ſolemn confeſſion of ſin, and perſonally entered into, or renewed covenant with God, by taking hold of God's covenant of grace; if he ſhall then take the matter in hand, and examine himſelf as to the evidences of ſaving grace in him, they will then be as likely to appear clearly as ever.

2. Ye who are, one way or other, getting warnings of approaching death, this memorial is for you. Do you obſerve your equals in years, or younger than you carried off by death? Have you been at any time reſcued from imminent danger of your life, ariſing from ſome accident, or unforeſeen occurrence? Are ye now and then viſited with ſickneſs? Do you perceive your ſtrength begin to fail, the pins of your tabernacle begin to be looſened? Theſe and the like are loud providential calls to you to prepare for the other world. And preparation for that world, is ſufficient to found a call unto ſuch extraordinary devotion: a proſpect of approaching death, may well be allowed to call one to ſet ſome time apart in order to prepare for it. Preparation for death is work to be done in time of health: and why ſhould it be delayed, ſince you ſee that death is approaching? How unreaſonable is it for men, to leave that work to the ſick bed, where they will have enough ado to die, or may be deprived of their judgment, if they do at all get a ſick bed, and be not ſuddenly ſnatched away, ere they or their friends are aware? No, ſirs; ye know that death is coming: therefore while ye are able, ſet ſome time apart for that very end, to prepare for it, and to ſtate matters clearly for eternity: otherwiſe ye are cruel to your own ſouls, by your negligence, making of death but a leap in the dark into the other world.

3. Laſtly, All without exception, who believe a heaven and a hell, this memorial is for you. The eternal ſtate is not a matter to venture upon at random. If you do really believe a life to come, ye cannot reaſonably think, that this is too much to make a ſuitable preparation for it. Their hearts are certainly more ſtout than holy, who, amidſt ſo many inſtances of mortality, as the world is ſtill affording, are not thereby excited to ſet their own ſouls caſe in order, with an eye to death's coming about to their own door; and thus to ſet ſome time apart for that end, is little enough in a caſe of ſuch vaſt importance.

On the NATURE of CHURCH-COMMUNION.

From 1 COR. x. 17.

To the READER.

Habitual unreconciledneſs to the croſs, and a palpable deficiency in many of the duties incumbent on us, as members of the body of Chriſt, mightily mar our Chriſtian comfort, our edification, our uſefulneſs: and inſtead of adorning, they caſt a dark ſhade on our holy profeſſion. For remedy in both caſes, the Lord in his kind providence is ſending us freſh aſſiſtance in the two following treatiſes. Both the ſubjects are ſet in a new and engaging light. It is not amiſs the reader ſhould know that the former, namely, that of the Crook in one's lot, was among the laſt ſubjects the bleſſed author handled; and that the reviſing of it ſo far (for he got not through his notes) was among his laſt works with the pen. We ſhall leave it to exerciſe the reader's attention how far he himſelf reviſed; and where we have only his notes as he preached them. May the ſame divine bleſſing, which the author often and earneſtly ſought to accompany ought of his that was, or ſhould be called forth for the ſervice of the church, go along with theſe treatiſes that here follow.

ECCLES. vii. 13.

Conſider the work of God: for who can make that ſtraight which he hath made crooked?

A Juſt view of afflicting incidents is altogether neceſſary to a Chriſtian deportment under them: and that view is to obtained only by faith, not by ſenſe. For it is the light of the word alone that repreſents them juſtly, diſcovering in them the work of God, and conſequently deſigns becoming the divine perfections. Theſe perceived by the eye of faith, and duly conſidered, one has a juſt view of afflicting incidents, fitted to quell the turbulent motions of corrupt affections under diſmal outward appearances.

It is under this view, that Solomon, in the preceeding part of this chapter, advances ſeveral paradoxes, which are ſurpriſing determinations in favour of certain things, that to the eye of ſenſe, looking gloomy and hideous, are therefore generally reputed grievous and ſhocking. He pronounceth the day of one's death to be better than the day of his birth, namely, the day of the death of one, who, having become the friend of God through faith, hath led a life to the honour of God, and ſervice of his generation; and thereby raiſed to himſelf the good and ſavoury name, better than precious ointment, ver. 1. In like manner, he pronounceth the houſe of mourning to be preferable to the houſe of feaſting, ſorrow to laughter, and a wiſe man's rebuke to a fool's ſong; for that, howbeit the latter are indeed the more pleaſant, yet the former are the more profitable, ver.

2.——6. And obſerving with concern, how men are in hazard, not only from the world's frowns and ill uſage, oppreſſion making a wiſe man mad, but alſo from its ſmiles and careſſes, a gift deſtroying the heart; therefore, ſince whatever way it goes, there is a danger, he pronounceth the end of every worldly thing better than the beginning thereof, ver. 7. 8. And, from the whole, he juſtly infers, that it is better to be humble and patient, than proud and impatient, under afflicting diſpenſations; ſince, in the former caſe, one wiſely ſubmits to what is really beſt; in the latter, he fights againſt it, ver. 8. And he dehorts from being angry with our lot, becauſe of the adverſity found therein, ver. 9. cautions againſt making odious compariſons of former and preſent times, in that point inſinuating undue reflections on the providence of God, ver. 10. And, againſt that querulous and fretful diſpoſition, he firſt preſcribes a general remedy, namely, holy wiſdom, as that which enables one to make the beſt of every thing, and even giveth life in killing circumſtances, ver. 11. 12. And then a particular remedy, conſiſting in a due application of that wiſdom, towards the taking a juſt view of the caſe, Conſider the work of God: for who can make that ſtraight which he hath made crooked?

In which words are propoſed, (1.) The remedy itſelf, (2.) The ſuitableneſs thereof. Firſt, The remedy itſelf is a wiſe eying of the hand of God in all we find to bear hard upon us: Conſider the work (or, See thou the doing) of God, to wit, in the crooked, rough, and diſagreeable parts of thy lot, the croſſes thou findeſt in it. Thou ſeeſt very well the croſs itſelf; yea, thou turneſt it over and over in thy mind, and leiſurely views it on all ſides; thou lookeſt withal to this and the other ſecond cauſe of it; and ſo thou art in a foam and fret: but, wouldſt thou be quieted and ſatisfied in the matter, lift up thine eyes towards heaven, ſee the doing of God in it, the operation of his hand: look at that, and conſider it well; eye the firſt cauſe of the crook in thy lot, behold how it is the work of God, his doing. Secondly, As for the ſuitableneſs of this remedy, that view of the crook in our lot is very ſuitable to ſtill indecent riſing of heart, and quiets us under it: for who can (that is, none can) make that ſtraight which God hath made crooked? As to the crook in thy lot, God hath made it; and it muſt continue while he will have it ſo. Shouldſt thou ply thine utmoſt force to even it, or make it ſtraight, thine attempt will be vain: it will not alter for all thou canſt do, only he who made it can mend it, or make it ſtraight. This conſideration, this view of the matter, is a proper means, at once to ſilence and to ſatisfy men, and ſo to bring them unto a dutiful ſubmiſſion to their Maker and Governor, under the crook in their lot.

Now we take up the purpoſe of the text in theſe three doctrines. I. Whatſoever crook there is in one's lot, it is of God's making. II. What God ſees meet to mar, one will not be able to mend in his lot. III. The conſidering of the crook in the lot, as the work of God, or of his making, is a proper means to bring one to a Chriſtian deportment under it.

DOCTRINE I. Whatſoever crook there is one's lot it is of God's making.

Here two things fall to be conſidered, namely, the crook itſelf, and God's making of it.

I. As to the crook itſelf, the crook in the lot, for the better underſtanding thereof, theſe few things following are premiſed. 1. There is a certain train or courſe of events, by the providence of God, falling to every one of us during our life in this world: and that is our lot as being allotted to us by the ſovereign God, our Creator and Governor, in whoſe hand our breath is, and whoſe are all our ways. This train of events is widely different to different perſons, according to the will and pleaſure of the ſovereign Manager, who ordereth mens conditions in the world in a great variety, ſome moving in a higher, ſome in a lower ſphere. 2. In that train or courſe of events, ſome fall out croſs to us, and againſt the grain; and theſe make the crook in our lot. While we are here, there will be croſs events, as well as agreeable ones, in our lot and condition. Sometimes things are ſoftly and agreeably gliding on; but, by and by, there is ſome incident which alters that courſe, grates us, and pains us, as when, having made a wrong ſtep, we begin to halt. 3. Every body's lot in this world hath ſome crook in it. Complainers are apt to make odious compariſons: they look about, and taking a diſtant view of the condition of others, can diſcern nothing in it but what is ſtraight, and juſt to one's wiſh; ſo they pronounce their neighbour's lot wholly ſtraight. But that is a falſe verdict: there is no perfection here, no lot out of heaven without a crook. For as to 'all 'the works that are done under the ſun, behold, all is "vanity and vexation of ſpirit. That which is crooked "cannot be made ſtraight," Eccleſ. i. 14. 15. Who would have thought but Haman's lot was very ſtraight, while his family was in a flouriſhing condition, and he proſpering in riches and honour, being prime miniſter of ſtate in the Perſian court, and ſtanding high in the king's favour? yet there was at the ſame time, a crook in his lot, which ſo galled him, that all this availed him nothing, Eſth. v. 13. Every one feels for himſelf, where he is pinched, though others perceive it not. No body's lot in this world, is wholly crooked: there are always ſome ſtraight and even parts in it. Indeed, when mens paſſions, having got up, have caſt a miſt over their minds, they are ready to ſay, all is wrong with them, nothing right: but though in hell that tale is, and ever will be true, yet it is never true in this world; for there indeed, there is not a drop of comfort allowed, Luke xvi. 25. but here it always holds good, that it is of the Lord's mercies we are not conſumed, Lam. iii. 22. Laſtly, The crook of the lot came into the world by ſin; it is owing to the fall, Rom. v. 12. By one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin, under which death the crook in the lot is comprehended, as a ſtate of comfort or proſperity is, in ſcripture ſtile, expreſſed by living, 1 Sam. xxv. 6. John iv. 50. 51. Sin ſo bowed the hearts and minds of men, as they became crooked in reſpect of the holy law: and God juſtly ſo bowed their lot, as it became crooked too. And this crook in our lot inſeparably follows our ſinful condition, till, dropping this body of ſin and death, we get within heaven's gates.

Theſe being premiſed, a crook in the lot ſpeaks in the general, two things, (1.) Adverſity. (2.) Continuance. Accordingly it makes the day of adverſity, oppoſed to the day of proſperity in the verſe immediately following the text.

The crook in the lot is, Firſt, Some one or other piece of adverſity. The proſperous part of one's lot, which goes forward according to one's wiſh, is the ſtraight and even part of it, the adverſe part, going a contrary way, is the crooked part thereof. God hath intermixed theſe two in mens condition in this world; that as there is proſperity therein, making the ſtraight line, ſo there is alſo ſome adverſity, making the crooked. The which mixture hath place, not only in the lot of ſaints, who are told, that in the world you ſhall have tribulation, but in the lot of all, as already obſerved. Secondly, It is adverſity of ſome continuance. We do not reckon it a crooked thing, which, though forcibly bended and bowed together, yet preſently recovers its former ſtraightneſs. There are twinges of the rod of adverſity, which paſſing like a ſtitch in one's ſide, all is immediately ſet to rights again: one's lot may be ſuddenly overclouded, and the cloud evaniſh ere he is aware. But under the crook, one having leiſure to find his ſmart, is in ſome concern to get the crook evened. So the crook in the lot is adverſity continued for a ſhorter or longer time.

Now there is a threefold crook in the lot incident to the children of men. (1.) One made by a croſs diſpenſation, which howſoever in itſelf paſſing, yet hath laſting effects. Such a crook did Herod's cruelty make in the lot of the mothers in Bethlehem, who by the murderers were left ‘ weeping for their ſlain children, ‘ and would not be comforted, becauſe they were not.’ Matth. ii. 18. A ſlip of the foot may ſoon be made, which will make a man go halting all along after. ‘ As ‘ the fiſhes are taken in an evil net——ſo are the ſons ‘ of men ſnared in an evil time,’ Eccleſ. ix. 12. The thing may fall out in a moment, under which the party ſhall go halting to the grave. There is a crook made by a train of croſs diſpenſations, whether of the ſame or different kinds, following hard one upon another, and leaving laſting effects behind them. Thus in the caſe of Job, while one meſſenger of evil tidings was yet ſpeaking, another came, Job i. 16. 17. 18. Croſs events coming one upon the neck of another, deep calling unto deep, make a ſore crook. In that caſe the party is like unto one, who recovering his ſliding foot from one unfirm piece of ground, ſets it on another equally unfirm, which immediately gives way under him too: or like unto one, who travelling in an unknown mountainous track, after having with difficulty made his way over one mountain, is expecting to ſee the plain country, but inſtead thereof there comes in view, time after time, a new mountain to be paſſed. This crook in Aſaph's lot had like to have made him give up all his religion, untill he went into the ſanctuary, where this myſtery of providenee was unriddled to him, Pſal. lxxxiii. 13.——17. Solomon obſerves, that ‘ there ‘ being juſt men unto whom it happeneth according to ‘ the work of the wicked,’ Eccleſ. viii. 14. Providence taking a run againſt them, as if they were to be run down for good and all. Whoever they be whoſe life in no part thereof affords them experience of this, ſure Joſeph miſſed not of it in his young days, nor Jacob in his middle days, nor Peter in his old days, John xxi. 18. nor our Saviour all his days. (3.) There is a crook made by one croſs diſpenſation, with laſting effects thereof coming in the room of another removed. Thus one crook ſtraightened, there is another made in its place: and ſo there is ſtill a crook. Want of children had long been the crook in Rachel's lot, Gen. xxx. 1. That was at length evened to her mind: but then ſhe got another in its ſtead, hard labour in travailing to bring forth, chap. xxxv. 16. This world is but a wilderneſs, in which we may indeed get our ſtation changed: but the remove will be out of one wilderneſs ſtation to another. When one part of the lot is evened, readily ſome other part thereof will be crooked.

More particularly, the crook in the lot hath in it four things of the nature of that which is crooked.

Firſt, Diſagreeableneſs. A crooked thing is wayward; and being laid to a rule anſwers it not, but declines from it. There is not in any body's lot, any ſuch thing as a crook in reſpect of the will and purpoſe of God. Take the moſt harſh and diſmal diſpenſation in one's lot, and lay it to the eternal decree, made in the depth of infinite wiſdom, before the world began, and it will anſwer it exactly without the leaſt deviation, all things being wrought after the counſel of his will, Eph. i. 11. Lay it to the providential will of God, in the government of the world, and there is a perfect harmony. If Paul is to be bound at Jeruſalem, and delivered into the hands of the Gentiles, it is the will of the Lord it ſhould be ſo, Acts xxi. 11. 14. Wherefore the greateſt crook of the lot, on earth, is ſtraight in heaven: there is no diſagreeableneſs in it there. But in every body's lot there is a crook in reſpect of their mind and natural inclination. The adverſe diſpenſation lies croſs to that rule, and will by no means anſwer it, nor harmonize with it. When divine Providence lays the one to the other, there is a manifeſt diſagreeableneſs: the man's will goes one way, and the diſpenſation another way; the will bends upward, the croſs events preſſeth down; ſo they are contrary. And there, and only there, lies the crook. It is this diſagreeableneſs which makes the crook in the lot fit matter of trial and exerciſe to us, in this our ſtate of probation: in the which, if thou wouldſt approve thyſelf to God, walking by faith, not by ſight, thou muſt quiet thyſelf in the will and purpoſe of God, and not inſiſt that it ſhould be according to thy mind, Job xxxiv. 23.

Secondly, Unſightlineſs. Crooked things are unpleaſant to the eye: and no crook in the lot ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous, making but an unſightly appearance, Heb. xii. 11. Therefore men need to beware of giving way to their thoughts to dwell on the crook in their lot, and of keeping it too much in view. David ſhews a hurtful experience in his, in that kind, Pſal. xxxix. 3. ‘ While I was muſing, the fire burned.’ Jacob acted a wiſer part, called his youngeſt ſon Benjamin, the ſon of the right-hand, whom the dying mother had named Ben-oni, the ſon of my ſorrow; by this means providing, that the crook in his lot ſhould not be ſet afreſh in his view, on every occaſion of mentioning the name of his ſon. Indeed a Chriſtian may ſafely take a ſteady and leiſurely view of the crook of his lot in the light of the holy word, which repreſents it as the diſcipline of the covenant. So faith will diſcover a hidden ſightlineſs in it, under a very unſightly outward appearance; perceiving the ſuitableneſs thereof to the infinite goodneſs, love, and wiſdom of God, and to the real and moſt valuable intereſt of the party; by which means one comes to take pleaſure, and that a moſt refined pleaſure, in diſtreſſes, 2 Cor. xii. 10. But whatever the crook in the lot be to the eye of faith, it is not at all pleaſant to the eye of ſenſe.

Thirdly, Unfitneſs for motion. Solomon obſerves the cauſe of the uneaſy and ungraceful walking of the lame, Prov. xxvi. 7. ‘ The legs of the lame are not equal.’ This uneaſineſs they find, who are exerciſed about the crook in their lot: a high ſpirit and a low adverſe lot, makes great difficulty in the Chriſtian walk. There is nothing that gives temptation more eaſy acceſs, than the crook in the lot; nothing more apt to occaſion out-of-the-way ſteps. Therefore ſaith the apoſtle, Heb. xii. 13. ‘ Make ſtraight paths for your feet, leſt that ‘ which is lame be turned out of the way.’ They are to be pitied then, who are labouring under it, and not to be rigidly cenſured; though they are rare perſons who learn this leſſon, till taught by their own experience. It is long ſince Job made an obſerve in this caſe, which holds good until this day, Job xii. 5. ‘ He that is ready ‘ to ſlip with his feet, is as a lamp deſpiſed in the thought ‘ of him that is at eaſe.’

Laſtly, Aptneſs to catch hold and entangle, like hooks, fiſh-hooks, Amos iv. 2. The crook in the lot doth ſo very readily make impreſſions, to the ruffling and fretting of one's ſpirit, irritating corruption, that Satan fails not to make diligent uſe of it to theſe dangerous purpoſes, the which point once gained by the tempter, the tempted, ere he is aware, finds himſelf intangled as in a thicket, out of which he knows not how to extricate himſelf. In that temptation it often proves like a crooked ſtick troubling a ſtanding pool; the which not only raiſeth up the mud all over, but brings up from the bottom ſome very ugly thing. Thus it brought up a ſpice of blaſphemy and atheiſm in Aſaph's caſe, Pſal. lxxiii. 13. ‘ Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and ‘ waſhed my hands in innocence.’ As if he had ſaid, There is nothing at all in religion; it is a vain and empty thing that profiteth nothing, I was a fool to have been in care about purity and holineſs whether of heart or life. Ah! is this the pious Aſaph! How is he turned ſo unlike himſelf! but the crook in the lot is a handle whereby the tempter makes ſurpriſing diſcoveries of latent corruption, even in the beſt.

This is the nature of the crook in the lot. Let us now obſerve what part of the lot it falls in.

And, in the general, three concluſions may be eſtabliſhed upon this head. Firſt, It may fall in any part of the lot; there is no exempted one in the caſe: for ſin being found in every part, the crook may take place in any part. Being all as an unclean thing, we may all fade as a leaf, Iſa. lxiv. 6. The main ſtream of ſin which the crook readily follows, runs in very different channels: in the caſe of different perſons; and in regard of the various diſpoſitions of the minds of men, that will prove a ſinking weight unto one, which another would go very lightly under. Secondly, It may at once fall in many parts of the lot, the Lord calling as in a ſolemn day, one's terrors round about, Lam. ii. 22. Sometimes God makes one notable crook in a man's lot: but its name may be Gad, being but the forerunner of a troop which cometh. Then the crooks are multiplied, ſo that the party is made to halt on each ſide. While one ſtream let in from one quarter, is running full againſt him, another is let in on him from another quarter, till in the end the waters break in on every hand. Thirdly, It often falls in the tender part, I mean that part of the lot wherein one is leaſt able to bear it, or, at leaſt, thinks he is ſo, Pſal. lv. 12. 13. 'It was not an 'enemy that reproached me, then I could have borne 'it—But it was thou, a man, mine equal, my guide, and 'mine acquaintance.' If there is any one part of the lot, which of all other, one is diſpoſed to neſtle in, the thorn will readily be laid there, eſpecially if he belongs to God: in that thing wherein he is leaſt of all able to be touched, he will be ſure to be preſſed. There the trial will be taken of him: for there is the grand competition with Chriſt. 'I take from them the deſires of 'their eyes, and that whereupon they ſet their minds,' Ezek. xxiv. 25. Since the crook in the lot is the ſpecial trial appointed for every one, it is altogether reaſonable, and becoming the wiſdom of God, that it fall on that which of all things doth moſt rival him.

But more particularly, the crook may be obſerved to fall in theſe four parts of the lot.

Firſt, In the natural part, affecting perſons conſidered as of the make allotted for them by the great God that formed all things. The parents of mankind, Adam and Eve, were formed altogether ſound and entire, without the leaſt blemiſh, whether in ſoul or body; but, in the formation of their poſterity, there often appears a notable variation from the original. Bodily defects, ſuperfluities, deformities, infirmities, natural or accidental, make the crook in the lot of ſome: they have ſomething unſightly or grievous about them. Crooks of this kind, more or leſs obſervable, are very common and ordinary, the beſt not exempted from them: and it is purely owing to ſovereign pleaſure they are not more numerous. Tender eyes made the crook in the lot of Leah, Gen. xxix. 17. Rachel's beauty was balanced with barrenneſs, the crook in her lot, chap. xxx. 1. Paul, the great apoſtle of the Gentiles, was, it ſhould ſeem, no perſonable man, but of a mean outward appearance, for which fools were apt to contemn him, 2 Cor. x. 10. Timothy was of a crazy frame, weakly and ſickly, 1 Tim. v. 23. And there is yet a far more conſiderable crook in the lot of the lame, the blind, the deaf, and dumb. Some are weak to a degree in their intellectuals; and it is the crook in the lot of ſeveral bright ſouls to be overcaſt with clouds, notably bemiſted, and darkened from the crazy bodies they are lodged in: an eminent inſtance whereof we have in the grave, wiſe, and patient Job, going mourning without the ſun, yea, ſtanding up and crying in the congregation, Job xxx. 28.

Secondly, It may fall in the honorary part. There is an honour due to all men, the ſmall as well as the great, 1 Pet. ii. 17.; and that upon the ground of the original conſtitution of human nature, as it was framed in the image of God. But, in the ſovereign diſpoſal of holy providence, the crook in the lot of ſome falls here: they are neglected and ſlighted, their credit is ſtill kept low; they go through the world under a cloud, being put into an ill name, their reputation ſunk. This ſometimes is the native conſequent of their own fooliſh and ſinful conduct; as, in the caſe of Dinah, who, by her gadding abroad to ſatisfy her youthful curioſity, regardleſs of, and therefore not waiting for a providential call, brought a laſting ſtain on her honour, Gen. xxxiv. But where the Lord minds a crook of this kind in one's lot, innocence will not be able to ward it off in an ill-natured world: neither will true merit be able to make head againſt it, to make one's lot ſtand ſtraight in that part. Thus David repreſents his caſe, Pſal. xxxi. 11. 12. 13. 'They that did ſee me without fled from me. I am for'gotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like a bro'ken veſſel. For I have heard the ſlander of many.'

Thirdly, It may fall in the vocational part. Whatever is mens calling or ſtation in the world, be it ſacred or civil, the crook in the lot may take its place therein. Iſaiah was an eminent prophet, but moſt unſucceſsful, Iſa. liii. 1. Jeremiah met with ſuch a train of diſcouragements and ill uſage in the exerciſe of his ſacred function, that he was well-near giving it up, ſaying, 'I will 'not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his 'name,' Jer. xx 9. The Pſalmiſt obſerves this crook often to be made in the lot of ſome men very induſtrious in their civil buſineſs, who ſow the fields—and at times God bleſſeth them,—and ſuffereth not their cattle to decreaſe: but again, they are miniſhed and brought low, through oppreſſion, affliction, and ſorrow, Pſal. cvii. 37. 38. 39. Such a crook was made in Job's lot, after it had long ſtood even. Some manage their employments with all care and diligence; the huſbandman carefully labouring his ground, the ſheep-maſter diligent to know the ſtate of his flocks, and looking well to his herds, the tradeſman early and late at his buſineſs; the merchant diligently plying his, watching and falling in with the moſt fair and promiſing opportunities; but there is ſuch a crook in that part of their lot, as all they are able to do can by no means even. For why? The moſt proper means uſed for compaſſing an end are inſignificant, without a word of divine appointment commanding their ſucceſs: 'Who is he that ſaith, and it com'eth to paſs, when the Lord commandeth it not?' Lam. iii. 37. People ply their buſineſs with ſkill and induſtry, but the wind turns in their face, providence croſſeth their enterprizes diſconcerts their meaſures, fruſtrates their hopes and expectations, renders their endeavours ſucceſsleſs, and ſo puts and keeps them ſtill in ſtraitening circumſtances. 'So the race is not to the ſwift, nor 'the battle to the ſtrong, neither yet bread to the wiſe,' Eccl. ix. 11. Providence interpoſing, crooks the meaſures which human prudence and induſtry had laid ſtraight towards the reſpective ends; ſo the ſwift loſe the race, the ſtrong the battle, and the wiſe miſs of bread, while, in the mean time, ſome one or other providential incident, ſupplying the defect of human wiſdom, conduct, and ability, the ſlow gain the race, and carry the prize; the weak win the battle, and enrich themſelves with the ſpoil; and bread falls into the lap of the fool.

Laſtly, It may fall in the relational part. Relations are the joints of ſociety; and there the crook in the lot may take place, one's ſmarteſt pain being often felt in theſe joints. They are in their nature the ſprings of man's comfort: yet they often run the greateſt bitterneſs to him. Sometimes this crook is occaſioned by the loſs of relations. Thus a crook was made in the lot of Jacob, by means of the death of Rachel, his beloved wife, and the loſs of Joſeph, his ſon and darling, which had like to have made him go halting to the grave. Job laments this crook in his lot, Job xvi. 7. Thou haſt made deſolate all my company; meaning his dear children, every one of whom he had laid in the grave, not ſo much as one ſon or daughter left him. Again, ſometimes it is made through the afflicting hand of God lying heavy on them; the which, in virtue of their relation, recoils on the party, as is feelingly expreſſed by that believing woman, Matth. xv. 22. 'Have 'mercy on me, O Lord,—my daughter is grievouſly 'vexed.' Ephraim felt the ſmart of a courſe of family afflictions, when he called his ſon's name Beriah, becauſe it went evil with his houſe, 1 Chron. vii. 23. Since all is not only vanity, but vexation of ſpirit, it can hardly miſs, but, the more of theſe ſprings of comfort are opened to a man, he muſt, at one time or other, find he has but the more ſources of ſorrow to guſh out, and ſpring in upon him; the ſorrow always proportioned to the comfort found in them, or expected from them. And finally, the crook is ſometimes made here by their proving uncomfortable through the diſagreeableneſs of their temper, diſpoſition, and way. There was a crook in Job's lot, by means of an undutiful, ill-natured wife, Job xix. 17. in Abigal's, by means of a ſurly, ill tempered huſband, 1 Sam. xxv. 25. in Eli's, through the perverſeneſs and obſtinacy of his children, chap. ii. 25. in Jonathan's, through the furious temper of his father, chap. xx. 30. 33. So do men oftentimes find their greateſt croſs where they expected their greateſt comfort. Sin hath unhinged the whole creation, and made every relation ſuſceptible of the crook. In the family are found maſters hard and unjuſt, ſervants froward and unfaithful; in neighbourhood, men ſelfiſh and uneaſy; in the church, miniſters unedifying, and offenſive in their walk, and people contemptuous and diſorderly, a burden to the ſpirits of miniſters; in the ſtate, magiſtrates oppreſſive, and diſcountenancers of that which is good, and ſubjects turbulent and ſeditious; all theſe cauſe crooks in the lot of their relatives.

And thus far of the crook itſelf.

II. Having ſeen the crook itſelf, we are in the next place, to conſider of God's making it. And here is to be ſhewn, (1.) That it is of God's making. (2.) How it is of his making. (3.) Why he makes it.

Firſt, That the crook in the lot, whatever it is, is of God's making, appears from theſe three conſiderations.

Firſt, It cannot be queſtioned, but the crook in the lot, conſidered as the crook, is a penal evil, whatever it is for the matter thereof, that is, whether the thing in itſelf, its immediate cauſe and occaſion, be ſinful or not, it is certainly a puniſhment or affliction. Now, as it may be, as ſuch holily and juſtly brought on us, by our ſovereign Lord and judge, ſo he expreſsly claims the doing or making of it, Amos iii. 6. 'Shall there be 'evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it'? Wherefore, ſince there can be no penal evil, but of God's making, and the crook in the lot is ſuch an evil, it is neceſſarily concluded to be of God's making.

Secondly, It is evident, from the ſcripture doctrine of divine providence, that God brings about every man's lot, and all the parts thereof. He ſits at the helm of human affairs, and turns them about whitherſoever he liſteth, 'Whatſoever the Lord pleaſed, that did he 'in heaven and in earth, in the ſeas, and all deep 'places,' Pſal. cxxxv. 6. There is not any thing whatſoever befals us, without his over-ruling hand. The ſame providence that brought us out of the womb, bringeth us to, and fixeth us in the condition and place allotted for us, by him who hath determined the times and the bounds of our habitation, Acts xvii. 26. It overruleth the ſmalleſt and moſt caſual things about us, ſuch as hairs of our head falling on the ground, Matth. x. 29. 30. A lot caſt into the lap, Prov. xvi. 33. Yea, the free acts of our will, whereby we chuſe for ourſelves, for, even 'the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, 'as the rivers of water,' Prov. xxi. 1. And the whole ſteps which we make, and which others make in reference to us; for 'the way of man is not in himſelf; 'it is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps,' Jer. x. 23. And this, whether theſe ſteps cauſing the crook to be deliberate and ſinful ones, ſuch as Joſeph's brethren ſelling him into Egypt; or whether they be undeſigned, ſuch as manſlaughter purely caſual, as when one hewing wood kills his neighbour with the head of the ax ſlipping from the helve, Deut. xix. 5. For there is a holy and wiſe providence that governs the ſinful and the heedleſs actions of men, as a rider doth a lame horſe, of whoſe halting, not he but the horſe's own lameneſs, is the true and proper cauſe; wherefore, in the former of theſe caſes, God is ſaid to have ſent Joſeph into Egypt, Gen. xlv. 7. and in the latter, to deliver one into his neighbour's hand, Exodus xxi. 13.

Laſtly, God hath by an eternal decree, immoveable as mountains of braſs, (Zech vi. 1.) appointed the whole of every one's lot, the crooked parts thereof as well as the ſtraight. By the ſame eternal decree, whereby the high and low parts of the earth, the mountains and the valleys, were appointed, are the heights and depths, the proſperity, and adverſity in the lot of the inhabitants thereof, determined; and they are brought about, in time, in a perfect agreeableneſs thereto. The myſtery of providence, in the government of the world, is in all the parts thereof, the building reared up of God in exact conformity to the plan in his decree 'who worketh all 'things after the counſel of his own will,' Eph. i. 11. So that there is never a crook in one's lot, but may be run up to this original. Hereof Job piouſly ſets us an example, in his own caſe, Job xxiii. 13. 14. 'He is in 'one mind, and who can turn him? And what his ſoul 'deſireth, even that he doth. For he performeth the 'thing that is appointed for me; and many ſuch things 'are with him.'

Secondly, That we may ſee how the crook in the lot is of God's making, we muſt diſtinguiſh between the pure ſinleſs crooks, and impure ſinful ones.

Firſt, there are pure and ſinleſs crooks, the which are mere afflictions, cleanly croſſes; grievous indeed, but not defiling. Such were Lazarus's poverty, Rachel's barrenneſs, Leah's tender eyes, the blindneſs of the man who had been ſo from his birth, John ix. 1. Now the crooks of this kind, are of God's making, by the efficacy of his power directly bringing them to paſs, and cauſing them to be. He is the maker of the poor, Prov. xvii. 5. 'Whoſo mocketh the poor, reproacheth his Maker,' that is, reproacheth God who made him poor, according to that, 1 Sam. ii. 7. 'The Lord maketh poor.' It is he that hath the key of the womb, and as he ſees meet ſhuts it, 1 Sam. i. 5. or opens it, Gen. xxix. 31. And it is he that formed the eye, Pſal. xciv. 9. And the man was born blind, that the works of God ſhould be made manifeſt in him, John ix. 3. Therefore he ſaith to Moſes, Exod. iv. 11. 'Who maketh the dumb, or deaf, 'or the ſeeing, or the blind? Have not I the Lord?' Such crooks in the lot are of God's making, in the moſt ample ſenſe, and in their full comprehenſion, being of his agency, as well as the heavens and the earth are.

Secondly, There are impure ſinful crooks, which, in their own nature, are ſins as well as afflictions, defiling as well as grievous. Such was the crook made in David's lot, through his family-diſorders, the defiling of Tamar, the murder of Amnon, the rebellion of Abſalom, all of them unnatural. Of the ſame kind was that made in Job's lot, by the Sabeans and Caldeans taking away his ſubſtance, and ſlaying his ſervants. As theſe were the afflictions of David and Job, reſpectively, ſo they were the ſins of the actors, the unhappy inſtruments thereof. Thus one and the ſame thing may be, to one a heinous ſin, defiling and laying him under guilt; and to another an affliction, laying him under ſuffering only. Now, the crooks of this kind are not of God's making, in the ſame latitude as theſe of the former; for he neither puts evil in the heart of any, nor ſtirreth up to it; 'He cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth 'he any man,' James i. 13. But they are of his making, by his holy permiſſion of them, powerful bounding of them, and wiſe over-ruling of them to ſome good end.

Firſt, He holily permits them, ſuffering men to walk in their own ways, Acts xiv. 16. Though he is not the author of theſe ſinful crooks, cauſing them to be by the efficacy of his power; yet, if he did not permit them, willing not to hinder them, they could not be at all; for he ſhutteth, and no man openeth, Rev. iii. 7. But he juſtly with-holds his grace, which the ſinner does not deſire, takes off the reſtraint under which he is uneaſy, and, ſince the ſinner will be gone, lays the reins on his neck, and leaves him to the ſwing of his luſt. Hoſ. iv. 17. 'Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone.' Pſal. lxxxi. 11, 12. 'Iſrael would none of me. So I gave 'them up to their own hearts luſts.' In which unhappy ſituation, the ſinful crook doth, from the ſinner's own proper motion, natively and infallibly follow; even as water runs down a hill, wherever there is a gap left open before it. So, in theſe circumſtances, 'Iſrael 'walked in their own counſels,' ver. 12. And thus this kind of crook is of God's making, as a juſt Judge, puniſhing the ſufferer by it. The which view of the matter ſilenced David under Shimei's curſings, 2 Sam. xvi. 10. 'Let him alone, and let him curſe: for the Lord 'hath bidden him.'

Secondly, He powerfully bounds them, Pſal. lxxvi. 10. 'The remainder of wrath' (namely the creature's wrath) 'thou wilt reſtrain.' Did not God bound theſe crooks, howſoever ſore they are in any one's caſe, they would be yet ſorer: but he lays to the ſinful inſtrument, as he ſaid to the ſea, 'Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no 'farther; and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed.' He lays a reſtraining band on him, that he cannot go one ſtep farther, in the way his impetuous luſt drives, than he ſees meet to permit. Hence it comes to paſs, that the crook of this kind is neither more nor leſs, but juſt as great as he by his powerful bounding makes it to be. An eminent inſtance hereof we have in the caſe of Job, whoſe lot was crooked through a peculiar agency of the devil: but, even to that grand ſinner, God ſet a bound in the caſe. 'The Lord ſaid unto Sa'tan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power, only on 'himſelf put not forth thine hand,' Job i. 12. Now Satan went the full length of the bound, leaving nothing within the compaſs thereof untouched, which he ſaw could make for his purpoſe, ver. 18, 19. But he could by no means move one ſtep beyond it, to carry his point which he could not gain within it. And therefore, to make the trial greater, and crook ſorer, nothing remained, but that the bound ſet ſhould be removed, and the ſphere of his agency enlarged; for which cauſe he ſaith, 'But touch his bone and his 'fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face,' chap. ii. 5. And it being removed accordingly, but withal a new one ſet, ver. 6. 'Behold, he is in thine hand, but ſave 'his life;' the crook was carried to the utmoſt that the new bound would permit, in a conſiſtency with his deſign of bringing Job to blaſpheme; 'Satan ſmote him 'with ſore boils, from the ſole of his foot unto his 'crown,' ver. 7. And had it not been for this bound, ſecuring Job's life, he, after finding this attempt unſucceſsful too, had doubtleſs diſpatched him for good and all.

Thirdly, He wiſely over-rules them to ſome good purpoſe, becoming the divine perfections. While the ſinful inſtrument hath an ill deſign in the crook cauſed by him, God directs it to a holy and good end. In the the diſorders of David's family, Amnon's deſign was to gratify a bruitiſh luſt, Abſalom's to glut himſelf with revenge, and to ſatisfy his pride and ambition: but God meant thereby to puniſh David for his ſin in the matter of Uriah. In the crook made in Job's lot, by Satan and the Sabeans and Chaldeans his inſtruments, Satan's deſign was to cauſe Job blaſpheme, and theirs to gratify their covetouſneſs: but God had another deſign therein, becoming himſelf, namely, to manifeſt Job's ſincerity and uprightneſs. Did he not wiſely and powerfully over-rule theſe crooks made in mens lot, no good could come out of them: but he always over-rules them ſo, as to fulfill his own holy purpoſes thereby, howbeit the ſinner meaneth not ſo; for his deſigns cannot miſcarry, his counſel ſhall ſtand, Iſa. xlvi. 10. So the ſinful crook is, by the over-ruling hand of God, turned about to his own glory, and his people's good, in the end; according to the word, Prov. xvi. 4. 'The Lord hath made 'all things for himſelf.' Rom. viii. 28. 'All things 'work together for good to them that love God.' Thus Haman's plot, for the deſtruction of the Jews, was turned to the contrary, Eſth. ix. 1. And the crook made in Joſeph's lot, by his own brethren ſelling him into Egypt, though it was on their part moſt ſinful, and of a moſt miſchievous deſign; yet, as it was of God's making, by his holy permiſſion, powerful bounding, and wiſe over-ruling of it, had an iſſue well becoming the divine wiſdom and goodneſs: both which Joſeph noticeth to them, Gen. l. 20. 'As for you, ye thought evil a'gainſt me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to 'paſs, as it is this day, to ſave much people alive.'

Thirdly, It remains to enquire, why God makes a crook in one's lot. And this is to be cleared by diſcovering the deſign of that diſpenſation: a matter which it concerns every one to know, and carefully to notice, in order to a chriſtian improvement of the crook in their lot. The deſign thereof ſeems to be, chiefly, ſeven-fold.

First, The trial of one's ſtate, Whether one is in the ſtate of grace, or not? Whether a ſincere Chriſtian, or a hypocrite? though every affliction is trying, yet here I conceive, lies the main providential trial a man is brought upon with reference to his ſtate: foraſmuch as the crook in the lot, being a matter of a continued courſe, one has occaſion to open and ſhew himſelf again and again in the ſame thing; whence it comes to paſs, it miniſters ground for a deciſion, in that momentous point. It was plainly on this bottom that the trial of Job's ſtate was put. The queſtion was, Whether Job was an upright and ſincere ſervant of God, as God himſelf teſtified of him; or, but a mercenary one, a hypocrite, as Satan alledged againſt him? and the trial hereof was put upon the crook to be made in his lot, Job i. 8.—12; and ii. 3.——6. Accordingly that which all his friends, ſave Elihu the laſt ſpeaker, did, in their reaſonings with him under his trial, aim at, was to prove him a hypocrite; Satan thus making uſe of theſe good men for gaining his point. As God took trial of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, for the land of Canaan, by a train of afflicting diſpenſations, the which Caleb and Joſhua bearing ſtrenuouſly were declared meet to enter the promiſed land, as having followed the Lord fully; while others being tired out with them, their carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs: ſo he takes trial of men, for heaven, by the crook in their lot. If one can ſtand that teſt, he is manifeſted to be a ſaint, a ſincere ſervant of God, as Job was proven to be: if not, he is but a hypocrite; he cannot ſtand the teſt of the crook in his lot, but goes away like droſs in God's furnace. A melancholy inſtance of which we have in that man of honour and wealth, who, with high pretences of religion, ariſing only from a principal of moral ſeriouſneſs, addreſſed himſelf to our Saviour, to know 'what he ſhould do 'that he might inherit eternal life,' Mark x. 17. 21. Our Saviour, to diſcover the man to himſelf, makes a crook in his lot, where all along before it had ſtood even, obliging him, by a probatory command, to ſell and give away all he had, and follow him, verſ. 21. 'Sell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor—— 'and come, take up the croſs and follow me.' Hereby he was, that moment, in the court of conſcience, ſtript of his great poſſeſſions; ſo that henceforth he could no longer keep them, with a good conſcience, as he might have done before. The man inſtantly felt the ſmart of that crook made in his lot, 'he was ſad at that 'ſaying,' verſ. 22. that is, immediately upon the hearing of it, being ſtruck with pain, diſorder, and confuſion of mind, his countenance changed, became cloudy and louring, as the ſame word is uſed, Matth. xvi. 3. He could not ſtand the teſt of that crook; he could by no means ſubmit his lot to God in that point, but behoved to have it, at any rate, according to his own mind. So he 'went away grieved, for he had great poſſeſſions.' He went away from Chriſt back to his plentiful eſtate, though with a pained and ſorrowful heart, ſat him down again on it, a violent poſſeſſor before the Lord, thwarting the divine order. And there is no appearance that ever this order was revoked, nor that ever he came to a better temper in reference thereunto.

Secondly, Excitation to duty, weaning one from this world, and prompting him to look after the happineſs of the other world. Many have been beholden to the crook in their lot, for that ever they came to themſelves, ſettled, and turned ſerious. Going for a time, like a wild aſs uſed to the wilderneſs, ſcorning to be turned, their foot hath ſlid in due time; and a crook being thereby made in their lot, their month hath come, wherein they have been caught, Jer. ii. 24. Thus was the prodigal brought to himſelf, and obliged to entertain thoughts of returning unto his Father, Luke xv. 17. The crook in their lot convinces them at length, that here is not their reſt. Finding ſtill a pricking thorn of uneaſineſs, whenſoever they lay down their head, where they would faineſt take reſt in the creature, and that they are obliged to lift it again, they are brought to conclude, there is no hope from that quarter, and begin to caſt about for reſt another way. So it makes them errands to God, which they had not before; for as much as they feel a need of the comforts of the other world, to which their mouths were out of taſte, while their lot ſtood even to their mind. Wherefore whatever uſe we make of the crook in our lot, the voice of it is, 'Ariſe ye, and depart, this is not your reſt.' And it is ſurely that, which of all means of mortification of the afflictive kind, doth moſt deaden a real Chriſtian to this life and world.

Thirdly, Conviction of ſin. As when one walking heedleſsly, is ſuddenly taken ill of a lameneſs; his going halting the reſt of his way convinceth him of having made a wrong ſtep; and every new painful ſtep brings it afreſh to his mind: ſo God makes a crook in one's lot, to convince him of ſome falſe ſtep he hath made, or courſe he hath taken. What the ſinner would otherwiſe be apt to overlook, forget, or think light of, is, by this means, recalled to mind, ſet before him as an evil and bitter thing, and kept in remembrance, that his heart may every now and then bleed for it afreſh. Thus by the crook, mens ſins find them out to their conviction, as the thief is aſhamed when he is found, Numb. xxxii. 23. Jer. ii. 26. The which Joſeph's brethren ſo feelingly expreſs, under the crook made in their lot in Egypt, Gen. xlii. 21. 'We are verily guilty concerning our brother,' chap. xliv. 16. 'God hath found out the iniquity of thy ſervants.' The crook in the lot doth uſually, in its nature or circumſtances, ſo natively refer to the falſe ſtep or courſe, that it ſerves for a providential memorial of it, bringing the ſin, though of an old date, freſh to remembrance, and for a badge of the ſinner's folly, in word or deed, to keep it ever before him. When Jacob found Leah, through Laban's unfair dealing, palmed upon him for Rachel, how could he miſs of a ſtinging remembrance of the cheat he had ſeven years at leaſt before put on his own father, pretending himſelf to be Eſau? Gen. xxvii. 10. How could it miſs of galling him occaſionally afterwards during the courſe of the marriage? He had impoſed on his father the younger brother for the elder: and Laban impoſed on him the elder ſiſter for the younger. The dimneſs of Iſaac's eyes favoured the former cheat: and the darkneſs of the evening did as much favour the latter. So he behoved to ſay, as Adonibezek in another caſe, Judg. i. 7. 'As I have done, ſo God hath requited me.' In like manner, Rachel dying in child-birth, could hardly evite a melancholy reflection on her raſh and paſſionate expreſſion, mentioned Gen. xxx. 1. 'Give me children, or elſe I die.' Even holy Job read, in the crook of his lot, ſome falſe ſteps he had made in his youth many years before, Job xiii. 26. 'Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me, and makeſt me to poſſeſs the iniquities of my youth.'

Fourthly, Correction or puniſhment for ſin. In nothing more than in the crook of the lot is that word verified, Jer. ii. 19. Thine own wickedneſs ſhall correct thee. God may for a time wink at one's ſin, which afterward he will ſet a brand of his indignation upon in crooking the ſinner's lot, as he did in the caſe of Jacob, and of Rachel, mentioned before. Though the ſin was a paſſing action, or a courſe of no long continuance, the mark of the divine diſpleaſure for it, ſet on the ſinner in the crook of his lot, may pinch him long and ſore, that, by repeated experience, he may know what an evil and bitter thing it was. David's killing Uriah by the ſword of the Ammonites was ſoon over; but for that cauſe the ſword never departed from his houſe, 1 Sam. xii. 10. Gehazi quickly obtained two bags of money from Naaman, in the way of falſehood and lying; but, as a laſting mark of the divine indignation againſt the profane trick, he got withal a leproſy which clave to him, while he lived, and to his poſterity after him, 2 Kings v. 27. This may be the caſe, as well where the ſin is pardoned, as to the guilt of eternal wrath, as where it is not. And one may have confeſſed and ſincerely repented of that ſin, which yet ſhall make him go halting to the grave, though it cannot carry him to hell. A man's perſon may be accepted in the beloved, who yet hath a particular badge of the divine diſpleaſure, with his ſin hung upon him in the crook of his lot, Pſal. xcix. 8. 'Thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt vengeance on their inventions.'

Fifthly, Preventing of ſin, Hoſ. ii. 6. 'I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall that ſhe ſhall not find her paths.' The crook in the lot will readily be found to lie croſs to ſome wrong bias of the heart, which peculiarly ſways with the party; ſo it is like a thorn hedge or wall in the way, which that bias inclines him to. The defiling objects in the world do ſpecially take, and prove enſnaring, as they are ſuited to the particular caſt of temper in men; but, by means of the crook in the lot, the paint and varniſh is worn off the defiling object, whereby it loſeth its former taking appearance; ſo the fuel being removed, the edge of corrupt affections is blunted, temptation weakened, and much ſin prevented; the ſinner, after gadding about ſo much to change his way, returning aſhamed, Jer. ii. 36, 37. Thus the Lord crooks one's lot, 'That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe, and hide pride from man;' and ſo, 'he keepeth back his ſoul from the pit,' Job xxxiii. 17. 18. Every one knows what is moſt pleaſing to him, but God alone knows what is the moſt profitable. As all men are liars, ſo all men are fools too; he is the only wiſe God, Jude 25. Many are obliged to the crook in their lot, that they go not to theſe exceſſes, which their vain minds and corrupt affections would with full ſail carry them to; and they would from their hearts bleſs God for making it, if they did but calmly conſider what would moſt likely be the iſſue of the removal thereof. When one is in hazard of fretting under the hardſhip of bearing the crook, he would do well to conſider what condition he is as yet in, for to bear the removal of it in a Chriſtian manner.

Sixthly, Diſcovery of latent corruption, whether in ſaints or ſinners. There are ſome corruptions in every man's heart, which lie, as it were, ſo near the ſurface, that they are ready on every turn to caſt up; but then there are others alſo which lie ſo very deep, that they are ſcarcely obſerved at all. But as the fire under the pot, makes the ſcum to caſt up, appear a-top, and run over, ſo the crook in the lot raiſeth up from the bottom, and brings out ſuch corruption as otherwiſe one would hardly imagine to be within. Who would have ſuſpected ſuch ſtrength of paſſion in the meek Moſes as he diſcovered at the waters of ſtrife, and for which he was kept out of Canaan? Pſal. cvi. 32. 33. Numb. xx. 13. much bitterneſs of ſpirit in the patient Job, as to charge God with becoming cruel to him? Job xxx. 21. So much ill-nature in the good Jeremiah, as to curſe not only the day of his birth, but even the man who brought tidings of it to his father? Jer. xx. 14. 15. Or, ſuch a twang of Atheiſm in Aſaph, as to pronounce religion a vain thing? Pſal. lxxiii. 13. But the crook in the lot, bringing out theſe things, ſhewed them to have been within, how long ſoever they have lurked unobſerved. And as this deſign, however indecently proud ſcoffers allow themſelves to treat it, is in nowiſe incoſiſtent with the divine perfections; ſo the diſcovery itſelf is neceſſary for the due humiliation of ſinners, and to ſtain the pride of all glory, that men may know themſelves. Both which appear, in that it was on this very deſign that God made the long continued crook in Iſrael's lot in the wilderneſs; even to humble them, and prove them, to know what was in their heart, Deut. viii. 2.

Laſtly, The exerciſe of grace in the children of God. Believers, through the remains of indwelling corruption, are liable to fits of ſpiritual lazineſs and inactivity, in which their graces lie dormant for the time. Beſides, there are ſome graces which, of their own nature, are but occaſional in their exerciſe; as being exerciſed only upon occaſion of certain things which they have a neceſſary relation to; ſuch as patience and long-ſuffering. Now, the crook in the lot ſerves to rouſe up a Chriſtian to the exerciſe of the graces overpowered by corruption, and withal to call forth to action the occaſional graces, miniſtering proper occaſions for them. The truth is, the crook in the lot is the great engine of providence for making men appear in their true colours, diſcovering both their ill and their good: and if the grace of God be in them, it will bring it out, and cauſe it to diſplay itſelf. It ſo puts the Chriſtian to his ſhifts, that however it makes him ſtagger for a while, yet it will at length evidence both the reality and the ſtrength of grace in him. ‘Ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that periſheth——may be found ‘unto praiſe,’ 1 Pet. i. 6. 7. The crook in the lot gives riſe to many acts of faith, hope, love, ſelf-denial, reſignation, and other graces; to many heavenly breathings, pantings, longings, and groanings, which otherwiſe would not be brought forth. And I make no queſtion but theſe things, howſoever by carnal men deſpiſed as trifling, are more precious in the ſight of God, than even believers are aware of, being acts of immediate internal worſhip; and will have a ſurpriſing notice taken of them, and of the ſum of them, at long-run, howbeit the perſons themſelves often can hardly think them worth their own notice at all. We know who hath ſaid to the gracious ſoul, ‘Let me ſee thy countenance—thy ‘countenance is comely,’ Cant. ii. 14. ‘Thou haſt raviſhed my heart with one of thy eyes,’ chap. iv. 9. The ſteady acting of a gallant army of horſe and foot to the routing of the enemy, is highly prized; but the acting of holy fear and humble hope is in reality far more valuable, as being ſo in the ſight of God, whoſe judgment, we are ſure, is according to truth. This the Pſalmiſt teacheth, Pſal. cxlvii. 11. 12. ‘He delighteth not ‘in the ſtrength of the horſe: he taketh not pleaſure in ‘the legs of a man. The Lord taketh pleaſure in them ‘that fear him, in thoſe that hope in his mercy.’ And indeed the exerciſe of the graces of his Spirit in his people, is ſo very precious in his ſight, that whatever grace any of them do excel in, they will readily get ſuch a crook made in their lot, as will be ſpecial trial for it, that will make a proof of its full ſtrength. Abraham excelled in the grace of faith, in truſting God's bare word of promiſe, over the belly of ſenſe: and God giving him a promiſe, that he would make of him a great nation, made withal a crook in his lot, by which he had enough ado with all the ſtrength of his faith; while he was obliged for good and all to leave his country and kindred, and ſojourn among the Canaanites; his wiſe continuing barren, till paſt the age of child-bearing; and when ſhe had at length brought forth Iſaac, and he was grown up, he was called to offer him up for a burnt-offering, the more exquiſite trial of his faith, that Iſhmael was now expelled his family, and that it was declared, That in Iſaac only his ſeed ſhould be called, Gen. xxi. 12. ‘Moſes was very meek, above all the ‘men which were upon the face of the earth,’ Numb. xii. 13. And he was intruſted with the conduct of a moſt perverſe and unmanageable people, the crook in his lot plainly deſigned for the exerciſe of his meekneſs. Job excelled in patience, and, by the crook in his lot, he got as much to do with it. For God gives none of his people to excel in a gift, but ſome one time or other, he will afford them uſe for the whole compaſs of it.

Now the uſe of this doctrine is threefold. (1.) For reproof. (2.) For conſolation. And, (3.) For exhortation.

Uſe I. Of reproof. And it meets with three ſorts of perſons as reproveable.

Firſt, The carnal and earthly, who do not with awe and reverence regard the crook in their lot as of God's making. There is certainly a ſignature of the divine hand upon it to be perceived by juſt obſervers; and that challengeth an awful regard, the neglect of which forebodes deſtruction, Pſal. xxviii. 5. ‘Becauſe they regard ‘not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his ‘hands, thou ſhalt deſtroy them, and not build them ‘up.’ And herein they are deeply guilty, who poring upon ſecond cauſes, and looking no farther than the unhappy inſtruments of the crook in their lot, overlook the firſt cauſe: as a dog ſnarles at the ſtone, but looks not at the hand that caſts it. This is, in effect, to make a god of the creature: ſo regarding it, as if it could of itſelf effectuate any thing, while, in the mean time, it is but an inſtrument in the hand of God, the rod of his anger, Iſa. x. 5. ordained of him for judgment, eſtabliſhed for correction, Hab. i. 12. O! why ſhould men terminate their view on the inſtruments in the crook of their lot, and ſo magnify their ſcourges! The truth is, they are, for the moſt part, rather to be pitied: as having an undeſirable office, which, for their gratifying their own corrupt affections, in making the crook in their lot of others, returns on their own head at length with a vengeance, as did the blood of Jezreel on the houſe of Jehu, Hoſ. i. 4. And it is ſpecially undeſirable to be ſo employed in the caſe of ſuch as belong to God; for rarely is the ground of the quarrel the ſame on the part of the inſtrument, as on God's part, but very different: witneſs Shimei's curſing of David, as a bloody man, meaning the blood of the houſe of Saul, which he was not guilty of, while God meant it of the blood of Uriah which he could not deny, 2 Sam. xvi. 7. 8. Moreover the quarrel will be, at long-run, taken up between God and his people; and then their ſcourges will find they had but a thankleſs office, Zech. i. 15. ‘I was but a little ‘diſpleaſed, and they helped forward the affliction,’ ſaith God, in reſentment to the heathens crooking the lot of his people. In like manner are they guilty, who impute the crook in their lot to fortune, or their ill luck, which in very deed is nothing but a creature of imagination, framed for a blind to keep men from acknowledging the hand of God. Thus, what the Philiſtines doubted, they did more impiouſly determine, ſaying, in effect, ‘It is not his hand that ſmote us, it was a chance that ‘happened us,’ 1 Sam. vi. 9. And, finally, theſe alſo who, in the way of giving up themſelves to carnal mirth and ſenſuality, ſet themſelves to deſpiſe the crook in their lot, to make nothing of it, and to forget it. I queſtion not, but one committing his caſe to the Lord, and looking to him for remedy in the firſt place, may lawfully call in the moderate uſe of the comforts of life, for help in the ſecond place. But as for that courſe, ſo frequent and uſual in this caſe among carnal men, if the crook of the lot really be, as indeed it is, of God's making, it muſt needs be a moſt indecent unbecoming courſe, to be abhorred of all good men, Prov. iii. 11.

‘ My ſon deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Lord.’ It is ſurely a very deſperate method of cure, which cannot miſs of iſſuing in ſomething worſe than the diſeaſe, however it may palliate it for a while, Iſa. xxii. 13. 14. ‘ In that day did the Lord God of hoſts call to weeping ‘ and to mourning,——and behold, joy and gladneſs, ‘ ——eating fleſh, and drinking wine.——And it was re‘ vealed in mine ears, by the Lord of hoſts, ſurely this ‘ iniquity ſhall not be purged from you, till ye die.’

Secondly, The unſubmiſſive, whoſe hearts, like the troubled ſea, ſwell and boil, fret and murmur, and cannot be at reſt under the crook in their lot This is a moſt ſinful and dangerous courſe. The apoſtle Jude, characteriſing ſome, to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever, ver. 13. ſaith of them, ver. 16. Theſe are murmurers, complainers, namely, ſtill complaining of their lot, which is the import of the word there uſed by the Holy Ghoſt. For, ſince the crook in their lot, which their unſubdued ſpirits can by no means ſubmit to, is of God’s making, this their practice muſt needs be a fighting againſt God, and theſe their complainings and murmurings are indeed againſt him, whatever face they put upon them. Thus, when the Iſraelites murmured againſt Moſes, Numb. xiv. 2. God charges them with murmuring againſt himſelf; ‘ How long ſhall I bear ‘ with this evil congregation, which murmur againſt ‘ me:’ ver. 27. Ah! may not he, who made and faſhioned us without our advice, be allowed to make our lot too without aſking our mind, but we muſt riſe up againſt him on account of the crook made in it; What doth this ſpeak, but that the proud creature cannot endure God’s work, nor digeſt what he hath done? And how black and dangerous is that temper of ſpirit? how is it poſſible to miſs of being broken to pieces in ſuch a courſe? ‘ He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength: ‘ who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath ‘ proſpered?’ Job ix. 4.

Laſtly, The careleſs and unfruitful, who do not ſet themſelves dutifully to comply with the deſign of the crook in their lot. God and nature do nothing in vain. Since he makes the crook, there is, doubtleſs, a becoming deſign in it, which we are obliged in duty to fall in with, according to that, Mic. vi. 9. ‘ Hear ye the rod.’ And indeed, if one ſhut not his own eyes, but be willing to underſtand, he may eaſily perceive the general deſign thereof to be, to wean him from this world, and move him to ſeek and take up his heart’s reſt in God. And the nature and circumſtances of the crook itſelf being duly conſidered, it will not be very hard to make a more particular diſcovery of the deſign thereof. But, alas! the careleſs ſinner, ſunk in ſpiritual ſloth and ſtupidity, is in no concern to diſcover the deſign of providence in the crook: ſo he cannot fall in with it, but remains unfruitful: and all the pains taken on him, by the great Huſbandman, in the diſpenſation, are loſt. ‘ They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty,’ groaning under the preſſure of the crook itſelf, and weight of the hand of the inſtrument thereof: ‘ but none ſaith, ‘ Where is God my Maker?’ they look not, they turn not unto God for all that, Job xxxv. 9. 10.

Uſe II. Of conſolation. It ſpeaks comfort to the afflicted children of God. Whatever is the crook in your lot, it is of God’s making: and therefore you may look upon it kindly. Since it is your Father has made it for you, queſtion not but there is a favourable deſign in it towards you. A diſcreet child welcometh his father’s rod, knowing that, being a father, he ſeeks his benefit thereby: and ſhall not God’s children welcome the crook in their lot, as deſigned by their Father, who cannot miſtake his meaſures to work for their good, according to the promiſe? The truth is, the crook in the lot of a believer, how painful ſoever it proves, is a part of the diſcipline of the covenant, the nurture ſecured by the promiſe of the Father to Chriſt’s children, Pſal. lxxxix. 30. 32. ‘ If his children forſake my law, and walk not ‘ in my judgments——then will I viſit their tranſgreſ‘ ſions with the rod.’ Farthermore, all who are diſpoſed to betake themſelves to God, under the crook in their lot, may take comfort in this. Let them know, that there is no crook in their lot, but may be made ſtraight: for God made it, ſurely then he can mend it. He himſelf can make ſtraight what he hath made crooked, tho’ none other can. There is nothing too hard for him to do. ‘ He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth ‘ the needy out of the dunghill: that he may ſet him ‘ with princes. He maketh the barren woman to keep ‘ houſe, and to be a joyful mother of children,’ Pſal. cxiii. 7. 8. 9. Say not that your crook hath been of ſo long continuance, that it will never mend. Put it in the hand of God, who made it, that he may mend it, and wait on him: and if it be for thy good, that it ſhould be mended, it ſhall be mended; for ‘ no good ‘ thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly,’ Pſal. lxxxiv. 11.

Uſe laſt, Of exhortation. Since the crook in the lot is of God’s making, then, eyeing the hand of God in yours, be reconciled to it, and ſubmit under it, whatever it is. I ſay, eyeing the hand of God in it; for otherwiſe your ſubmiſſion, under the crook in your lot, cannot be a Chriſtian ſubmiſſion, acceptable to God, having no reference to him as your party in the matter.

Object. 1. But ſome will ſay, The crook in my lot is from the hand of the creature; and ſuch a one too as I deſerved no ſuch treatment from. Anſw. From what hath been already ſaid, it appears, that although the crook in thy lot be indeed immediately from the creature’s hand, yet it is mediately from the hand of God; there being nothing of that kind, no penal evil, but the Lord hath done it. Therefore, without all peradventure, God himſelf is thy principal party, whoever be the leſs principal. And albeit thou haſt not deſerved thy crook at the hand of the inſtrument or inſtruments which he makes uſe of for thy correction, thou certainly deſerveſt it at his hand, and he may make uſe of what inſtrument he will in the matter, or may do it immediately by himſelf, even as ſeems good in his ſight.

Object. 2. But the crook in my lot might quickly be evened, if the inſtrument or inſtruments thereof pleaſed; only there is no dealing with them, ſo as to convince them of their fault in making it. Anſw. If it is ſo, be ſure God’s time is not as yet come that that crook ſhould be evened; for if it were come, though they ſtand now like an impregnable fort, they would give way like a ſandy bank under one’s foot; they ſhould ‘ bow down ‘ to thee with their face towards the earth, and lick up ‘ the duſt of thy feet,’ Iſa. xlix. 23. Mean while, that ſtate of the matter is ſo far from juſtifying one’s not eyeing the hand of God in the crook in the lot, that it makes a piece of trial, in which his hand very eminently appears; namely, that men ſhould be ſignally injurious and burdenſome to others, yet by no means ſuſceptible of conviction. This was the trial of the church from her adverſaries, Jer. l. 7. ‘ All that found them ‘ have devoured them, and their adverſaries ſaid, We ‘ offend not, becauſe they have ſinned againſt the Lord, ‘ the habitation of juſtice.’ They were very abuſive, and gave her barbarous uſage; yet would they take with no fault in the matter. How could they ward off the conviction? Were they verily blameleſs in their devouring the Lord’s ſtraying ſheep? No, ſure they were not. Did they look on themſelves as miniſters of the divine juſtice againſt her? No, they did not. Some indeed would make a queſtion here, how the adverſaries of the church could celebrate her God as the habitation of juſtice? But the original pointing of the text being retained, it appears that there is no ground at all for this queſtion here, and withal the whole matter is ſet in a clear light. ‘ All that found them have devoured them, and ‘ their adverſaries ſaid, We offend not: becauſe they ‘ have ſinned againſt the Lord, the habitation of juſtice.’ Theſe laſt are not the words of the adverſaries, but the words of the prophet, ſhewing how it came to paſs that the adverſaries devoured the Lord's ſheep, as they lighted on them, and withal ſtood to the defence of it, when they had done, far from acknowledging any wrong: the matter lay here, the ſheep had ſinned againſt the Lord, the habitation of juſtice, and, as a juſt puniſhment hereof from his hand, they could have no juſtice at the hand of their adverſaries.

Wherefore, laying aſide theſe frivolous pretences, and eyeing the hand of God, as that which hath bowed your lot in that part, and keeps it in the bow, be reconciled to, and ſubmit under the crook, whatever it is, ſaying from the heart, 'Truly this a grief, and I muſt bear it,' Jer. x. 19.

And, to move you hereunto, conſider, (1.) It is a duty you owe to God, as your ſovereign Lord and Benefactor. His ſovereignty challengeth our ſubmiſſion; and it can in no caſe be meanneſs of ſpirit to ſubmit unto the crook which his hand hath made in our lot, and to go quietly under the yoke that he hath laid on: but it is really madneſs for the potſherds of the earth, by their turbulent and refractory carriage under it, to ſtrive with their Maker. And his beneficence to us, ill-deſerving creatures, may well ſtop our mouths from complaining of his making a crook in our lot, who had done us no wrong, had he made the whole of it crooked. 'Shall 'we receive good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not 'receive evil?' Job ii. 10. (2.) It is an unalterable ſtatute, for the time of this life, that nobody ſhall want a crook in their lot: for 'man is born unto trouble, as 'the ſparks fly upward,' Job v. 7. And thoſe who are deſigned for heaven, are in a ſpecial manner aſſured of the crook in theirs, that in the world they ſhall have tribulation, John xvi. 33. for by means thereof the Lord makes them meet for heaven. And how can you imagine that you ſhall be exempted from the common lot of mankind! 'Shall the rock be removed out of his 'place for thee?' And ſince God makes the crooks in mens lot, according to the different exigence of their caſes, you may be ſure that yours is neceſſary for you. (3.) A crook in the lot, which one can by no means ſubmit to, makes a condition of all things the likeſt to that in hell. For there a yoke, which the wretched ſufferers can neither bear nor yet ſhake off, is wreathed about their necks: there the almighty arm draws againſt them, and they againſt it: there they are ever ſuffering and ever ſinning; ſtill in the furnace, but their droſs not conſumed, nor they purified. Even ſuch is the caſe of thoſe who now cannot ſubmit under the crook in their lot. Laſtly, Great is the loſs by not ſubmitting under it. The crook in the lot, rightly improven, hath turned to the beſt account, and made the beſt time to ſome that ever they had all their life long, as the Pſalmiſt from his own experience teſtifies, Pſal. cxix. 67. 'Before I 'was afflicted, I went aſtray: but now have I kept thy 'word.' There are many now in heaven, who are bleſſing God for the crook they had in their lot here. What a ſad thing muſt it then be to loſe this teeth wind for Immanuel's land? But if the crook in thy lot do thee no good, be ſure it will not miſs of doing thee great damage; it will hugely increaſe guilt, and aggravate thy condemnation, while it ſhall for ever cut to the heart, to think of the pains taken on thee, by means of the crook in the lot, to wean thee from the world, and bring thee to God, but all in vain. Take heed, therefore, how you manage it, 'Leſt—thou mourn at the laſt—'and ſay, How have I hated inſtruction, and my heart 'deſpiſed reproof?' Prov. v. 10. 11. 12.

Doct. II. What God ſees meet to mar, we will not be able to mend in our lot. What crook God makes in our lot, we will not be able to even.

We ſhall, 1*ſt*, ſhew God's marring and making a crook in one's lot, as he ſees meet.

2*dly*, We ſhall conſider mens attempting to mend or even that crook in their lot.

3*dly*, In what ſenſe it is to be underſtood, that we will not be able to mend or even the crook in our lot.

4*thly*, Render ſome reaſons of the point.

I. As to the firſt head, namely, &c.

1. God keeps the choice of every one's crook to himſelf: and therein he exerts his ſovereignty, Matth. xx. 15. It is not left to our option what that crook ſhall be, or what our peculiar burden, but, as the potter makes of the ſame clay one veſſel for one uſe, another for another uſe; ſo God makes one crook for one, another for another, according to his own will and pleaſure. Pſal. cxxxv. 6. 'Whatſoever the Lord pleaſed, that did 'he in heaven and in earth,' &c.

2. He ſees and obſerves the bias of every one's will and inclination how it lies, and wherein it eſpecially bends away from himſelf, and conſequently wherein it needs the ſpecial bow; ſo he did in that man's caſe, Mark x. 21. 'One thing thou lackeſt; go thy way, 'ſell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor,' &c. Obſerve the bent of his heart to his great poſſeſſions. He takes notice what is that idol that in every one's caſe is moſt apt to be his rival, that ſo he may ſuit the trial to the caſe, making the crook there.

3. By the conduct of his providence, or a touch of his hand, he gives that part of one's lot a bow the contrary way; ſo that henceforth it lies quite contrary to that bias of the party's will, Ezek. xxiv. 25. And here the trial is made, the bent of the will lying one way, and that part of one's lot another, that it does not anſwer the inclination of the party, but thwarts with it.

Laſtly, He wills that crook in the lot to remain while he ſees meet, for longer or ſhorter time, juſt according to his own holy ends he deſigns it for, 2 Sam. xii. 10. Hoſ. v. 15. By that will it is ſo fixed, that the whole creation cannot alter it, or put it out of the bow.

II. We ſhall conſider mens attempting to mend or even that crook in their lot. This, in a word, lies in their making efforts to bring their lot in that point to their own will, that they may both go one way; ſo it imports three things.

Firſt, A certain uneaſineſs under the crook in the lot; it is a yoke which is hard for the party to bear, till his ſpirit be tamed and ſubdued, Jer. xxxi. 18. 'Thou 'haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed, as a bullock 'unaccuſtomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I ſhall 'be turned,' &c. And it is for the breaking down of the weight of one's ſpirit that God lays it on; for which cauſe it is declared to be a good thing to bear it, Lam. iii. 27. that being the way to make one at length as a weaned child.

Secondly, A ſtrong deſire to have the croſs removed, and to have matters in that part going according to our inclinations. This is very natural, nature deſiring to be freed from every thing that is burdenſome or croſs to it: and if that deſire be kept in a due ſubordination to the will of God, and be not too peremptory, it is not ſinful, Matth. xxvi. 39. 'If it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from 'me; nevertheleſs, not as I will, &c. Hence ſo many accepted prayers of the people of God, for the removal of the crook in their lot.

Laſtly, An earneſt uſe of means for that end. This natively follows on that deſire. The man, being preſſed with the croſs which is his crook, labours all he can in the uſe of means to be rid of it. And if the means uſed be lawful, and not relied on, but followed with an eye to God in them, the attempt is not ſinful either, whether he ſucceed in the uſe of them or not.

III. In what ſenſe it is to be underſtood, that we will not be able to mend or even the crook in our lot?

Negatively, It is not to be underſtood, as if the caſe were abſolutely hopeleſs, and that there is no remedy for the crook in the lot. For there is no caſe ſo deſperate but God may right it, Gen. xviii. 14. 'Is any thing 'too hard for the Lord?' When the crook has continued long, and ſpurned all remedies one has uſed for it, one is ready to loſe hope about it; but many a crook, given over for hopeleſs that would never mend, God has made perfectly ſtraight, as in Job's caſe. But,

Poſitively, We will never be able to mend it by ourſelves; if the Lord himſelf take it not in hand to remove it, it will ſtand before us immoveable, like a mountain of braſs, though perhaps it may be in itſelf a thing that might eaſily be removed. We take it up in theſe three things.

1. It will never do by the mere force of our hand, 1 Sam. ii. 9.——' For by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail.' The moſt vigorous endeavours we can uſe will not even the crook, if God give it not a touch of his hand: ſo that all endeavours that way, without an eye to God, are vain and fruitleſs, and will be but plowing on the rock, Pſal. cxxvii. 1. 2.

2 The uſe of all allowable means, for it will be ſucceſsleſs unleſs the Lord bleſs them for that end, Lam. iii. 37. Who is he that ſaith and it cometh to paſs, when the Lord commandeth it not? As one may eat and not be ſatisfied, ſo one may uſe means proper for evening the crook in his lot, and yet prevail nothing; for nothing can be or do for us any more than God makes it to be or do, Eccleſ. ix. 11.——' The race is not to the ' ſwift, nor the battle to the ſtrong, neither yet bread ' to the wiſe, nor yet riches to men of underſtanding,' &c.

3. It will never do in our time, but in God's time, which ſeldom is ſo early as ours, John vii. 6.——' My ' time is not yet come; but your time is always ready.' Hence that crook remains ſometimes immoveable, as if it were kept by an inviſible hand; and at another time it goes away with a touch, becauſe God's time is come for evening it.

IV. Reaſons of the point.

1ſt, Becauſe of the abſolute dependence we have upon God, Acts xvii. 28. As the light depends on the ſun, or the ſhadow on the body, ſo we depend on God, and without him can do nothing, great or ſmall. And God will have us to find it ſo, to teach us our dependence.

2dly, Becauſe his will is irreſiſtible, Iſ. xlvi. 10.——' My counſel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure.' When God wills one thing, and the creature the contrary, it is eaſy to ſee which will muſt be done. When the omnipotent arm holds, in vain does the creature draw, Job ix. 4.—' Who hath hardened himſelf againſt ' him and proſpered?'

Inference 1. There is a neceſſity of yielding and ſubmitting under the crook in our lot; for we may as well think to remove rocks and mountains, which God has ſettled, as to make that part of our lot ſtraight which he hath made crooked.

2. The evening of the crook in our lot, by main force of our own, is but a cheat we put on ourſelves, and will not laſt, but, like a ſtick by main force made ſtraight, it will quickly return to the bow again.

Laſtly, The only habile way of getting the crook evened, is to apply to God for it.

Exhortation 1. Let us then apply to God for removing any crook in our lot, that in the ſettled order of things may be removed. Men cannot ceaſe to deſire the removal of a crook, more than that of a thorn in the fleſh: but, ſince we are not able to mend what God ſees meet to mar, it is evident we are to apply to him that made it to mend it, and not take the evening of it in our own hand.

Motive 1. All our attempts for its removal will, without him, be vain and fruitleſs, Pſal. cxxvii. 1. Let us be as reſolute as we will to have it evened, if God ſay it not, we will labour in vain, Lam. iii. 37. Howſoever fair the means we uſe bid for it, they will be ineffectual if he command not the bleſſing, Eccleſ. ix. 11.

2. Such attempts will readily make it worſe. Nothing is more ordinary, than for a proud ſpirit, ſtriving with the crook, to make it more crooked, Eccleſ. x. 8. 9. ' Whoſo breaketh a hedge, a ſerpent ſhall bite him,' Ver. 9. ' Whoſo removeth ſtones ſhall be hurt there' with,' &c. This is evident in the caſe of the murmurers in the wilderneſs. It natively comes to be ſo, becauſe at that rate, the will of the party bends farther away from it: and moreover, God is provoked to wreathe the yoke the faſter about one's neck, that he will by no means let it ſit eaſy on him.

3. There is no crook but what may be remedied by him, and made perfectly ſtraight, Pſal. cxlvi. 8—' The ' Lord raiſeth them that are bowed down,' &c. He can raiſe the oldeſt ſit-faſt, concerning which there remains no hopes with us, Rom. iv. 17.—' Who hath ' quickened the dead, and calleth thoſe things which ' be not, as though they were.' It is his prerogative to do wonders; to begin a work, where the whole creation gives it over as hopeleſs, and carry it on to perfection, Gen. xviii. 14.

4. He loves to be employed in evening crooks, and calls us to employ him that way, Pſal. l. 15.—' Call ' upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee,' &c. He makes them for that very end, that he may bring us to him on that errand, and may manifeſt his power and goodneſs in evening of them, Hoſ. v. 15. The ſtraits of the children of men afford a large field for diſplaying his glorious perfections, which otherwiſe would be wanting, Exod. xv. 11.

5. A crook thus got evened is a double mercy. There are ſome crooks evened by a touch of the hand of common providence, while people are either not exerciſed about them, or when they fret for their removal; theſe are ſapleſs mercies, and ſhort-lived, Pſal. lxxviii. 30. 31. Hoſ. xiii. 11. Fruits thus too haſtily plucked off the tree of providence can hardly miſs to ſet the teeth on edge, and certainly will be bitter to gracious ſouls. But, O the ſweet of the evening of a crook got by a humble application to, and waiting on the Lord! It has the image and ſuperſcription of divine favour upon it, which makes it bulky and valuable, Gen. xxxiii. 10.—' For therefore I have ſeen thy face, as though I had ſeen ' the face of God,' &c. chap. xxi. 6.

6. God has ſignalized his favour to his deareſt children in making and mending notable crooks in their lot. His darling ones ordinarily have the greateſt crooks made in their lot, Heb. xii. 6. But then they make way for the richeſt experiences in the removal of them, upon their application to him. This is clear from the caſe of Abraham, Jacob, and Joſeph. Which of the patriarchs had ſo great crooks as they? But which of them on the other hand, had ſo ſignal tokens of the divine favour? The greateſt of men, as Samſon and the Baptiſt, have been born of women naturally barren; ſo do the greateſt crooks iſſue in the richeſt mercies to them that are exerciſed thereby.

Laſtly, It is the ſhorteſt and ſureſt way to go ſtraight to God with the crook in the lot. If we would have our wiſh in that point, we muſt as the eagle, firſt ſoar aloft, and then come down on the prey, Mark v. 36. Our faithleſs out-of-the-way attempts to even the crook, are our fool's haſte, that is no ſpeed; as in the caſe of Abraham's going into Hagar. God is the firſt mover, who ſets all the wheels in motion for evening the crook, the which without him will remain immoveable, Hoſ. ii. 21. 22.

Object. (1.) But it is needleſs: for I ſee that though the crook in my lot may mend, yet it will never mend. In its own nature it is capable of being removed, but it is plain, it is not to be removed, it is hopeleſs. Anſwer. That is the language of unbelieving haſte, which faith and patience ſhould correct, Pſal. cxvi. 11, 12. Abraham had as much to ſay for the hopeleſſneſs of his crook, but yet he applies to God in faith for the mending of it, Rom. iv. 19, 20. Sarah had made ſuch a concluſion, for which ſhe was rebuked, Gen. xviii. 13, 14. Nothing can make it needleſs in ſuch a caſe to apply to God.

Object. (2.) But I have applied to him again and again for it, yet it is never mended. Anſw. Delays are not denials of ſuits at the court of heaven, but trials of the faith and patience of the petitioners. And whoſo will hang on, will certainly come ſpeed at long-run, Luke xviii. 7, 8. 'And ſhall not God avenge his 'own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though 'he bear long with them?' Ver. 8. 'I tell you that he 'will avenge them ſpeedily.' Sometimes indeed folk grow pettiſh in the caſe of the crook in the lot, and let it drop out of their prayers, in a courſe of deſpondency, while it yet continues uneaſy to them: but, if God mind to even it in mercy, he will oblige them to take it in again into them, Ezek. xxxvi. 37.——'I will yet for 'this be enquired of by the houſe of Iſrael, to do it for 'them,' &c. If the removal come, while it is dropt, there will be little ſavour in it; though it were never to be removed while we live, that ſhould not cut off our applying to God for the removal; for there are many prayers not to be anſwered till we come to the other world, and there all our prayers will be anſwered at once, Rom. vii. 24.

DIRECTIONS for rightly managing the application for removing the crook in the lot.

1. Pray for it, Ezek. xxxvi. 37. and pray in faith, believing that, for the ſake of Jeſus, you ſhall certainly obtain it at length, and in this life too, if it is good for you; but without peradventure in the other life, Matth. xxi. 22. They will not be diſappointed that get the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, Rev. xv. 3. And in ſome caſes of that nature, extraordinary prayer, with faſting, is very expedient, Matth. xvii. 21.

2. Humble yourſelves under it, as the yoke which the ſovereign hand has laid on you, Mic. vii. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him, &c. Juſtify God, condemn yourſelves, kiſs the rod, and go quietly under it: this is the moſt feaſible way to get rid of it, James iv. 10. When the bullock is broken and tamed, as accuſtomed to the yoke, then it is taken off, the end being obtained, Pſal. x. 17. 'Thou 'wilt prepare their hearts, thou wilt cauſe thine ear to 'hear.'

Laſtly, Wait on patiently till the hand that made it mend it, Pſal. xxvii. 14. Do not give up the matter as hopeleſs, becauſe you are not ſo ſoon relieved as you would; 'but let patience have her perfect work, that 'ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing,' Jam. i. 4. Leave the timing of the deliverance to the Lord, his time will at length to conviction appear the beſt, and it will not go beyond it, Iſa. lx. 22.——I the Lord will haſten it in his time; waiting on him you will not be diſappointed,——For they ſhall not be aſhamed that wait for me, Iſ. xlix. 23.

Exhortation 2. What crook there is, that, in the ſettled order of things, cannot be got removed or evened in this world, let us apply to God for ſuitable relief under it. For inſtance, the common crook in the lot of the ſaints, viz. indwelling ſin; as God has made that crook not to be removed here, He can certainly balance it, and afford relief under it. The ſame is to be ſaid of any crook, while it remains unremoved. In both caſes apply yourſelf to God, for making up your loſſes another way. And there are five things I would have you to keep in view, and aim at here.

1. To take God in Chriſt, for and inſtead of that thing, with-holding or taking away of which from you makes the crook in your lot, Pſal. cxlii. 4, 5. There is never a crook God makes in our lot, but it is in effect Heaven's offer of a bleſſed exchange to us, ſuch as, Mark x. 21.——Sell whatſoever thou haſt,——and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven. In managing of which exchange, God firſt puts out his hand, and takes away ſome earthly thing from us; and it is expected we put out our hand next, and take ſome heavenly thing from him in the ſtead of it, and particularly his Chriſt. Wherefore has God emptyed his left hand of ſuch and ſuch an earthly comfort? Stretch out your right hand to a God in Chriſt, take him in the room of it, and welcome. Therefore the ſoul's cloſing with Chriſt is called buying, wherein, parting with one thing, we get another in its ſtead, Matth. xiii. 45, 46.——The kingdom of heaven is like a merchant-man ſeeking goodly pearls; ver. 46. Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, he went and ſold all that he had, and bought it. Do this, and you will be more than even hands with the crook in your lot.

2. Look for the ſtream's running as full from him as ever it did or could run, when the crook of the lot has dried it. This is the work of faith, confidently to hang on for that from God which is denied us from the creature. When my father and mother forſake me, then the Lord will take me up, Pſal. xxvii. 10. This is a moſt rational expectation: for it is certain there is no good in the creature, but what is from God; therefore there is no good to be found in the creature, the ſtream, but what may be got immediately from God, the Fountain. And, O but it is a welcome plea, to come to God, and ſay, Now, Lord, thou haſt taken away from me ſuch a creature-comfort, I muſt have as good from thyſelf.

3. The ſpiritual fruits of the crook in the lot, Heb. xii. 11. We ſee the way of the world is, when one trade fails, to fall on and drive another trade; ſo ſhould we, when there is a crook in the lot, making our earthly comforts low, ſet ourſelves the more for ſpiritual attainments. If our trade with the world ſinks, let us ſet to drive a trade with heaven more vigorouſly: ſee if, by means of the crook, we can reach more faith, love, heavenly-mindedneſs, contempt of the world, humility, ſelf denial, &c. 2 Cor. iv. 16. So, while we loſe at one hand, we will gain at another.

4. Grace to carry us under the crook, 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9. For this thing I beſought the Lord thrice. Ver. 9. And he ſaid, My grace is ſufficient for thee. Whether a man be faint and have a light burden, or be refreſhed and ſtrengthened, and have a heavy one, it is all a caſe, the latter can go as eaſy under his burden, as the former. Grace proportioned to the trial is what we ſhould aim at, as getting that, though the crook be not evened, we are even hands with it.

Laſtly, The keeping in our eye the eternal reſt and weight of glory in the other world, 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. 'For our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, 'work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight 'of glory; while we look not at the things which are 'ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen.' This will balance the crook in your lot, be it what it will; while they, who have no well grounded hope of ſalvation, will find the crook in their lot in this world ſuch a weight as they have nothing to counterbalance it; yet the hope of eternal reſt may bear up under all the toil and labour met with here.

Exhortation 3. Let us then ſet ourſelves rightly to bear and carry under the crook in our lot, while God ſees meet to continue it. What we cannot mend, let us bear Chriſtianly, and not fight againſt God, and ſo kick againſt the pricks. So let us bear it,

1. Patiently, without fuming and fretting, or murmuring, James v. 7. Pſal. xxxvii. 7. Though we loſe our comfort in the creature, through the crook in our lot, let us not loſe the poſſeſſion of ourſelves, Luke xxi. 19. The crook in our lot makes us like one who has but a ſcanty coldriſe fire to warm at; but impatience under it ſcatters it, ſo as to ſet the houſe on fire about us, that expoſeth us, Prov. xxv. 28. He that hath no rule over his own ſpirit, is like a city that is broken down, and without walls.

2. With Chriſtian fortitude, without ſinking under diſcouragements, 'nor faint when thou art rebuked of 'him,' Heb. xii. 5. Satan's work is, by the crook, either to bend or break people's ſpirits, and oft-times by bending to break them: our work is to carry evenly under it, ſteering a middle courſe, guarding againſt ſplitting on the rocks on either hand. Our happineſs lies not in any earthly comfort, nor will the want of any of them render us miſerable, Hab. iii. 5. So that we are reſolutely to hold on our way, with a holy contempt and regardleſſneſs of the hardſhips, Job xvii. 9. The righteous alſo ſhall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands ſhall be ſtronger and ſtronger.

Queſt. When is one to be reckoned to fall under ſinking diſcouragements from the crook in his lot? Anſw. When it prevails ſo far as to unfit for the duties either of our particular or Chriſtian calling. We may be ſure it has carried us beyond the bounds of moderate grief, when it unfits us for the common affairs of life, which the Lord calls us to manage, 1 Cor. vii. 24. It is recorded to the commendation of Abraham, Gen. xxiii. 3, 4. Or for the duties of religion, hindering them altogether, 1 Pet. iii. 7. that your prayers be not hindered, Greek, cut off, or up, like a tree from the roots; or making one quite hopeleſs in them, Mal. ii. 13.

Laſtly, Profitably, ſo as we may gain ſome advantage thereby, Pſal. cxix. 71. It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy ſtatutes. There is advantage to be made thereby, Rom. v. 3, 4, 5. and it is certainly an ill managed crook in our lot, when we get not ſome ſpiritual good of it, Heb. xii. 11. The crook is a kind of ſpiritual medicine; and as it is loſt phyſic that purges away no ill humours, but in vain are its unpleaſantneſs to the taſte, and its grippings endured; ſo it is a loſt crook, and ill is the bitterneſs of it wared, that we are not bettered by, Iſa. xxvii. 9. 'By this 'therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this 'is all the fruit to take away his ſin.'

Motives to preſs this exhortation. Conſider,

1. There will be no evening of it while God ſees meet to continue it. Let us carry under it as we will, and make what ſallies we pleaſe in the caſe, it will continue immoveable, as fixed with bands of iron and braſs, Job xxiii. 13, 14. But he is of one mind, and who can turn him? And what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth. Ver. 14. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me: and many ſuch things are with him. Is it not wiſdom then to make the beſt we may of what we cannot mend? Make a virtue then of neceſſity. What is not to be cured muſt be endured, and ſhould with a Chriſtian reſignation.

2. An aukward carriage under it notably increaſes the pain of it. What makes the yoke gall our necks, but that we ſtruggle ſo much againſt it, and cannot let it ſit at eaſe on us, Jer. xxxi. 18. How often are we in that caſe, like men daſhing their heads againſt a rock to remove it? The rock ſtands unmoved, but they are wounded, and loſe exceedingly by their ſtruggle. Impatience under the crook lays an overweight on the burden, and makes it heavier; while withal it weakens us, and makes us leſs able to bear it.

3. The crook in thy lot is the ſpecial trial God has choſen for thee to take thy meaſure by, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. It is God's fire, whereby he tries what metal men are of; Heaven's touch-ſtone for diſcovering of true and counterfeit Chriſtians. They may bear, and go through ſeveral trials, whom the crook in the lot will diſcover to be naught, becauſe by no means they can bear that, Mark x. 21, 22. Think then with thyſelf under it, Now, here the trial of thy ſtate turns; I muſt, by this, be proven either ſincere or a hypocrite. For, (1.) Can any be a cordial ſubject of Chriſt, without being able to ſubmit his lot to him? Do not all who ſincerely come to Chriſt, put a blank in his hand? Acts ix. 6. Pſal. xlvii. 4. And does he not tell us, that without that diſpoſition we are not his diſciples? Luke xiv. 26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple. Perhaps you find you can ſubmit to any thing but that: but that but will mar all? Mark x. 21. Did ever any hear of a ſincere cloſing with Chriſt, with a reſerve or exception of one thing, wherein they behoved to be their own lords?

Queſt. Is that diſpoſition then a qualification neceſſarily prerequired to our believing? And if ſo, where muſt we have it? Can we work it out of our natural powers? Anſw. No, it is not ſo; but it neceſſarily accompanies and goes along with believing, flowing from the ſame ſaving illumination in the knowledge of Chriſt, whereby the ſoul is brought to believe on him. Hereby the ſoul ſees him an able Saviour, ſo truſts on him for ſalvation; the rightful Lord, and infinitely wiſe Ruler, and ſo ſubmits the lot to him, Matth. xiii. 45, 46. The ſoul, taking him for a Saviour, takes him alſo for a Head and Ruler. It is Chriſt's giving himſelf to us, and our receiving him, that cauſes us quit other things to and for him: as it is the light diſpels the darkneſs. Caſe. Alas! I cannot get my heart freely to ſubmit my lot to him in that point. Anſw. That ſubmiſſion will not be carried on in any without a ſtruggle; the old man will never ſubmit it, and when the new man of grace is ſubmitting it, the old man will ſtill be reclaiming, Gal. v. 17. 'For 'the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt 'the fleſh; and theſe are contrary the one to the 'other; ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would.' But are ye ſincerely deſirous, and habitually aiming to ſubmit it? Do ye from the ungracious ſtruggle againſt the crook, turn away to the ſtruggle with your own heart to bring it to ſubmit, believing the promiſe, and uſing the means for it, being grieved from the heart with yourſelves that ye cannot ſubmit it? this is ſubmitting of your lot, in the favourable conſtruction of the goſpel, Rom. vii. 17,—20. 2 Cor. viii. 12. If ye had your choice, would ye rather have your heart brought to ſubmit to the crook, than the crook turned to your heart's deſire? Rom. vii. 22, 23. And do ye not ſincerely endeavour to ſubmit it over the belly of the reluctancy of the fleſh? Gal. v. 17.

2. Where is the chriſtian ſelf-denial, and taking up of the croſs, without ſubmitting to the crook? This is the firſt leſſon Chriſt puts in the hand of his diſciples, Matth. xvi. 24. If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me. Self-denial would procure a reconciliation with the crook, and an admittance of the croſs; but while we cannot bear our corrupt ſelf to be denied any of its cravings, and particularly that which God ſees meet eſpecially to be denied it, we cannot bear the crook in our lot, but fight againſt it in favour of ſelf.

3. Where is our conformity to Chriſt, while we cannot ſubmit to the crook? We cannot evidence ourſelves Chriſtians without conformity to Chriſt. He that ſaith, he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo to walk, even as he walked, 1 John ii. 6. There was a continued crook in Chriſt's lot, but he ſubmitted to it, Philip. ii. 8. And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. Rom. xv. 3. For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf, &c. And ſo muſt we, if we will prove ourſelves Chriſtians indeed, Matth. x. 22. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12.

4. How will we prove ourſelves the genuine kindly children of God, if ſtill warring with the crook? We cannot pray, Our Father,—thy will be done in earth, as, &c. Matth. vi. Nay, the language of that practice is, We muſt have our own will, and God's will cannot ſatiſfy us.

Motive 4. The trial by the crook here will not laſt long, 1 Cor. vii. 31. What though the work be ſore, it may be the better comported with, that it will not be longſome; a few days or years at fartheſt will put an end to it, and take you off your trials. Do not ſay, I will never be eaſed of it, for if ye be not eaſed of it before, ye will be eaſed of it at death, come in the room of it after what will. A ſerious view of death and eternity might make us to ſet ourſelves to carry rightly under our crook while it laſteth.

5. If ye would in a Chriſtian manner, ſet yourſelves to bear the crook, ye would find it eaſier than ye imagine, Matth. xi. 29, 30. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me,——and ye ſhall find reſt to your ſouls. Verſe. 30. For my yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light. Satan has no readier way to gain his purpoſe, than to perſuade men it is impoſſible that ever their minds ſhould ply with the crook; that it is a burden to them altogether inſupportable: as long as ye believe that, be ſure ye will never be able to bear it. But the Lord makes no crook in the lot of any, but what may be ſo borne of them acceptably, though not ſinleſsly and perfectly, Matth. xi. 30. For there is ſtrength for that effect ſecured in the covenant, 2 Cor. iii. 5. Philip iv. 13. and being by faith fetched out, it will certainly come, Pſal. xxviii. 7.

6. If ye carry chriſtianly under your crook here, ye will not loſe your labour, but get a full reward of grace in the other world, through Chriſt, 2 Tim. ii. 12. 1 Cor. xv. 58. There is a bleſſing pronounced on him that endureth, on this very ground, James i. 2. 'Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he 'is tried, he ſhall receive the crown of life, which the 'Lord hath promiſed to them that love him.' Heaven is the place into which the approven, upon the trial of the crook, are received, Rev. vii. 14.——Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. When ye come there, no veſtiges of it will be remaining in your lot, nor will ye have the leaſt uneaſy remembrance of it; but it will accent your praiſes, and ſcrew up your joy.

7. If ye do not carry chriſtianly under it, ye will loſe your ſouls in the other world, Jude 15, 16. Thoſe who are at war with God in their lot here, God will have war with them for ever. If they will not ſubmit to his yoke here, and go quietly under it, he will wreathe his yoke about their neck for ever, with everlaſting bonds that ſhall never be looſed, Job ix. 4.

Laſtly, Whatever crook is in the lot of any, it is very likely there is a public crook abiding the generation, that will be more trying. This is a day of ſinning beyond the days of our fathers, a day wherein God is making great crooks in the lot of the deareſt to himſelf: but theſe ſeem to preſage ſuch a general publick crook to be abiding the generation, as will make our now private ones of very little weight, 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18. Therefore ſet yourſelves to carry rightly under the crook in your lot.

If ye aſk what way one may reach that, for direction we propoſe, DOCTRINE laſt. The conſidering the crook in the lot, as the work of God, is a proper means to bring one to carry rightly under it.

I. What it is to conſider the crook as the work of God, we take it up in theſe five things.

1ſt, An enquiry into the ſpring whence it riſeth, Gen. xxv. 22. Reaſon and religion both teach us, not only to notice the crook, which we cannot avoid, but to conſider and enquire into the ſpring of it. Surely it is not our choice, nor do we deſignedly make it for ourſelves: and to aſcribe it to fortune, is to aſcribe it to nothing; it is not ſprung of itſelf, but ſown by one hand or other for us, Job v. 6. And we are to notice the hand from whence it comes.

2dly, A perceiving of the hand of God in it. Whatever hand any creature hath therein, we ought not to terminate our view in them, but look above and beyond them to the ſupreme Manager's agency therein, Job i. 21. Without this we make a God of the creature inſtrumental of the crook, looking on it as if it were the firſt cauſe, which is peculiar to God, Rom. xi. 36. and bring ourſelves under that doom, Pſal. xxviii. 5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands, he ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up.

3dly, A repreſenting it to ourſelves as a work of God, which he hath wrought againſt us for holy and wiſe ends, becoming the divine perfections. This is to take it by the right handle, to repreſent it to ourſelves under a right notion, from whence a right management under it may ſpring. It can never be ſafe to overlook God in it, but very ſafe to overlook the creature, aſcribing it unto God, as if no other hand were in it, his being always the principal therein.—'It is the Lord, let him do what 'ſeemeth him good,' 1 Sam. iii. 18. Thus David overlooked Shimei, and looked to God in the matter of his curſing, as one would the ax, fixing his eye on him that weilded it. Here two things are to come into our conſideration.

1. The decree of God purpoſing that crook for us from eternity.—'For he worketh all things after the 'counſel of his own will,' Eph. i. 11. the ſealed book in which are written all the black lines that make the crook. Whatever valley of darkneſs, grief, and ſorrow, we are carried through, we are to look on them as made by the mountains of braſs, the immoveable divine purpoſes, Zech. vi. 1. This can be no preſumption in that caſe, if we carry it no farther than the event goes in our ſight and feeling; for ſo far the book is opened for us to look into.

2. The providence of God bringing to paſs that crook for us in time, Amos iii. 6. There is nothing can befal us without him in whom we live. Whatever kind of agency of the creatures may be in the making of our crook, whatever they have done or not done towards it, he is the ſpring that ſets all the created wheels in motion, which ceaſing they would all ſtop; though he is ſtill infinitely pure in his agency, however impure they be in theirs. Job conſidered both theſe, Job xxiii. 14.

4thly, A continuing of the thought of it as ſuch. It is not a ſimple glance of the eye, but a contemplating and leiſurely viewing of it as his work, that is the proper mean. We are to be,

(1.) Habitually impreſſed with this conſideration; as the crook is ſome laſting grievance, ſo the conſideration of this as the remedy ſhould be habitually kept up. There are other conſiderations beſides this, that we muſt entertain, ſo that we cannot always have it expreſsly in our mind: but we muſt lay it down for a rooted principle, according to which we are to manage the crook, and keep the heart in a diſpoſition, whereby it may ſlip into our minds, as occaſion requires, expreſsly.

(2.) Occaſionally exerciſed in it. Whenever we begin to feel the ſmart of the crook, we ſhould fetch in this remedy; when the yoke begins to gall the neck, there ſhould be an application of this ſpiritual ointment. And however often the former comes in on us, it will be our wiſdom to fetch in the latter as the proper remedy: the oftener it is uſed, it will more eaſily come to hand, and alſo be the more effectual.

Laſtly, A conſidering it for the end for which it is propoſed to us, viz. to bring to a dutiful carriage under it. Mens corruptions will cauſe them to enter on this conſideration: and as is the principal, ſo will the end and effect of it be corrupt, 2 Kings vi. 33. But we muſt enter on, and uſe it for a good end, if we would have good of it, taking it as a practical conſideration for regulating our conduct under the crook.

II. How it is to be underſtood to be a proper means to bring one to carry rightly under the crook.

1. Negatively, Not as if it were ſufficient of itſelf, and as it ſtands alone, to produce that effect. But, 2. Poſitively, As it is uſed in faith, in the faith of the goſpel: that is to ſay, a ſinner's bare conſidering the crook in his lot as the work of God, without any ſaving relation to him, will never be a way to carry rightly under it: but having believed in Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo taking God for his God, the conſidering of the crook as the work of God, his God, is the proper means to bring him to that deſirable temper and behaviour. Many hearers miſtake here. When they hear ſuch and ſuch law-con-

ſiderations propoſed for bringing them to duty, they preſently imagine, that, by the mere force of them, they may gain that point. And many preachers too, who, forgetting Chriſt and the goſpel, pretend by the force of reaſon, to make men Chriſtians: the eyes of both being held, that they do not ſee the corruption of mens nature, which is ſuch as ſets the true cure above the force of reaſon, all that they are ſenſible of, being ſome ill habits, which they think may be ſhaken off by a vigorous application of their rational faculties. To clear this matter, conſider, Firſt, Is it rational to think to ſet fallen man with his corrupted nature, to work the ſame way with innocent Adam? that is to ſet beggars on a level with the rich, lame men to a journey with them that have limbs. Innocent Adam had a ſtock of gracious abilities, whereby he might by the force of moral conſiderations, brought himſelf to perform duty aright. But where is that with us? 2 Cor. iii. 5. Whatever force be in them to a ſoul endued with ſpiritual life, what force is in them to raiſe the dead, ſuch as we are? Eph. ii. 1.

Secondly, The ſcripture is very plain on this head, ſhewing the indiſpenſible neceſſity of faith, Heb. xi. and that ſuch as unites to Chriſt, John xv. 5. Without me, i. e. ſeparate from me, ye can do nothing; no not with all the moral conſiderations ye can uſe. How were the ten commands given on mount Sinai? Not bare exactions of duty, but fronted with the goſpel, to be believed in the firſt place; I am the Lord thy God, &c. And ſo Solomon, whom many do regard rather as a moral Philoſopher, than an inſpired writer leading to Chriſt, fronts his writings, in the beginning of the Proverbs, with moſt expreſs goſpel. And muſt we have it expreſsly repeated in our Bibles with every moral precept, or elſe ſhut our eyes, and take theſe precepts without it? That is the effect of our natural enmity to Chriſt. If we loved him more, we would ſee him more in every page, and in every command, receiving the law at his mouth.

Thirdly, Do but conſider what it is to carry rightly under the crook in the lot; what humiliation of ſoul, ſelf denial, and abſolute reſignation to the will of God, muſt be in it: what love to God it muſt proceed from, how regard to his glory muſt influence it as the chief end thereof; and try and ſee, if it is not impoſſible for you to reach it without that faith aforementioned. I know a Chriſtian may reach it without full aſſurance, but ſtill, according to the meaſure of their perſuaſion that God is their God, ſo will their attainments in it be; theſe keep equal pace. O what kind of hearts do they imagine themſelves to have, that think they can for a moment empty them of the creature, farther than they can fill them with a God, as their God, in its room and ſtead! No doubt men may, from the force of moral conſiderations, work themſelves to a behaviour under the crook, externally right, ſuch as many Pagans had, but a Chriſtian diſpoſition of ſpirit under it, will never be reached without that faith in God.

OBJECTION. Then it is ſaints only that are capable of the improvement of that conſideration. ANSW. Yea, indeed it is ſo, as to that and all other moral conſiderations, for true Chriſtian ends; and that amounts to no more, than that directions for walking rightly are only for the living that have the uſe of their limbs; and therefore, that ye may improve it, ſet yourſelves to believe in the firſt place.

III. I ſhall confirm that it is a proper mean to bring one to carry rightly under it. This will appear, if ye conſider theſe four things.

1. It is of great uſe to divert from the conſidering and dwelling on theſe things about the crook, which ſerve to irritate our corruption. Such are the baulking of our will and wiſhes; the ſatisfaction we would have in the matter's going according to our mind; the inſtruments of the crook, how injurious they are to us, how unreaſonable, how obſtinate, &c. The dwelling on theſe conſiderations is but the blowing of the fire within: but to turn our eyes to it as the work of God, would be a cure by way of diverſion, 2 Sam. vi. 9. 10. and ſuch diverſion of the thoughts is not only lawful, but expedient and neceſſary.

2. It has a moral aptitude for producing the good effect. Though our cure is not compaſſed by the mere force of reaſon; yet it is carried on, not by a brutal movement, but in a rational way, Eph. v. 14. This conſideration has a moral efficacy on our reaſon, is fit to awe us into a ſubmiſſion, and miniſters a deal of argument for it, moving to carry Chriſtianly under our crook.

3. It hath a divine appointment on it for that end, which is to be believed, Prov. iii. 6. ſo the text. The creature in itſelf is an inefficacious and moveleſs thing, a mere vanity, Acts xvii. 28. What makes any thing a means fit for the end, is a word of divine appointment, Matth. iv. 4. To uſe any thing then for an end, without the faith of this, is to make a God of the creature; therefore it is to be uſed in a dependance on God, according to that word of appointment, 1 Tim. iv. 4. 5. And every thing is fit for the end for which God has appointed it. This conſideration is appointed for that end; and therefore is a fit means for it.

Laſtly, The ſpirit may be expected to work by it, and does work by it in them that believe, and look to him for it, for as much as it is a mean of his own appointment. Papiſts, Legaliſts, and all ſuperſtitious perſons, deviſe various means of ſanctification, ſeeming to have or really having a moral fitneſs for the ſame: but they are quite ineffectual, becauſe, like Abana and Pharpar, they want a word of divine appointment for curing us of our leproſy; therefore, the Spirit works not with them, ſince they are none of his own tools, but deviſed of their hearts. And ſince the means of divine appointment are ineffectual without the Spirit, theſe can never be effectual. But this conſideration having a divine appointment, the Spirit works by it.

Uſe. Then take this direction for your carrying right under the crook in your lot. Inure yourſelves to conſider it as the work of God. And for helping you to improve it, ſo as it may be effectual, I offer theſe advices.

1. Conſider it as the work of your God, in Chriſt. This is the way to ſprinkle it with goſpel-grace, and ſo to make it tolerable, Pſal. xxiii. 1. 2. 3. The diſcerning of a Father's hand in the crook will take out much of the bitterneſs of it, and ſugar the pill to you. For this cauſe it will be neceſſary, (1.) Solemnly to take God for your God under your crook, Pſal. cxlii. 4. 5. (2.) In all your encounters with it, reſolutely to believe and claim your intereſt in him, 1 Sam. xxx. 6.

2. Enlarge the conſideration with a view of the divine relation to you, and the divine attributes. Conſider it, being the work of your God, and the work of your Father, elder Brother, Head, Huſband, &c. who therefore ſurely conſults your good. Conſider his holineſs and juſtice, ſhewing he wrongs you not; his mercy and goodneſs, that it is not worſe; his ſovereignty, that may ſilence you; his infinite wiſdom and love, that may ſatisfy you in it.

3. Conſider what a work of his it is; how it is a convincing work, for bringing ſin to remembrance; a correcting work, to chaſtiſe you for your follies: a preventing work, to hedge you up from courſes of ſin ye would otherwiſe be apt to run into; a trying work, to diſcover your ſtate, your graces, and corruptions; a weaning work, to wean you from the world, and fit you for heaven.

Laſtly, In all your conſiderations of it in this manner, look upward for his Spirit to render them effectual, 1 Cor. iii. 6. Thus may ye carry chriſtianly under it till God even it either here or in heaven.

PROVERBS xvi. 19.

Better it is to be of an humble ſpirit with the lowly, than to divide the ſpoil with the proud.

COULD men once be brought to believe, that it is better to have their minds brought to ply with the crook in their lot; than to force even the crook to their mind, they would then be in a fair way to bring their matters in that caſe to a good account. Hear then the divine deciſion in that caſe, Better it is to be of an humble ſpirit with the lowly, than to divide the ſpoil with the proud. In which words,

Firſt, There is a compariſon inſtituted, and that between two parties, and two points wherein they vaſtly differ.

1ſt. The parties are the lowly and the proud, who differ like heaven and the centre of the earth; the proud are ay climbing up, ſoaring aloft; the lowly are content to creep on the ground, if that is the will of God; let us view them more particularly as the text repreſents them.

(1.) On the one hand is the lowly. Here there is a line reading and a marginal, both from the Holy Spirit, and they differ only in a letter. The former is the afflicted or poor, that are low in their condition; thoſe that have a notable crook in their lot through affliction laid on them, whereby their condition is lowered in the world. The other is the lowly or meek humble ones, who are low in their ſpirits as well as their condition, and ſo have their mind brought down to their lot. Both together make the character of this lowly party.

(2.) On the other hand is the proud, the gay and high minded ones. It is ſuppoſed here, that they are croſſed too, and have crooks in their lot; for dividing the ſpoil is the conſequent of a victory, and a victory preſuppoſes a battle.

2d, The points wherein theſe parties are ſuppoſed to differ, viz. being of a humble ſpirit, and dividing the ſpoil.

Afflicted and lowly ones may ſometimes get their condition changed, may be raiſed up on high, and divide the ſpoil, as Hannah, Job, &c. The proud may be ſometimes thrown down and cruſhed, as Pharoah, Nebuchadnezzar, &c. But that is not the queſtion, whether it is better to be raiſed up with the lowly, or thrown down with the proud. There would be no difficulty in determining that. But the queſtion is, whether it is better to be a low and humble ſpirit, in low circumſtances, with afflicted humble ones, or to divide the ſpoil, and get one's will, with the proud? If men would ſpeak the native ſentiments of their hearts, that queſtion would be determined in a contradiction to the text. The points then here compared, and ſet one againſt another are theſe.

(1.) On the one hand, to be of a humble ſpirit with afflicted lowly ones. Hebrew, to be of low ſpirit; for the word primarily denotes lowneſs in ſituation or ſtate. So the point here propoſed is to be with or in the ſtate of afflicted lowly ones, having the ſpirit brought down to that low lot, the lowneſs of the ſpirit, balancing the lowneſs of one's condition.

(2.) On the other hand, to divide the ſpoil with the proud. The point here propoſed is, to be with or in the ſtate of the proud, having their lot by main force brought to their mind; as thoſe who, taking themſelves to be injured, fight it out with the enemy, overcome and divide the ſpoil according to their will.

2. The deciſion made, wherein the former is preferred to the latter, Better it is, &c. If theſe two parties were ſet before us, it were better to take our lot with thoſe of a low condition, who have their ſpirits brought as low as their lot, than with thoſe who, being of a proud and high-bended ſpirit, have their lot brought up to their mind. A humbled ſpirit is better than a heightened condition.

DOCTRINE, There is a generation of lowly afflicted ones, having their ſpirit lowered and brought down to their lot, whoſe caſe, in that reſpect, is better than that of the proud getting their will, and carrying all to their mind.

I. We ſhall conſider the generation of the lowly afflicted ones, having their ſpirit brought down to their lot. And we ſhall, 1ſt. Lay down ſome general conſiderations about them.

1. There is ſuch a generation in the world, for as bad as the world is. The text expreſsly mentions them, and the ſcripture elſewhere makes mention of them, as Pſal. ix. 12, Matth. v. 3. with Luke vi. 20. Where ſhall we ſeek them? Not in heaven, there are no afflicted ones there; not in hell, there are no lowly or humble ones there, whoſe ſpirit is brought to their lot. In this world they muſt then be, where the ſtate of trial is.

2. If it were not ſo, Chriſt, as he was in the world, would have no followers in it. He was the Head of that generation whom they all copy after.—— Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, Matth. xi. 29. And for his honour, and for the honour of his croſs, they will never be wanting while the world ſtands, Rom. viii. 29.——'Whom he did foreknow, he alſo 'did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his 'Son.' His image lies in theſe two, ſuffering and holineſs, whereof lowlineſs is a chief part.

3. Nevertheleſs they are certainly very rare in the world. Agur obſerves, there is another generation, (Prov. xxx. 13. Their eyes are lofty, and their eye-lids lifted up,) quite oppoſite to them; and this makes the greateſt company by far. The low and afflicted lot is not ſo very rare, but the lowly diſpoſition of ſpirit is rarely yoked with it. Many a high-bended ſpirit keeps on the bend in ſpite of lowering circumſtances.

4. They can be no more in number than the truly godly are; for nothing leſs than the power of divine grace can bring down mens minds from their native height, and make their will plaint to the will of God, 2 Cor. x. 4. 5. Men may put on a face of ſubmiſſion to a low and croſſed lot, becauſe they cannot help it, and they ſee it is in vain to ſtrive: but to bring the ſpirit truly to it, muſt be then the effect of humbling grace.

5. Though all the godly are of that generation, yet there are ſome of them to whom that character more eſpecially belongs. The way to heaven lies through tribulation to all, Acts xiv. 22.; and all Chriſt's followers are reconciled to it notwithſtanding, Luke xiv. 26.; yet there are ſome of them more remarkably diſciplined than others, whoſe ſpirit however is thereby humbled, and brought down to their lot, Pſal. cxxxi. 2. 'Surely I 'have behaved and quieted myſelf as a child that is weaned of his mother: my ſoul is even as a weaned child.' Phil. iv. 11. 12.——'For I have learned in whatever 'ſtate I am, therewith to be content. I know how to 'to be abaſed, and I know how to abound: every where, 'and in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and

‘ to be hungry, both to abound and to ſuffer need.’

Laſtly, A lowly diſpoſition of ſoul, and habitual aim and bent of the heart that way, has a very favourable conſtruction put upon it in heaven. Should we look for a generation perfectly purged of pride and riſings of heart againſt their adverſe lot at any time, we would find none in this world: but theſe who are ſincerely aiming and endeavouring to reach it, and keep the way of contented ſubmiſſion, though ſometimes they are blown aſide, returning to it again, God accounts to be that lowly generation, 2 Cor. viii. 12. James v. 11.

II. We ſhall enter into the particulars of their character. There are three things which together make up their character.

Firſt, Affliction in their lot. That lowly generation, preferred to the proud and proſperous, are a generation of afflicted ones, whom God keeps under the diſcipline of the covenant. We may take it up in theſe two.

1. There is a yoke of affliction, of one kind or other, oftentimes upon them, Pſal. lxxiii. 14. If there be ſilence in heaven, it is but for half an hour, Rev. viii. 1. God is frequently viſiting them, as a maſter doth his ſcholars, and a phyſician his patients; whereas others are in a ſort overlooked by him, Rev. iii. 19. They are accuſtomed to the yoke, and that from the time they enter into God's family, Pſal. cxxix. 1. 2. 3. God ſees it good for them, Lam. iii. 27. 28.

2. There is a particular yoke of affliction, which God has choſen for them, that hangs about them, and is ſeldom, if ever, off them, Luke ix. 23. That is their ſpecial trial, the crook in their lot, the yoke which lies on them for their conſtant exerciſe. Their other trials may be changed, but that is a weight that ſtill hangs about them, bowing them down.

Secondly, Lowlineſs in their diſpoſition and tenor of ſpirit. They are a generation of lowly humble ones, whoſe ſpirits God has by his grace brought down from their natural height. And thus,

1. They think ſoberly and meanly of themſelves; what they are, 2 Cor. xii. 11.; what they can do, 2 Cor. iii. 5.; what they are worth, Gen. xxxii. 10.; and what they deſerve, Lam. iii. 22. Viewing themſelves in the glaſs of the divine law and perfection, they ſee themſelves a maſs of imperfection and ſinfulneſs, Job xlii. 5. 6.

2. They think highly and honourably of God, Pſal. cxliv. 3. They are taught by the Spirit what God is, and ſo entertain elevated thoughts of him. They conſider him as the Sovereign of the world, his perfections as infinite, his work as perfect. They look on him as the fountain of happineſs, as a God in Chriſt, doing all things well, truſting his wiſdom, goodneſs, and love, even where they cannot ſee, Heb. xi. 8.

3. They think favourably of others, as far as in juſtice they may, Phil. ii. 3. Though they cannot hinder themſelves to ſee their glaring faults, yet they are ready withal to acknowledge their excellencies, and eſteem them ſo far. And becauſe they ſee more into their own mercies and advantages for holineſs, and miſimproving thereof, than they can ſee into others, they are apt to look on others as better themſelves, circumſtances compared.

4. They are ſunk down into a ſtate of ſubordination to God and his will, Pſal. cxxxi. 1. 2. Pride ſets up a man againſt God, lowlineſs brings him back to his place, and lays him down at the feet of his ſovereign Lord, ſaying, ‘ Thy will be done on earth,’ &c. They ſeek no more the command, but are content that God himſelf ſit at the helm of their affairs, and manage all for them, Pſal. xlvii. 4.

5. They are not bent on high things, but diſpoſed to ſtoop to low things, Pſalm cxxxi. 1. Lowlineſs levels the towering imaginations, which pride mounts up againſt heaven; draws a veil over all perſonal worth and excellencies before the Lord; and yields a man's all to the Lord, to be as ſtepping ſtones to the throne of his glory, 2 Sam. xv. 25. 26.

Laſtly, They are apt to magnify mercies beſtowed on them, Gen. xxxii. 10. Pride of heart overlooks and vilifies mercies one is poſſeſſed of, and fixeth the eye on what is wanting in one's condition, making one like the flies, which paſs over the ſound places, and ſwarm together on the ſore. On the contrary, lowlineſs teaches men to recount the mercies they enjoy in the loweſt condition, and to ſet a mark on the good things they have poſſeſſed, or yet do, Job ii. 10.

Thirdly, A ſpirit brought down to their lot. Their lot is a low and afflicted one; but their ſpirit is as low, being through grace brought down to it. We may take it up in theſe five things.

1. They ſubmit to it as juſt, Mic. vii. 9. ‘ I will ‘ bear the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſin‘ned againſt him.’ There are no hardſhips in our condition, but we have procured them to ourſelves; and it is therefore juſt we kiſs the rod, and be ſilent under it, and ſo lower our ſpirits to our lot. If they complain, they have their complaints on themſelves; their hearts riſe not up againſt the Lord, far leſs do they open their mouths againſt the heavens. They juſtify God, and condemn themſelves, reverencing his holineſs and ſpotleſs righteouſneſs in his proceedings againſt them.

2. They go quietly under it as tolerable, Lam. iii. 26.—29. ‘ It is good that a man ſhould both hope and ‘ quietly wait for the ſalvation of the Lord. It is good ‘ for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. He ‘ ſitteth alone, and keepeth ſilence, becauſe he hath ‘ borne it upon him. He putteth his mouth in the duſt, ‘ if ſo be there may be hope.’ While the unſubdued ſpirit rageth under the yoke, as a bullock unaccuſtomed to it, the ſpirit brought to the lot goes ſoftly under it. They ſee it is of the Lord's mercies that it is not worſe; they take up the naked croſs, as God lays it down, without theſe overweights upon it, that turbulent paſſions add thereto; and ſo it becomes really more eaſy than they thought it could have been, like a burden fitted on the back.

3. They are ſatisfied in it, as drawing their comfort from another airth than their outward condition; even as the houſe ſtands faſt when the prop is taken away that it did not lean upon. ‘ Although the fig-tree ſhould ‘ not bloſſom, neither fruit be in the vine—yet I will ‘ rejoice in the Lord,’—Hab. iii. 17. 18. Thus did David in the day of his diſtreſs, ‘ he encouraged himſelf in ‘ the Lord his God,’ 1 Sam. xxx. 6. It is an argument of a ſpirit not brought down to the lot, when one is damped and ſunk under the hardſhips of it, as if their condition in the world were the point whereon their happineſs turned. It is want of mortification that makes mens comforts to waxe and wane, ebb, and flow, according to the various appearances of their lot in the world.

4. They have a complacency in it, as that which is fit and good for them, Iſa. xxxix. 8. 2 Cor. xii. 10. Men have a ſort of complacency in the working of phyſic, though it gripes them ſore: they rationally think with themſelves, that it is good and beſt for them; ſo theſe lowly ſouls conſider their afflicted lot as a ſpiritual medicine, neceſſary, fit, and good for them, yea, beſt for them for the time, ſince it is miniſtered by their heavenly Father; and ſo they reach a holy complacency in their low afflicted lot.

The lowly ſpirit extracts this ſweet out of the bitterneſs in his lot, conſidering how the Lord, by means of that afflicting lot, ſtops the proviſion for unruly luſts, that they may be ſtarved: how he cuts off the by-channels, that the whole ſtream of the ſoul's love may run towards himſelf; how he pulls off and holds off the man's burden and clog of earthly comforts, that he may run the more expeditely in the way to heaven.

Laſtly, They reſt in it, as what they deſire not to come out of, till the God that brought them into it, ſee it meet to bring them out with his good will, Iſa. xxviii.

16. Though an unſubdued ſpirit's time for deliverance is always ready, a humbled ſoul will be afraid of being taken out of its afflicted lot too ſoon. It will not be for moving for a change, till the heaven's moving bring it about: ſo this hinders not prayer, and the uſe of appointed means, with dependence on the Lord, but requires faith, hope, patience, reſignation, 2 Sam. xv. 25. 26.

II. We ſhall conſider the generation of the proud getting their will, and carrying all to their mind. And in their character are alſo three things.

Firſt, Croſſes in their lot. They alſo have their trials alloted them by over-ruling providence; and let them be in what circumſtances they will in the world, they cannot miſs them altogether. For conſider,

1. The confuſion and vanity brought into the creation by man's ſin, have made it impoſſible to get through the world, but men muſt meet with what will ruffle them, Eccleſ. i. 14. Sin has turned the world from a paradiſe into a thicket, there is no getting through it without being ſcratcht. As the midges in the ſummer will fly about thoſe walking abroad in goodly attire as well as about thoſe in ſordid apparel; ſo will croſſes in the world meet with the high as well as the low.

2. The pride of their heart expoſes them particularly to croſſes. A proud heart will make a croſs to itſelf, where a lowly ſoul would find none, Eſth. v. 13. It will make a real croſs ten times the weight it would be to the humble. The generation of the proud are like nettles and thorn-hedges, upon which things flying about do fix, while they paſs over low and plain things: ſo none are more expoſed to croſſes than they, though none ſo unfit to bear them; as appears from,

Secondly, Reigning pride in their ſpirit. Their ſpirits were never ſubdued by a work of thorough humiliation, they remain at the height in which the corruption of nature ſet them; hence they can by no means bear the yoke God lays on them. The neck is ſwollen with the ill humours of pride and paſſion; hence when the yoke once begins to touch it, they cannot have any more eaſe. We may view the caſe of the proud generation here in three things.

1. They have an over-value for themſelves; and ſo the proud mind ſays, the man ſhould not ſtoop to the yoke; it is below them. What a ſwelling vanity is in that, Exod. v. 2. "Who is the Lord, that I ſhould obey his voice?" Hence a work of humiliation is neceſſary to make one take on the yoke, whether of Chriſt's precepts or providence. The firſt error is in the underſtanding, whence Solomon ordinarily calls a wicked man a fool: accordingly the firſt ſtroke in converſion is there too, by conviction to humble. Men are bigger in their own conceit than they are indeed; therefore God, ſuiting things to what we are really, cannot pleaſe us.

2. They have an unmortified ſelf-will ariſing from that over value for themſelves, and it ſays he will not ſtoop, Exod. v. 2. The queſtion betwixt heaven and us, is, Whether God's will or our own muſt carry it? Our will is corrupt, God's will is holy: they cannot agree in one. God ſays, in his providence, our will muſt yield to his; but that it will not do till the iron ſinew in it be broken, Rom. vi. 7. Iſa. xlviii. 4.

3. They have a crowd of unſubdued paſſions taking part with the ſelf-will, and they ſay, he ſhall not ſtoop, Rom. vii. 8. 9. and ſo the war begins, and there is a field of battle within and without the man, James iv. 1.

1ſt, A holy God croſſes the ſelf-will of the proud creatures by his providence, over-ruling and diſpoſing of things contrary to their inclination; ſometimes by his own immediate hand, as in the caſe of Cain, Gen. iv. 4. 5. ſometimes by the hand of men carrying things againſt their mind, as in the caſe of Ahab, to whom Naboth refuſed his vineyard, 1 Kings xxi. 4.

2dly, The proud heart and will, unable to ſubmit to the croſs, or to bear to be controlled, riſes up againſt it, and fights for the maſtery, with its whole force of unmortified paſſions. The deſign is to remove the croſs, even the crook, and bring the thing to their own mind: this is the cauſe of this unholy war, in which,

(1.) There is one black band of helliſh paſſions that marches upwards, and makes an attack on heaven itſelf, viz. diſcontent, impatience, murmuring, fretting, and the like. The fooliſhneſs of man perverteth his way: and his heart fretteth againſt the Lord, Prov. xix. 3. Theſe fire the breaſt, fall the countenance, Gen. iv. 5. let off ſometimes a volley of indecent and paſſionate complaints, Jude 16. and ſometimes of blaſphemies, 2 Kings vi. 33.

(2.) There is another that marches forward, and makes an attack on the inſtrument or inſtruments of the croſs, viz. anger, wrath, fury, revenge, bitterneſs, &c. Prov. xxvii. 4. Theſe carry the man out of the poſſeſſion of himſelf, Luke xxi. 16. fill the heart with a boiling heat, Pſal. xxxxix. 3. the mouth with clamour and evil-ſpeaking. Eph. iv. 31. and threatenings are breathed out, Acts ix. 1. and ſometimes let the hands on work, ſo as has a moſt heavy event, Matth. v. 21. 22. as in the caſe of Ahab againſt Naboth.

Thus the proud carry on the war, but oftentimes they loſe the day, and the croſs remains unmoveable for all they can do; yea, and ſometimes they themſelves fall in the quarrel, it ends in their ruin, Exod. xv. 9. 10. But that is not the caſe in the text. We are to conſider them as,

Thirdly, Getting their will and carrying all to their mind. This ſpeaks,

1. Holy providence yielding to the man's unmortified ſelf-will, and letting it go according to his mind, Gen. vi. 3. God ſees it meet to let the ſtruggle with him fall, for it prevails not to his good, Iſa. i. 5. So the reins are laid on the proud man's neck, and he has what he would be at. Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone, Hoſ. iv. 17.

2. The luſt remaining in its ſtrength and vigour, Pſal. lxxviii. 30. They were not eſtranged from their luſt. God, in the method of his covenant, ſometimes gives his people their will, and ſets them where they would be: but then, in that caſe, the luſt for the thing is mortified, and they are as weaned children, Pſal. x. 17. But here the luſt remains rampant; the proud ſeek meat for it, and get it.

3. The croſs removed, the yoke taken off, Pſal. lxxviii. 29. They could not think of bringing their mind to their lot; but they thwarted with it, wreſtled and fought againſt it, till it is brought up to their mind: ſo the day is their own, the victory is on their ſide.

4. Laſtly, The man is pleaſed in his having carried his point, even as one is when he is dividing the ſpoil, 1 Kings xxi. 18. 19.

Thus the caſe of the afflicted lowly generation, and the proud generation proſpering, is ſtated. Now,

III. I am to confirm the doctrine or the deciſion of the text, That the caſe of the former is better than that of the latter. It is better to be in a low afflicted condition, with the ſpirit humbled and brought down to the lot, than to be of a proud and high ſpirit, getting the lot brought up to it, and matters go to will and wiſh, according to one's mind. This will appear from the following conſiderations.

Firſt, Humility is ſo far preferable to pride, that in no circumſtances whatſoever its preferableneſs can fail. Let all the afflictions in a world attend the humble ſpirit, and all the proſperity in the world attend pride, humility will ſtill have the better; as gold in a dung-hill is more excellent than ſo much lead in a cabinet. For,

1. Humility is a piece of the image of God. Pride is the maſter-piece of the image of the devil. Let us view him who was the expreſs image of the Father's perſon, and we ſhall behold him meek and lowly in heart, Matth. xi. 29. None more afflicted, yet his ſpirit perfectly brought down to his lot, Iſa. liii. 7. He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth.

That is a ſhining piece of the divine image: for though God cannot be low in reſpect of his ſtate and condition, yet he is of infinite condeſcenſion, Iſa. lvii. 15. None bears as he, Rom. ii. 14. nor ſuffers patiently ſo much contradiction to his will, which is propoſed to us for our encouragement in affliction, as it ſhone in Chriſt, For conſider him that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, leſt you be weary and ſaint in your minds, Heb. xii. 3.

Pride, on the other hand, is the very image of the devil, 1 Tim. iii. 6. Will we value ourſelves on the height of our ſpirits? Satan will vie with the higheſt of us in that point; for though he is the moſt miſerable, yet he is the proudeſt in the whole creation. There is the greateſt diſtance between his ſpirit and his lot; the former is as high as the throne of God, the latter as low as hell; and as it is impoſſible that ever his lot ſhould be brought up to his ſpirit; ſo his ſpirit will never come down to his lot; and therefore he will be eternally in a ſtate of war with his lot. Hence, even at this time, he has no reſt, but goes about, ſeeks reſt indeed, but finds none.

Now, is it not better to be like God, than like the devil? Like him who is the fountain of all good, than him who is the ſpring and ſink of all evil? Can any thing poſſibly caſt the balance here, and turn the preference to the other ſide? Then better it is to be of an humble ſpirit with the lowly, &c.

2. Humility and lowlineſs of ſpirit qualify us for friendly communion and intercourſe with God in Chriſt. Pride makes God our enemy, 1 Pet. v. 5. Our happineſs here and hereaſter depends on our friendly intercourſe with heaven. If we have not that, nothing can make up our loſs, Pſal. xxx. 5. If we have that, nothing can make us miſerable, Rom. viii. 31.——If God be for us, who can be againſt us? Now, who are they whom God is for, but the humble and lowly? They who being in Chriſt are ſo made like him. He bleſſes them, and declares them the heirs to the crown of glory. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven, Matth. v. 3. He will look to them, be their condition never ſo low, while he overlooks others, Iſa. lxvi. 2. He will have reſpect to them, however they be deſpiſed: Though the Lord be high, yet hath he reſpect to the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off, Pſal. cxxxviii. 6. He will dwell with them, however poorly they dwell, Iſa. lvii. 15. He will certainly exalt them in due time, however low they lie now, Iſa. xl. 4.

Whom is he againſt? Whom does he reſiſt? The proud. Them he curſeth, Jer. xviii. 5. and that curſe will dry up their arm at length. The proud man is God's rival; he makes himſelf his own god, and would have thoſe about him make him theirs too: he rages, he bluſters if they will not fall down before him. But God will bring him down, Iſa. xl. 4. Pſal. xviii. 27.

Now, is it not better to be qualified for communion with God, than to have him engaged againſt us at any rate?

3. Humility is a duty pleaſing to God, pride a ſin pleaſing to the devil, Iſa. lvii. 15. 1 Tim. iii. 6. God requires us to be humble, eſpecially under affliction—and be clothed with humility,—1 Pet. v. 5. 6. That is our becoming garment. The humble publican was accepted, the proud Phariſee rejected. We may ſay of the generation of the proud, as 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. 'Wrath 'is come upon them to the uttermoſt.' They pleaſe neither God nor man, but only themſelves and Satan, whom they reſemble in it. Now, duty is ay better than ſin at any rate.

Secondly, They whoſe ſpirits are brought down to their afflicted lot, have much quiet and repoſe of mind, while the proud, that muſt have their lot brought up to their mind, have much diſquiet, trouble and vexation. Conſider here, that, on the one hand,

1. Quiet of mind, and eaſe within, is a great bleſſing, upon which the comfort of life depends. Nothing without this can make one's life happy, Dan. v. 6. And where this is maintained, nothing can make it miſerable, John xvi. 33. This being ſecured in God, there is a defiance bid to all the troubles of the world, Pſal. xlvi. 2. 3. 4. Like the child ſailing in the midſt of the rolling waves.

2. The ſpirit brought down to the lot makes and maintains this inward tranquillity. Our whole trouble in our lot in the world riſeth from the diſagreement of our mind therewith: let the mind be brought to the lot, and the whole tumult is inſtantly huſhed; let it be kept in that diſpoſition, and the man ſhall ſtand at eaſe in his affliction, like a rock unmoved with waters beating on it, Col. iii. 15. 'And let the peace of God rule in your 'hearts, to the which alſo ye are called,'——

On the other hand conſider,

1. What diſquiet of mind the proud do ſuffer ere they can get their lot brought up to their mind.—'They 'have taught their tongue to ſpeak lies, and they weary 'themſelves to commit iniquity,' Jer. ix. 5. James iv. 2. 'Ye luſt, and ye have not: ye kill, and deſire to have, 'and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not.' ——What arrows of grief go through their heart? What torture of anxiety, fretting and vexation muſt they endure? What contrary paſſions do fight with them? And what ſallies of paſſion do they make? What uneaſineſs was Haman in, before he could carry the point of the revenge againſt Mordecai, obtaining the king's decree?

2. When the thing is got to their mind, it will not quit the coſt. The enjoyment thereof brings not ſo much ſatisfaction and pleaſure, as the want of it gave pain. This was evident in Rachel's caſe as to the having of children, and in that caſe, Pſal. lxxviii. 30, 31. There is a dead fly in the ointment that mars the ſavour they expected to find in it. Fruit plucked off the tree of providence, ere it is ripe, will readily ſet the teeth on edge. It proves like the manna, kept over night, Exod. xvi. 20.

3. They have but an unſure grip of it; it doth not laſte with them. Either it is taken from them ſoon, and they are juſt where they were again, I gave thee a king in my anger, and took him away in my wrath, Hoſ. xiii. 11. having a root of pride, it quickly withers away: or elſe they are taken from it, that they have no acceſs to enjoy it. So Haman obtained the decree; but ere the day of execution came, he was gone.

Thirdly, They that get their ſpirit brought down to their afflicted lot, do gain a point far more valuable than they who in their pride force up their lot to their mind, Prov. xvi. 32. He that is ſlow to anger, is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his ſpirit, than he that taketh a city. This will appear, if ye conſider,

1. The latter makes but a better condition in outward things, the former a better man. The life is more than meat.—The man himſelf is more valuable than all external conveniencies that attend him. What therefore betters the man is preferable to what betters only his condition. Who doubts, but where two are ſick, and the one gets himſelf tranſported from a coarſe bed to a fine one, but the ſickneſs ſtill remaining, the other lies ſtill in the coarſe bed, but his ſickneſs is removed, that the caſe of the latter is preferable? So, &c.

2. The ſubduing of our own paſſions is more excellent than to have the whole world ſubdued to our will; for then we are maſters of ourſelves, according to that, Luke xxi. 19. Whereas, in the other caſe, we are ſtill ſlaves to the worſt of maſters, Rom. vi. 16. In the one caſe, we are ſafe, blow what ſtorm will, in the other we lie expoſed to thouſands of dangers, Prov. xxv. 28. He that hath no rule over his own ſpirit, is like a city that is broken down and without walls.

Laſtly, When both ſhall come to be judged, it will appear the one has multiplied the tale of their good works, in bringing their ſpirit to their lot; the other the tale of their ill works, in bringing their lot to their ſpirit. We have to do with an omniſcient God, in whoſe eyes every internal action is a work good or bad to be reckoned for, Rom. ii. 16.

An afflicted lot is painful, but, where it is well managed, it is very fruitful; it exerciſes the graces of the Spirit in a Chriſtian, which otherwiſe would lie dormant. But there is never an act of reſignation to the will of God under the croſs, nor an act of truſting in him for his help, but they will be recorded in Heaven's regiſter as good works, Mal. iii. 16. And theſe are occaſioned by affliction.

On the other hand, there is never a riſing of the proud heart againſt the lot, nor a faithleſs attempt to bring it to our mind, whether it ſucceed or not, but it paſſes for an ill work before God. How then will the tale of ſuch be multiplied by the war in which this ſpoil is divided!

Use I. Of information. Hence we may learn,

1. It is not always beſt for men to get their will. Many there are who cannot be pleaſed with God's will about them, and they get their own will with a vengeance, Pſal. lxxxi. 11. 12.—Iſrael would none of me. So I gave them up to their own heart's luſt, and they walked in their own counſels. It may be pleaſanteſt and gratefulleſt for the time, but it is not ſafeſt. Let not people pride themſelves in their carrying things that way then by ſtrong hand; let them not triumph on ſuch a victory; the after-reckoning will open their eyes.

2. The afflicted croſſed party, whoſe lot is kept low, is ſo far from being a loſer, that he is a gainer thereby, if his ſpirit is brought down to it. And if he will ſee his caſe in the light of God's unerring word, he is in better caſe than if he had got all carried to his mind. In the one way the veſſels of wrath are fitted for deſtruction, Pſal. lxxviii. 22. 30. 31. In the other the veſſels of mercy are fitted for glory, and ſo God diſciplines his own, Lam. iii. 27.

3. It is better to yield to providence than to fight it out, though we ſhould win. Yielding to the ſovereign diſpoſal is both our becoming duty and our greateſt intereſt. Taking that way we act moſt honourably: for what honour can there be in a creature's diſputing his ground with his Creator? And we act moſt wiſely: for whatever may be the ſucceſs of ſome battles in that caſe, we may be ſure ſome victory will be on heaven's ſide in the war, 1 Sam. ii. 9.—'for by ſtrength ſhall 'no man prevail.'

Laſtly, It is of far greater concern for us to get our ſpirits brought down than our outward condition raiſed. But who believes this? All men ſtrive to raiſe their outward condition: moſt men never mind the bringing down of their ſpirits, and few there are who apply themſelves to it. And what is that but to be concerned to miniſter drink to the thirſty ſick, but never to mind to ſeek a cure for them, whereby their thirſt may be carried off?

Use II. As you meet with croſſes in your lot in the world, let your bent be rather to get your ſpirit humbled and brought down, than to get the croſs removed. I mean not but that you may uſe all lawful means for the removal of your croſs, in dependance on God; but only that you be more concerned to get your ſpirit to bow and ply, than to get the crook in your lot evened.

Motive 1. It is far more needful for us to have our ſpirits humbled under the croſs, than to have the croſs removed. The removal of the croſs is needful only for the eaſe of the fleſh, the humbling for the profit of our ſouls, to purify them and bring them into a ſtate of health and cure.

2. The humbling of the Spirit will have a mighty good effect on a croſſed lot, but the removal of the croſs will have none on the unhumbled ſpirit. The humbling will lighten the croſs mightily for the time, Matth. xi. 30. and in due time carry it cleanly off, 1 Pet. v. 6. But the removal of the croſs is not a means to humble the unhumbled; though it may prevent irritation, yet the diſeaſe ſtill remains.

Laſtly, Think with yourſelves, how dangerous and hopeleſs a caſe it is to have the croſs removed ere the ſpirit is humbled; that is, to have the means of cure pulled away, and blocked up from us, while the power of the diſeaſe is yet unbroken; to be taken off trials ere we have given any good proof of ourſelves, and ſo to be given over of our Phyſician as hopeleſs, Iſa. i. 5. Hoſ. iv. 17.

For direction, Believing the goſpel, take God for your God in Chriſt for your eternal ſalvation, and then dwell much on the thoughts of God's greatneſs and holineſs and of your own ſinfulneſs, ſo will ye be humbled under the mighty hand of God, and in due time he will lift you up.

1 PETER v. 6.

Humble yourſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time.

IN the preceding part of this chapter, the apoſtle preſſeth the duties of church officers towards the people, and then the duty of the people both towards their officers and among themſelves, which he winds up in one word, ſubmiſſion. For which cauſes he recommends humility as the great means to bring all to their reſpective duties. This is inforced with an argument taken from the different treatment the Lord gives to the proud and the humble; his oppoſing himſelf to the one, and ſhewing favour to the other. Our text is an exhortation drawn from that conſideration: and in it we have,

1. The duty we are therefore to ſtudy, Humble yourſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. And therein we may notice.

(1.) The ſtate of thoſe whom it is propoſed to, theſe under the mighty hand of God, whom his hand has humbled, or ſtated ſomeway low in reſpect of their circumſtances in the world. And by theſe are, I think, meant, not only ſuch as are under particular ſignal afflictions, which is the lot of ſome, but alſo thoſe, who, by the providence of God, are any manner of way lowered, which is the lot of all. All being in a ſtate of ſubmiſſion or dependence on others: God has made this life a ſtate of trial; and for that cauſe he has, by his mighty hand, ſubjected men one to another, as wives, children, ſervants, to huſbands, parents, maſters; and theſe again to their ſuperiors; among whom, again, even the higheſt depend on thoſe under them, as magiſtrates and miniſters on the people, even the ſupreme magiſtrate, being major ſingulis, minor univerſis. This ſtate of the world God has made for taking trial of men in their ſeveral ſtations and dependence on others: and therefore when the time of trial is over, it alſo comes to an end. Then cometh the end—when he ſhall have put down all rule, and all authority and power, 1 Cor. xv. 24. 25. Mean time, while it laſtes, it makes humility neceſſary to all, to prompt them to the duty they owe their ſuperiors, to whom God's mighty hand has ſubjected them.

(2.) The duty itſelf, viz. humiliation of our ſpirits under humbling circumſtances the Lord has placed us in. Humble yourſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. Whether it is we are under particular afflictions, which have caſt us down from the height we were ſometimes in, or whether we are only inferiors in one or more relations, or whether, which is moſt common, both theſe are in our caſe, we muſt therein eye the mighty hand of God, as that which placed us there, and is over us there to hold us down in it; and ſo, with an awful regard thereto, crouch down under it in the temper and diſpoſition of our ſpirit, ſuiting our ſpirits to our lot, and careful of performing the duty of our low ſphere.

(3.) A particular ſpring of this duty therefore we muſt conſider, that thoſe who cannot quietly keep the place aſſigned them of God, in their afflictions or relations, but ſtill preſs upward againſt the mighty hand that is over them, that mighty hand reſiſts them, throwing them down, and often farther down than before, whereas it treats them with grace and favour that compoſe themſelves under it, to a quiet diſcharge of their duty in their ſituation; ſo, eyeing this, we muſt ſet ourſelves to humble ourſelves.

2. The infallible iſſue of that courſe, that he may exalt you in due time. The particle that, is not always to be underſtood finally, as denoting the end or deſign the agent propoſes to himſelf, but ſometimes eventually only, as denoting the event or iſſue of the action, John ix. 2. 1 John ii. 19. So here, the meaning is not, humble yourſelves, on deſign he may exalt you, but---and it ſhall iſſue in his exalting you, Compare Jam. iv. 10.

(1.) Here is a happy event of humiliation of ſpirit ſecured, and that is exaltation or lifting up on high by the power of God, that he, &c. Exalting will as ſurely follow on humiliation of ſpirit ſuitable to the low lot, as the morning follows the night, or the ſun riſeth after the dawning. And theſe words are fitted to obviate the objections that the world and our corrupt hearts are apt to make againſt bringing down the ſpirit to the low lot.

Object. 1. If we let our ſpirit fall, we will lie always among folks feet, and they will trample on us. Anſw. No: pride of ſpirit unſubdued will bring men to lie among the feet of others for ever, Iſa. lxvi. 24. But humiliation of ſpirit will bring them undoubtedly out from among their feet, Mal. iv. 2. 3. They that humble themſelves now will be exalted for ever; they will be brought out of their low ſituation and circumſtances. Caſt ye yourſelves even down with your low lot, and aſſure yourſelves ye ſhall not lie there.

Object. 2. If we do not raiſe ourſelves, none will raiſe us: and therefore we muſt ſee to ourſelves to do ourſelves right. Anſw. That is wrong. Humble ye yourſelves in reſpect of your ſpirits, and God will raiſe you up in reſpect of your lot or low condition; and they that have God engaged for raiſing them, have no reaſon to ſay they have none to do it for them. Bringing down of the ſpirit is our duty, raiſing us up is God's work: let us not forfeit the privilege of God's raiſing us up, by arrogating that work to ourſelves, taking it out of his hand.

Object. 3. But ſure we will never riſe high, if we let our ſpirits fall. Anſw. That is wrong too. God will not only raiſe the humble ones, but he will lift them up on high; for ſo the word ſignifies. They ſhall be as high at length as ever they were low, were they ever ſo low; nay, the exaltation will bear proportion to the humiliation.

(2.) Here is the date of that happy event, when it will fall out. In due time, or in the ſeaſon, the proper ſeaſon for it, Gal. vi. 9.—'In due ſeaſon we ſhall reap, if 'we faint not.' We are apt to weary in humbling trying circumſtances, and ay we would have up our head, John vii. 6. But Solomon obſerves, there is a time for every thing when it does beſt, and the wiſe will wait it, Eccleſ. iii. There is a time too for exalting them that humble themſelves; God has ſet it; and it is the due time for the purpoſe, the time when it does beſt, even as ſowing in the ſpring, and reaping in the harveſt. When that time comes, your exalting ſhall no longer be put off, and it would come too ſoon ſhould it come before that time.

DOCTRINE I. The bent of one's heart, in humbling circumſtances, ſhould lie towards a ſuitable humbling of the ſpirit, as under God's mighty hand placing us in them.

I. Some things ſuppoſed in this. It ſuppoſeth and bears in it, that,

1. God brings men into humbling circumſtances, Ezek. xvii. 24. And all the trees of the field ſhall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree—There is a root of pride in the hearts of all men on earth, that muſt be mortified ere they can be meet for heaven: and therefore no man can miſs, in this time of trial, ſome things that will give a proof, whether he can ſtoop or no. And God brings them into humbling circumſtances for that very end, Deut. viii. 2.—'The Lord 'thy God led thee theſe forty years in the wilderneſs, 'to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was 'in thine heart.'

2. Theſe circumſtances prove preſſing as a weight on the heart, tending to bear it down, Pſal. cvii. 12. Therefore he brought down their heart with labour.—They ſtrike at the grain of the heart, and croſs the natural inclination: whence a trial natively ariſeth, whether, when God lays on his mighty hand, the man can yield under it, or not; and conſequently, whether he is meet for heaven or not.

3. The heart is naturally apt to riſe againſt theſe humbling circumſtances, and conſequently againſt the mighty hand that brings and keeps them on. The man naturally bends his force to get off the weight, that he may get up his head, ſeeking more to pleaſe himſelf than to pleaſe his God, Job xxxv. 9. 10.—They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty: but none ſaith, Where is God my maker? This is the firſt gate the heart runs to in humbling circumſtances, and in this way the unſubdued ſpirits hold on.

4. But what God requires, is, rather to labour to bring down the heart than to get up the head, James iv. 10. Here lies the proof of one's meeting for heaven; and then is one in the way heavenward, when he is more concerned to get down his heart, than up his head, to go calmly under his burden, than to get it off, to crouch under the mighty hand than to put it off him.

Laſtly, There muſt be a noticing of God, as our party, in humbling circumſtances——Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it, Mic. vi. 9. There is an abjectneſs of ſpirit, whereby ſome give up themſelves to the will of others in the harſheſt treatment, merely to pleaſe them, without regard to the authority and command of God. This is real meanneſs of ſpirit, whereby one lies quietly to be trampled on by a fellow-worm, from its imaginary weight: and none ſo readily fall into it as the proud, at ſometimes to ſerve their own turn, Acts xii. 22. Theſe are men-pleaſe[illegible] Eph. vi. 6. with Gal. i. 10.

II. What are theſe humbling circumſtances the mighty hand brings them into. Suppoſing here, what was before taught concerning the crook in the lot's being of God's making, theſe are circumſtances,

1. Of imperfection. God has placed all men in ſuch circumſtances, under a variety of wants and imperfections, Philip. iii. 12. We can look nowhere where we are not beſet with them. There is a heap of natural and moral imperfections about us: our bodies and our ſouls, in all their faculties, are in a ſtate of imperfection. The pride of all glory is ſtained, and it is a ſhame to us not to be humbled under ſuch wants as attend us; it is like a beggar ſtrutting in his rags.

2. Of inferiority in relations, whereby men are ſet in the lower place in relations and ſociety, and made to depend on others, 1 Cor. vii. 24. God has, for trial of mens ſubmiſſion to himſelf, ſubjected them to others, whom he has ſet over them, to diſcover what regard they will pay to his authority and commands at ſecond hand. Dominion or ſuperiority is a part of the divine image, 1 Cor. xi. 7. And therefore reverence of them, conſiſting in an awful regard to that ray of the divine image ſhining in them, is neceſſarily required, Eph. v. 33. Heb. xii. 9. compare Pſal. cxi. 9. The ſame holds in all other relations and ſuperiorities, viz. that they are ſo far in the place of God to their relatives, Pſal. lxxxii. 6. And though the parties be worthleſs in themſelves, that looſeth not one from the debt to them, Acts xxiii. 4. 5. Rom. xlii. 7. The reaſon is, becauſe it is not their qualities, but their character, which is the ground of that debt of reverence and ſubjection; and the trial God takes of us in that matter turns not on the point of the former, but of the latter.

Now, God having placed us in theſe circumſtances of inferiority, all refractorineſs in all things, not contrary to the command of God, is a riſing up againſt his mighty hand, Rom. xiii. 2. becauſe it is mediately upon us for that effect, though it is man's hand that is immediately upon us.

3. Of contradiction, tending directly to baulk us of our will. This was a part of our Lord's ſtate of humiliation, and the apoſtle ſuppoſes it will be a part of ours too, Heb. xii. 3. There is a perfect harmony in heaven, no one to contradict another there; for they are in their ſtate of retribution and exaltation: but we are here in our ſtate of trial and humiliation, and therefore cannot miſs of contradiction, be we placed ever ſo high.

Whether theſe contradictions be juſt or unjuſt, God tryſtes men with them to humble them, break them off from addictedneſs to their own will, and to teach them reſignation and ſelf-denial. They are in their own nature humbling, and much the ſame to us, as the breaking of a horſe or a bullock is to them. And I believe there are many caſes in which there can be no accounting for them, but by recurring to this uſe God has for them.

4. Of affliction, Prov. xvi. 19. Proſperity puffs up ſinners with pride; and O but it is hard to keep a low ſpirit with a high and proſperous lot. But God by affliction calls men down from their heights to ſit in the duſt, plucks away their jay-feathers wherein they prided themſelves, rubs the paint and varniſh from off the creature, whereby it appears more in its native deformity. There are various kinds of affliction, ſome more, ſome leſs humbling, but all of them are humbling.

Wherefore, not to lower the ſpirit under the affliction, is to pretend to riſe up when God is caſting and holding down, with a witneſs, and cannot miſs, if continued in, to provoke the Lord to break us in pieces, Ezek. xxiv. 13. For the afflicting hand is mighty.

Laſtly, Of ſin as the puniſhment of ſin. We may allude to that, Job xxx. 19. All the ſin in the world is a puniſhment of Adam's firſt ſin. Man threw himſelf into the mire at firſt, and now he is juſtly left weltering in it. Men wilfully make one falſe ſtep, and for that cauſe they are juſtly left to make another worſe; and ſin hangs about all, even the beſt. And this is over-ruled of God for our humiliation, that we may be aſhamed, and never open our mouth any more. Wherefore, not to be humble under our ſinfulneſs, is to riſe up againſt the mighty hand of God, and juſtify all our ſinful departings from him, as loſt to all ſenſe of duty, and void of ſhame.

III. What it is, in humbling circumſtances, to humble ourſelves under the mighty hand of God. This is the great thing to be aimed at in our humbling circumſtances: and we may take it up in theſe eight things.

1. Noticing the mighty hand, as employed in bringing about every thing that concerns us, either in the way of efficacy or permiſſion, 1 Sam. iii. 18.——'And he ſaid, It is the Lord: let him do what ſeemeth him good.' 2 Sam. xvi. 10. 'And the king ſaid,—The Lord hath ſaid unto him, curſe David: who ſhall then ſay, Wherefore haſt thou done ſo?' He is the fountain of all perfection, but we muſt trace our imperfections to his ſovereign will. It is he that has poſted every one in their relations by his providence; without him we could not meet with ſuch contradictions; for 'the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whitherſoever he pleaſeth,' Prov. xxi. 1. He ſends on afflictions, and he juſtly puniſhes one ſin with another, Iſa. vi. 10.

2. A ſenſe of our own worthleſſneſs and nothingneſs before him, Pſal. cxliv. 3. Looking to the infinite majeſty of the mighty hand dealing with us, we ſhould ſay, with Abraham, Gen. xviii. 27. 'Behold I am but duſt and aſhes,' and ſay Amen to the cry, Iſa. xl. 6.——'All fleſh is graſs,' &c. The keeping up of thoughts of our own excellency, under the preſſures of the mighty hand, is the very thing that ſwells the heart in pride, cauſing it to riſe up againſt it. And it is the letting of all ſuch thoughts of ourſelves fall before the eyes of his glory, that is the humbling required.

3. A ſenſe of our guilt and filthineſs, Rom. iii. 10. Iſa. lxiv. 6. The mighty hand doth not preſs us down, but as ſinners; it is meet then that under it we ſee our ſinfulneſs; our guilt, whereby we will appear criminals juſtly cauſed to ſuffer; our filthineſs, whereupon we may be brought to lothe ourſelves: and then we will think nothing lays us lower than we well deſerve. It is the over-looking our ſinfulneſs that ſuffers the proud heart to ſwell.

4. A ſilent ſubmiſſion under the hand of God. His ſovereignty challengeth this of us, Rom. ix. 20. 'Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God?'——And nothing but unſubdued height and pride of ſpirit, can allow us to anſwer again under the ſovereign hand. A view of the ſovereign hand humbled and awed the Pſalmiſt into a ſubmiſſion, with a profound ſilence, Pſal. xxxix. 9. 'I was dumb, I opened not my mouth; becauſe thou didſt it.' Job i. 21.——'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the name of the Lord.' And xl. 4. 5.——'What ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer: yea, twice, but I will proceed no farther.' Eli, 1 Sam. iii. 18. 'It is the Lord: let him do what ſeemeth him good.'

5. A magnifying of his mercies towards us in the midſt of all his proceedings againſt us, Pſal. cxliv. 3. Has he laid us low? If we be duly humbled, we will wonder he has laid us no lower, Ezra ix. 13. For, however low the humble are laid, they will ſee they are not yet ſo low as their ſins deſerve, Lam. iii. 22.

6. A holy and ſilent admiration of the ways and counſels of God, as to us unſearchable, Rom. xi. 33. Pride of heart thinks nothing too high for the man, and ſo arraigns before its tribunal the divine proceedings, pretends to ſee through them, cenſures freely and condemns: but humiliation of ſpirit diſpoſes a man to think awfully and honourably of the myſteries of providence he is not able to ſee through.

7. A forgetting and laying aſide before the Lord all our dignity, whereby we excel others, Rev. iv. 10. Pride feeds itſelf on the man's real or imaginary perſonal excellency and dignity, and, being ſo inured to it before others, cannot forget it before God. Luke xviii. 11.——'God, I thank thee, I am not as other men.'——But humiliation of ſpirit makes it all to evaniſh before him, as doth the ſhadow before the ſhining ſun, and it lays the man in his own eyes, lower than any. Surely I am more brutiſh than any man, and have not the underſtanding of a man, Prov. xxx. 2.

Laſtly, A ſubmitting readily to the meaneſt offices requiſite in or agreeable to our circumſtances. Pride at every turn finds ſomething that is below the man to condeſcend or ſtoop to, meaſuring by his own mind and will, not by the circumſtances God has placed him in. But humility meaſures by the circumſtances one is placed in, and readily falls in with what they require. Hereof our Saviour gave us an example, (Phil. ii. 8. He humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death,) to be imitated, John xiii. 14. If I then your Lord and Maſter, have waſhed your feet, ye ought alſo to waſh one anothers feet.

Use. Let the bent of your heart then, in all your humbling circumſtances, be towards the humbling of your ſpirit, as under the mighty hand of God. This lies in two things.

1. Carefully notice all your humbling circumſtances, and overlook none of them. Obſerve your imperfections, inferiority in relations, contradictions you meet with, your afflictions, uncertainty of all things about you, and your ſinfulneſs. Look through them deſignedly, and conſider the ſteps of the conduct of providence toward you in theſe, that ye may know yourſelves, and may not be ſtrangers at home, blind to your own real ſtate and caſe.

2. Obſerving what theſe circumſtances do require of you, as ſuitable to them, bend your endeavours towards it, to bring your ſpirits into that temper of humiliation, that as your lot is really low in all theſe reſpects, your ſpirits may be low too, as under the mighty hand of God. Let this be your great aim through your whole life, your exerciſe every day.

Motive 1. God is certainly at work to humble one and all of us. However high any are lifted up in this world, providence has hung certain badges for humiliation on them, whether they will notice them or not, Iſ. xl. 6. Now it is our duty to fall in with the deſign of providence, that while God is humbling us, we may be humbling ourſelves, and that we may not receive humbling diſpenſations in vain.

2. The humiliation of our ſpirits will not take effect without our own agency therein: while God is working on us that way, we muſt work together with him; for he works on us as rational agents, who being moved, move themſelves, Phil. ii. 12. 13. God by his providence may force down our lot and condition without us; but the ſpirit muſt come down voluntarily and of choice, or not at all: therefore ſtrike in with humbling providences in humbling yourſelves, as mariners ſpread out their ſails when the wind begins to blow, that they may go away before it.

If ye do not, ye reſiſt the mighty hand of God, Acts vii. 51. Ye reſiſt in ſo far as ye do not yield, but ſtand as a rock, keeping your ground againſt your Maker in humbling providences, Jer. v. 3.—' Thou haſt ſtricken them, but they have not grieved; thou haſt conſumed them, but they have refuſed to receive correction. They have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refuſed to return.' Much more when ye work againſt him to force up your condition, which ye may ſee God means to hold down. And of this reſiſtance conſider,

(1.) The ſinfulneſs, what an evil thing it is. It is a direct fighting againſt God, a ſhaking off of ſubjection to our ſovereign Lord, and a riſing in rebellion againſt him, Iſa. xlv. 9.

(2.) The folly of it, How unequal is the match? How can the ſtruggle end well? Job ix. 4. What elſe can poſſibly be the iſſue of the potſherds of the earth daſhing againſt the Rock of ages, but that they be broken to pieces? We may ſay, as Job xli. 8. All men muſt certainly bow and break under the mighty hand.

4. This is the time of humiliation, even the time of this life. Every thing is beautiful in its ſeaſon, and the bringing down of the ſpirit now is beautiful, as in the time thereof, even as the ploughing and ſowing of the ground is in the ſpring. Conſider,

(1.) Humiliation of ſpirit is in the ſight of God of great price, 1 Pet. iii. 4. As he has a ſpecial averſion to pride of heart, he has a ſpecial liking of heart-humility, chap. v. 5. The humbling of ſinners, and bringing them down from their heights, wherein the corruption of their nature has ſet them, is the great end of his word, and of his providences.

(2.) It is no eaſy thing to humble mens ſpirits; it is not little that will do it; it is a work that is not ſoon done. There is need of a digging deep for a thorough humiliation in the work of converſion, Luke vi. 48. Many a ſtroke muſt be given at the root of the tree of the natural pride of the heart, ere it fall; oft times it ſeems to be fallen, and yet it riſes again. And, even when the root ſtroke is given in believers, the rod of pride buds again, ſo there is ſtill an occaſion for new humbling work.

(3.) The whole time of this life is appointed for humiliation. This was ſignified by the forty years the Iſraelites had in the wilderneſs, Deut. viii. 2. It was ſo to Chriſt, and therefore it muſt be ſo to men, Heb. xii. 2. And in that time they muſt either be formed according to his image, or elſe appear as reprobate ſilver that will not take it on by any means, Rom. viii. 29. So that whatever lifting up men may now and then get in this life, the habitual courſe of it will be ſtill humbling.

(4.) There is no humbling after, Rev. xxii. 11. If the pride of the heart be not brought down in this life, it will never be: no kindly humiliation is to be expected in the other life. There the proud will be broken in pieces, but not ſoftened; their lot and condition will be brought to the loweſt paſs, but the unhumbleneſs of their ſpirits will ſtill remain, whence they will be in eternal agonies, through the oppoſition betwixt their ſpirits and lot, Rev. xvi. 21.

Wherefore beware leſt ye ſit your time of humiliation; humbled we muſt be, or we are gone for ever; and this is the time, the only time of it; therefore make your hay while the ſun ſhines: ſtrike in with humbling providences, and fight not againſt them while ye have them, Acts xiii. 41. The ſeaſon of grace will not laſte; if ye ſleep in the ſeed-time, ye will beg in harveſt.

5. This is the way to turn humbling circumſtances to a good account: ſo that, inſtead of being loſers, ye would be gainers by them, Pſal. cxix. 17. It is good for me that I have been afflicted. Would ye gather grapes of theſe thorns and thiſtles, ſet yourſelves to get your ſpirits humbled by them.

(1.) Humiliation of ſpirit is a moſt valuable thing in itſelf, Prov. xvi. 32. It cannot be bought too dear. Whatever one is made to ſuffer, if his ſpirit is thereby duly brought down, he has what is well worth bearing all the hardſhip for, 1 Pet. iii. 4.

(2.) Humility of ſpirit brings many advantages along with it. It is a fruitful bough, well loaden, wherever it is. It contributes to one's eaſe under the croſs, Matth. xi. 30. Lam. iii. 27. 28. 29. It is a ſacrifice particularly acceptable to God, Pſal. li. 17. The eye of God is particularly on ſuch for good, Iſa. lxvi. 2.—To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word. Yea, he dwells with them, Iſa. lvii. 15. And it carries a line of wiſdom through one's whole conduct, Prov. xi. 2. With the lowly is wiſdom.

Laſtly, Conſider it is a mighty hand that is at work with us; the hand of the mighty God: let us then bend our ſpirits towards a compliance with it, and not wreſtle againſt it. Conſider,

(1.) We muſt fall under it. Since the deſign of it is to bring us down, we cannot ſtand before it; for it cannot miſcarry in its deſigns, Iſ. xlvi. 10.——My counſel ſhall ſtand. So fall before it we muſt, either in the way of duty or judgment, Pſal. xlvi. 4. 'Thine arrows are ſharp in the heart of the king's enemies, whereby the people fall under thee.'

(2.) They that are ſo wiſe as to fall in humiliation under the mighty hand, be they never ſo low, the ſame hand will raiſe them up again, James iv. 10. In a word, be the proud never ſo high, God will bring them down. Be the humble never ſo low, God will raiſe them up.

Directions for reaching this humiliation.

I. General DIRECTIONS.

Direction 1. Fix it in your heart to ſeek ſome ſpiritual improvement of the conduct of providence towards you, Micah vi. 9. Till once your heart get a ſet that way, your humiliation is not to be expected, Hoſ. xiv. 9. But nothing more reaſonable, if we would act either like men or Chriſtians, than to aim at turning what is ſo grievous to the fleſh unto the profit of the ſpirit; that if we are loſers at one hand, we may be gainers at another.

2. Settle the matter of your eternal ſalvation, in the firſt place, by betaking yourſelf to Chriſt, and taking God for your God in him, according to the goſpel offer, Hoſ. ii. 19. Heb. viii. 10. Let your humbling circumſtances move you to this, that while the creature dries up you may go to the fountain: for it is impoſſible to reach due humiliation under the mighty hand, without faith in him as your God and Friend, Heb. xi. 6. 1 John iv. 19.

Laſtly, Uſe the means of ſoul-humbling in the faith of the promiſe, Pſal xxviii. 7. Moſes ſmiting the rock in the faith of the promiſe, made waters guſh out, which otherwiſe would not at all appeared. Let us do likewiſe in dealing with our rocky hearts. They muſt be laid on the ſoft bed of the goſpel, and ſtruck there, as Joel, ii. 13.—Turn to the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful.—or they will never kindly break or fall in humiliation.

II. Particular DIRECTIONS.

1. Aſſure yourſelves that there are no circumſtances ſo humbling that you are in, bnt you may get your heart acceptably brought down to them, 1 Cor x. 13. But God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above what ye are able, but will with the temptation, alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it, This is truth, 2 Cor. xii. 9.—My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs.—And you would be perſuaded of it with application to yourſelves, if ever you would reach the end, Phil. iv. 13. ‘I can ‘ do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.’ God allows you to be perſuaded of it, whatever is your weakneſs and the difficulty of the taſk:—‘For our ‘ ſakes this is written: that he that ploweth ſhould ‘ plow in hope, and he that threſheth in hope, ſhould ‘ be partaker of his hope,’ 1 Cor. ix. 10. And the belief thereof is a piece of the life of faith, 2 Tim. ii. 1. If you have no hope of ſucceſs, your endeavours, as they will be heartleſs, ſo they will be vain. Wherefore lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees, Heb. xii. 12.

Whatever hand is, or is not, in your humbling circumſtances, do you take God for your party, and conſider yourſelves therein as under his mighty hand, Micah vi. 9. Men in their humbling circumſtances overlook God: ſo they find not themſelves called to humility under them: they fix their eyes on the creature-inſtrument, and, inſtead of humility, their hearts riſe. But take him for your party, that ye may remember the battle, and do no more, Job xli. 8.

3. Be much in the thoughts of God's infinite greatneſs: conſider his holineſs and majeſty, fit to awe you into deepeſt humiliation, Iſa. vi. 3.—5. Job met with many humbling providences in his caſe, but he was never ſufficiently humbled under them, till the Lord made a new diſcovery of himſelf unto him, in his infinite majeſty and greatneſs. He kept his ground againſt his friends, and ſtood to his point, till the Lord took that method with him. It was begun with thunder, Job. xxxvii. 1. 2. Then followed God's voice out of the whirlwind, chap. xxxviii. 1. whereon Job is brought down, chap. xl. 4. 5. It is renewed till he is farther humbled, chap. xl. 5. 6. ‘Wherefore I abhor myſelf, ‘ and repent in duſt and aſhes.’

4. Inure yourſelves ſilently to admit myſteries in the conduct of providence towards you, which you are not able to comprehend, but will adore, Rom. xi. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! That was the firſt word God ſaid to Job, chap. xxxviii. 2. ‘Who is this that darkeneth ‘ counſel by words without knowledge?’ It took him by the heart, ſtuck with him, and he comes over it again, chap. xlii. 3. as that which particularly brought him to his knees to the duſt. Even in theſe ſteps of providence, which we ſeem to ſee far into, we may well allow, there are ſome myſteries beyond what we ſee. And, in theſe which are perplexing and puzzling, ſovereignty ſhould ſilence us; his infinite wiſdom ſhould ſatisfy, though we cannot ſee.

5. Be much in the thoughts of your ſinfulneſs, Job xl. 4. Behold I am vile! what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. It is overlooking of that which gives us ſo much ado with humbling circumſtances. While the eyes are held, that they cannot ſee ſin, the heart riſeth againſt them; but when they are opened, it falls. Wherefore, whenever God is dealing with you in humbling diſpenſations, turn your eyes, upon that occaſion, on the ſinfulneſs of your nature, heart, and life, and that will help forward your humiliation.

6. Settle it in your heart, that there is need of all the humbling circumſtances you are put in. This is truth, 1 Pet. i. 6.—‘Though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) “ ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations.’ God brings no needleſs trials upon us, afflicts none but as their need requires, Lam. iii. 33. ‘For he doth not ‘ afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.’ That is an obſervable difference betwixt our earthly and heavenly Father's correction, Heb. xii. 10.—— they after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. Look to the temper of your own hearts and nature, how apt to be lift up, forget God, carried away with the vanities of this world what fooliſhneſs is bound up in your hearts. Thus you will ſee the need of humbling circumſtances for ballaſt, and of the rod for the fool's back; and if at any time, you cannot ſee that need, believe it on the ground of God's infinite wiſdom, that does nothing in vain.

7. Believe a kind deſign of providence in them towards you. God calls us to this, as the key that opens the heart under them, Rev. iii. 19. Satan ſuggeſts ſuſpicions to the contrary, as the bar which may hold it ſhut, 2 Kings iii. 33.——This evil is of the Lord, what ſhould I wait for the Lord any longer? As long as the ſuſpicions of an ill deſign in them againſt us reigns, the creature will, like the worm at the man's foot, put itſelf in the beſt poſture of defence it can, and harden itſelf in ſorrow: but the faith of a kind deſign will cauſe it open out itſelf with humility before him.

Caſe, O! if I knew there were a kind deſign in it, I would willingly bear it, although there were more of it; but I fear a ruining deſign of providence againſt me therein. Anſw. Now, what word of God, or diſcovery from heaven, have you to ground theſe fears upon? None at all, but from hell, 1 Cor x. 13. What think you the deſign towards you in the goſpel is? Can you believe no good deſign towards you in all the words of grace there heaped up? What is that, I pray, but black unbelief in its hue of hell? Iſa. lv. 1 flying in the face of the truth of God, and making him a liar, 1 John v. 10. 11. The goſpel is a breathing of love and good-will to the world of mankind-ſinners, Tit. ii. 11. and iii. 4. 1 John iv. 14. and John iii. 17. But ye believe it not in that caſe, more than devils believe it. But if ye can believe a kind deſign there, ye muſt believe it in your humbling circumſtances too; for the deſign of providence cannot be contrary to the deſign of the goſpel: but contrariwiſe the one is to help forward to the other.

8. Think with yourſelves, that this life is the time of trial for heaven, James i. 12. Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he ſhall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him. And therefore there ſhould be a welcoming of humbling circumſtances on that view, verſ. 2.——'Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations.' If there is an honourable office, or beneficial employment to be beſtowed, men ſtrive to be taken on trials for it, in hope they may be thereupon legally admitted to it. Now God takes trial of men for heaven, by humbling circumſtances, as the whole Bible teacheth; and ſhall men be ſo very loth to ſtoop to them? I would aſk you,

(1.) Is it nothing to you to ſtand a candidate for glory, to be put on trials for heaven? Is there not an honour in it; an honour which all the ſaints have had? James v. 11. Behold we count them happy that endure, &c. And a fair proſpect in it, 2 Cor. iv. 17. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Do but put the caſe, that God ſhould overlook you in that caſe, as one whom it is needleſs ever to try on that head, that he ſhould order you your portion in this life with full eaſe, as one that is to get no more of him; what would that be?

(2.) What a vaſt diſproportion is there between your trials and the glory? your moſt humbling circumſtances, how light are they in compariſon of the weight of it? The longeſt continued of them are but for a moment, compared with that eternal weight. Alas! there is much unbelief at the root of all our uneaſineſs under our humbling circumſtances. Had we a clearer view of the other world, we would not make ſo much of either the ſmiles or frowns of this.

(3.) What think ye of coming foul off the trial of your humbling circumſtances, Jer. vi. 29. 30.——The lead is conſumed of the fire: the founder melteth in vain, for the wicked are not plucked away. Reprobate ſilver ſhall men call them, becauſe the Lord rejected them. That the iſſue of it be only, that your heart appear of ſuch a temper as by no means to be humbled; and that therefore you muſt and ſhall be taken off them, while yet no humbling appears? I think the awfulneſs of the diſpenſation is ſuch, as might ſet us to our knees to deprecate the lifting us up from our humbling circumſtances, ere our heart be humbled, Iſa. i. 4. Ezek. xxiv. 13.

9. Think with yourſelves, how it is by humbling circumſtances the Lord prepares us for heaven, Col. i. 12. 'Giving thanks unto the Father, who hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light,' with 2 Cor. v. 5. The ſtones and timber are laid down, turned over and over, and hewed, ere they be ſet up in the building; and not juſt ſet up as they come out of the quarry and wood. Were they capable of a choice, ſuch of them as would refuſe the iron tool would be refuſed a place in the building. Pray how think ye to be made meet for heaven, by the warm ſun-ſhine of this world's eaſe, and getting all your will here? Nay, ſirs, that would put your mouth out of taſte for the joys of the other world. Veſſels of diſhonour are fitted for deſtruction that way; but veſſels of honour for glory by humbling circumſtances. I would here ſay, 1ſt, Will nothing pleaſe you but two heavens, one here, another hereafter? God has ſecured one heaven for the ſaints, one place where they ſhall get all their will, wiſh and deſire; where there ſhall be no weight on them to hold them down: and that is in the other world. But ye muſt have it both here and there, or ye cannot digeſt it. Why do ye not quarrel too, that there are not two ſummers in one year; two days in the twenty four hours? The order of the one heaven is as firm as that of the years and days, and ye will not reverſe it: therefore chuſe ye whether ye will take your night or your day firſt, your winter or your ſummer, your heaven here or hereafter.

2dly, Without being humbled with humbling circumſtances in this life, ye are not capable of heaven, 2 Cor. v. 5. Now he that hath wrought us for the ſelf-ſame thing is God.—Ye may indeed lie at eaſe here in a bed of ſloth, and dream of heaven, big with hopes of a fool's paradiſe, wiſhing to caſt yourſelves juſt out of Delilah's lap, into Abraham's boſom: but without ye be humbled ye are not capable.

(1.) Of the Bible heaven, that heaven deſcribed in the Old and New Teſtament. Is not that heaven a lifting up in due time? But how ſhall ye be lifted up that are never well gotten down? Where will your tears be to be wiped away? What place will there be for your triumph, that will not fight the good fight? How can it be a reſt to you, who cannot away with labour?

(2) Of the ſaints heaven, Rev. vii. 14.——'And he ſaid unto me, Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.' This anſwers the queſtion anent Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and all all the ſaints with them there: they were brought down to the duſt with humbling circumſtances, and out of theſe they came before the throne. How can ye ever think to be lifted up with them, with whom ye cannot think to be brought down?

(3.) Of CHRIST's heaven, Heb. xii. 2.——'Who, for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is now ſet down at the right hand of God.' O conſider how the forerunner made his way, Luke xxiv. 26. 'Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory?' And lay your accounts with it, that if ye get where he is, ye muſt go thither as he went, Luke ix. 23. 'And he ſaid, if any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me.'

10. Give up at length with your towering hopes from this world, and confine them to the world to come. Be as pilgrims and ſtrangers here, looking for your reſt in heaven, and not till ye come there. There is a prevailing evil, Iſa. lvii. 10. Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy way: yet ſaidſt thou not, There is no hope.—So the Babel building is ſtill continued, though it has fallen down again and again: for men ſay, The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn ſtones: the ſycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars, Iſa. ix 10. This makes humbling work very longſome, we are ſo hard to quit our gripe of the creature, to fall off from the breaſt, and be weaned. But faſten your gripes on the other world, and let your gripe of this go; ſo ſhall ye be humbled indeed under the mighty hand. The faſter you gripe the happineſs of that world, the eaſier will it be to accommodate yourſelves to your humbling circumſtances here.

Laſtly, Make uſe of Chriſt in all his offices, for your humiliation under your humbling circumſtances. That only is kindly humiliation that comes in that way, Zech. xii. 10.——'And they ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn,' &c. That you muſt do by truſting on him for that effect.

(1.) As a prieſt for you. You have a conſcience full of guilt, and that will make one uneaſy in any circumſtances, and far more in humbling circumſtances; it will be like a thorn in the ſhoulder on which a burden is laid. But the blood of Chriſt will purge the conſcience, draw out the thorn, give eaſe, Iſa. xxxiii. 24. and fit for ſervice, doing or ſuffering, Heb. ix. 14. 'How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt—purge your conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God?'

(2.) As your prophet to teach you. We have need to be taught rightly to diſcern our humbling circumſtances: for often we miſtake them ſo far, that they prove an oppreſſing load; whereas, could we rightly ſee them, juſt as God ſets them to us, they would be humbling, but not ſo oppreſſive. Truly we need Chriſt, and the light of his word and Spirit, to let us ſee our croſs and trial, as well as our duty, Pſal. xxv. 9, 10.

(3.) As your king. You have a ſtiff heart, loth to bow even in humbling circumſtances: take a leſſon from Moſes what to do in ſuch a caſe, Exod. xxxiv. 9. And he ſaid—Let my Lord, I pray thee, go amongſt us, (for it is a ſtiff-necked people,) and pardon our iniquity, and our ſin. ——Put it in his hand that is ſtrong and mighty, Pſal. xxiv. 8. He is able to cauſe it melt, and like wax, before the fire, turn to the ſeal.

Think on theſe directions, in order to put them in practice, remembering that if ye 'know theſe things, 'happy are ye if ye do them' Remember, humbling work is a work that will fill your hand, while you live here, and that you cannot come to the end of till death; and humbling circumſtances will attend you, while you are in this lower world. A change of them ye may get; but a freedom from them ye cannot, till ye come to heaven. So the humbling circumſtances of our imperfections, relations, contradictions, afflictions, uncertainties, and ſinfulneſs, will afford matter of exerciſe to us while here. What remains of the purpoſe of this text, I ſhall compriſe in,

DOCTRINE II. There is a due time, wherein thoſe that now humble themſelves under the mighty hand of God, will certainly be lifted up.

We ſhall take,

FIRST, A general view of this point. And conſider,

I. Some things ſuppoſed and implied in it. It bears,

1. That thoſe who ſhall ſhare of this lifting up, muſt lay their accounts, in the firſt place, with a caſting down, Rev. vii. 14. John xvi. 33.—In the world ye ſhall have tribulation—There is no coming to the promiſed land, according to the ſettled method of grace, but through the wilderneſs; nor entering into this exaltation, but through a ſtrait gate. If we cannot away with caſting down, we will not taſte of the ſweet of the lifting up.

2. Being caſt down by the mighty hand of God, we muſt learn to lie ſtill and quiet under it, till the ſame hand that caſt us down raiſe us up, if we would ſhare of this promiſed lifting up, Lam. iii. 27. It is not the being caſt down into humbling circumſtances by the providence of God, but the coming down of our ſpirits under them by the grace of God, that brings us within the compaſs of this promiſe.

3. Never humbled in humbling circumſtances, never lifted up in the way of this promiſe. Men may keep their ſpirits on the high bend in their humbling circumſtances, and in that caſe may get a lifting up, Prov. xvi. 19. But note this, that what they get will be a lifting up, to the end that they may get the more grievous fall. Surely thou didſt ſet them in ſlippery places, thou caſtedſt them down in a moment,——Pſal. lxxiii. 18. But they who will not humble themſelves in humbling circumſtances, will find their obſtinacy a need-nail, that will keep their miſery ever faſt on them without remedy.

4. Humility of ſpirit in humbling circumſtances aſcertains a lifting up out of them ſome time, with the good will and favour of heaven, Luke xviii. 14. 'I 'tell you, this man went down to his houſe juſtified rather than the other. for every one that exalteth himſelf 'ſhall be abaſed, and he that humbleth himſelf ſhall 'be exalted.' Solomon obſerves, Prov. xv. 1. that a ſoft anſwer turneth away wrath: but grievous words ſtir up anger. And ſo it is, that while the proud, through their obſtinacy, do but wreathe the yoke faſter about their own necks, the yielding humble ones, by their yielding, make their relief ſure, 1 Sam. ii. 8. 9. 10. 'He raiſeth the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the 'beggar from the dung-hill, to ſet them among princes, 'and to make them inherit the throne of glory——He 'will keep the feet of his ſaints, and the wicked ſhall 'be ſilent in darkneſs; for by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail. The adverſaries of the Lord ſhall be broken in 'pieces'—So the cannon-ball breaks down a ſtone-wall, while the yielding packs of wool take away its force.

5. There is an appointed time for the lifting up of thoſe that humble themſelves in their humbling circumſtances, Hab. ii. 3. For the viſion is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it ſhall ſpeak and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry. To every thing there is a time, as for humbling, ſo for lifting up, Eccleſ. iii. 3. We know it not, but God knows it, who has appointed it. Let not the humble one ſay, I will never be lifted up: there is a time fixed for it, as preciſely as for the riſing of the ſun, after the long and dark night, or the return of the ſpring after the long and ſharp winter.

6. It is not to be expected, that immediately upon one's humbling himſelf, the lifting up is to follow. No, one is not only to lie down under the mighty hand, but lie ſtill waiting the due time; humbling work is longſome work; the Iſraelites had forty years of it in the wilderneſs. God's people muſt be brought to put a blank in his hand, as to the time, and while they have a long night of walking in darkneſs, muſt truſt, Iſa. l. 10. 'Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that o'beyeth the voice of his ſervant, that walketh in dark'neſs and hath no light? Let him truſt in the name of 'the Lord, and ſtay upon his God.'

7. The appointed time for the lifting up is the due time, the time fitteſt for it, wherein it will come moſt ſeaſonably. And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due ſeaſon we ſhall reap, if we faint not, Gal. vi. 9. For that is the time God has choſen for it: and be ſure his choice, as the choice of infinite wiſdom, is the beſt; and therefore faith ſets to wait it, Iſa. xxviii. 16.—He that believeth ſhall not make haſte. There is much of the beauty of a thing depends on the timing of it, and he has fixed that in all he does, Eccleſ. iii. 11. He hath made every thing beautiful in his time.

Laſtly, The lifting up of the humbled will not miſs to come in the appointed and due time, Hab. ii. 3. Time makes no halting, it is running day and night; ſo the due time is faſt coming, and, when it comes, it will bring the lifting up along with it. Let the humbling circumſtances be ever ſo low, ever ſo hopeleſs, it is impoſſible but the lifting up from them muſt come in the due time.

II. A word in the general to the lifting up abiding thoſe that humble themſelves. There is a twofold lifting up.

1. A partial lifting up, competent to the humbled in time during this life, Pſal. xxx. 1. I will extol thee, O Lord, for thou haſt lifted me up, and haſt not made my foes to rejoice over me. This is a lifting up in part, and but in part, not wholly; and ſuch liftings up the humbled may expect, while in this world, but no more. Theſe give a breathing to the weary, a change of burdens, but do not ſet them at perfect eaſe. So Iſrael in the wilderneſs, in midſt of their many mourning times, had ſome ſinging ones, Exod. xv. 1. Numb. xxi. 17.

2. A total lifting up, competent to them at the end of time, at death, Luke xvi. 22.—It came to paſs that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's boſom—Then the Lord deals with them no more by parcels and halves, but carries their relief to perfection, Heb. xii. 23. Then he takes off all their burdens, eaſes them of all their weights, and lays no more on for ever. He then lifts them up to a height they were never at before, no not when at their higheſt. He ſets them quite above all that is low, and therein fixes them, never to be brought down more. Now there is a due time for both theſe.

1. For the partial lifting up. Every time is not fit for it; we are not always fit to receive comfort, an eaſe, or a change of our burdens. God ſees there are times wherein it is needful for his people to be in heavineſs, 1 Pet. i. 6. To have their hearts brought down with grief, Pſal. cvii. 12. But then there is a time really appointed for it in the divine wiſdom, when he will think it as needful to comfort them, as before to bring down, 2 Cor. ii. 7. ‘So that, contraryways, ye ought rather to forgive, and comfort him, leſt perhaps ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up with overmuch ſorrow.’ We are in that caſe in the hand of God, as in the hand of our phyſician, who appoints the time the drawing plaiſter ſhall lie to, and when the healing plaiſter ſhall be applied, and leaves it not to the patient.

2. For the total lifting up. When we are ſore oppreſſed with our burdens, we are ready to think, O to be away, and ſet beyond them all, Job vii. 2. 3. As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work: ſo am I made to poſſeſs months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me. But it may be fitter, for all that, that we may ſtay a while, and wreſtle with our burdens, Phil. i. 24. 25. ‘Nevertheleſs, to abide in the fleſh is more needful for you. And having this confidence, I know that I ſhall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith.’ A few days might have taken Iſrael out of Egypt into Canaan; but they would have been over ſoon there, if they had made all that ſpeed; ſo they behoved to ſpend forty years in the wilderneſs, till their due time of entering into Canaan ſhould come. And be ſure the ſaints, entering heaven, will be convinced that the time of it is beſt choſen, and there will be a beauty in that it was no ſooner.

And thus a lifting up is ſecured to the humble.

III. The certainty of the lifting up of thoſe that humble themſelves under humbling circumſtances. If one would aſſure you, when reduced to poverty, that the time ſhould certainly come yet, that ye ſhould be rich; when ſore ſick, that ye ſhall not die of that diſeaſe, but certainly recover: that would help you to bear your poverty and ſickneſs the better, and ye would comfort yourſelves with that proſpect. However one may continue poor, and never be rich; may be ſick, and die of his diſeaſe; but whoever humble themſelves under their humbling circumſtances, we can aſſure them from the Lord's word, they ſhall certainly, without all peradventure, be lifted up out of, and relieved from their humbling circumſtances; they ſhall certainly ſee the day of their eaſe and relief, when they ſhall remember their burdens as waters that fail. And ye may be aſſured thereof from the following conſiderations.

1ſt, The nature of God, duly conſidered, inſures it, Pſal. ciii. 8, 9. The Lord is merciful and gracious, ſlow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He will not always chide: neither will he keep his anger for ever. The humbled ſoul looking to God in Chriſt, may ſee three things in his nature jointly ſecuring it.

1. Infinite power, that can do all things. No circumſtances are ſo low, but he can raiſe them; none ſo intangling and perplexing, but he can unravel them; ſo hopeleſs, but he can remedy them, Gen. xviii 14. ‘Is any thing too hard for the Lord?’ Be our caſe what it will, it is never paſt reach with him to help it: but then is the moſt proper ſeaſon for him to take it in hand, when all others have given it over, Deut. xxxii. 36. For the Lord ſhall judge his people, and repent himſelf for his ſervants: when he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left.

2. Infinite goodneſs inclining to help. He is good and gracious in his nature, Exod. xxxiv. 6——9. And therefore his power is a ſpring of comfort to them, Romans xiv. 4. Men may be willing that are not able; or able that are not willing: but infinite goodneſs joining infinite power in God, may aſcertain the humbled of a lifting up in due time. That is a word of inconceivable ſweetneſs, 1 John iv. 16. ‘And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.’ He has the bowels of a Father towards the humble, Pſal. ciii. 13. ‘Like as a father pitieth his children; ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him.’ Yea, bowels of mercy, more tender than a mother to her ſucking child, Iſ. xlix. 15. Wherefore howbeit his wiſdom may ſee it neceſſary to put them in humbling circumſtances, and keep them in them for a time, it is not poſſible he can leave them in them altogether.
